THE UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS
LIBRARY

780.5
MS
v.43

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2015

https://archive.org/details/musicalcourierwe4319unse

The pages which are missing were removed because they were advertisements

The pages which are missing were removed because they were advertisemen

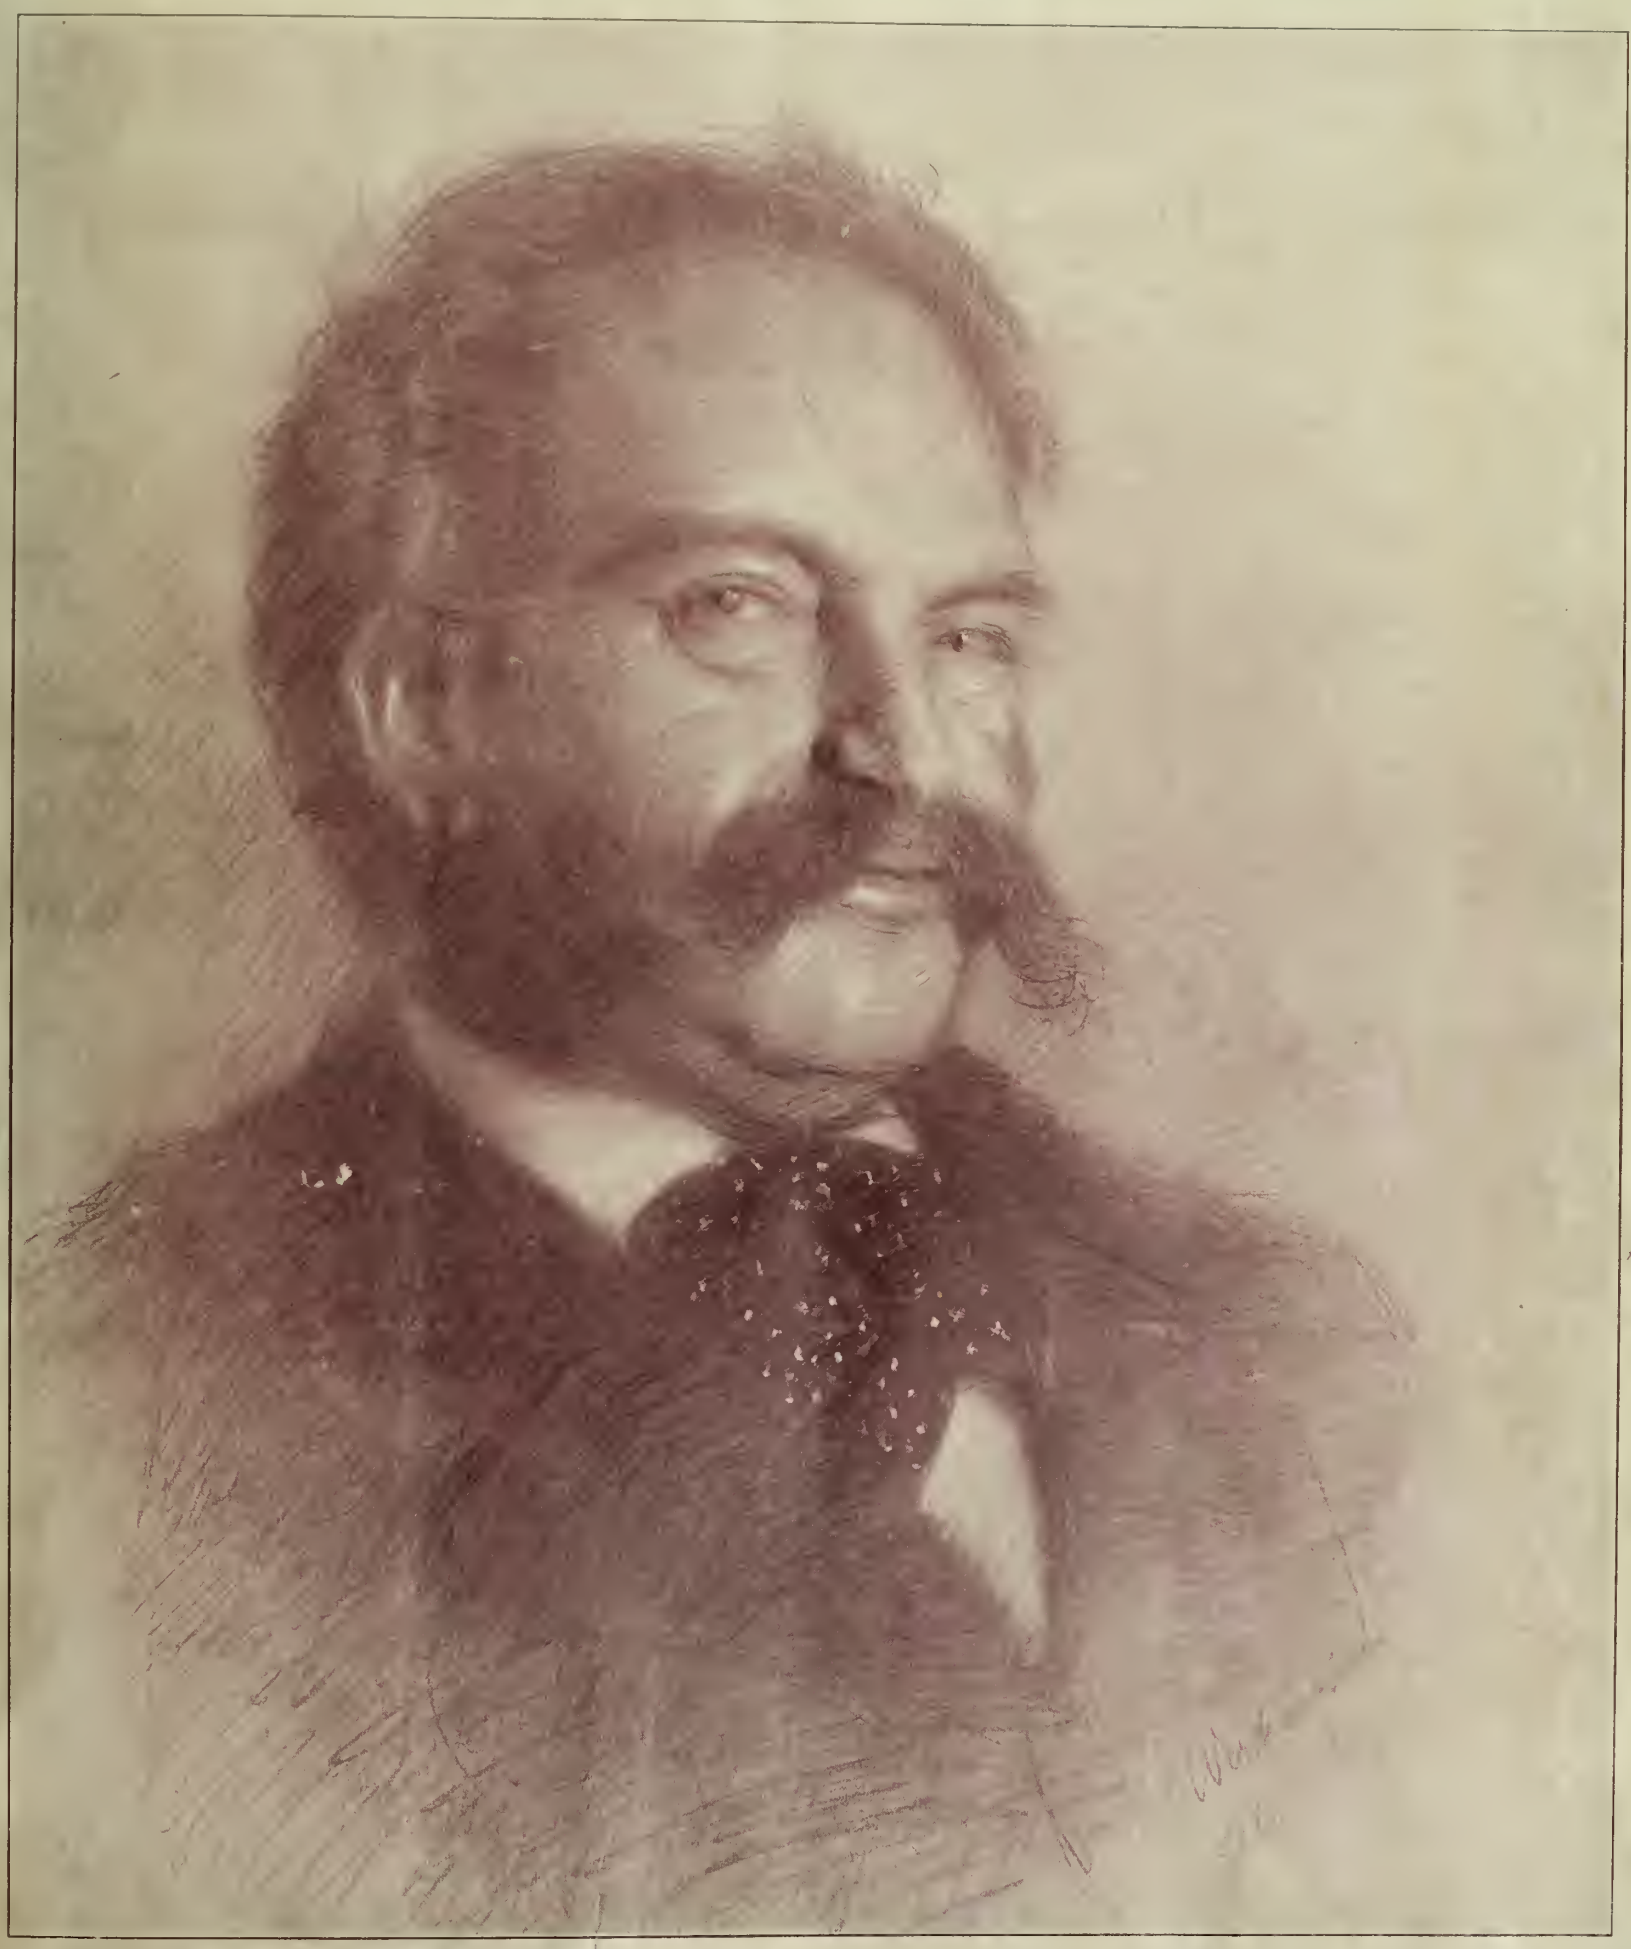
L. MARY
OF THE
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS

MUSICAL COURIER.

A WEEKLY JOURNAL DEVOTED TO MUSIC AND THE MUSIC TRADES.

Twenty-Second Year. Price 10 Cents. Subscription, $5.00. Foreign $6.00.—Annually.

VOL. XLIII—NO. 1. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JULY 3, 1901. WHOLE NO. 1110.



OTTO FLOERSHEIM

New York.

MRS. RATCLIFFE CAPERTON,

Representative and assistant of LAMPERTI.
New York, 138 Fifth Avenue; Philadelphia, 408 South 18th Street. Summer residence, Dresden, Germany.
"Mrs. Ratcliffe Caperton is my only representative, and I advise all pupils desiring to study with me to be prepared by her."
Dresden, Sedanstrasse 17. G. B. LAMPERTI.

ALBERTO LAURENCE,

155 East 18th Street, New York.
The voice formed and developed; the art of singing taught; method after the purest Italian schools; a bad voice made good, true and beautiful.

HENRY T. FLECK,

Conductor Haarlem Philharmonic Society of the City of New York.
Address: Normal College, New York.

MISS NORA MAYNARD GREEN,

VOCAL TEACHER.
Studio: 303 Fifth Avenue, New York.

MAX KNITEL-TREUMANN,

BARITONE.
Voice Culture—Art of Singing.
Carnegie Hall, Room 837.
Mail address: 15 Washington Terrace, New York.

GEORGE M. GREENE,

Voice Culture and Artistic Singing.
Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.
Studio: 489 Fifth Ave., Mondays and Thursdays.
Residence and address:
417 West 23d Street, New York.

MR. C. WHITNEY COOMBS,

(Church of the Holy Communion). Organ lessons and practice given on one of Roosevelt's finest instruments. Special advantages for the study of church music and the training of boys' voices.
Address: 49 West 20th Street, New York.

TOM KARL,

Concerts, Recitals and Vocal Instruction.
Studio: Carnegie Hall.
Residence: 18 West 75th Street, New Y

MISS MARY FIDÉLIA P

Author of Original Met singing, Ear Training, Musical materials copyrighted. No ers in Greater York.
ress· ace, Brooklyn, N. Y.

E. HART, Bass-Baritone.

Studio 121 East Twenty-third street, New York. Voices quickly placed and developed. Special work given for breath control. The Art of Singing taught by method used in the old Italian schools. Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.

DUDLEY BUCK, JR.,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Song Lecture Recitals.
810 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

HOWARD BROCKWAY,

COMPOSER-PIANIST.
Pupils received in Composition, Harmony, Piano and Song Interpretation.
Studio: 817-818 Carnegie Hall, New York.

WALTER HENRY HALL,

Conductor Oratorio Society, Brooklyn, N. Y.
Organist and Choirmaster St. James' Church, New York.
For terms for conducting, address St. James' Church, Madison Ave. and 71st St., New York.

MME. LOUISE FINKEL,

SCHOOL OF VOCAL MUSIC.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.

EUGENE A. BERNSTEIN,

PIANIST.
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Studio: 160 East 70th Street, New York.

LUCILLE SMITH MORRIS,

PIANIST. INSTRUCTION, Concerts, Recitals.
Pupil of Wm. Sherwood and Mrs. A. K. Virgil.
Certified teacher of Virgil Clavier Method.
Studio: 201 West 81st Street, New York.

RICHARD ARNOLD,

Concertmaster Philharmonic Society.
INSTRUCTION.
208 East 61st Street, New York.

MR. FRANCIS STUART,

TEACHER OF SINGING.
First season in New York. Ten years in San Francisco. Pupil of Lamperti, the elder.
Being in full possession of my method of singing, he has the ability to form great artists.—FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
Reception hours, Mondays and Thursdays, 2 to 3.
Studio: 86 Madison Ave., near Twenty-eighth St.

PERCY T. HEMUS,

Basso-Cantante.
Voice Placing. The Art of Singing.
128 West 64th Street, New York.

LILLIE D'ANGELO BERGH

SCHOOL OF SINGING.
Normal course "Teacher" special course, all branches. Famous specialists. Prospectus.
Albany Broadway and 52d Street, New York.

MISS ADELINA HIBBARD AND MRS. HORTENSE HIBBARD-HOWARD.

CONCERTS AND MUSICALES.
INSTRUCTION IN VOICE AND PIANO.
Studio: Hotel Bayard, Fifty-fourth Street and Broadway, New York City.

MR. CHARLES LEE TRACY,

PIANOFORTE INSTRUCTION.
Certificated Teacher of the LESCHETIZKY METHOD.
Studio: Carnegie Hall, New York City.

MAX BENDHEIM,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
332 West 56th Street, New York City.

PAUL TIDDEN,

PIANIST.
314 East 15th Street, New York.
Will accept a limited number of pupils.

HERBERT HEMINGWAY JOY,

Voice Culture and Singing.
Italian School.
Studio: 116 Carnegie Hall, New York.

GUSTAV L. BECKER,

CONCERT PIANIST and TEACHER of PIANO and COMPOSITION.
Address: 1 West 104th Street, New York.

SIGNOR FILOTEO GRECO,

THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio: 51 West 35th Street, New York.

M. THEODOR BJORKSTEN AND
MME. TORPADIE BJORKSTEN,

INSTRUCTORS IN SINGING.
New Studios: Carnegie Hall, New York.

PERRY AVERILL—BARI

OPERA—ORATORIO—CON AND VOCA ON.
220 Central Park rk.

J. ARMO WAY,

Voi e Art of Singing,
Studio d 44 Y. M. C. A. Building,
57th Street, New York.

E SEYMOUR BISSELL,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Pupils prepared for
Church, Concert and Oratorio.
Studio: 135 East 16th Street, New York.

MRS. MARY HISSEM DE MOSS,

SOPRANO,
106 West 90th Street,
New York City.

SAMUEL B. MOYLE,

BASSO CANTANTE.
Oratorio, Concert, Musicales, Voice Culture—Italian Method. Tone Placing and Reparation a specialty. Studio: 136 Fifth Avenue, New York.

GEORGE SWEET,

OPERA, ORATORIO, CONCERT.
304 West 72d Street, New York.

J. HARRY WHEELER,

Voice Production and the Art of Singing.
Voices educated strictly in the Italian School.
Studio: 81 Fifth Ave., corner 16th St., New York.
July and August at Chautauqua Assembly.

MR. EDMUND SEVERN,

Violin, Composition, Ensemble.

MRS. EDMUND SEVERN,

Piano and Voice.
Studio: 131 West 56th Street, New York.
"Severn Trio."

ENRICO DUZENSI,

OPERA TENOR.
Will accept pupils for Voice Culture; good voice cultivated per contract; Italian method.
145 East 83d Street, near Lexington Ave.

CARL C. MÜLLER,

Translator of "Sechter's Fundamental Harmonies."
Author of "Tables for Harmonic Exercises."
Teacher of Piano, Harmony, Counterpoint and Composition. 1291 Lexington Ave., New York.

MME. HELENE MAIGILLE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION, REPERTOIRE.
Studio and residence: 1211-15 Carnegie Hall,
Summer course. New York.

MR. EMILIO AGRAMONTE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Summer Course.

ALBERT QUESNEL,

TENOR.
Opera, Oratorio, Concert, Musicale.
173 West 140th Street, New York.

SAUL HAROLD LICHTENSTEIN,

VIOLINIST.
Pupil of Sauret and Thomson.
Concerts, At Homes, &c. Pupils accepted.
Address: 103 West 114th Street, New York.

J. WARREN ANDREWS

CONCERT ORGANIST and TEACHER.
Send for list of Pupils holding positions.
Address: Church of the Divine Paternity,
76th St. and Eighth Ave., New York City.

THE NEW YORK INSTITUTE FOR VIOLIN PLAYING AND SCHOOL FOR PIANO AND VOCAL CULTURE.

230 East 62d Street

Complete musical education given to students from the beginning to the highest perfection.
F. & H. CARRI, Directors.

MME. L SA CAPPIANI,

VOI LTURE, SKILL OF SINGING.
Louella," 159 West 45th Street,
New York.

RICHARD T. PERCY,

Concert Organist and Accompanist.
Organ Lessons at Marble Collegiate Church, corner Fifth Avenue and 29th Street.
Studio: 1402 Broadway, New York.

MISS MARGARET GOETZ,

CONTRALTO (mezzo range)
Concerts, Song Recitals, Vocal Instruction.
Address: 36 Gramercy Park, New York.

THE ARENS VOCAL STUDIO

(affiliated with the American School of Opera.)
Coaching a specialty.
Normal courses for Voice Teachers.
305 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Reception hour, 2 p. m., Wednesdays excepted.

HENRY HOLDEN HUSS,

Instruction in Piano and Theory of Music.
Studio for non-resident pupils: Steinway Hall.
Personal address: 318 East 150th Street, New York.

FRANCIS FISCHER POWERS,

VOICE CULTURE AND THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio (and invariable address): Carnegie Hall, New York. New York season, October 20 to May 1; Kansas City, Mo., season, Pepper Building, May 15 to August 1; Los Angeles, Cal., season, Westminster Hotel, August 10 to October 10.

MRS. HADDEN-ALEXANDER,

PIANIST.
Powers-Alexander Studios,
Carnegie Hall, New York.

HENRY SCHRADIECK'S

VIOLIN SCHOOL.
Violin, Piano, Theory and Ensemble Playing.
Residence and Studio:
535 Washington Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

ROSETTA WIENER,

PIANO, SIGHT READING and
New York School of Accompanying.
Carnegie Hall, 301 2.

WILLIAM H. BARBER,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
Studio: Steinway Hall,
New York.

F. W. RIESBERG,

ACCOMPANIST.
Instruction—Piano, Organ, Harmony
With THE MUSICAL COURIER.
Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.
Secretary-Treasurer New York State M. T. A.
Residence Studio:
954 8th Ave., corner 56th Street, New York.

S. C. BENNETT,

Instructor in Voice Building and the Art of Singing.
Teacher of Mme. Genevra Johnstone-Bishop and many other talented vocalists.
Studio: 836 Carnegie Hall, New York.

MME. EMMA RODERICK,

Rapid Development and Complete Education of the Voice. 118 West 44th Street, New York.

MRS. GRENVILLE SNELLING,

SOPRANO.
Concerts, Recitals, Musicals, Oratorio.
Address: 111 Fifth Avenue, New York.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF MUSIC,

179 East 64th Street, New York.
WM. M. SEMNACHER, Director.
I regard Mr. Semnacher as the greatest teacher of piano in this country.
Henry T. Fleck, Director of Music.
Normal College, New York City.

MRS. HENRY SMOCK BOICE,

VOICE CULTURE.
Musical Art Department of Adelphi College.
Residence Studio: 127 McDonough St., Brooklyn, N.Y.
Pupils prepared for Church, Concert, Oratorio.
138 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Monday and Thursday Afternoons.

MISS FANNIE HIRSCH,

CONCERT AND ORATORIO.
DRAMATIC SOPRANO. Steinway Hall, or
170 East 61st St., New York.

SERRANO VOCAL INSTITUTE,

323 East 14th Street, New York.

Conducted by EMILIA BENIE DE SERRANO and CARLOS A. DE SERRANO.

Teachers of Charlotte Maconda, Fannie Francisca.

JEANNE ARONE,

Graduate of F d'Arona's celebrated method. Special Tea ourse Diploma Vocal Instruction. Studio Madison Ave., New York.

GUY DORÉ A. OPERA TENOR

Voi ture and Singing.
Tone productio ing and development a specialty. Guaran increase range and make any voice strong a tiful. Summer rates.
372 th Street, New York.

JOSEPH PIZZ LO.

VOCA TRUCTOR.
Voice Dr —Style—Opera
43 th Street, New York.

ALICE GARRIGUE MOTT,

VOCAL CULTURE.
Carnegie Hall, New York.

MR. AND MRS. THEO. J. TOEDT,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Home Studio: 151 East 62d Street, New York.

LENA DORIA DEVINE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Representative Teacher
of the methods of the famous master,
FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
136 Fifth Avenue, New York.

FRANCIS CARRIER,

BARITONE.
Concert and Oratorio.
18 East 22d Street, New York.
Direction of Remington Squire.

MISS EMMA HOWSON,

PRIMA DONNA.
Royal Italian and English Opera Company.
Lamperti Method Absolutely Taught.
Tuesdays and Fridays, 96 Fifth Ave., New York.

EMMA THURSBY,

SOPRANO.
Will receive a limited number of pupils.
Residence-Studio: 34 Gramercy Park, New York.

ISIDORE LUCKSTONE,

The Accompanist and Musical Director.
STYLE, REPERTOIRE, FINISH,
VOCAL CULTURE.
836 Lexington Ave., or address MUSICAL COURIER.

ARTHUR VOORHIS,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
100 Clifton Place, Jersey City, N. J.
Care MUSICAL COURIER, New York.

MME. ADELE LEWING

CONCERT PIANIST.
Authorized Teacher of the Leschetizky Method.
Special Summer terms to out of town teachers.
Concerts. Recitals. Musicales.
Address: Care Steinway Hall, or 127 East 73d Street, New York.

MISS GENEVIEVE BISBEE,

PIANO INSTRUCTION
Leschetizky Method. Summer courses.
1109-1110 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

KATHARINE PELTON,

Mezzo Soprano.
Sole Direction HENRY WOLFSOHN,
131 East 17th Street, New York.

CHARLOTTE A. BABCOCK,

Certificated Pupil of Dr. William Mason.
Pianoforte Instruction.
Studios: 810-14 Carnegie Hall, New York.
Summer season, Bernardsville, N. J.

SIGNOR A. CARBONE,

Member several years Metropolitan Grand Opera Company.
VOICE CULTURE. OPERA SCHOOL.
Summer Course.
Studio: 240 Fifth Ave., New York.

JOSEPH P. DONNELLY,

VOICE, ORGAN, PIANO.
Organist-Director All Saints,
Madison Avenue and 129th Street, New York.
Residence-Studio: 2033 Madison Avenue.
Brooklyn Studio: The Pouch Gallery.

MARK M. FONAROFF,

VIOLINIST—INSTRUCTION.
References: Adolf Brodsky, Henry Schradieck, Alex. Lambert, H. E. Krehbiel.
129 East 82d Street, New York.

STELLA PRINCE STOCKER,

COMPOSER-DIRECTOR.
Recital-Lectures, ARTHUR STOCKER, boy soprano, assisting. For season 1901-1902.
Address: 11 Schmiede Strasse, Hamburg, Germany, or care P. J. Kreider, 251 West 71st Street, New York.

MARIE PARCELLO,

DRAMATIC CONTRALTO.
Music Rooms: 1103-4-5 Carnegie Hall, New York.

HUGO TROETSCHEL,

Organist Schermerhorn St. Evangelical Church.
Instruction: Piano—Organ—Theory.
Organ Lessons given on large three-manual Roosevelt Organ.
Residence: 384 Bainbridge St., Brooklyn, N. Y

MR. & MRS. WALTER H. ROBINSON,

TENOR AND CONTRALTO SOLOISTS.
Oratorio, Concerts and Musicales.
Voice Production and Répertoire
Studio: 405 Carnegie Hall, New York.

A. J. GOODRICH,

Personal or Correspondence Lessons in Harmony, Counterpoint, Composition, Orchestration and Practical Musicianship.
Author of "Analytical Harmony," "Theory of Interpretation," "Complete Music Analysis," "Synthetic Counterpoint," "Guide to a Practical Musicianship."
Glens Falls, N. Y.

MS
v. 43

OTTO FLOERSHEIM:

MAN, CRITIC AND COMPOSER.

OTTO FLOERSHEIM is a man who would take off his coat and sell it for a friend in distress. Even his enemies acknowledge this; indeed I am sure that he has gone out of his way to help those who were far from friendly to him. He has enemies, and by his enemies ye shall know a man. However, I think I have sounded the keynote of this critic, his absolute pitch, in describing his native generosity of character. It is all the more remarkable because he is far from being a pleasant person when he writes of pianists, singers, violinists, conductors and composers. I mean that no personal affection for a musician has the effect of attenuating his judicial severity. I have often accused him to his teeth of fighting for the mere delight of battle, and I can't remember just now if he denied the hardy impeachment.

I recall very well the first time I saw Otto Floersheim. It was in May, 1885. I visited New York to view that versatile actor Sonnenthal, of Vienna, who was playing at Amberg's, now the Irving Place Theatre. After the performance—I think the piece was an adaptation of Daudet's "Fromont Jeune et Risler Ainé"—I went to Lienau's on Fourteenth street, the Lüchow's of that day. Attracted by piano playing I went upstairs and discovered Constantin Von Sternberg entertaining a large company—all stags. He gave his version of the famous symphonic poem, "The Desert," and it was wonderfully funny and clever to me. After he finished a big man, with a curly mop of hair and the mustache of a warrior, sat down to the instrument and began doing polyphonic "stunts" in a dozen keys. I could see that his hands were huge and that they scooped in octaves, tenths and twelfths with giant-like ease. I also marveled at the big, sonorous tone the unknown drew from the Steinway upright. I asked Lienau the name of the pianist who was playing the prelude to "Meistersinger," in D flat, with all manners of extended harmonies and harmonic changes.

OTTO FLOERSHEIM AT 42 (1895).

"That," he replied, "is the well-known critic Otto Floersheim, of THE MUSICAL COURIER." I believed him.

Nearly a year later, March, 1886, to be precise, I went to the office of THE MUSICAL COURIER, on East Fourteenth street. I fancy the hour was about 9 in the morning, for I wished to create the illusion of being a punctual person. I smile now when I think of the superb expression of disdain which crossed the freckled face of the office boy. Mr. Floersheim is seldom in before 10! It was really about 11 when he tramped in. Again I saw the big face, the eyes half closed, yet alive and curious; the big frame and general freedom of gesture of a man too big to busy himself with the little things of life. He was very sympathetic and listened to my little tale with patience, advising me to have nothing to do with music journalism. "There are times," said he, firing up and pounding the desk in front of him, "when I would rather drive a horse car." Since then I have realized the wisdom of these words, and that is why the staff of THE MUSICAL COURIER has taken to automobiling.

THE BOY FLOERSHEIM. EIGHT YEARS OLD.
(Aix-la-Chapelle.)

Having broken the ice I soon became intimate with the musical editor of a newspaper that has never taken any pains to conceal its opinion of humbugs and others. After I was made free of the guild I soon recognized the almost brutal honesty and fearlessness of Otto Floersheim. There were times when he made me indignant not only by the way he swept aside my clumsy scribbling evasions, but because of his frankness in giving his opinion of an artist. I saw one girl, now celebrated on both sides of the seas, cry bitterly after he had told her some unpleasant truths. In America we rather evade plain speaking as a crude survival of some earlier and cruder civilization. And in no country is critical, plain speaking so sadly needed. But I was too young, too green to know this in 1887. Floersheim filled me with awe. No matter whether it was Lilli Lehmann—a woman I was positively in terror of about this time—or Anton Seidl, or Rafael Joseffy, or Albert Niemann—they all heard Otto Floersheim's opinion of them. And this critical sincerity was transposed to his private life. If you didn't like what he thought of you, you could do the other thing. I often did the other thing. One night I remember in particular. It was very hot and I was very nervous and restless. Floersheim was on the eve of taking his annual trip and he was warm, perhaps irritable. After watching me twisting and twirling my lanky body and talk myself hoarse on fifty futile subjects, he remarked with grim asperity: "You Americans never sit still. You have no repose, no sitzfleisch. And you are the worst specimen of the lot. You play staccato, think staccato, talk staccato, write staccato. I give you up in despair." Of course, he really didn't; yet from that time I began to put on flesh. Such is the efficacy of legato suggestion, and, above all else, Otto Floersheim is of a legato nature, though no Christian Scientist.

AGED THIRTEEN.

But all this will only faintly tell you what manner of man is our representative in Berlin and Germany. Out of harness he is the best of fellows; generous, gay and kind hearted to a painful degree. He is quite capable of selling the shirt on his back for you, if he likes you; or, worse still, of waiting patiently beneath the horrid beams of a hot July sun in dusty Bayreuth for the train you are expected to arrive by. A good friend, an admirable enemy—he has raised a full crop of both.

It is twenty-five years that he is writing criticisms for the newspapers and musical journals, for in May, 1876, he essayed his first feuilletons in the Belletristiches Journal, at that time the leading German weekly here. So he may well celebrate his silver anniversary as a music critic.

Otto Floersheim was born March 2, 1853, at Aachen, Aix-la-Chapelle, Rhineland. At an early age he exhibited all the hall marks of musical ability, playing by ear on the piano at the age of seven the melodies he heard at the opera, concerts, or even those from the all pervasive organ grinder. These melodies he dressed up in correct harmonies, and no doubt his music loving mother, from whom he derived his gifts, must have felt him predestined to a musical career. But his father willed things otherwise. The lad was given a sound education, and became proficient in foreign languages, belles lettres and the higher branches of a thorough German college. Music he studied by stealth, and when in Cologne had the good fortune to receive advice from the veteran, Ferdinand Hiller. As a business man he was trained by his father, but the native bent of the youth was too strong, and after several unsuccessful attempts he made up his mind to begin his artistic life in the New World. Before he had completed his majority we find him in New York—February, 1875—where he taught languages and piano—in the latter he was practically self-

12-5-28 EB

669021

FOUR YEARS LATER.

taught. He did not escape the chastening spur that must come to a young man of ambition and practically without resources. Many things formed his character. He made friends. He wrote for the German Figaro, as well as the Belletristiches Journal, and in 1881 began writing English—a language that he mastered, so he confessed to me, by translating "David Copperfield" into German, in the form of weekly letters to his good mother. The late Archibald McMartin's Musical Review contained his first English criticisms.

Two decades and more ago Otto Floersheim went into partnership with Marc A. Blumenberg in the editorship of THE MUSICAL COURIER, and making of it the independent, individual and successful newspaper it is to-day. The rest is musical history.

One of our first critics in the United States to proclaim and maintain the musical genius of Richard Wagner was Otto Floersheim. THE MUSICAL COURIER began the crusade against the anti-Wagnerites, and was absolutely the only musical journal in the country to wage a most unequal and relentless warfare. It was war to the knife with the Wagner haters. Names were called that made scarlet Union square; and yet I rather liked that sweet and chaste period. It was exciting, it was very muscular, and you never went forth without a cane and an eye cocked aloft for brickbats. Now we are become respectable, and if we don't wear purple our linen at least is irreproachable. And we know where our dinners are coming from, even if we fail to recognize our friends from our foes. There was no such certainty in 1885; no such tepid indifference. A foe was a foe, and dinners were not avoided. Otto Floersheim moved in this atmosphere of broils, intrigues and hates with all the delight that comes from a good digestion, a clear conscience and thorough control of the situation. In perilous counsels of war his voice was never silent. He usually had something to say, and said it. I can never remember his having begun a sentence with "It appears to me," or, "It seems to me." It was; and that settled it. Naturally he was sometimes wrong in his judgments; but of their springing from his innermost conviction there was never a doubt. His sincerity gave you a sense of a definite something in criticism, even though it contained, as it often did, an overstatement.

Floersheim has always been a friend of the American composer, and both by pen and speech has fought the fight when Frank Van der Stucken and himself were practically—with a few other faithful ones—the only pair in a seemingly desperate cause. His criticisms then, as now, were characterized by a fullness of knowledge, catholicity—he admires both Brahms and Richard Strauss—and a rather stern sense of duty. Never truculent, he often wounds by his outspokenness. For him criticism is a sacred calling. As he possesses the gift of absolute pitch so his sense of duty is absolute in the matter of criticism. That he has made more bull's-eyes than misses I need hardly tell you. You read him weekly and know what he has done, can do. Together we heard the first private rehearsal here of Paderewski, and Floersheim said then of the Polish phenomenon what he now says. I notice the same prophetic quality in his criticism—the most complete I have seen—of Paderewski's "Manru."

Of his remarkable musical ear you may have heard. He has absolute pitch; relative pitch; the pitch that can give the various A's of various piano makers; and I have heard him sing a stencil piano A—a feat that defies competition. If you sat down on the keyboard Otto Floersheim could tell the notes missed by your coat tails. Birds, glasses, squeaking doors, bells, even razzle-dazzles, he names all their pitches. This aural sensitiveness is associated with an extraordinary musical memory. Woe to the appropriator of other men's musical ideas! Floersheim comes down on him like a ton of stone, exposing relentlessly the borrowed plumage, showing its exact origins and every separate feather. While he worships Bach, reveres the classics, his particular predilections are modern. He has probably heard more music, for his age, than any living critic, as he resides in Berlin, where concerts and piano recitals grow up at the street corners. His favorite form of relaxation is improvising by the hour at the keyboard, and I assure you the harmonies that emerge and disappear under his strong fingers are really kaleidoscopic in quality.

AN AMERICAN PHOTO. TWENTY-THREE YEARS OLD.

Unpretentious as are Floersheim's methods as a composer, modest as are his aspirations, he is nevertheless distinctly known. From free improvisings; the playful moments of a music saturated brain, he has gradually deepened and widened with years of earnest study. A pupil at one time of O. B. Boise he has essayed instrumental forms wit[h] [c]ity. A warm color sense, plenty of melodic [i]tion, a vigorous fancy and quite an individual [l]ng for a recherché scheme of harmonization, have [g]n to the Floersheim music an interest and grac[e] [o]s own I have not always been in sympathy wi[th] [h]s piano pieces, looking as I do for more elabor[a]te in figuration. But the music is there, and i[n] [g]ral instances there has been a happy confluence of matter with manner that left nothing to be desired. This is the case with his "Lullaby" for piano, which the late Franz Rummel first played in concert. It contains poetic ideas, and the close is charming in its changeful modulations. The "Moment Musical" and the first "Novellette" are two excellent specimens. The song, "O Lass Dich Halten," contains a haunting melody; while most of us can recall the rich melodies of his "Elevation" and its sensuous orchestration. I think the early Floersheim was slightly affected by Gounod, just as the later one has felt Wagner's magic. As a whole the newer piano music is naïve and very modern—almost decadent in its harmonic outlines. Those ten little preludes prove this assertion of mine. Their harmonies are bitter sweet, the rhythmic life intense. I have already written about the "Suite Miniature" in the piano part. The orchestral version I have never heard. Floersheim is a born lyrist. He is at his best in shorter forms. There he is really large, and moves about freely. The newly published song for the G string of the violin—dedicated to Willy Burmester—is sonorous, is of noble melodic pattern, and contains a rich harmonic background. Very effective music for the concert room, I should say.

Here is as complete a list of the Floersheim published compositions as is possible to compile. The names of the publishers are given as accurately as we can.

Trois Romances Pathétiques (Three Pathetic Romances), published with M. Schloss, of Cologne, and at his death bought and republished by Ries & Erler, Berlin.
Elevation, for piano, Edw. Schuberth & Co., New York.
Fina, Elegy, Wedding March for four hands. ....Kunkel Brothers, St. Louis.
Poetic Thoughts, for piano, Wm. A. Pond, New York.
German March, for piano, Prochzka, New York.
Two or three songs for tenor, among them "Rest On Me, Dark Eye of Beauty" (Weil auf mir du dunkels Ange), published either with Prisfer or A. P. Schmidt, of Boston.
Pagina d'Amore, piece for 'cello and piano accompaniment, published by C. F. Kahnt, Leipsic.
Song for alto, "O Linger Yet, Ye Moments Golden" (O lass dich halten goldne Stunde), published with Edw. Schuberth & Co., New York.
Noeturne for three female voices à capella, published with Oliver Ditson, Boston and New York.

AN 1885 PHOTO.

First Novelette, for piano, in A minor, published with either Prisfer or A. P. Schmidt, Boston.

Lullaby.....
Moment Musical.....
Valse Grazieuse.....
Morceau à la Gavotte.....
Second Novelette in A major.
Scherzo in C major.....
} For piano, published with E. Schuberth & Co.

Verlassne Liebe, song for alto, published with Bote & Bock, Berlin.

Impromptu, for piano, published with Willcox & Co. London.

Suite Miniature, Liebes Novelle, for orchestra .....
Same, arranged for piano.....
Ten Preludes, for piano.....
Consolation, symphonic movement for strings, woodwind and horns.....
Consolation, transcription for piano....
Idylle, for violin and piano acc.....
Gesang für die G. Saite (A Song for the G String of the Violin), with piano acc.; can also be used for 'cello, with piano acc.....
} Published with Breitkopf & Härtel, Leipsic and New York.

We salute you, Otto Floersheim, on your silver jubilee, and wish you at least another quarter of a century in harness. Prosit!

SUCCESSFUL BOWMAN PUPILS.

A BOWMAN pupil who has taught over 200 other pupils, possibly 250, setting before them the very best ideals which she herself could gather and make her own, is surely entitled to the distinction of being characterized as "successful." Such a pupil of E. M. Bowman is Miss Minnie E. Marsh, of Torrington, Conn., whose portrait appeared in the columns of THE MUSICAL COURIER last week. Miss Marsh has devoted all her energies to her art with a consecration and self-abnegation which are at once the example and the despair of some who are near enough to know her real work and worth, and balance against each other her extreme modesty and her sterling merits.

The foundation of Miss Marsh's musical education was laid by Mrs. A. P. Hine, of Torrington, another pupil of E. M. Bowman, who as teacher and player has been an inspiration to scores of young musicians in that part of the Nutmeg State. For a brief interval Miss Marsh studied piano with G. Nunez and harmony with C. C. Muller at the New York College of Music, but in December, 1887, she came to E. M. Bowman, of Steinway Hall, and nearly every season since that time, although involving a journey of four hours each way, she has managed to come to him more or less regularly for lessons in piano playing, teaching and in theory. These hours of instruction have been planned so as to include the best concerts which New York affords, and in this way Miss Marsh has developed the power as a player, teacher and musician of critical judgment which make her an authority among her patrons and friends in Torrington, Winsted and Waterbury, where she is actively engaged, and an uplift to all with whom she comes in musical touch. During her studies with Mr. Bowman Miss Marsh has become familiar with the best piano compositions by Bach, Beethoven, Mozart, Schumann, Chopin, Mendelssohn, Schubert, Liszt and many other composers. She plays Bach with a fine discriminative touch and a full, round tone which is very suggestive of the organ. This once truly said of a player is enough to stamp him or her with a hallmark of musicianship which is as rare as it is beautiful. It is safe to say that probably not one of the ten score pupils whom Miss Marsh has taught is afflicted with "the staccato habit."

Not long ago one of her pupils came to play to Mr. Bowman. He made a careful examination of the pupil, and at the conclusion warmly congratulated Miss Marsh on the result of her work as a teacher. Hundreds of communities in the United States at the beginning of this twentieth century are blessed with musical instructors of real skill and consecration more or less of the type spoken of in this sketch. In them lies the musical salvation of America.

Among the patrons of Miss Marsh may be mentioned Rev. P. S. Evans, Mrs. Holcomb, L. G. Turner, J. S. Doughty, D. L. Talcott, Rev. H. B. Roberts, Mrs. R. M. Ensign, Mrs Kennard and many others.

MUSICAL PEOPLE.

The pupils of the Virgil Piano School, of Norfolk, Va., gave a recital on June 25, under the direction of Miss Gwynne G. Ewell.

Advanced students of Mrs. R. Wayne Wilson, of Atlanta, Ga., gave a recital recently at the Peachtree residence of E. L. McCandless.

Miss Ethel Annie Stone, of the Faelten Pianoforte School, Boston, has been engaged as a teacher of the Conservatory of Music, at Scranton, Pa.

Miss Mary H. Steele gave her fourth organ recital at the Elm Street M. E. Church, Northampton, Mass., assisted by the Ladies' Hampton Quartet.

J. Austin Springer gave a piano recital on June 27, at Jermain Hall, Albany, N. Y. He was assisted by Robert Kerr Colville, basso, and students from the Mason Piano School.

Johannes Wolfram, of Cleveland, Ohio, delivered a lecture at Terre Haute, Ind., upon "Idealism in Art, Especially in Music," before the Indiana Music Teachers' Association.

Alfred Rogerson Barrington has organized the Columbus (Ohio) Choral Association. About 100 voices will join, and Handel's "Messiah" is among the first works to be studied.

Mrs. Edith Risser, of Springfield, Ill., will return to New York in the autumn and take up advanced musical studies. For the past year she has been working successfully at her home in the West.

Miss Iva Cannon's music class gave a recital at the home of the teacher, on Georgetown street, Lexington, Ky. The pupils who appeared were Freda Messic, Francis Shely, Sidney Williams and Cecil Parks.

In the early part of June a recital was given at the Virgil Clavier School, Portland, Me., three of the younger pupils of Miss Annie C. Holmes playing a most interesting program. The pupils were Miss Mary Adams, age ten; Miss Clara Sisson, age seven, and Master Harold Cloudman, the same age.

Miss Louise L. Hood, a successful teacher of both piano and violin, gave a musicale for the Roseville division of her Newark pupils, at 95 Roseville avenue, Newark, N. J., on June 15. Miss Hood is spending her vacation in Dutchess County, this State. She will resume her teaching in Newark and New York October 1.

Following are the names of the graduates of the Birmingham (Ala.) Conservatory of Music, who received diplomas at the recent commencement: Miss Margaret Clarkson, voice; Miss Bessie Cox, voice; Miss Ethel Erwin, voice; Miss Rosa Howlett, voice; Miss Bessie Lum, voice; Miss Belle Armstrong, piano; Miss Beulah Beall, piano; Miss Fannie Dunn, piano; Miss Nettie Kimbrell, piano; Miss Rosa Munger, piano; Mrs. H. D. Maus, piano; Mrs. L. G. Phillips, piano.

Following are the names of the graduates of this June from the College of Music, of the Denver (Col.) University: Miss Frances J. Betz, Spencer, Ohio; Miss Ella Brooks, Fort Lupton, Col.; Miss Pauline Erbshauser, Denver, Col.; Miss May Morrow, Springfield, Ohio; Miss Etta Florence Musser, Medina, Ohio; Mrs. Agnes Lotz, Denver, Col.; Miss Ella Todd, Denver, Col.

The annual concert by the piano class of the Detroit Institute of Music, Miss Kate H. Jacobs, director, was given on June 14, at the Light Guard Armory, Detroit. The pianists were assisted by Miss Florence McGuire and Thomas S. Davis, violinists, pupils of Miss Isabella H. Jacobs; Frank Hugh Bright, baritone, of the vocal department, and the institute orchestra, conducted by Rudolph Spiel. The names of the piano class follow: Miss Kate B. Davies, Miss Helen Welton, Miss Grace Cole, Miss Julia Ellsworth, Miss Alyce Cullyford, Miss Dora Spiegel, Miss Edith Billings, Miss Elizabeth Ballard, Miss Mabel Daker, Miss Emma Lonyo, Miss May Milliken, Miss Helen Ward, Charles Murphy, Fred W. Smith, Miss Ruth Massey, Mrs. W. S. Marshall, Miss Lodema Miller, Miss Edith Carstens, Mrs. Clarence D. Bevier, Miss Eugenia MacLaurin, Miss Dorothy Wiethoff, Miss Grace C. Wilson, Miss Carrie Kilby, Miss Florence A. Smith, Miss Josephine Hock, Miss Margery Corliss, Miss May E. Preston and Miss Louise Capen.

A large and fashionable audience attended the closing recital of the Southern College of Music, at New Orleans, La., given at the Tulane Theatre. Following are the names of those who received diplomas and medals:

Piano—Graduation diploma, with gold medal, Christiana Oldendorf; first degree, gold medal, Louise Muller; second degree, silver medal, Blanche Girot, Marie Gerde; third degree, Louise Buhler, Berenice Glenn, Louise Young; honorable mention, Katie Hotstream, J. Hoppé; special prize for best improvement, senior class, Burton Case; silver medal for best improvement, junior class, Claire Comes; silver medals for good improvement, Arma Comes, Shirley Brasselman, Ella Fox, Myrtle Kaufman; souvenir pins for improvement, Louise Young, Louise Buhler, Katie Hotstream, Berenice Glenn; piece of music for application, Leopold Girot; prize for improvement, Mrs. J. H. Conner.

Mandolin—Graduation diploma, with gold medal, Aimee David, Alice McEvoy; first degree gold medal, Louise Lubben, Renee David; second degree, silver medal, Catherine Barth, Regina Glenn; third degree, Laurent Dickson, Melville Smith, Mary O'Shaughnessy; honorable mention, Myrtle Orvell, Audrey Luhman; silver medal for best improvement, Laurent Dickson; souvenir pin for good improvement, Melville Smith, Mary O'Shaugnessy; honorable mention, Myrtle Orvell, Audrey Luhman; silver medal for best improvement, Laurent Dickson; souvenir pin for good improvement, Melville Smith, Mary O'Shaughnessy, Eugene Lacoste, Eddy Byrnes, Myrtle Orrell; piece of music for improvement, Rufus Oury, Mona Fox.

Singing—Third degree, silver medal, Aimee David; honorable mention, Rufus Paddock.

Violin—First degree, gold medal, Ada McEvoy; third degree, silver medal, Marie Louise Muller, Marie Beaudeau, Charles Navo, Frank J. Weinberger; honorable mention, Albert Geheeb, Carrie Haag, Thomas Kaufman, Henry Leidenheimer, Zita Lubben, Tony Marullo, Edward Riesgen, Philip Weinberger, Von Hoven Mueller; silver medal for best improvement, Carrie Haag, Henry Leidenheimer; souvenirs pins and prizes for good improvement, Thomas Kaufman, Bertrand Conner, Philip Weinberger, John Navo, Catherine Barth, Zita Lubben; piece of music for improvement, Lee Haag, Leopold Weinberger.

Reception Committee—James Goslee, Melvin Marks, Edward Riesgen, George Gernon, Frank J. Weinberger, William Tuttle, L. Aschaffenburg, Sidney David.

The Denver (Col.) Choral Union presented Mendelssohn's "Elijah," at its third concert for this the second season of the union. Samuel H. Blakeslee directed the performances. The soloists and accompanist were Miss Etta F. Musser, soprano; Mrs. W. J. Whiteman, alto; Waldemar Van Dahlen, tenor; George Crampton, bass; Frederick Schweikher, organist; Mrs. Samuel H. Blakeslee, pianist.

The officers of the union are Frederick Schweikher, president; Leroy B. Elser, secretary; Roland St. Clair, librarian; board of directors, Robert James, Edwin Bernard, Robert Williams, Leroy B. Elser, Frederick Schweikher (ex-officio).

The names of the chorus follows: Eugenia R. Allen, Dudie Allen, Ella Anderson, Mrs. M. L. Bowman, Mrs. W. A. Brubaker, Mary I. Brubaker, Rachel S. Bovier, Iva Brockway, W. A. Boettger, Mrs. W. A. Boettger, Daniel W. Bradley, A. W. Barnes, J. E. Burchinell, A. F. Blight, M. W. Burg, Fannie J. Betz, Anna Belle Brown, Earle Blakeslee, C. L. Butler, Mrs. L. K. Cronan, G. H. Cooper, Tilden Cox, Ethel Callicott, Lenore Cleverly, H. Castle, Bessie Chiles, Miss A. Clark, Miss E. Clark, J. G. Carleton, E. L. Crane, J. G. Crane, Minnie Everman, Emma B. Ecker, Anna C. Ecker, Orine Emerson, Leroy B. Elser, Jennie Fleming, Mrs. Fred Fraser, F. C. Fowler, Geo. W. Ford, W. A. Fidler, John Fleming, Mrs. Olivia Griffiit, A. M. Gillospey, C. S. Groesbeck, C. E. Giblin, Sam. Ginsburg, T. H. Gist, Mrs. A. M. Gist, Caroline Hogan, Salome Henning, Mrs. H. G. Hammond, C. S. Hogan, R. K. Hayes, A. Hoffer, Robert James, T. F. Jones, R. D. Jenkins, Joe Kantor, C. A. Lotz, Miss C. Lowther, J. P. Lee, Mrs. Lowe, Mrs. S. J. Marmaduke, Lena Mason, J. E. Maider, Frank S. Marsh, C. W. Miller, Miss A. I. Miner, Mrs. E. M. Prescott, Lizzie Perrin, E. Perham, M. Perham, Mrs. Gertrude P. Phillips, Miss Phillips, Mrs. W. W. Reilly, Chas. Ridley, Fannie Riddell, Rose Simpson, Mrs. A. W. Schweikher, Carrie M. Smith, L. Maude Steidley, Roland St. Clair, T. L. Stewart, Susie Slausson, Ella Slausson, J. H. Smythe, Helen Taylor, Ella A. Todd, Alma Tuengel, Nora Tuengel, E. M. Touseley, Florence Tidball, J. H. Williams, Anna E. Willis, Miss Hayes Wagener, Phyllis Wolfe, Howard Wolverton, C. M. White, Robt. Williams, Miss B. V. Washburn, Carolyn Young and Jeanette Ziegler.

Oscar Franklin Comstock has resigned his position as director of the Pennsylvania College of Music at Meadville, where his work was greatly appreciated. Mr. Comstock expects to spend the most of the summer at New London, Conn., and in the fall to remove to Washington, where he has many friends.

The National Conservatory of Music of America, 128 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

JEANNETTE M. THURBER, PRESIDENT.

Artistic Faculty, consisting of { RAFAEL JOSEFFY, ADELE MARGULIES, LEOPOLD LICHTENBERG, LEO SCHULZ, HENRY T. FINCK, MAX SPICKER, CHARLES HEINROTH, AND OTHERS.

SUMMER TERM BEGINS IN MAY.
ADMISSION DAILY. . . . . .

SAN FRANCISCO, June 17, 1901.

BUNKER HILL DAY, and a lovely one at that! 'Frisco is putting on her pleasantest smiles the last few days, and the beaches have been crowded with people out for an airing. To-day there are special trains running from all directions to carry excursionists from surrounding towns to the little burg of Los Gatos, which, by the way, is quite a musical town, and there is to be a celebration with a musical program. There will be vocal solos by Miss Juliet Grininger. "Star Spangled Banner," "Sword of Bunker Hill," O. Lafayette Lienau; "Red, White and Blue," Emile Barangon, and besides addresses and a poem, read by W. S. Holliday, a song by Miss Grace Savage.

Last night (Sunday) at St. Dominic's the "Lauda Sion," by Mendelssohn, was rendered with fine effect by the following solosists: Miss Lily Roeder, soprano; Miss Ella V. McCloskey, contralto; D. M. Lawrence, tenor, and Walton Webb, bass, assisted by a thoroughly trained chorus, in which the following voices took part: Sopranos—The Misses Joseph, Gleason, Veaco, Walsh, Pooley, Driscoll, Frank, and Mrs. R. Boyns; contraltos—Mrs. H. Clark, Miss Mabel Gordon and Miss E. V. Lunt; tenors—E. M. Long, Frank Onslow, D. J. Connor; basses—J. C. Hughes, M. E. Bruner and Walter Kneiss. Organist and director, Franklin Palmer; special organist during the performance of the "Lauda Sion," James Hamilton Howe. A string orchestra greatly enhanced the effect of the ensemble numbers, and during the Benediction of the Most Blessed Sacrament there was a soprano solo and chorus, "O Salutaris" (Franklin Palmer); contralto solo, "Tantum Ergo" (Gaston M. Dethier); soprano solo and chorus, "Laudate" (Randegger), and a Bach Postlude, Fugue in D major, by Mr. Palmer, which was not by any means the least of the performance, as Mr. Palmer is an accomplished organist, and has performed some creditable musical feats upon the lovely organ at St. Dominic's.

Mrs. Marriner-Campbell, whose concert last February at the Presidio was such a success, yielded to the many importunities brought to bear and this month gave another that was as greatly enjoyed as the first. The program, which was a choice one, was contributed by the following talent: Mrs. M. C. Mead, Mrs. L. W. McClure, Miss Rebecca Delvalle, Miss Ruth Weston, Walter C. Campbell, assisted by Miss Ethelwyn Grant, violinist, an advanced pupil of Henry Heyman, and Miss Julia Thorpe and Miss Olive Dunn at the piano.

Many of the Mrs. Campbell's vocal pupils occupy important church positions in the city, and to a list of nine have been added lately Miss Edna Smart, who has been appointed to Grace Methodist, as solo soprano; Miss Elsie Arden, contralto, to the same church, and Miss Ruth Weston, contralto, to Saint Paul's Episcopal choir, all drawing good salaries. Miss Edith Klock has a fine church position in Alameda, but is substituting for a month in Calvary Church, this city, for Mrs. Susie Hert Mark, who is taking her vacation.

It is with deep regret that I announce the death, learned since the above incidents occurred, of the mother of Mrs. Marriner-Campbell. Mrs. Campbell's bereavement will be felt by the community, musical and otherwise, and that deeply, as she has by her gracious manner and kindly interest in all woven herself very closely into the hearts of her friends, whose tenderest sympathy is hers.

The Beringer Conservatory Recital was largely attended and the following creditable program rendered by the pupils of Mr. and Mrs. Beringer, both instrumental and vocal: Fantaisie sur un Air Original, op. 176, Gurlitt, for two pianos, Miss Gladys Beringer and Prof. Joseph Beringer; "Album Leaf," op. 32, Rakemann, Miss Violet Hannah; "Charme de Printemps," op. 25, Becker, Master Charles Evans; "Petit Morceau Lyrique," Allegretto, Novara; Gavotte, op. 207, No. 2, Gurlitt, little Irene Goudey; Andante Sostenuto, No. 2; Allegretto, No. 3, from op. 72, Mendelssohn, Miss Hilda Gutfield; song, "The Carnival," Molloy, Miss Pearl Metcalf; Romance, op. 44, Rubinstein, Miss Nina Cevok; "Wedding March," Mendelssohn; "Harmonious Blacksmith," Händel, Miss Alice Maxwell; "Au Village," op. 46, No. 4 (duet), Godard, Misses Anita Lewis and Ethel Peck; song, "Thou Art Mine All," Brodsky, Miss Blanche Schoenberg; "Fantaisie de Concert sur La Traviata," Verdi, duet by W. Fletcher Husband and Professor Joseph Beringer; song, "Bid Me to Love," D'Auvergne Barnard, Miss Cornelia Farrell; Sonata, C major, op. 24, C. M. von Weber, Miss Irene Palmer; Songs, "Can I Forget?" Victor Kemp; "Saper Vorrerte," Verdi, Miss Edith Schoenberg; Impromptu, Theme with Variations, op. 142, Schubert, W. Fletcher Husband; Songs, "A Dream," Bartlett; "The Rosary," Nevin, Dr. Grace Simon; Nocturne, "Les Yeaux," "Valse Brilliant," "Des Gouttes de Rosée," Joseph Beringer and Miss Gladys Beringer; songs, "Old Love Song" (1708), Chandon; "The Merry Brown Thrush," Dudley Buck; "Re dell' Abisso" ("Un Ballo in Maschero"), Verdi, Mme. Joseph Beringer.

Miss Elizabeth Westgate is off to her summer home, "Lazycroft," in the Santa Cruz Mountains, for a few weeks' rest.

The annual recital and reception of the Beethoven Club was held on June 4 at the residence of Mrs. W. P. McDermott (Leila France), on San José avenue. Those who took part in the program were Miss Ida Di Veccio, Miss Alice Whelen, Miss Sadie Cole, Miss Hattie Game, Miss Frances Fitchen, Miss Edna McNab, Miss May Worthington, Miss Nellie Sullivan, Miss Carrie Bright, Miss Mary

SHERWOOD,
Greatest American Pianist.
ESTHER FEE,
Violinist.
(Paris—In America Nov. 1.)
BRUNO STEINDEL,
The Noted 'Cellist.
CLARA MURRAY,
Harpist.
LEONE LANGDON KEY,
Organist.

CHARLES R. BAKER,
MANAGER OF
High Class and Distinguished MUSICAL ARTISTS,
Fine Arts Building,
CHICAGO.

ELECTA GIFFORD,
Soprano.
(Late of Royal Opera, Amsterdam.)
MABELLE CRAWFORD,
Contralto.
GLENN HALL,
Tenor.
SYDNEY LLOYD WRIGHTSON,
The English Baritone.
MASTER LLOYD SIMONSON,
The Famous Boy Soprano.

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

MARY WOOD CHASE, PIANO VIRTUOSA
For Terms, Dates, &c., address HANNAH & HAMLIN, Managers.
Personal address: 3031 Prairie Avenue. 514 Kimball Hall, CHICAGO.

FRANK T. BAIRD,
THE ART OF SINGING.
34 Monroe St., Chicago, Ill.

EDWARD MEEK,
BARITONE.
Pupils Accepted.
924 Fine Arts Building, Chicago.

Mr. & Mrs. BICKNELL YOUNG,
67 Kimball Hall,
CHICAGO, ILL.

NINETEENTH YEAR.
1899-1900.
Mrs. REGINA WATSON'S SCHOOL
for the
HIGHER ART OF PIANO PLAYING.
297 Indiana Street, Chicago, Ill.

Mrs. GEORGE A. COE,
(BARTH and MOSZKOWSKI)
Pianist and Lecturer, 640 University Place, EVANSTON. ILL.

MABELLE CRAWFORD,
Contralto,
Management: Just returned from Europe
HANNAH & HAMLIN, 514 Kimball Hall, or 5246 Prairie Ave., Chicago.

THE SPIERING QUARTET,
708 Fine Arts Building, Michigan Boulevard, CHICAGO.

MAURICE ARONSON PIANIST. Auditorium Building. (Tower, 1406.) Chicago.
Concerts, Recitals, Musicales, Lectures.
For the past four years chief assistant to Leopold Godowsky. Four Competent Assistants. Write for circular

Miss CHRISTINE FARNESE. Vocal School.
Certificated pupil of Mme. MARCHESI.
301 State Street, MADISON, WIS.

CLARA G. TRIMBLE, SOPRANO.
Address 619 Fine Arts Building, Chicago.

W. C. E. SEEBOECK, PIANIST, Just returned from Europe, where he made very successful appearances.
Studio 727 FINE ARTS BUILDING, CHICAGO, ILL.

HELEN BUCKLEY, SOPRANO. Vocal Instruction. ORATORIO, CONCERTS, RECITALS
316 MADISON AVENUE, CHICAGO.

McDermott, Miss Gertrude Albrecht, Miss Ethel Bailey and Miss Florence Moran.

Herbert Medley, the popular baritone, has been engaged to sing at the Fourth of July exercises at Marysville. Another vocalist from 'Frisco, Mrs. Sedgeley Reynolds, is to assist in the patriotic exercises at the same place.

Miss Gertrude Gerrish, of Sacramento, is preparing her pupils on the piano for their annual recital early in July.

Among the late additions to the membership of the Loring Club, of this city, are numbered some old-time Sacramento favorites. Horace Crocker, now of Oakland, basso; Walter Longbottom and Eugene Elkus, tneors, now of 'Frisco, and Dr. Charles Pinkham, Jr., all not ling since popular members of the Capital City musical circles.

The Vallejo Choral Society that not long ago gave the "Gondoliers" with so good a measure of success, is preparing "The Bohemian Girl," to be given in the near future.

Mrs. Oscar Mansfeldt has been seriously ill for the past week with inflammatory rheumatism in her right arm, but is at the present writing somewhat better. It is particularly disheartening just at this time, as there were some recitals in prospect for the near future that may now have to be delayed somewhat. However, as it is not an acute attack, we may enjoy the pleasure of anticipation, as Mrs. Mansfeldt's recitals are a rare treat, holding, as she does, a high place among our lady pianists, and it is whispered that she has added some choice numbers to her repertory which it may be our pleasure to hear for the first time in 'Frisco.

Mrs. Hugo Mansfeldt writes from Berlin of the severity of the winter just passed, and adds some chatty news about the concert season now nearing its close. She says there is fairly a surfeit of sweets, there is so much to choose from, and the opera presentations are grand. That of the "Nibelungen Ring" she particularly remarked, which is interesting to us on account of the taste of Wagner we had during the past winter when the Grau contingent was here. She says further that Marcella Sembrich has just been doing a season in Berlin, and she was greatly disappointed in her from the reputation which had preceded her, and led one to expect more than the reality could offer. She says Sembrich brought with her her own Italian orchestra, which was far below the average German orchestra, and did not enhance the pleasure of the performance.

San Francisco, June 24, 1901.

This has been a very quiet, uneventful week musically Nearly all the functions which have created public interest have been weddings. I believe June is the month of brides, and some of our musical ones have joined the noble army of matrons, among the latter Miss Del Valle, who has appeared often of late and lent her voice to the entertainment of concertgoers. But nearly all news of interest comes from abroad. A letter from Hugo Mansfeldt, dated at Berlin on June 5, tells me his wonderful little pupil, Alma Stencil, has been adding more laurels to her already well established fame as a pianist. In addition to previous triumphs won across the big pond comes her latest achievement, a splendid program played before the invited guests of Ambassador and Mrs. Andrew White at their last reception of the season on June 4.

The palatial residence was graced by the presence of elegantly gowned women and men of the highest diplomatic standing. The entire program was performed by this one talented little girl, whose firm touch and powerful technic made the magnificent Steinway grand respond royally. Her selections were made from Schubert, Chopin, Schumann and Liszt, and her success was overwhelming. The American Ambassador and his gracious lady were so delighted with little Alma's performance that they invited her to play on June 8 at the reception to be given by the American Women's Club at the Hotel Savoy. Mr. Mansfeldt shared in the honors, and was warmly congratulated on the brilliant success of his pupil.

Close on the heels of the honor conferred on Dr. H. J. Stewart as organist at the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo comes the news of his resignation of his position as organist at Trinity Church, this city, which he has held for the past sixteen years. The resignation was sent in that he might accept a similar position which he has been called to fill in Trinity Church, Boston. During Dr. Stewart's term of service here, a splendid new organ has replaced the old one, and he has organized and trained into splendid form one of the largest and finest vested choirs in the country. One of the best features of his special musical services at Trinity has been a musical half hour after service, when he gave an organ recital, including some of the choicest and most difficult music written for the instrument, and which were greatly enjoyed. He will be greatly missed in musical circles, as he has for long been one of the moving spirits of the music life in this town and a popular member of the Musicians' and Bohemian Clubs of this city. Among other achievements musical have been the composition of several light operas, notable among which is "Bluff King Hal," which was performed here some years ago. Dr. Stewart is still in the East, but expects to return and play at Trinity during July and August. His resignation goes into effect the last of August and the new contract in Trinity, Boston, dates from September.

A discussion on the subject of women's quartets of late brought to light the fact that it was Mrs. Marriner-Campbell, of our city, who organized and trained the first quartet of women's voices on the Coast. This was called the Treble Clef Quartet, and will be remembered by many for the fine concert work that was done by them. The quartet was composed of Mrs. Beatrice Priest-Fine, Mrs. Noble, Miss Jeanette Wilcox and Mrs. Birmingham, all pupils of Mrs. Campbell. So successful was this combination that when time and circumstances caused its breaking up another was formed from voices selected from Mrs. Campbell's class, which was called the "Colonial," with Miss Florence Doane, Miss Ivy Gardner, Miss Mary Mann and Miss Clara Hyman for the four voices. Later on the "Alta Quartet" was formed and was composed of Miss Ruth Kirke, Miss Isobell Kerr, Miss Ouida Sargent and Miss Isella van Pelt. The remarkable facility with which Mrs. Campbell's pupils secure well paid church positions has caused me to make a list of those now holding positions in the choirs of our city. In Calvary Presbyterian, Miss Isella Van Pelt holds the position of contralto with Hubert Williams, tenor. Miss Edna Smart, soprano, is at Grace Methodist Episcopal, and in the same choir is Miss Elsie Arden, contralto; Mrs. M. C. Mead is soprano in the Church of the New Jerusalem, Swedenborgian. Mrs. E. N. Klock, who teaches vocal music in Alameda, is soprano in the Christian Church of the same city. Miss Marie Partridge is soprano of St. Stephen's Episcopal, with Mrs. L. W. McClure and Miss Ruth Weston, contralto, at St. Paul's Episcopal. Mrs. Walter G. Fonda is the contralto of the First Congregational Church; Miss Florence Doane, the soprano of Howard Street Presbyterian; Miss Margery Marks, soprano, at St. Paul's Episcopal, and Miss Florence Walby holds the position of soprano soloist in the choir at the Church of the Advent on Eleventh street.

Miss Adelaide Roddy, of Vailejo, Cal., about whose beautiful voice much has been said and sung, has completed her touring season, and will retire to her home in Vallejo for the summer to rest. She has not made public her plans for the coming season.

The Chaminade Club of women's voices in Oakland, gave a musicale at Loring Hall last week, under the direction of Mrs. W. G. Langdon. There was a large attendance.

A. Wedmore Jones.

ESTABLISHED 1867.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, President.

The Largest and Most Complete Institution of Musical Learning in America.

COLLEGE BUILDING, 202 MICHIGAN BLVD.

The finest structure in existence devoted exclusively to a Musical College.

SCHOOL OF ACTING, MUSIC ELOCUTION, ORATORY, LANGUAGES.

BOARD OF MUSICAL DIRECTORS.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, DR. LOUIS FALK,
HANS VON SCHILLER, WILLIAM CASTLE,
BERNARD LISTEMANN, S. E. JACOBSOHN,
RUDOLPH GANZ, CHARLES GAUTHIER.
HERMAN DEVRIES,
HART CONWAY, Director School of Acting.

Catalogue Mailed Free.

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

HARRISON M. WILD CONCERT ORGANIST.
Studio 6, .. 241 .. Wabash Ave., CHICAGO.
Piano and Organ Instruction.

D. A. CLIPPINGER,
The Art of Singing.
Conductor,
410 Kimball Hall, Chicago, Ill.

EARL R. DRAKE,
VIOLIN VIRTUOSO.
Teacher.
Studio Kimball Hall, Chicago.

VICTOR GARWOOD,
Kimball Hall, Chicago.

William A.
WILLETT, BARITONE.
Care Musical Courier, Chicago, or leading agents.

ALLEN SPENCER,
PIANIST. Concerts, Recitals.
Address: KIMBALL HALL, CHICAGO.

KARLETON HACKETT,
Teacher of Singing,
Kimball Hall, Chicago.

MARY PECK THOMSON,
SOPRANO,
620 Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

CAROLYN LOUISE WILLARD,
CONCERT PIANIST. Instruction.
Pupil of Ernst Jedliczka, Bloomfield-Zeisler.
For terms and dates address
4164 Lake Avenue, Chicago.

FREDERICK WARREN,
BARITONE,
Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.

Mrs. THEODORE WORCESTER, Pianist.
(GODOWSKY.)
Concerts, Recitals and Salon Musicales. Recitals from Russian Composers.
ADDRESS: 1402 Auditorium Tower, CHICAGO.

R. CAPOUL CUTTRISS WARDE,
SINGING MASTER.
The teacher of many prominent artists now before the public. Send for list.
STUDIO: No. 911 Cable Building, Cor. Jackson and Wabash, CHICAGO.

MINNIE CRUDUP VESEY, MEZZO CONTRALTO.
CONCERTS, RECITALS, VOCAL TEACHER, COACHING.
Address HANNNH & HAMLIN, 514 Kimball Hall, CHICAGO.

Chicago Auditorium Conservatory
AUDITORIUM BUILDING, CHICAGO.
FREDERIC GRANT GLEASON, Director.
Send for Summer Catalogue. ROY ARTHUR HUNT, Manager.

ROWDON Basso-Cantante,
623 Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO, ILL.

Gottschalk Lyric School. Musical and Dramatic.
CATALOGUE MAILED ON APPLICATION.
L. G. GOTTSCHALK, Director. KIMBALL HALL, 243-253 Wabash Ave., CHICAGO.

MUSICAL KINDERGARTEN FOR THE PIANOFORTE
BY FANNIE CHURCH PARSONS.
For full information concerning normal instruction or children's class work, address
MRS. PARSONS' NORMAL TRAINING SCHOOL,
Handel Hall, CHICAGO, ILL.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY,
JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, Director, Kimball Building, 243 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO.
ALL BRANCHES OF MUSIC. DRAMATIC ART. TEACHERS' TRAINING DEPARTMENT.
JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, VICTOR GARWOOD, ALLEN H. SPENCER, GERTRUDE MURDOUGH, GLENN DILLARD GUNN, HOWARD WELLS, Piano; KARLETON HACKETT, NOYES B. MINER, HOLMES COWPER, GLENN HALL, RAGNA LINNE, MABEL GOODWIN, LOUISE BLISH, Singing; WILHELM MIDDELSCHULTE, Organ; JAN VAN OORDT, Violin; ADOLPH WEIDIG, Composition; JAN KALAS, Violoncello, and thirty other superior instructors.
Catalogue mailed free. 243 Wabash Avenue, care of American Conservatory.

MUSICAL COURIER OFFICES—FINE ARTS BUILDING.

CHICAGO, June 29, 1901.

A SPANISH version of the "Star Spangled Banner," adapted by Ferando S. Ximenez for the use of Spanish speaking colonies, was heard at the St. Ignatius College commencement exercises in the Illinois Theatre, Chicago, on the afternoon of June 25.

Among popular features in the Studebaker's latest success, "King Dodo," are "The Tale of a Bumblebee," sung by Miss Quinlan and Mr. Morris, "The Cat's Quartet" and "Look in the Book and See." Changes in the latter portion of the opera have brought out several good points which formerly lay dormant. Mr. Norris' conception of the title role is original and realistic, though in one or two instances he carries his absurdities too far. One of his scenes, which may best be described as a "perpetual motion act," has been elaborated, and the result is not an improvement. However, tradition testifies that brilliant productions such as this have not infrequently been marred by similar defects. On July 4 a special matinee performance will attract many holiday celebrators to the Fine Arts Building.

Notwithstanding the excessive heat, there has been no lack of musical activity this week in Chicago's educational circles.

The Gottschalk Lyric School held its annual commencement exercises and concert on the evening of June 26, when a representative program was artistically interpreted by many promising students. Miss Ingeborg Sorenson played Thiele's "Chromatic Fantaisie," which served as an effective opening number. Millett's trio, "Ye Fields of Light," was sung by Miss Laura Tillson, Miss Alice Hammond and Sedgwick MacGregor. Mrs. Pearl E. Stebbins followed with Meyerbeer's "Roberto Tu che Adoro," after which Miss Clara C. Fried played Nocturne, op. 9, No. 2, by Chopin. Gounod's "Vulcan Song" proved to be a notable feature as given by W. F. Larkin. Miss Alice Boettiger, who possesses exceptional dramatic talent, read the "Forest Scene" from "Ingomar." The other performers were Miss Florence Compton, Miss Jeannette Gregg, Ted Short, Miss Laura Tillson, W. R. Uhlemann, Miss Carrie Schlumbrecht, Mrs. Carrie R. Crane-Beaumont, William J. Parker, Alice Blial, Miss Sara Nordstrom and Miss Hattie Nurnberger. Under the direction of Mrs. Miller the physical culture class presented "Posings and Pantomime."

At the Gottschalk Lyric School the list of special awards and certificates for 1901 is as follows: Teacher's Certificate Class—Piano, Miss Clara Fried, Miss Florence Compton, Miss Carrie Schlumbrecht, Mrs. Pearl E. Stebbins and Miss Bertha E. Miller. Special Certificate—Miss Anna Burke, first year Italian.

At the contest the gold medal for the teacher's certificate class piano, was awarded to Miss Carrie Schlumbrecht.

At the vocal contest Miss Hattie Nurnberger received the gold medal and Mrs. Pearl E. Stebbins the silver medal.

Silver Medal—Men's class, Sedgwick MacGregor. Gold Medal—Dramatic, Miss Alice Boettiger. Gold Medal—Awarded to Miss Florence Compton, highest average in teacher's certificate class, piano and harmony. Silver Medals—Mabel Runquest, highest average, fourth grade, piano; Helen Schmidt, highest yearly average, fourth grade, piano; Clara Lane, highest average, third grade, piano; Marie Troyer, highest yearly average, third grade, piano; Annie Lane, highest average second grade, piano; Ruth Bates, highest yearly average, second grade, piano; Marie Savage, highest average, first grade, piano; Marjorie Adams, highest yearly average, first grade, piano; Chester Reid, highest average, preparatory grade, piano. Beaumont Gold Medals—Clara C. Fried, highest average, piano sight reading; Mrs. Ida Bomell Davis, highest average, vocal sight reading. Silver Medals—Anna Burke, highest average, first year Italian; Sara Nordstrom, first year vocal; Clara C. Fried, first year vocal, and H. H. Wilson, first year vocal.

Yesterday morning, under the auspices of the American Conservatory, Miss Louise Caldwell and Allen Spencer gave an admirable recital before an appreciative and very enthusiastic audience. Miss Caldwell sang "Wohin" and "Ungeduld," Schubert; "Husheen," Needham, and "Wouldn't That Be Queer?" Mrs. Beach. Mr. Spencer's interesting contributions were "King's Hunting Jig," John Bull; "Le Coucou," Claude Daquin; Mozart's "Rondo," in A minor; "Moment Musicale," Schubert; "Scherzo," op. 4, Brahms, and compositions by Moszkowski, Schutt, Liebling, Leschetizky and Beethoven-Saint-Saëns.

The ensuing announcement recently made by the Chicago Musical College has proved to be of great interest to hundreds of music students:

"As the time between the closing of the regular season, June 22, and the opening of the fall term, September 9, is too long to be spent entirely without study, a special five weeks' summer course is arranged from June 24 to July 27. All students should continue their work during that time. This allows six weeks, a sufficient vacation, after the close of the summer term. Teachers from every part of the country take advantage of this course. It is the best preparation for pupils who desire to enter the advanced classes in the fall."

Examiners at the Chicago Auditorium Conservatory's recent musical contests were Charles W. Clark, Alfred Williams and Mrs. Gertrude Grosscup-Perkins, vocal department; Miss Emma E. Clark, Cyril Graham and Walton Perkins, piano department. The conservatory's gold medals were won by Robert Hood Bowers, composer; Edna Lewis, vocalist, and Susie Ford, pianist. At this progressive educational institution a number of interesting events will take place during the summer session, a violin recital by Errico Sansome and his pupils and several performances by the School of Acting having already been arranged.

The dramatic department of the Chicago Auditorium Conservatory will produce a melodrama, "Among the Breakers," on the evening of July 2. This event promises to be of an exceptionally interesting nature, the cast consisting of Miss Queena Robinson, Miss Ellen Wachter, Miss Agnes Dolan, Miss Raeburn Replog, Joseph De Stefan, George O'Keefe, W. J. Elliston, Herbert Mott, E. M. Herries and E. Charles Flynn.

At his recent recital in Handel Hall Earl R. Drake, the gifted violinist, played Goldmark's Suite for piano and violin, op. 11; Sonata 6, Bach; Nardini's "Larghetto"; "Histoire," Tirendelli; "Elfintanz," Popper-Halir, and Vieuxtemps' exacting concerto in A minor, all of which were admirably interpreted. C. F. Balatka gave valuable assistance.

Charles R. Baker announces that William H. Sherwood and Lloyd Simonson are engaged to appear at Euclid Park Beach, Cleveland, on Monday evening, August 19.

Frederick Warren, of the Chicago Auditorium Conservatory, assisted by Miss Zella L. Marshall, pianist, will give a recital at the residence of Mrs. Henry Herman, at Waukegan, on July 1. The program will include compositions by German, Dvorák, Schumann, Brahms, Allitsen, MacDowell, Lang, Brackett, Beach, Foote, Nevin, Herman, Chadwick, Rogers and Messager.

Before going to New York, which will be his headquarters next season, William A. Wegener, the eminent Chicago tenor, will enjoy a short and well earned vacation.

Karleton Hackett, of the American Conservatory, is this week visiting Terre Haute for the purpose of giving an address on "Artistic Singing" before the Indiana Music Teachers' Convention.

Mr. and Mrs. Bicknell Young, prominent Chicago musicians, are now enjoying a short trip which is to embrace New York, Philadelphia and Boston.

Miss Amy Murray, the gifted Scottish singer, who was heard in this city during the past season, has been invited to fill return engagements in Chicago next year.

Louis Francis Brown states that Burton Holmes, who is now traveling around the world, will deliver fifteen lectures on Thursday and Friday evenings and Saturday afternoons for five weeks, beginning November 21, at Studebaker Hall, Fine Arts Building.

Mrs. Charles Howard Trego, soprano, has been heard frequently in Chicago and its vicinity during the past season. The announcement that Mrs. Trego will be one of the soloists next month at the Chautauqua (N. Y.) Assembly is satisfactory, for last year this talented vocalist was very popular at the "Summer City's" amphitheatre concerts.

The supplementary summer term of six weeks, inaugurated by Maurice Aronson, is being taken advantage of by a large number of teachers and pupils, who have held positions in other localities during the regular season. Mr. Aronson's class in Freeport has unanimously requested the continuation of instruction throughout the same holiday period.

Miss Carolyn Louise Willard will leave this city on July 3, for the purpose of spending the summer at Coldwater, Mich., where she will accept piano pupils who may be desirous of studying during vacation weeks.

Among Mrs. Rose Wells' many talented young piano pupils are Eugenia Powell and Gladys McGowan, whose playing at a June recital in the Fine Arts Building forcibly illustrated Mrs. Wells' exceptional ability as an instructor.

At the residence of her teacher, Carolyn Louise Willard, Miss Mabelle Crossman, pianist, will give a recital this afternoon, Miss Maude Lindon, soprano, and Guy Woodard, violinist, assisting. A representative program has been artistically arranged by Miss Willard.

Pupils of Miss Belle Adams creditably interpreted an attractive program in Kimball Hall last Saturday afternoon. Miss Adams has studied with Emil Liebling.

Notice.

Mr. George Hamlin, the tenor, has made arrangements to accept, during the summer months, a limited number of pupils for instruction and coaching in singing. Apply at his studio—Kimball Hall, Wabash and Jackson, Chicago.

CHARLES R. BAKER'S ARTISTS.—The artists who are under the management of Charles R. Baker, of Chicago, will unquestionably have a busy season, beginning with September. Mr. Baker is working early and late, and closing many engagements. Before the Michigan Music Teachers' Association at Flint, on June 26, Sydney Lloyd Wrightson, the English baritone, won a most enthusiastic reception. The association's rules have excluded encores, but the applause of the audience was irresistible, and Mr. Wrightson responded by singing another selection very artistically.

"William H. Sherwood well sustained his reputation of being one of the greatest pianists of modern times," asserted the Illinois State Register, in reference to his recent appearance at the Springfield convention.

Last week Mr. Baker visited Michigan in the interests of his artists.

ST. LOUIS ADVERTISEMENTS.

HOMER MOORE, BARITONE.
The Odeon, St. Louis, Mo.

MRS. STELLA KELLOGG HAINES,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION,
101, 102, 103 Vista Building, Cor. Grand and Franklin, ST. LOUIS, MO.

ALEXANDER HENNEMAN,
VOCAL CULTURE.
Opera. Oratorio.
Coaching.
Henneman Hall, 2723 Olive St., ST. LOUIS

HOTEL CECIL, LONDON,
June 22, 1901.

THE exciting event of the week has of course been the advent of Paderewski. In him do the ladies of London take the closest interest, and as for such ladies of New York, Texas and other "furrin parts" who happen to be here, they and their conduct hardly bear speaking about. On Tuesday St. James' Hall was packed to the last seat; even the ordinary shilling seats behind the platform were filled at half a guinea a time—it goes without saying by ladies.

As I lately remarked, it was interesting to hear him after Bauer. His program was very different from Bauer's. He began with Haydn's well-known F minor Variations; after that Mozart's A minor Rondo; then came two Sonatas, Beethoven's "Waldstein" and Schumann's F sharp minor, and the affair wound up with a six item selection from Chopin.

Paderewski is a difficult subject to criticise. Years ago, when he first appeared in London, he was viciously attacked, one ladylike critic observing that in certain pieces he "fairly ran amuck, to the disgust of the more intelligent part of the audience" (I quote the remark from memory). Every man who is worth anything must have a great sorrow in his life, and I, believing myself to be worth something, have taken as my great sorrow the fact that I cannot discover how the critic discovered that the "more intelligent part of the audience" was disgusted on this occasion. I was present, and no particular section of the audience showed any signs of disapprobation. But the Times is a wonderful paper. I often read it to learn Dr. Stanford's views on musical matters. Dr. Stanford is not a great musician, but he has a fine gift of unconscious humor, and when one reads him in the Times he is often distinctly amusing. This, however, has nothing to do with Paderewski. Whether Dr. Stanford, or Mr. Maitland, or someone else wrote the famous—the now famous Paderewski notice I do not know. I only know that it actually appeared and that I read it. It was typical of the attitude of the London press at the time. Paderewski had been to Paris—he had been and had been seen and had conquered. That was not enough for our English critics. They wanted to see him conquer here before they would admit him to be any good at all. He did conquer here, and after that no praise could be too fulsome for him. Some of the most respectable papers have told him that he is as great as Rubinstein or Liszt, and some other papers, equally respectable, have implied that he is as great as Liszt, Rubinstein, Bülow and half a dozen others rolled into one.

It is because of this awful nonsense that Paderewski is so fearfully difficult to write about. At the beginning it was quite easy to take up an impartial, judicial attitude. I did that with eminent success, and in various insignificant sheets defended Paderewski against the many stupid attacks made on him. Then when the tide turned and he was glorified into an Apollo I was naturally inclined to go too far in the other direction, and to denounce him as a very second-rate person. And even now, when I am accustomed to the chorus of adulation and have nearly forgotten the ridiculous adverse judgments of the early days, it is with some difficulty that I judge him and write about him with absolute fairness. For, to put the thing plainly, Paderewski does not belong to the greatest order of pianists—he cannot be compared, for instance, with Lamond or Bauer; he lacks many of the essential qualities of a great pianist. Yet, on the other hand, he has a gift of piquancy; he exhilarates; no matter what he plays, it comes off with a certain freshness and sparkle that compel one to be interested. I say emphatically that it is not great piano playing, but it is by no means small piano playing. Paderewski has distinctive notions about all the music he performs; he gives you an individual reading of everything he takes in hand, and his individual reading is always full of color and a personal emotion. On Tuesday, for instance, he gave us among other things Haydn's F minor Variations, Mozart's too familiar A minor Rondo and the "Waldstein" Sonata of Beethoven. The first two I have taught to students until I am sick of them, and I cannot tell why on earth Paderewski should have chosen them for this occasion. Yet he made them engrossing. The "Waldstein" he played in a nobler manner, which was still not noble enough; he seemed to me to be trifling with a huge subject. The slow introduction was full of mystery of the true Beethovian mystical emotion, but the finale was undistinguished, poverty stricken, wretchedly drawing-roomy. In Schumann's F minor Sonata he rose nearer to the height of the argument. The sonata is no favorite of mine; excepting the slow movement it is barren and dry, but Paderewski did contrive to get a little juice (so to speak) into it. I heard only a little of the Chopin, and it was too sickly and effeminate for my taste. The more robust treatment of Bauer seems to me truer, more appropriate. But Paderewski's sentimentality appealed immensely to the hosts of gaily bedecked ladies who filled the hall, and though I did not stop to witness any of the kissing at the end, I am sure it would not be the fault of the ladies if there was none.

At the opera things go on in the good old bad way. I really cannot screw up my courage to dress to crawl to Covent Garden night by night, only to hear operas I don't like represented in a way I like less. There is no artistic atmosphere in the place; the spirit of perfunctoriness is on everyone connected with it. Every visit there is a trial to one's temper. The great attraction at present is Tamagno, for whom I have only the smallest possible admiration, and so far he has sung in only Verdi's "Otello" and "Aïda." I have said my say in these columns touching the second; about the first all I have to say is that it is thin, violent, disjointed. How on earth anyone could ever think it one of the masterpieces of music drama I cannot in the least tell. Of course I have a strong personal antipathy to the story of "Othello." My cure for such madness as love jealousy would be the outward application of a pail of cold water. Not content with the degree of violence which exists in Shakespeare's version of the story, Boïto made matters worse by retaining only the violence and leaving out everything humane, gracious, soothing; so that virtually all Verdi had to do was to put incidental music to a series of boiler explosions. Such a concoction could not be a work of art, and "Otello" is not a work of art. Tamagno completes the unlikeness to a work of art by bawling the rowdy portions and making nothing of the very rare, delicate touches. Of course it is only when he puts on full pressure that he is in the least interesting; his voice is then rich and full of color; whereas in his pianos and mezza voces it is poor and washed out. Still a night filled with shouting is not very edifying.

On Monday night we had a quite passable performance of "Tannhäuser." Ternina was Elizabeth and Strakosch Venus, Fischer Sobel Tannhäuser and Bispham Wolfram; Plançon played the Landgrav. Ternina was much too great for her part. She overflowed it, if one may use the expression. She tried to make it stupendous, whereas it can only be made tender and affectionate and sentimental after the German fräulein's fashion. In Sobel it would seem we are going to have one of the best of Tannhäusers. He started out rather badly, but his voice lasted out till the very end. In the first act his tone was poor, but in the last it was full and of a marvellous quality. He acts with noble dignity, and on the purely musical side his interpretation lacked nothing. Plançon was once again splendid. As for the scenery and stage management they will never be better until F. Neilson is given absolute power. He is an able young man, but so long as he is not invested with sufficient authority for his every direction to be carried out immediately without demur, so long will Covent Garden be something of a laughing stock.

I don't know whether much interest is taken in Roman church music in America. In England we are growing greatly excited about it. Music in the Church of Eng-

E. PRESSON MILLER,
VOICE CULTURE.
METROPOLITAN COLLEGE OF MUSIC, 212 West 59th St., New York.

Carlos N. Sanchez
OPERATIC TENOR, TEACHER OF SINGING.
Voice Building a Specialty. Repertory: Church, Oratorio and Opera.
Studios: 138 Fifth Ave., New York.
Monday, Wednesday, Thursday and Saturday,
RESIDENCE: 758 WEST END AVENUE,
Corner 97th Street.

JOSEPHINE S. JACOBY,
CONTRALTO.
Address: 104 West 58th Street, NEW YORK.

GEORGE H. C. ENSWORTH,
Address, 311 West 71st St., NEW YORK. BARITONE.

land is in a hopeless plight and I think it will be never any better. In the Romish churches it has been for a long time bad enough. Much of the vocal music was merely Sankey-Moody, while the instrumental pieces often, if not generally, overstepped the line that divides common stuff from sheer circus marches. Even at churches like the Kensington Pro-Cathedral, where Mr. Santley is all powerful, its music is as unreligious as can well be. Recently there has been a revolt against the Italian domination. It has been discovered by a few people that the English Roman church has a native music of its own, and that this music is in no wise inferior to that of any other school. Mr. Terry, choirmaster of Downside Abbey, near Bath, is working enthusiastically and with persistent industry at the matter, scoring the old masses and motets and having them sung by the Downside choir. Last week the Abbot of Downside, the Rev. Ford, invited me down to hear the music sung in the Monastery chapel, so I spent two nights and one whole day in an abbey.

Would it not make a fine title for a Protestant pamphlet—"Two Nights in a Monastery; the Secrets of the Cloister Disclosed"? I heard there one of the finest choirs in England, and heard music by Tallis, Byrde and Palestrina. This unaccompanied music is the only sort adapted to the Catholic liturgy. The Roman Church is a mediæval institution and mediæval music suits it precisely. I advise all who are able to hear some of it as early as possible; they will want no more of the Italian stuff with which this country at least is flooded.

JOHN F. RUNCIMAN.

RIESBERG ORGAN RECITALS AT PAN-AMERICAN.—These will occur on July 7 and 8, Sunday and Monday, and Miss Estelle Harris, soprano, has been engaged as special soloist. The programs follow:

SUNDAY, JULY 7, 1901.

Nuptial Song.....
March of the Magi Kings.....Dubois
Invocation.....Munro
Capriccio.....Lemaigre
Soprano solo, Ave Maria.....Bach-Gounod
Miss Estelle Harris, New York.
Violin obligato by Henry Marcus; piano obligato by Mrs. J. S. Marvin.
Triumphal March, From Crag to Sea.....Liszt
Swiss Melody.....Froehlich
Marriage Fanfare.....Gilbert
Soprano solo, O Divine Redeemer.....Gounod
Miss Estelle Harris.
Prelude to Lohengrin.....Wagner
Funeral March of a Toy Soldier.....Gounod
Organ duet, Plymouth Church March.....Zundel
Mrs. J. S. Marvin and Mr. Riesberg.

MONDAY, JULY 8, 1901.

Fantaisie in D minor.....Wegmann
Daybreak.....Spinney
Festal March.....Ashmall
Soprano solo, aria, Then Weep, O Grief-worn Eyes, from Le Cid.....Massenet
Miss Estelle Harris.
Two Communions, E minor, G major, varied.....Batiste
Romance.....Tours
The Answer.....Wolstenholme
Soprano solo, Hear Ye, Israel (Elijah).....Mendelssohn
Miss Estelle Harris.
Melodie.....Lefebvre-Wely
Hymn of Nuns.....Lefebvre-Wely
Processional March.....Edgar B. Smith

BROOKLYN ARIONS.—The Brooklyn Arion, of which Arthur Claassen is the director, has accepted the invitation of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences to sing at a concert next season. The Arion concerts under the auspices of the Institute have in the past been very successful and musically important events in Brooklyn.

CINCINNATI, June 29, 1901.

THE hot, stifling summer weather came in upon us with full blast this week, and with it the closing music recitals and commencements ceased.

Theodor Bohlmann, of the Conservatory of Music faculty, presented his advanced pupils in the following program:

Improvisata, La Belle Griselidis, op. 94, F major.....Reinecke
(For two pianos.)
Misses Lola Bell Harris and Daisy M. Seiler.

Piano soli—
Chanson Triste, G minor.....Tschaikowsky
To the Spring, op. 43, No. 6, F sharp major.....Grieg
Miss Ella Montgomery.

Waltzes for two pianos, op. 86.....Kirchner.
Miss Grace Marshall.

Songs—
Sei mir Gegruesst.....Schubert
To be Sung on the Waters.....Schubert
Miss Annabelle Ambrose.

Variations on a Russian Dance Tune.....Beethoven
Frederic C. Mayer.

From Concerto No. 3, C minor, op. 37.....Beethoven
Largo, E major.
Rondo—Allegro, C minor, C major.
(Orchestral part on second piano.)
Miss Lillian Lawhead.

Violin solo, Fantaisie Appassionata.....Vieuxtemps
Matthias R. Oliver.

Piano soli—
Staccato Caprice.....Vogrich
Polish Dance.....Scharwenka
Miss Lola Bell Harris.

Piano soli—
Impromptu, op. 51, G flat major.....Chopin
Serenata, D major.....Moszkowski
Chant de l'Alouette, op. 37, No. 3, G minor.....Tschaikowsky
Henover Steppen, G minor.....Schyttę
Miss Meta Bairnsfather.

Aria, Elizabeth's Prayer (Tannhäuser).....Wagner
Miss Ada Ruhl.

Piano soli—
Prelude e Minuetto, from Suite, op. 72, E minor.....Raff
Rondo Capriccioso, op. 14.....Mendelssohn
Miss Linda Wirt Lentz.

Piano solo, Reminiscences de Norma (Opera par Bellini).....Liszt
Leo A. Paalz.

Allegro de Concert, op. 46, A major.....Chopin
(Arranged for piano and orchestra by Jean Louis Nicode.)
(Orchestral part on second piano.)
Miss Daisy M. Seiler.

Of these the following are graduates: Dasiy Mae Seiler, Miss Lillian Lawhead, Leo A. Paalz. The graduate in the vocal department is Miss Ada Ruhl. Matthias R. Oliver is the post-graduate of the violin department.

It must be said to the credit of Mr. Bohlmann that he trains not only technically but intellectually. His system broadens and deepens the understanding. Miss Daisy M. Seiler is a fine illustration of his success. She has undoubtedly talent and this has been bent in the right direction. Her touch is beautiful and her temperament well grounded. There was much of a brilliant character in her rendering of the Chopin Allegro de Concert. Mr. Paalz had a tremendously difficult number in the Liszt transcription of "Norma," which she played with ease and intelligence.

Miss Lawhead is well matured, but was unable to be present.

Other pupils who reflected honor upon themselves were Miss Linda Wirt Lentz, Miss Meta Bairnsfather, Frederic C. Mayer, Miss Ella Montgomery and Miss Lola Bell Harris.

Miss Ada Ruhl, the voice graduate, sang "Elizabeth's Prayer," from "Tannhäuser." She put into it a great deal of feeling and dramatic expression. Miss Ruhl's voice is a pure soprano, flexible, true to the pitch and uniformly well sustained. She reflects much honor upon her teacher, Miss Clara Baur.

Miss Annabelle Ambrose has a voice of fine musical quality, well rounded and full of color.

Matthias R. Oliver, the only post graduate of the violin department, played the "Fantaisie Appassionata" of Vieuxtemps. The Conservatory has every reason to be proud of him. He has a great deal of temperament, and plays with expression and a good deal of fire. This fervor was best illustrated in his playing of Hauser's "Hungarian Rhapsodie," which he gave at a subsequent recital. He was called out several times by the enthusiastic audience. It was a kind of ovation tendered him before his departure for Europe, where he will continue his studies. His mother, Mrs. Oliver, will accompany him.

It is an invariable rule at the Conservatory that Frederic Shailer Evans should present his pupils at the closing June recitals in the most torrid, insufferable heat. Mr. Evans is not partial to heat—in fact, he loves coolness so well that he always manages to look refreshingly cool, but he has never been able to change this rule about the temperature. Some say his recitals bring the hot spell—others that the hot spell brings the recitals. Be that as it may. It is Hobson's choice.

There were two recitals in this scorching heat given by the most advanced pupils of Mr. Evans, assisted by others.

On Friday evening, June 21, the following program was presented:

Concerto, C minor (first movement).....Mozart
Cadenza by Reinecke.
(Orchestral part on second piano.)
Miss Dot Fay Trott.

Recitative, I Am at Last Alone.....Gounod
Aria, More Regal in His Low Estate (Queen of Sheba).....Gounod
Miss Hilda Hyman.

Concerto, E flat major (first movement).....Mozart
Cadenza by Hummel.
(Orchestral part on second piano.)
Miss Grace Adele Kite.

Piano soli—
Papillon, op. 43.....Grieg
Erotik, op. 43.....Grieg
An den Fruehling, op. 43.....Grieg
Miss Nan E. Wilson.

Violin solo, Hungarian Rhapsodie.....Hauser
Matthias R. Oliver.

Piano solo, Variations de Concert on a Theme from L'Elisire d'Amore, by Donizetti.....Henselt
Miss Eva Wynne.

Songs—
An April Idyl.....Tirindelli
A Song of Sunshine.....Goring Thomas
Miss Annabelle Ambrose.

Concerto, op. 69, F sharp minor.....Hiller
(Orchestral part on second piano.)
Miss Edna Strubbe.

Recitation, A Midnight Fantasy.....Aldrich
Miss Edith Robbins.

It is said of the piano departments of the Conservatory of Music that each one of the leading teachers has his characteristics, and impresses them upon the individuality of his pupils. If this is so the pupils of Mr. Evans have all the strong character of intelligence, dignity and force of their teacher more or less impressed upon them. The

OLIVE MEAD, VIOLINIST.
Appearing during the coming season of 1901-2 with the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA in Boston for the third time.
During July and August, please address MISS MEAD personally, 560 Park Avenue, New York.
Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, NEW YORK.

MRS. Carl Alves
Has Resumed Vocal Instruction at her Home Studio:
1146 Park Ave. near 91st Street, New York.

JULIAN PASCAL
Pianist. Concert, Recitals, Musicales.
For Terms and Dates address care of
MUSICAL COURIER, 1135 Broadway, New York.

MISS MONTEFIORE
VOICE.
Private Studio and Address:
THE ORMONDE,
2030 Broadway, corner 70th St., New York.

LOUIS V. SAAR,
Piano and Composition.
Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration.
Residence-Studio: 126 E. Eighty-third St., New York City.
Personal interview daily, 1 to 3.

HENRI G. SCOTT,
BASSO.
ORATORIO, CONCERT, RECITALS.
ADDRESS: 14 E. 42d Street, NEW YORK. 2117 N. 20th Street, PHILADELPHIA.

ETHEL L. ROBINSON,
(LONDON CONCERT DIRECTION)
Telegrams: "Musikchor, London."
122 Beaufort St., S. W., LONDON, ENGLAND.

thoroughness of his methods is always apparent—his scholarly direction and direct manner.

Miss Eva Wynne played the Henselt Variations with technical fluency and a good deal of brilliancy.

Miss Dot Fay Trott showed firm, musical endowment in the Mozart Concerto in C minor, which she played quite creditably.

Miss Kitc has a dainty touch and musical grasp.

Miss Edna Strubbe, one of this year's graduates, played the Hiller Concerto with a great deal of maturity and fine conception. Her playing is of the intellectual order, to some degree brilliant and in the strictest sense of rhythm.

Of the vocalists Miss Ambrose repeated the success of the previous evening.

Miss Hilda Hyman has made astonishing progress—one might say wonderful improvement—during the past year. Her voice is developing in strength and expanding in the power of dramatic expression which she plainly showed in her singing of the recitative and aria from "Queen of Sheba."

On Saturday evening, June 22, Mr. Evans' pupils appeared in the following program:

Piano solo, Sonata, op. 14, No. 1, E major.....Beethoven
Miss Edna Witham.
Violin solo, Romance and Rondo.....Wieniawski
Miss Ida Hossfeld.
Piano soli—
Rivulet, op. 81, No. 3.....Heller
Melodie from Snowflakes.....Von Wilm
Rondo Amabile, op. 154, No. 1.....Von Wilm
Ralph O'Kane.
Songs—
Yearnings.....Rubinstein
Thou'rt Like a Tender Flower.....Schumann
The Maiden at the Spring.....Goldmark
Spring Song.....Schumann
Miss Carrie Rieder.
Concerto, D minor (first movement).....Mozart
Cadenza by Reinecke.
(Orchestral part on second piano.)
Miss Elizabeth Ranly.
Piano soli—
Impromptu, op. 36, F sharp major.....Chopin
Etude de Concert, D flat major.....Liszt
Miss Maie Morgan.
Violin soli—
Berceuse.....Dunkler
Mazurka, D major.....Wieniawski
Miss Daisy Seiler.
Recitative, Sorta e la notte (Ernani).....Verdi
Aria, Ernani involami (Ernani).....Verdi
Miss Laura Strubbe.
Scherzo, from Concerto in B flat minor.....Scharwenka
(Orchestral part on second piano.)
Miss Corene Harmon.

Miss Maie Morgan played not only with fine technical skill, but with a beautiful sense of poetry. Her runs are smooth and yet brilliant.

The evidence of Mr. Evans' skill as a teacher was seen in the entire evening's work.

Miss Corene Harmon has a clean technic and plays with a good deal of intelligence.

A pupil of Miss Frances Moses, Miss Carrie Rieder, soprano, did remarkably well. Her training is in the right direction.

Miss Laura Strubbe, too, is to be congratulated upon her singing of the recitative and aria from "Ernani."

Not to be forgotten is Ralph O'Kane, who in his piano solos evinced considerable talent.

In my last letter, speaking of the good work of the children's chorus, I forgot to mention that they had been trained by Miss Frances Moses. Such work is certainly a credit to the teacher.

J. A. Homan.

Miss Marian Alta Moyer, a soprano with a good dramatic voice, gave the post graduate recital at the Pennsylvania College of Music, at Meadville. The assisting artist was L. L. Lord, 'cellist.

MUSIC IN ITALY.

ITALIAN BRANCH OFFICE,
5 VIA RONDINELLI, FLORENCE, ITALY,
June 20, 1901.

ANTONIO SCONTRINO, one of Italy's most serious and reputed musicians, has been commissioned by Gabriele d'Annunzio to write the musical intermezzi to his new drama, "Francesca da Rimini."

The Quartetto Fiorentino recently presented for the first time a Quartetto in sol minore, for two violins, viola and violoncello, by Maestro Scontrino, which attained exceptional artistic success, being repeated in its entirety, and then redemanded by the large and particularly critical audience present, which represented the musical community of Florence. The warmth of conception and the originality of style and treatment which this quartet evidences make it a most valuable addition to chamber music literature, and the quartet organizations would do well to place it in their repertory; I believe it is to be published by Carisch & Janichen, Milan.

Jan Kubelik, who, by reason of his wonderful technic and amazing artistic personality, has been given the appellative of the Paganini redivivus, startled the Italian musical community from the apathetic indifference which it demonstrates generally to the majority of concertistic celebrities.

I had the pleasure of managing Mr. Kubelik's tour in Italy, and in Nice and Monte Carlo, and was thus present at all of his concerts, which were, without exception, absolute artistic triumphs. Kubelik's tour this year in Italy I can safely affirm has never been equaled by any artist in this country, as the following list will testify:

Milan, four concerts; Bologna, two concerts; Florence, four concerts; Rome, five concerts; Naples, four concerts; Genoa, two concerts; Nice, seven concerts.

Particularly at Nice his success was enormous, so enormous that after the fourth concert, in Nice, the direction of Monte Carlo invited him to give a concert at the Casino, with orchestra directed by M. Jehin. To render this possible the direction was obliged to transgress a rule which had heretofore been held inviolable, namely, that no artist could play at Monte Carlo who had previously played during the same season at Nice.

At the Nice concerts I noted Moriz Rosenthal, Leopold Auer, Hugo Heerman, Simonetti, Coquelin Cadet, and other notables.

Another notable musical event were the concerts of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, directed by Arthur Nikisch. The two concerts in Florence were a revelation to the musicians of this city, who frankly confessed that they had hardly considered possible the unity and precision demonstrated by this organization.

Arthur Nikisch was also received with the most cordial demonstrations of enthusiasm, the dignity and sobriety of his movements and the intellectual force of his interpretations serving to disarm completely the prejudice which the Italians hold for all that is German. At the end of the second concert a large number of the local musicians awaited Nikisch in the atrio of the theatre, and improvised a most enthusiastic ovation ending with "arrivederci a presto!"

Louis Rothfeld, a pupil of Liszt, and a resident for many years past in Edinburgh, Scotland, where he was most prominent as teacher and musician, has spent the past winter in Florence, with the idea of enjoying a well earned repose. During his stay in Florence Mr. Rothfeld wrote several compositions for piano which are to be published by a London house.

Adolfo Betti, who is rapidly becoming known as one of the most talented violinists of the younger school, has had the honor of substituting for César Thomson, at the Brussels Conservatory during the latter's absence, when concertizing in Russia and elsewhere.

Betti was awarded the gold medal avec distinction by the Brussels Conservatory in 1896; his tone is delightfully sympathetic, and at the same time rich and sonorous. His delicate musical taste leads him to prefer Bach, though he excels in all styles.

What a boon for musical Italy would be the liberation of some of the Wagner operas from the hands of Ricordi! The project of presenting the "Nibelungen Ring" at Turin during the coming season has been abandoned, because of the exorbitant demands of Ricordi for the right of production.

The coming season promises to be a memorable one for concerts in Italy. Among the tours already arranged are those of the following artistic celebrities:

Paderewski, Rosenthal, Busoni, César Thomson. Sarasate and Ysaye will in all probability come also.

Eugen d'Albert is in villeggiatura at Careggi, a suburb of Florence; he is presumably instrumentizing a new opera.

It is a well-known fact in the profession that during the stagnant inactivity of the past operatic season many artists were compelled to pay 40 per cent and 50 per cent. of their contract as commission to the agents.

Here is one of César Thomson's historical programs, which he presented recently at the Brussels Conservatory:

Sonata XII., La Follia.....Corelli
Preludio.....Corelli
Corrente.....Vivaldi
Allegretto Grazioso.....Nardini
Tarantella.....Valentini
Concerto, ré mineur, pour violon.....Bach
Avec accompagnement d'orchestre à cordes.
Sonate, Le Tambeau.....Leclair
Sonata (l'Arte del Arco).....Tartini

Jos. Smith.

Hans Bergman Benefit Recital.—The Recital Hall of the Virgil Piano School was again filled with a most enthusiastic audience on Thursday evening, June 27, when little Hans Bergman, one of Mrs. Virgil's most talented pupils, played a recital. He played a most remarkable program for a child, and did it in such a masterly manner as to win the highest approbation.

Little Beatrice Pollak was to assist, but unfortunately was ill. Her numbers were filled by Frederic Mariner singing a couple of songs, the first song being accompanied by his talented pupil, Arthur Beaupré, and the second by little Hans. Arthur Beaupré then played the Staccato Caprice, by Vogrich; this brought forth a hearty encore and he responded with a Barcarolle by Jensen.

The technical work accomplished by little Hans Bergman was especially interesting, both as to clearness and the remarkable velocity attained. There is no doubt but what this child, if he keeps well, will make a remarkable career.

Pappenheim Pupils.—Dr. Geo. Conquest Anthony and Mrs. Corinne Wiest Anthony, the two well-known singers of Philadelphia, former pupils of Madame Pappenheim, have just closed one of their most successful seasons. They are now preparing for the summer months to go to fashionable Spring Lake, N. J., where the young artists have been engaged for concert and church work. This is Mr. and Mrs. Anthony's third season in Spring Lake, which speaks well for their popularity.

Madame Pappenheim is just closing a very busy season, and will go to Interlaken Inn, near Lakeville, in the Berkshire Hills. Later on Madame Pappenheim contemplates spending a few weeks in the Catskills, and afterward to make a tour of the Adirondacks, returning to New York city in September. In the meantime her apartments at the Rutland will be redecorated and refurnished. All mail should be addressed to her city address, 260 West Fifty-seventh street, to be forwarded.

BROAD STREET CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC,
GILBERT RAYNOLDS COMBS, Director.
1331 South Broad Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE FREE.

Sara Anderson,
Soprano,
For terms and particulars address
51 East 64th St.,
NEW YORK CITY.

ST. NICHOLAS GARDEN, 66th Street, near Columbus Avenue.
KALTENBORN ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS.
Every Evening at 8:15. Admission, 50 cents.
VARIED PROGRAM NIGHTLY. AUTOMATICALLY COOLED. NO DRAFT.

EVAN Oratorio and Concert.
WILLIAMS,
TENOR.
For Terms, Dates, &c., address
WOLFSOHN'S MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th Street, City.

GRACE G.
GARDNER,
Concert and Oratorio
SOPRANO.
Pupil of Blasco, Milan; Schmidt, Berlin; Henschel, London.
Studio: 36 West 25th St., New York.

ARTHUR
BERESFORD,
BASSO-BARITONE.
STEINERT HALL, BOSTON, MASS.

J. FRED
WOLLE,
ORGANIST.
Address:
THE WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., New York.

Western New York Office THE MUSICAL COURIER,
749 NORWOOD AVENUE,
BUFFALO, June 28, 1901.

THE thirtieth Saengerfest of the North American Saengerbund has passed into history, but thousands of people will long remember the great musical feast spread in Buffalo during the Pan-American season.

The only regret of the week was that every one of the 12,00 seats provided in the great Seventy-fourth Regiment Armory was not occupied at every concert.

The Queen City of the Lakes has been fortunate in securing these festivals three times—1860, 1883, 1901—and we are proud to say that this last one has been most successful from a financial as well as an artistic point of view.

Monday evening a royal welcome was given to the 103 visiting societies by a "commers" at the Sixty-fifth Regiment Arsenal. The following program was delightfully given and warmly received:

Festival Overture.....Lassen
Orchestra.
Address of welcome by Mayor Conrad Diehl and William Lautz, chairman of the reception committee.
Hymn of Greeting.....Lund
United Singers of Buffalo. Solos, Julie L. Wyman, Charles McCreary.
Presentation of the flag of the Saengerbund by Charles C. Schmidt, of Cincinnati, to J. Hanno Deiler, president of the North American Saengerbund, who will present the flag to F. C. M. Lautz, president of the Buffalo Festival Committee.
Forget Me Not.....Jacobsen
United Singers of Buffalo. Solo, Julie L. Wyman.
Aria from the Queen of Sheba.....Goldmark
Julie L. Wyman.
Musicians of the Forest.....Baselt
United Singers of Buffalo.

Mr. Lund's orchestra of eighty-five picked men from the New York Philharmonic and Metropolitan orchestras proved most satisfactory. The balance is all that could be desired, the tone firm and smooth and of beautiful quality, and the results marvelous considering the necessarily limited number of rehearsals.

Mrs. Wyman's selections showed to great advantage the wide range and magnificent quality of her voice.

Mr. McCreary was in splendid form, his rich baritone filling every nook and corner of the great arsenal.

Madame Schumann-Heink won an ovation which even a proverbially cold Buffalo audience could not refrain from giving such a glorious voice so masterfully handled.

The beautiful Madame Blauvelt was in splendid voice and only added laurels to those won here before.

Ffrangçon Davies was a great favorite at all concerts, his mellow, rich voice, which he used with so much ease, delighting all hearers.

Evan Williams was not in the best of voice, but his pure, sweet tenor is very acceptable to Buffalonians, even when he is not at his best.

Mrs. Minehan and Mr. McCreary did most praiseworthy work.

The children's chorus of 3,000 was remarkable, and great credit is due Mr. Mischka for having brought them to such a state of perfection.

The massed chorus of 3,500, under the direction of John Lund and Henry Jacobsen, did marvelously beautiful work.

All of the following splendid programs were magnificently presented:

MATINEE, TUESDAY, 2:50 O'CLOCK.
John Lund, Director.

Overture, Mignon.....Thomas
Orchestra.
Song of a Wandering Minstrel.....Herbert
Senefelder Liederkranz, Chicago, Ill.—F. A. Kern, Director.
Aria, From Boyhood Trained, from Oberon.....Weber
Evan Williams, tenor.
Suite from Lohengrin.....Wagner
Orchestra
Aria from Titus.....Mozart
Madame Schumann-Heink.
The Dream Lake.....Schumann
A Dreamy Light O'erspreads Thee.....Lassel
Tenor solo, William Bartels.
The Beetle and the Flower.....Veit
Brooklyn Saengerbund—Louis Koemmenich, Director.
Prologue to I Pagliacci.....Leoncavallo
D. Ffrangcon Davies.
On the Rhine.....Bruch
Cleveland Gesangverein—Emil Ring, Director.
The Almighty Power.....Schubert
Madame Schumann-Heink.
Ballet music from Feramors.....Rubinstein
Orchestra.

TUESDAY EVENING, 8:15 O'CLOCK.
John Lund and Henry Jacobsen, Directors.

Overture, Sakuntala.....Goldmark
Orchestra.
Der Scharfenstein.....Fiqué
Solo, Charles McCreary; mass-chorus and Orchestra.
Wer hat das Erste Lied Erdacht?.....Weinzierl
United Singers of Cincinnati—Louis Ehrgott, Director.
Ammersee.....Langer
Mass-chorus.
Scenes from Rienzi.....Wagner
Overture.
Adriano's Aria.
Battle Hymn.
Solos, Madame Schumann-Heink, Evan Williams. Mass-chorus and Orchestra.
The Nut Cracker, Suite 66.....Tschaikowsky
Orchestra.
God's Greeting, My Beloved One.....Engelsberg
Mass-chorus.
Whither?.....Schultz
United Singers of Chicago—Gustav Ehrhorn, Director.
Suite from Henry VIII.....Saint-Saëns
Orchestra.
Hark, Hark, in the Old Oak's Rustle!.....Gelbke
Mass-chorus.
Artists' Carnival.....Svendsen
Orchestra.
Battle Hymn of the Ancient Germans.....Lund
Madame Schumann-Heink, Charles McCreary, Mass-chorus and Orchestra.

MATINEE WEDNESDAY, 2:15 O'CLOCK.
John Lund, Director.
Director of the Children's Chorus of 3,000 voices, Joseph Mischka, Supervisor of the Public Schools of Buffalo.

Overture, Romeo and Juliet.....Svendsen
Orchestra.
National Songs—
Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean.
Marsellaise Hymn.
Children's Chorus.
Aria from Odysseus.....Bruch
Madame Schumann-Heink.
Suite, Queen of Sheba.....Goldmark
Orchestra.
Dich, Theure Halle, from Tannhäuser.....Wagner
Mme. L. Blauvelt.
The Legend of Bregenz.....Bendall
Madame Blauvelt, Mme. Laura Minehan, Orchestra and Children's Chorus.
Song of the Knights Templar, from Ivanhoe.....Sullivan
D. Ffrangcon Davies.
From Everywhere.....Moszkowski
Orchestra.
Bolero.....Arditi
Madame Schumann-Heink.
National Songs—
America.
The Watch on the Rhine.
Star-Spangled Banner.
Children's Chorus, Orchestra.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, 8:15 O'CLOCK.
John Lund and Henry Jacobsen, Directors.

Les Preludes.....Liszt
Orchestra
Greeting from the Forest.....H. Wagner
Mass-chorus.
Santa Claus.....Shelley
Orchestra.
The Close of the Day.....Nessler
Mass-chorus.
Scenes from The Flying Dutchman.....Wagner
Overture.
Orchestra.
Senta's Ballade.
Mme. L. Blauvelt.
Romance.
H. Evan Williams.
Duet.
Mme. L. Blauvelt and D. Frangcon Davies.
Chorus of the Sailors.
Mass-chorus.
Chorus of the Scotch Bards.....Sicher
Mass-chorus.
Fall, Reverie.....Pache
United Singers of St. Louis—William Lange, Director.
Suite, from Le Cid.....Massenet
Orchestra.
Forest Murmurs.....Schultz
Beloved One, Farewell.....Jungst
Mass-chorus.

Elsa Marshall,
Soprano.
222 HOSEA AVENUE,
CLIFTON,
CINCINNATI, OHIO.

CHARLES W.
CLARK
BARITONE.
Under Exclusive Management
HANNAH & HAMLIN,
514 Kimball Hall,
CHICAGO, ILL.

The Guilmant Organ School.
(COPYRIGHT.)
PRESIDENT: ALEXANDRE GUILMANT. DIRECTOR: WILLIAM C. CARL.
Reopens October 14.

SCHEDULE OF WORK:

FIRST YEAR.
The Organ—Private lessons, one each week.
Harmony—Class lessons, one each week.
Musical Form—MUSICAL DICTATION and MUSICAL KNOWLEDGE—Class lessons.
Service Playing—CHANTS, HYMN TUNES, ANTHEMS, ETC.—Class lessons.

SECOND YEAR.
The Organ—Private lessons, one each week.
Harmony and Counterpoint—Class lessons, one each week.
Musical Analysis—MUSICAL HISTORY, ORGAN TUNING—Class lessons.
Service Playing—CHANTS, HYMN TUNES, ANTHEMS, ETC.—Class lessons.

STUDENTS' RECITALS OCCUR EACH MONTH.

ADDRESS: THE GUILMANT ORGAN SCHOOL, 34 West 12th St., New York.

Festival March.....Van der Stucken
Orchestra.
The Vow.....Meyer-Obersleben
Mass-chorus and Orchestra.

JUNE 28, 1901.

Aside from the great musical festival of this week and the numerous musical events at the Exposition grounds, there has been but little of musical interest transpiring in the city.

During the month there have been many pupils' recitals. One of the first and most notable was that of the pupils of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Davidson, assisted by Richard Fricke, 'cellist.

The program consisted of:

Quartet in D (two violins, viola and 'cello).....Haydn
Messrs. Sakolski, Kimball, Davidson and Fricke.
Sonata in F, op. 24 (piano and violin).....Beethoven
Miss Miltnowski and Mr. Ward.
Quintet in G minor (two violins, two violas and 'cello).....Mozart
Messrs. Sakolski, Kimball, Davidson, Ward and Fricke.

Angelo M. Read's pupils' piano recital brought forward some very successful performers, notably so Miss Lilian Paterson, Miss C. Chaplin, Miss H. Eckhardt and W. C. Laewen.

Mr. Read gave an address on "Rhythm in Music," in which he dwelt upon the vital importance it bore to piano playing. Yet how few possessed the true principle of it.

Mr. Read concluded by saying: "It has been said, 'Time is the Life of Music.' Let us vitalize that by saying: Accent is the life of music. We still, if we wish to express the all in music, say: Rhythm is the life of music." Here is the program.

Prelude, in E minor, op. 35, I.....Schütt
C. W. Laewen.
Air de Ballet, op. 30, I.....Chaminade
Miss M. H. Haney.
Fogli Volante, op. 12, I.....Sgambati
Miss Lilian Paterson.
Phantasiestücke, op. 12, IV.....Schumann
Air de Ballet, op. 41.....Chaminade
Miss Edith F. Simson.
Improvisata, for two pianos, on a Gavotte by Gluck, op. 125..Reinecke
Miss Lilian Paterson, Miss Charlotte Chaplin.
Address, Rhythm in Music.
Angelo M. Read.
Lyrische Stücke, op. 43, V.....Grieg
Marche Grotesque, op. 32, I.....Sinding
Miss H. Eckhardt.
Chansons Libres, op. 15, V. III.....Statkowsky
Miss Lilian Paterson.
Berceuse.....Schytte
Neckerein, op. 12, V.....Von Wilm
Miss Laura Gram.
Frühlingsrauschen, op. 32, III.....Sinding
C. W. Laewen.
Prelude and Sarabande, for two pianos.....Von Wilm
Miss C. Chaplin, Miss L. Paterson.

Prof. George Bagnall, assisted by Miss Gertrude Sprague, of Minneapolis, Minn., gave the following program at Holley, N. Y., on June 21.

Scherzo.....Chopin
Professor Bagnall.
Vocal solo, selected.....
Miss Sprague.
Cradle Song.....Bagnall
Elf Dame.....Bagnall
Professor Bagnall.
Oh! That We Two Were Maying.....
Mrs. Farnsworth, Mr. Stevens.
The Purple Heather.....Gray
Philip Bronson.
Turkish March.....Mozart
Professor Bagnall.
My Little Love.....Hawley
When Love Is Gone.....Hawley
Mr. Stevens.
Gondolieria.....Liszt
Professor Bagnall.
Vocal solo, selected.....
Miss Sprague.
Rhapsodie Hongroise, No. 6.....Liszt
Professor Bagnall.

Louis J. Bangert, who has been so successful as a piano teacher, expects to go to Vienna in September, for a season of study.

His last pupils' recital for the season will take place July 2, when the following program will be given:

March, Militaire.....Strong
Miss Mabel Van Norman and Mr. Bangert.
Grillen.....Schumann
Master Albert L. Belden.
Venetian Love Song.....Nevin
Miss Annie L. Newman.
Spring Serenade.....Lacombe
Miss Lina D. Hazen.
Reading, Music on the Rappahannock.....Somerville
Mr. Grahame.
Sonate in D, for two pianos.....Mozart
Master Belden and Mr. Bangert.
Clavierstück in F.....Schumann
Lied ohne worte, No. 9.....Mendelssohn
Miss Grace H. Roberts.
Reading, The Volunteer Organist.....Foos
Mr. Grahame.
Barearolle, op. 18, No. 1.....MacDowell
Master Belden.
Waltz, Hochzeits Klaenge.....Strauss
The Misses Van Norman, Hazen, Newman and Mr. Bangert.

At the eleventh recital of the Apollo Students' Club last Friday evening, the following persons assisted the club: Miss Gertrude J. Monk, mezzo soprano; Miss Bessie A. Dye, elocutionist; Louis Georges, cornetist. Others who participated were Master Millard C. Comstock, Miss Antoinette B. McRobert, Miss Spray Norwig, Miss Mildred Thompson, Miss Georgia Lucas, Miss Mamie Eberhardt, Miss Lizzie Eberhardt, Master Herbert Fassett, Miss Maude Edmonds, Miss Lulu Murphy, Miss Maude Malcolm, Miss Grace Malcolm, Miss Mildred A. Georges, Miss Ella M. Jones, Miss Martha M. Wadsworth, Miss Clara L. Volz, Miss Pauline A. Cooper, Miss Laura A. Steul, Miss Ella A. Schwin, Miss Eva M. Overfield, Miss Drusic Parker, Master Irwin Jokhl, Miss C. Mildred Dye, Miss Grace E. De Groat, Miss Edith M. Robertson, Earl F. Schatlin.

The faculty and students of Canisius College issued invitations for the thirty-first annual commencement, at Concert Hall on Wednesday, June 19, at 7:30 p. m.

A most successful public recital was given by piano pupils of Mrs. Nellie M. Gould and elocution pupils of Miss Edna Sprague, assisted by Miss Nellie McCormack, soprano; Sylvester A. Collins, baritone; Raymond Beebe, violinist; Frank Kuhn, Jr., 'cellist, at Catholic Institute Hall, Monday evening, June 17, with this program:

Overture, Tannhäuser (two pianos, eight hands).....Wagner
Misses Harriet Fairbairn, Kate Cummings, Lorena Pirson and Adaline Ball.
Reading—
Her Letter.....Bret Harte
Kate's Answer.....Anon.
Miss Maud Booth.
Piano, Castle by the Sea.....Gantier
Miss Lillian Brown.
Piano, Impromptu.....Lesehetizky
Miss Maud Parr.
Reading, Scene 1, Act II., Merchant of Venice.....Shakespeare
Portia.....Miss Edna Choate
Nerissa.....Miss Maud Booth
Piano, Valse Lente.....Sieveking
Miss Bessie Brown.
Piano, Crescendo.....Lassen
Miss Adaline Ball.
Trio, piano, violin and 'cello, Adagio.....Böhm
Miss Kate Cummings, Mr. Beebe, Mr. Kuhn.
Reading, The Home Concert.....Anon.
Miss Dora Robley.
Piano duet, Escamilla, Spanish Dance.....Engelmann
Miss Lulu Kelley, Miss Florence Brush,
Piano, Ich Liebe Dich.....Grieg
Miss Florence Dewey.
Reading, Archie Dean.....Anon.
Misses Grace and Blanche McDowell.
Piano, Adagio from Sonata, op. 13.....Beethoven
Miss Rose Ball.
Two pianos, four hands, Melody in F.....Rubinstein
Miss Harriette Parkinson, Miss Effie Ayers.
Reading—
The Rock-a-bye Lady.....Field
The Fable Story.....Anon.
Miss Grace McDowell.
Vocal duet, Repeat Again.....Badia
Miss McCormick, Mr. Collins.
Piano, Waltz, op. 70.....Chopin
Miss Harriet Fairbairn.
Piano, Cascade du Chandron.....Bendel
Miss Mai Cooney.
Reading, The Dream Ship.....Field
Miss Blanche McDowell.
Trio, piano, violin and 'cello.....Selected
Miss Cummings, Mr. Beebe, Mr. Kuhn.
Reading, Scenes from Rebecca's Triumph.
Miss Robley, Miss Choate.
Two pianos, eight hands, Fantaisie.....Glinka
Misses Mai Morgan, Florence Dewey, Gladys Dempster and Lorena Pirson.

The Buffalo Chamber Music Club, Mrs. Gould, piano; Mr. Ball, violin; Mr. Fricke, 'cello, closed a most successful season of sixty concert engagements by two appearances at the Cortland Musical Festival. N. M. G.

SUCCESSFUL PUPILS OF MADAME OGDEN-CRANE.—Miss Edith Hutchins has been engaged as the prima donna of the International Opera Company for the summer season at Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada. The Lyric Ladies' Quartet is to sing the first Sunday in July at the Rutherford, N. J., Methodist Church. Miss Alice Humeston has secured the soprano position in the Congregational Church at Saratoga. The new quartet of the Asbury Park Congregational Church is composed of Miss Reed, Miss Humes, Harry Martin and Frank Hunt, all Ogden-Crane pupils. Miss Henrietta Wheeler has been engaged for a solo at the Murray Hill Lyceum. Miss Edith Gilbert, at a special service in the Rutherford Methodist Church, Sunday, June 16, sang "The Lord Is My Light."

MME. OGDEN CRANE.—Mme. Ogden Crane, the celebrated vocal instructor, will have charge of the musical entertainments at the Hotel Brunswick, Asbury Park, N. J., this summer. Madame Crane's pupils will thus have every opportunity of being introduced to the public. On the evening of July 5 Madame Crane will be tendered a reception at the Casino of the hotel by its proprietors.

HAROLD BAUER,
AMERICAN TOUR, 1902.
Commencing in January with BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
DATES NOW BOOKING.
For all particulars apply to GEO. W. STEWART, 120 Tremont Street, BOSTON, MASS.
General Representative for Europe: ROBERT STRAKOSCH, 59 Rue La Bruyère, PARIS.

MINNE HUMPHRYES
Soprano, Concert and Oratorio.
FOR TERMS, DATES, ETC., ADDRESS
Care MUSICAL COURIER, 1135 Broadway, or 801 Union Street, Brooklyn, New York.

RUBY CUTTER,
SOPRANO,
Dramatic and Coloratura.
CONCERT and ORATORIO.
REPERTOIRE.
Under the direction of HENRY WOLFSOHN.
Boston Address: 159 Tremont Street.

RAFAEL JOSEFFY.
Address: Letter Box 38, NORTH TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

CORTLAND'S MUSIC FESTIVAL.

CORTLAND, N. Y., June 22, 1901.

CORTLAND'S twenty-sixth annual musical festival is a thing of the past, but will long be remembered by all music lovers. It was a success in every way, perhaps the most successful of any in the history of our festivals for the past quarter of a century, and great credit is due to George Oscar Bowen, the young conductor, and his able assistant, Lee L. Wellman.

The programs of the five concerts reached a high standard of perfection, both in their selections and the artistic manner in which they were given, and the audiences showed their appreciation by hearty applause and frequent encores.

The soloists for the first concert, Wednesday evening, were Mme. M. Hissem-De Moss, soprano, of New York; J. C. Bartlett, tenor, of Boston, and Henry B. Neejer, harpist, of Syracuse. These were most ably assisted by a children's chorus of 350 and an adult chorus of 150.

Madame De Moss won great applause by her beautiful work. Her voice is a coloratura soprano, with much warmth and brilliancy and a wide range. As an encore to the Mozart number in the first concert she sang Buck's "Where Did You Come From, Baby Dear?"

Mr. Bartlett was the legitimate artist that he always is, and won his hearers in his initial solo.

Mr. Neejer, the young harpist, has a splendid command of his instrument, and his pleasing numbers were enthusiastically encored.

A feature of the first concert was the children's concert. The precision of the attack and release in their work was very noticeable; also the way in which they followed every motion and beat of the conductor, and of their numbers the most praiseworthy was the beautiful "Ave Maria" by Veazie.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, JUNE 19, 8:15.

National Hymn, America.
Double Chorus.
The Willow.....Thomas
May Morning.....Denza
Mr. Bartlett.
Nocturne, op. 78.....Galos
Mr. Neejer.
The Lost Chord.....Sullivan
Children's Festival Chorus.
Gli Angui d'Inferno (Magic Flute).....Mozart
Madame De Moss.
Song of the Vikings.....Faning
Festival Chorus.
Le Papillon (The Butterfly).....Oberthur
Mr. Neejer.
Since First I Met Thee.....Rubinstein
Maids of Cadiz.....Delibes
Madame De Moss.
Onaway, Awake, Beloved (Hiawatha's Wedding Feast).....Taylor
Mr. Bartlett.
Ave Maria.....Veazie
Madame De Moss and Children's Festival Chorus.
National Air, Star Spangled Banner.
Double Chorus.

Enthusiasm, like disease, is infectious, and that of the children of the chorus at the first concert was caught by the people of the audience at the second, and a wealth of appreciation for the fine work of artists and chorus was manifest from this time to the end of the festival season.

At the second concert Mrs. Ruth McNett-Stuart, of Pittsburg, made her first appearance and was warmly received, as she was a former resident of the "Infant City" and a pupil of the able conductor. Her voice has lost none of its sweetness and her numbers were given with a wealth of feeling. It was a rare treat to hear Mr. Bartlett's sweet, flexible tenor voice in his own well-known compositions, viz., "A Dream" and "Come to Me, Sweetheart."

The Excelsior Male Quartet, composed of Mr. Bowen and his pupils, proved a most acceptable addition to the following program. The voices blended most satisfactorily and the balance of tone was good. The quartet, as well as the choruses, shows Mr. Bowen's conscientious work and musical ability.

Robert Carpenter, who is a Cortland favorite, added a pleasing violin selection.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON, JUNE 20, 3:30.

Flag of the Free.....Wagner
Children's Festival Chorus.
Bolero (Sicilian Vespers).....Verdi
Madame De Moss.
Hark! The Trumpet Calleth.....Buck
Excelsior Quartet.
Summer Days.....Abt
Semi Chorus.
Gray Rocks and Grayer Sea.....Vannah
Thou Art So Like a Flower (MS.).....Bowen
Mrs. Stuart.
Ave Maria.....Veazie
Mme. De Moss and Children's Festival Chorus.
A Dream.....Bartlett
Come to Me, Sweetheart.....Bartlett
Mr. Bartlett.
Romance.....Svendsen
Mr. Carpenter.
This Would I Do.....Chapman
Songs My Mother Taught Me.....Dvorák
Cloudy Heights of Tatra.....Dvorák
Madame De Moss.
Home, Sweet Home.....Payne
Children's Festival Chorus.

As the festival progressed the programs improved, and many larger cities might well have been delighted with the musical feast spread for Thursday evening. At this concert Mrs. Caroline Gardner Clarke, of Boston, made her first appearance and absolutely took the city by storm. Mrs. Clarke has a pure, clear soprano voice of wide range, which is most perfectly placed and her enunciation is almost faultless. Admirers of Madame Joachim (Germany's former greatest ballad singer) could easily detect that Mrs. Clarke was a pupil of the famous German vocalist.

Mrs. Clarke gave a thoroughly artistic rendering of the aria from "Marriage of Figaro," by Mozart, displaying a wealth of temperament as well as a glorious voice.

In response to a most hearty recall Mrs. Clarke gave her own "Spring Song," playing her accompaniment with great brilliancy.

Miss Keyes, the popular contralto of St. Thomas' Church, New York, is a prime favorite here. Her voice has gained in richness and power since her last appearance among us, and, as always, she sings with a wealth of expression.

The climax of the evening was reached by Rossini's ever beautiful "Stabat Mater."

Great credit is due Mr. Bowen for the splendid results obtained from the chorus in the few weeks in which they were drilled and they did most efficient work in the "Stabat Mater."

Mr. Wellman, also a pupil of Mr. Bowen and the possessor of a fine baritone voice, completed the quartet of which Mrs. Clarke, Miss Keyes and Mr. Bartlett were the principals. Conductor, principals and chorus united in giving a splendid reading of Rossini's immortal work.

Perhaps it would have been better to have followed the usual custom and have ended with the great climax, the "Inflammatus."

THURSDAY EVENING, JUNE 20, 8:15 P. M.

With Sheathed Sword.....Costa
Festival Chorus.
My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice.....Saint-Saëns
Miss Keyes.
Absence.....Little
Beam from Yonder Star.....Bullard
Molly's Eyes.....Hawley
Mr. Bartlett.
Bridal Chorus (Rose Maiden).....Cowen
Festival Chorus.
Aria from Marriage of Figaro.....Mozart
Mrs. Clarke.
Stabat Mater.....Rossini
Festival Chorus and Soloists.

Friday afternoon and evening a delightful addition was made to the programs by the members of the Buffalo Chamber Music Club, Mrs. Gould, piano; Mr. Ball, violin; Mr. Fricke, 'cello. This combination won all hearts by their delightful concert here in April and all were rejoiced to welcome them again.

All things considered, the event of the evening concert was the masterful rendering of the difficult Trio, op. 32, of Godard, by these artists. Their ensemble is faultless—their balance of tone fine and their interpretations refined, musicianly and artistic.

Wieniawski's "Legende" was most admirably given by Mr. Ball, who draws a firm, easy bow, displays a superior technic, produces a marvelously full, sweet tone and plays with a great depth of feeling.

Mr. Fricke charmed his listeners by his soulful interpretations, melting all hearts with his encore, Schumann's "Traumerei." He is thoroughly artistic and draws a magnificent tone from one of the oldest and finest 'cellos in the country.

A superb musical festival was most fittingly ended by Mendelssohn's "Forty-second Psalm."

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JUNE 21, 3 P. M.

National Song, Star Spangled Banner.
Children's Festival Chorus.
Wiegenlied (MS.).....Taggesell
(Dedicated to Buffalo Chamber Music Club.)
Serenade.....Moszkowski
Mrs. Gould, Mr. Ball and Mr. Fricke.
The Answer.....Rogers
I'm Wearin' Awa', Jean.....Foote
The Years at the Spring.....Mrs. Beach
Mrs. Clarke.
Gavotta, op. 8, No. 1.....Centola
Mr. Ball.
Summer Now Hath Come Among Us.....Wilson
Children's Festival Chorus.
Intermezzo (from Ballet Naila).....Delibes
Bolero.....Moszkowski
Hungarian Dance, No. 6.....Brahms
Mrs. Gould, Mr. Ball and Mr. Fricke.
Fair Luna.....King
Semi-Chorus.
Sur le Lac, op. 36.....Godard
Mr. Fricke.
When Gazing in Thine Eyes.....Speaks
In May Time.....Speaks
Miss Keyes.
Flag of the Free.....Wagner
Children's Festival Chorus.

FRIDAY EVENING, JUNE 21, 8:15 P. M.

Song of the Vikings.....Faning
Festival Chorus.
Trio, op. 32.....Godard
Mrs. Gould, Mr. Ball and Mr. Fricke.
Springtide.....Becker
Miss Keyes.
The Lost Chord.....Sullivan
Children's Festival Chorus.
Legende, op. 17.....Wieniawski
Mr. Ball.
Cavatine (Queen of Sheba).....Gounod
Mrs. Clarke.
Wanderers' Night Song.....Rubinstein
Anvil Chorus (Il Trovatore).....Verdi
Festival Chorus.
Herbstblume, op. 50, No. 5.....Popper
Guitarre, op. 45, No. 2.....Moszkowski
Mr. Fricke.
Ich liebe dich.....Grieg
Sonntag.....Brahms
Miss Keyes.
Forty-second Psalm.....Mendelssohn
Festival Chorus, Mrs. Clarke.
Excelsior Male Quartet.
National Hymn, America.
Double Chorus.

Especial mention should be made of Harry Jennison, who so successfully filled the arduous duties of accompanist for all the vocal soloists, the choruses and quartets.

G. M. N.

ACCOMPANIST.
F. W. RIESBERG.
INSTRUCTION.
Piano, Organ, Harmony.
With THE MUSICAL COURIER.
Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.
Secretary-Treasurer New York State M. T. A.
Residence-Studio: 954 Eighth Ave., cor. 56th St., NEW YORK.
TELEPHONE: 452 COLUMBUS.

OSCAR SAENGER,
Vocal Instruction,
Teaches until July 14.
Teacher of Josephine S. Jacoby, Contralto; Elizabeth D. Leonard, Contralto; Madame de Pasquali, Soprano; Sara Anderson, Soprano; Hildegard Hoffmann, Soprano; E. Léon Rains, Basso; Joseph S. Baernstein, Basso; John I. Young, Tenor, and other prominent singers now before the public
STUDIO: 51 East 64th Street, NEW YORK.

Mme. VON KLENNER, Garcia Representative,
WILL OPEN A
Special Summer School at Lake Chautauqua, N. Y.,
THIS SUMMER.
PARIS EXPOSITION, 1900.
Only Honorable Mention or Distinction of Any Vocal Instructor.
FOR PARTICULARS
Address 40 STUYVESANT STREET, NEW YORK.
Second Avenue and 10th Street.

VAN YORX Tenor,
6 E. 17 St., NEW YORK.
Under Management of WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., NEW YORK CITY.

THE KALTENBORN CONCERTS.

"WAGNER" continues to be the magic name at the St. Nicholas Garden, where the Kaltenborn Orchestra is now in its fifth week. Solos at the last Wagner concert, Thursday night, were played by Mr. Kaltenborn and Arthur Voorhis, a popular concert pianist. Before the Wagnerian part of the program was played Mr. Voorhis performed with the orchestra the Saint-Saëns Piano Concerto in G minor. The performance was thoroughly musical and the audience rewarded Mr. Voorhis with three recalls and finally compelled him to add an encore. For this the pianist gave the beautiful Schumann "Nachtstück."

There were instrumental and vocal soloists at the other concerts throughout the week. The special "Popular" Tuesday night concert attracted one of the largest audiences of the season. The management having discovered that more popular music is desired will adhere to the plan of giving two popular concerts each week, the popular nights being Tuesday and Saturday.

Next week will be a gala one at the St. Nicholas. Wednesday and Thursday evenings are to be devoted to a Wagner festival, with soloists of reputation appearing at each concert.

The programs for the remainder of this week and Sunday next follow:

WEDNESDAY, JULY 3.
Miscellaneous Night.

Overture, Lustspiel.....Kéler Béla
Symphonic Dances.....Grieg
Piano Concerto, D minor (first movement).....Rubinstein
Miss Florence Traub.
Overture, Tannhäuser.....Wagner
Larghetto, Symphony No. 2.....Beethoven
Waltz, Blue Danube.....Strauss
Suite, Gitanilla.....Lacome
Les Romani.
Sous les Etoiles, Berceuse.
Sous le Soleil, Petite Marche.
Valse Bohême.
Trombone solo, Am Meer.....Schubert
Franz Eim.
Second Rhapsodie.....Liszt
War March, Rienzi.....Wagner

THURSDAY, JULY 4.
Wagner Night.

Star Spangled Banner.....
American Fantaisie.....Herbert
Overture, Triumphale.....Rubinstein
Selection, The Trumpeter of Sackingen.....Nessler
Trumpet solo, Adam Seiferth.
Waltz, Kaiser.....Strauss
March, St. Nicholas.....Kaltenborn
Overture, Rienzi.....Wagner
Violin solo, Albumblatt.....Wagner
Franz Kaltenborn.
Prelude und Liebestod, Tristan und Isolde.....Wagner
Prayer, Lohengrin.....Wagner
Theodore Wendling.
Brünhilde's Awakening, Siegfried.....Wagner
(Concert arrangement by W. H. Humiston.)

FRIDAY, JULY 5.
Operatic Night.

Overture, The Merry Wives of Windsor.....Nicolai
Prologue, Pagliacci.....Leoncavallo
Second Violin Concerto, Adagio and Rondo Clochete.....Paganini
Wenzel Kopta.
Ballet Music, Queen of Sheba.....Goldmark
'Cello solo, Louis Heine.
Prelude and Introduction to Act III., Lohengrin.....Wagner
Waltz, To Thee (by request).....Waldteufel
Overture, Don Juan.....Mozart
Selection, The Burgomaster.....Luder
Dance of the Hours, Giaconda.....Ponchielli
Bacchanale, Samson et Delila.....Saint-Saëns

SATURDAY, JULY 6.
Popular Night.

March, The Invincible Eagle.....Sousa
Overture, Phantom's Fortune.....Suppé
Song, Believe.....Rosey
Arabian Intermezzo, Zamona.....Loraine
Selection, The Fortune Teller.....Herbert
Harp solo, selected.....
Charles Schuetze.
Waltz, Vienna Woods.....Strauss
Selection, The Casino Girl.....Englander-McConnell
Intermezzo, Salome.....Loraine
Rondo d'Amour.....Van Westerhout
A Southern Reverie.....Bendix
March, Avant.....Kaltenborn

SUNDAY, JULY 7.

Overture, Die Felsenmühle.....Reissiger
Largo, Symphony, The New World.....Dvorák
Allegro Molto Vivace, Symphony No. 6 (Pathétique)..Tschaikowsky
Scene and aria, Wie nahte mir der Schlummer, Der Freischütz.....Weber
Miss Augusta Lutteroth.
Entr'acte, Colombe.....Gounod
Paraphrase, Wie Schön Bist Du.....Nesvadba
String Quartet—
Andante Cantabile.....Tschaikowsky
Gavotte, Bonheur.....Hartog
The Butterfly.....Razek
The Kaltenborn String Quartet.
Waltz, New Vienna.....Strauss
Kammenoi Ostrow.....Rubinstein
Symphonic Poem, Le Rouet d'Omphale.....Saint-Saëns
Hungarian Rhapsodie, No. 12.....Liszt
Huldigungs March.....Wagner

FLATBUSH SCHOOL OF MUSIC.—Leroy W. Jackson, director of the Flatbush School of Music and Elocution, and a piano, organ and theory pupil of E. M. Bowman, assisted by his piano pupils, by Mrs. Myra Mockridge, soprano soloist and teacher in the school, and B. Russell Throckmorton, teacher of elocution, gave a recital at 67 Lenox road, Flatbush, last Tuesday evening.

Compositions by Scarlatti, Weber, Schumann, Chopin, Mendelssohn, Rubinstein, Mason, MacDowell, Durand, Moszkowski and others were performed by Mr. Jackson and by his pupils with success, and showing the excellent preparation for his work which he has received from E. M. Bowman. Mr. Jackson is Mr. Bowman's deputy organist and assistant at the Central Baptist Church, Marcy avenue and South Fifth street, where Mr. Bowman has this season organized a chorus choir on the model of his now famous Temple Choir, and, as pianist, organist and teacher, is doing excellent work in Brooklyn.

The Amphion Musical Society, of Brooklyn, gave a concert at the rooms of the society on June 26. After the musical numbers the conductor, Carl Hiller, was presented with a silver mounted baton. The Clef Club Orchestra assisted the society. The soloists were Miss Clara Deckner, soprano, and Carl Grienauer, 'cellist. Following are the names of the officers and committees: President, Walter B. Horn; vice-presidents, James R. Howe, Walter Brower; recording secretary, George L. Havemeyer; treasurer, Benjamin Holmes; financial secretary, A. C. Hall; librarian, E. F. Wentworth; musical director, Carl Hiller; music committee, Arthur C. Huene, Geo. F. Emerson; executive committee, B. G. Latimer, B. V. B. Livingston, Charles Seaman, J. H. Bailey, Walter L. Horn, Edward Byrnes, Rodney Thursby, L. Ward Bradford; entertainment committee, Herwood V. Ellis (chairman), Thomas J. McCleary, William Young, Charles H. Conant, Arthur Pohlman.

MINNIE HANCE OWENS, CONTRALTO.—This young woman gave much satisfaction when soloist at the Brick Presbyterian Church here, which position she voluntarily relinquished in order to return West, whence she came, assuming the most prominent place in church and concert, in Los Angeles, Cal. She has a pure contralto voice, ranging from low D to high B flat, sings in several languages, and has a most charming personality. Under Walter John Hall she made such progress that she at once took an important place here in the East, and her going was much regretted.

Amy Murray's Newark Recitals.

MANY music lovers were attracted to the recital which Miss Amy Murray recently gave at Newark, N. J. Some of her criticisms follow:

A large audience listened to Miss Amy Murray sing Scottish ballads in the Reformed Episcopal Church, on Wednesday evening. Many of the songs she sang were familiar, but others were new to their hearers, and especially so the Highland songs.

Miss Murray sang very charmingly. Newarkers know well what a delightful singer she is, for she was formerly the soprano of the choir of the Second Presbyterian Church. Since leaving Newark she has spent two years in Scotland, studying the songs there, and, in addition to the familiar ones, she has picked up many beautiful songs that are hardly known out of the land of their origin. These she sang with accompaniments of a harp and the aids of costume. For instance, when she sang "Caller Herrin'," she wore a Paisley shawl and a short striped gown and carried a willow creel on her back, just as the Newhaven fisherwomen on the Firth of Forth do. She gave brief talks on Scotland and its people and remarks on the history of the songs.

The concert was a decided musical treat.—Newark Sunday Call.

Miss Murray has been a close student of Scottish language and habits, and she invests her songs with an originality and individuality rarely found. She began with a brief explanation of the music she intended to interpret, which added to the beauty of her work and to the interest of the songs. "O, Sing to Me the Auld Scots' Sangs" was a peculiarly touching and tuneful number, and of those that followed, many of them familiar, the unknown songs seemed to interest the audience more than those which have been heard at other times.

The final number, however, was the gem of the evening. It consisted of a character song. "Caller Herrin," in which Miss Murray, clad in the gay holiday dress of a fishwife, bearing a huge willow "creel" on her back, sings a delightful old Gaelic melody, the quaintness of which is delicious.

Other songs were "O Whistle an' I'll Come to Ye, My Lad"; "Gae Bring to Me a Pint o' Wine," "John Anderson," "Young Lochinvar," "The Flowers o' the Forest," "The Jolly Beggar," Skye boat song, "Charlie Is My Darling," "Hey, Johnnie Cope" and "Will Ye No Come Back Again?"—Newark Daily Advertiser.

Miss Amy Murray gave a recital of Scotch songs last night before a large and enthusiastic audience in the Emmanuel Reformed Episcopal Church, Broad street and Fourth avenue. Miss Murray's voice is highly cultivated and has rare sweetness and power of expression. She has a keen appreciation of the Scottish songs, and that her audience was thoroughly imbued with this feeling was evident at the close of the program, when all her hearers rose and crossed hands, singing "Auld Lang Syne."

Miss Murray wore the plaid of Clan Murray over her gown. Her method of performance is to begin with a talk on Scotland and the Scotch people, and to give the history of each of the songs she sings in an informal manner. She sang several "auld Scots' sangs," following them with the old version of "The Flowers o' the Forest." Of the Jacobite songs she chose "Bonnie Prince Charlie" and "Loch Lomond," in which she showed no little dramatic power.

To the music of the quaint clarsach, as the old Gaelic harp is called, she sang the Highland "Fear a'Bhata." "O, Whistle an' I'll Come to Ye, My Lad," was the next song.

A Paisley shawl and the short striped gown of the Highland fishwife was the costume in which the singer appeared to give "Caller Herrin'." After this she was presented with an immense bouquet of carnations. "How Prince Charlie Came to Scotland" and "Charlie Is My Darling" were the next two songs. At the close she asked her audience, among whom were many Scotch persons, to rise and sing "Auld Lang Syne," crossing hands at the words, "And here's a hand, my trusty friend," and every person in the church responded heartily.

Miss Murray was formerly soprano at the Second Presbyterian Church in this city. Some time ago she went abroad, spending two years among the Highland Scots. She is thoroughly imbued with the spirit of the country, and such is her success that she has been invited by the Gaelic Society in Inverness, Scotland, to sing at their coming meet.—Newark Evening News.

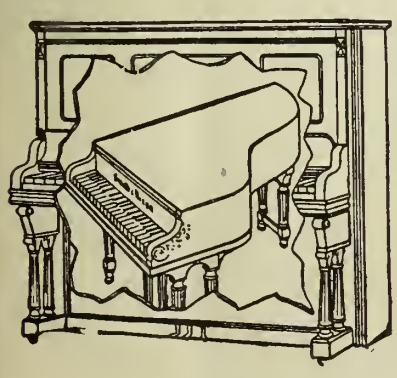
GONE TO MAINE.—Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Bowman and Miss Bessie May Bowman left on Monday evening on the Fall River Line for Squirrel Island, Me., where they will spend the summer at their cottage, "Grand View." Mr. Bowman has had a busy year of it. With pupils, two choirs, an amateur orchestra, and his duties as president of the Virgil Practice Clavier Company, member of the executive board of the Brooklyn Y. M. C. A.; of the department of music of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences and other organizations, he finds every minute of his time well occupied.

London Address: MR. N. VERT, 6 Cork St., London, W. Cable: "SHELDON TEW."

MR. H. WHITNEY TEW.

In America October, November and December, 1901. DATES NOW BOOKING.

American Address: Care THE MUSICAL COURIER, New York.



A Grand Piano IN AN UPRIGHT CASE.

SMITH & NIXON,

Cincinnati, Ohio,

Manufacture this instrument for MUSICIANS.

FLETCHER MUSIC METHOD.

Originated by Evelyn Ashton Fletcher. Indorsed by Dr. Hugo Rieman, Leipsic; Franklin Taylor, Dr. William Cummings, Antoinette Sterling, London; John Philip Sousa, Jaroslaw de Zielinski, Dr. William Mason, William Tomlins and many other prominent musicians in America and Europe. The aim is to eliminate the drudgery of music study and to give a fundamental, systematic and logical musical education in a natural and pleasurable way. The apparatus required in teaching is patented, and obtainable only after taking the course of study. The demand for teachers of this method is very great. For particulars apply to

MISS E. A. FLETCHER, 1125 Madison Ave., New York

ERICSSON

BUSHNELL.

For Dates, Terms, &c., address

177 Duane Street, NEW YORK.

The American Institute of Applied Music.

(Incorporated 1900.)
EDGAR O. SILVER, President,
212 West 59th Street, New York City.

Departments:
The Metropolitan College of Music.
The Metropolitan Conservatory of Music,
The Synthetic Piano School
The American Institute of Normal Methods.

Graded Certificates, Diplomas and the Degrees of Mus. Bac. and Muc. Doc Special courses are open to students at any time.

The Faculty and Examiners: DUDLEY BUCK, A.C.M.; ALBERT ROSS PARSONS, A.C.M.; E. PRESSON MILLER; HARRY ROWE SHELLEY, A.C.M.; PAUL AMBROSE, WILLIAM F. SHERMAN, KATE S. CHITTENDEN, LILLIAN LITTLEHALES and others.

The residence department furnishes a refined and quiet home.
The advantages are unequaled in America.
For information address KATE S. CHITTENDEN, Dean.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY
—BY THE—
MUSICAL COURIER COMPANY.

(Incorporated under the laws of the State of New York.)

St. James Building, Broadway and 26th St., New York.

TELEPHONE: 1720 Madison Square.

Cable Address: "Pegujar," New York.

ESTABLISHED JANUARY, 1880.

No. 1110.

MARC A. BLUMENBERG - - EDITOR-IN-CHIEF.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JULY 3, 1901.

LONDON, ENGLAND—
Hotel Cecil, Mr. Montague Chester, General European Representative.

BERLIN, GERMANY (Branch Office)—
Linkstrasse, 17 W., is in charge of Mr. Otto Floersheim.
Single copies for sale at the music store of Ed. Bote & G. Bock, Leipzigerstrasse 39, W.

DRESDEN—
Anna Ingman, Franklinstrasse 20.

LEIPSIC—
Hotel Hentschel, Mr. Alvin Kranich in charge.

PARIS, FRANCE—
Conducted from London Office.
Single copies for sale at Brentano's, 37 Avenue de l'Opera; 37 Rue Marbeuf; Galignani Library, 224 Rue de Rivoli; Shakespeare Library, 75 Avenue des Champs Elysées, Boulevard Kiosks.

VIENNA—
Edwin Stewart, correspondent.

ITALY—
5 Via Rondinelli, Florence, Italy, Mr. Joseph Smith in charge.

CANADIAN OFFICE—
In charge of Miss May Hamilton. Address Main Office, New York City.

CHICAGO OFFICE—
Fine Arts Building, Michigan Boulevard, C. A. Daniell in charge.

ST. LOUIS—
Nellie Allen-Hessenbruch, correspondent.

MILWAUKEE—
Controlled by Chicago Office.

INDIANAPOLIS—
Controlled by Chicago Office.

CINCINNATI OFFICE—
J. A. Homan in charge.

BOSTON OFFICE—
17 Beacon Street.

BROOKLYN OFFICE—
Hotel St. George, Clark, corner Henry Street.

BUFFALO OFFICE—
Mrs. Nellie M. Gould, 428 Ashland Avenue.

WASHINGTON OFFICE—
616 Twelfth Street, N. W., Berenice Thompson in charge.

SUBSCRIPTIONS:

Invariably in advance, including postage.

Single copies, Ten Cents.

United States,			$5.00
Great Britain,	£1 5s.	Austria,	15 fl.
France,	31.25 fr.	Italy,	31.25 fr.
Germany,	25 m.	Russia,	12 r.

SPENCER T. DRIGGS - - BUSINESS MANAGER

RATES FOR ADVERTISING.

PER INCH ON ADVERTISING PAGES.

Three Months	$25.00	Nine Months	$75.00
Six Months	50.00	Twelve Months	100.00

ON READING PAGES.

One inch, 3 months	$75.00
One inch, 6 months	125.00
One inch, 1 year	200.00

Special rates for preferred positions.

One page, one insertion	$300.00
One-half page, one insertion	175.00
One Column	100.00

All remittances for subscriptions or advertising must be made by check, draft or money order, payable to THE MUSICAL COURIER Company

Advertisements for the current week must be handed in by 2 P. M. on Monday.

All changes in advertisements must reach this office by Friday 5 P. M. preceding the issue in which changes are to take effect.

American News Company, New York, General Distributing Agents.

Western News Company, Chicago, Western Distributing Agents.

THE MUSICAL COURIER EXTRA.

Published Every Saturday During the Year.

GREATEST ADVERTISING MEDIUM FOR ALL MUSIC PUBLISHERS AND MANUFACTURERS and IMPORTERS OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS OR PARTS THEREOF. ALSO SPECIALLY DEVOTED TO POPULAR MUSIC and VAUDEVILLE.

For Particulars apply to "Saturday Extra Department."

WITH this issue THE MUSICAL COURIER enters on its forty-third volume.

THE Evening Sun revived last week a very clever story about Paderewski:

Talking about the disappearance of the banjo. The only witty saying ever attributed to M. Paderewski had to do with a banjoist of some celebrity. At a dinner this individual passed his banjo along to the pianist with the request that he write something on the head. The great man, after thinking for some time, complied with the following sentiment: "It has long been my vain ambition to be a master of this beautiful instrument."

THIS is from last Sunday's New York Sun:

The two celebrities at the festival given in honor of the unveiling of the monument to Robert Schumann at Zwickau were Moriz Rosenthal and Joseph Joachim. At the rehearsal of the Quartet in A minor there was such a sharp difference of opinion between Rosenthal and the venerable violinist that the pianist left the town on the spot. It was feared that the quartet could not be played, as the other available pianist did not know the music. A player was found at the last moment, and the program was carried through as originally planned.

WECKERLIN, of the Paris Conservatory, is a very happy man these days. By the will of the Baroness Nathaniel de Rothschild the library of the Conservatory is enriched by some very interesting Chopin autographic MSS. Eight altogether, they comprise the Berceuse, the first Valse in A flat, some later valses, including the one in D flat, and three valses bearing this dedication in the composer's handwriting: "A Mlle. Charlotte de Rothschild, hommage, Paris, 1842, F. Chopin." A nocturne is also in the collection. Lucky Conservatory! Lucky librarian!

AT the art exhibition in Berlin there is a series of forty-five designs for the memorial to the composer Wagner to be erected in the German capital. A very elaborate design presents Richard Wagner seated in an arm-chair in an attitude expressive of pondering on some musical theme. Three ideal figures stand before the composer. Poetry, as a woman, leans against Music, another woman, bearing a lyre; while Legend in the shape of a young man kneels and offers Poetry a crown. Other symbolical figures are two sphinxes and a dragon to represent Mystery, while the back of the chair is relieved from barrenness by the figures of two Rhine maidens, one of them holding jewels in her hands.

"MANRU" IN NEW YORK.

WHETHER or not we shall hear Paderewski's "Manru" next season at the opera depends on the arrangements the composer makes with Mr. Grau. A cable despatch says that the work is to be produced next season here, but as it is a very difficult score it is doubtful if Paderewski will allow it to be sung without much careful rehearsing. And Mr. Grau, as we all know, is averse to the rehearsal habit. He abhors it, in fact. Besides, Paderewski will not visit America until the autumn of 1902, and it would be more fitting if he were present at the première.

"Manru" has just met with extraordinary success in Lemberg, where it was sung June 8. Sixty laurel wreaths and two silver wreaths were presented to the composer. The enthusiasm was great. There can be no question of the success of this opera, which is described by all who have heard it as being fascinating. Paderewski's London manager, Mr. Adlington, is planning to present "Manru" in London next May, with the complete Dresden company. The piano and vocal score, a bulky volume, is published here by Schirmer.

Since the success of the pianist's music he has been run down by scores of librettists, but wisely prefers writing his own book the next time. The Dresdener Zeitung says: "Paderewski is not only a great artist and composer, but also a highly educated man, and linguistically a true genius." The Polish virtuoso has played in London during the past several weeks with overwhelming success. He is already at work on a new opera.

ENGLISH OPERA AGAIN.

ONCE more Manager Henry W. Savage, undismayed by last year's reverses, will make an attempt to place English opera on Broadway. He is to open the Broadway Theatre September 16 with a company that will sing in English. Manager Jacob Litt is associated with Mr. Savage so far as the Broadway Theatre is concerned. The New York season will last six weeks. Popular prices are to prevail. Mr. Savage has secured the American rights of Puccini's new opera, "Madame Butterfly." The repertory of the company will include "Aïda," "Lohengrin," "Tannhäuser," "La Bohême," "La Giaconda," "Faust," "Carmen," "Martha," "Romeo and Juliet," "Il Trovatore," "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "I Pagliacci." Last year THE MUSICAL COURIER deprecated Mr. Savage's alliance with Mr. Grau. The former had everything to lose, the latter everything to gain. It was neither fish nor flesh, neither grand opera nor light that was attempted in the Metropolitan Opera House last fall. It was bound to fail, and it did. The prices were too high for the class that the Savage company formerly attracted, and they were too low for the fashionable folk. Mr. Savage has had his experience and doubtless is a wiser man. The Broadway Theatre is better adapted to the uses of opera in the vernacular than the Metropolitan, and if the management's ambition is not too vaulting there is no reason why the scheme should not succeed. American singers ought to form the staple of the company, and it might be a wise thing to avoid the more spectacular modern operas. We get enough Wagner during the regular Grau season.

THE POPE'S LETTER ON CHURCH MUSIC.

POPE LEO has written the following letter to the Rev. Dr. Delatte, O. S. B., Abbot of Solesnes, in which he extols the effort of the Solesnes Benedictines in the field of Gregorian music. Here is the letter:

"Beloved Son, Health and Apostolic Benediction:

"We know, and at other times have raised our voice in praise of the intelligent zeal shown by you in musical science as applied to that chant traditionally ascribed to Gregory the Great, and compelled by a similar spirit we cannot but approve of your laborious and constant work in investigating and bringing to light ancient documents on this subject.

"The manifold truths of this work we see in the numerous volumes which—a most acceptable present—you have sent to us at different times, and which, we have heard, have already a wide circulation and are by daily use appreciated in many ways.

"Every attempt thus made for the elucidation and improvement of this science, the companion and assistant of the sacred ritual, is worthy of all praise, not only owing to the ability and industry so employed, but, what is of far greater importance, because of the advantage likely to be derived therefrom by religious worship.

"Now, the Gregorian chant is most skillfully and most wisely calculated to bring out the meaning of the words with additional clearness, and if employed with knowledge and ability it has a great power and a wonderful sweetness, united with gravity, which readily affects the minds of those who hear it, and is capable of exciting pious emotions and salutary thought in due season. All priests, then, both the diocesan clergy and the members of the religious orders who feel that they can be of any service in this science or art, should exert themselves freely and intelligently; for mutual charity and the obedience and reverence due to this Church being observed, the labors of many in the field may be of great benefit, as yours now are.

"As a token of divine favors and also of our paternal good will we impart out apostolic benediction most lovingly in the Lord to you, beloved son, and to your colleagues.

"Given at St. Peter's, Rome, on May 17, 1901, the twenty-fourth year of our Pontificate. LEO XIII., Pope."

This letter should be framed and hung on every church choir in the land. Our Protestant services are disfigured by much meretricious music, and in many Roman Catholic and Hebrew choirs the same order of mediocrity prevails. If the Pope can do anything to mend this matter he deserves canonization.

From what can be gleaned in the published records, the Muses did not favor July born children, but rather left them to the fate of the gods of iron and money getting through manufacturing and other prosaic means.

MUSICIANS BORN IN JULY.

With the single exception of Christoph Willibald Gluck, born July 2, 1714, we find no composer of the first rank born in this month of torrid heats and the ruby. Gluck died at Vienna November 15, 1787. The other musicians born in July, of whom there is authoritative record, are: William Vincent Wallace, born July 1, 1814; died October 12, 1865. Alfred Grünfeld, born July 4, 1852; still living. Dr. William Crotch, born July 5, 1775; died December 29, 1847. Constantin von Sternberg, born July 9, 1852; still living in Philadelphia. Henri Wieniawski, born July 10, 1835; died March 31, 1880. Anna Mehlig, born July 11, 1846; still living. Carl Heinrich Barth, born July 12, 1847; still living. John Field, born July 16, 1782; died January 11, 1837. August Johann Söderman, born July 17, 1832; died February 10, 1876. Pauline Viardot-Garcia, born July 18, 1821; still living in Paris at the ripe age of eighty. Vincent Lachner, born July 19, 1811; died January 22, 1893. Luigi Arditi, born July 22, 1822; still living. Antonio Sacchini, born July 23, 1734; died October 8, 1786. Adolphe Charles Adam, born July 24, 1803; died May 3, 1856. Vladimir de Pachmann, born July 27, 1848; still very much alive. Carl Zerrahn, born July 28, 1826; from all accounts he is yet living. Sophie Menter, born July 29, 1848; still living. François Auguste Gevaert, born July 31, 1828; still living.

The list of musicians and composers born in July is remarkable for the number living and working in the world to-day. While they cannot be described as great composers, several of them have achieved greatness as performers and teachers, and this bears out the theory that the gods who swayed the destinies of July born children were more practical than ideal. Here, too, there is a grain of astrological truth for those who care to study the theories of the old science. When July opens, the sign Cancer (the Crab) prevails, and this by astrologers is credited as a practical sign, despite the fact that the variable and melancholy moon is the ruling planet.

The Cancer people have their melancholy moments, so declare the astrologers, but when it comes to business they are very practical people indeed. One thing, they are never quite happy unless they are permitted to be at the head of the house. Sympathy is one of their best traits, but as fickleness is ascribed as one of their worst faults, they frequently get weary doing good. "The Cancer people like to see their names in print." That is another declaration made by an astrologer. "They love jewelry and display, are prone to laziness and after middle age are apt to become miserly." This, however, applies only to Cancer people who live on the material plane. Being the head sign in the Water Triplicity, Cancer people are very restless, so restless in fact that many of them ruin their health because they cannot control whims and fancies.

The astrological month changes about July 21, and then Leo, second sign in the Fire Domain, holds sway. The Leo people are very different from the Cancer people, as water is the natural antithesis of fire. The Leo people are above all else most generous, kind-hearted and intuitive. Their love for little children amounts to a passion. Harm the child of a Leo woman and presto! behold the ferocity of the lioness incarnated into the human form. Leo people are also very magnetic and inspired, and more than any sign in the twelve they are credited with peculiar luck in escaping punishment for misdeeds and wrong doing.

In writing about the reign of Queen Elizabeth, Green, the English historian, declares that "Elizabeth, like all strong natures, believed in luck," and every man who has studied life from all sides must believe this, too, although some able and successful people seem inclined to disbelieve it. The Sun rules the sign Leo, and so no one will express surprise to hear the astrologers write that the Leo people are impetuous and passionate. Whether of any practical value to human society, one must admit that the astrological rulings and divisions are all harmonious. The language itself ascribes impulse and passion to the Fire People, restlessness and indecision to the Water People, credulity and flightiness to the Air People and force and materialism to the Earth People.

Reading the lives and works of great musicians and composers from the astrological standpoint makes them doubly interesting, but the world is full of doubters and skeptics, and of these one can only say as was said to the rich man who dined sumptuously every day and was arrayed in purple and fine linen, "They would not believe if one rose from the dead" and explained it all.

THE English composer, Charles Kensington Salaman, died last week in London. He was eighty-seven years old.

Charles Kensington Salaman, although he wrote little for the orchestra or the stage, held a high place among English composers for nearly three-quarters of a century, and retained in a remarkable degree his powers of graceful lyrical composition to an extreme old age. A list of his songs, anthems, part songs, &c., would fill columns. He was born in London in 1814, was one of the first students—elected by competition—of the Royal Academy of Music, and as early as 1830 composed an ode for the Shakespearian Jubilee of that year. He was elected a member of the Royal Society of Musicians in 1837. He won considerable repute as a pianist in England, Germany and Italy, and was elected a member of the St. Cecilia Society in Rome in 1840.

SALAMAN DEAD.

He published his first series of songs, including his setting of Shelley's serenade "I Arise from Dreams of Thee," in 1838, and since then has produced an infinite variety of English, French, Italian and German songs. He was also very successful in fitting the original Latin of Horace, Catullus, Anacreon and other classic poets with melodious and appropriate music. Among his sacred compositions must be enumerated many anthems for the English church service and special pieces for use in Jewish synagogues. His rare orchestral compositions included a funeral march in honor of Victor Hugo, which was first performed in the Albert Memorial Hall. For many years he was incessantly active in the promotion of musical interests of all kinds, and he was the originator of the Amateur Choral Societies. In 1882 he published a noteworthy book, "Jews as They Are," the object of which was to remove or mitigate the prejudices from which his race have suffered for long generations.

CIRCULATION.

CIRCULATION is the life of a newspaper. Over 300,000 people interested in music in America and Europe read this paper every week. There is no other publication on the globe that can be compared with it. The reproduction of the press notices of artists—this feature alone—makes THE MUSICAL COURIER an indispensable medium for the professional musician. And leaving aside all other features of the paper its universal and extensive circulation gives to musicians of all kinds opportunities to present their claims such as daily papers and other mediums cannot offer them.

When the New York Herald, Tribune, Sun, Times or Evening Post prints a notice on a composition, a performance or an artist's work, such notice can only become known to the world at large through its reproduction in the columns of THE MUSICAL COURIER.

⊙ ▲ ⊙

The general distributing office of THE MUSICAL COURIER in Europe is under the control of its business representative, Mr. Montague Chester, Hotel Cecil, London.

In addition to the extensive subscription list of this paper the general news stand distribution is in the hands of the American News Company and its branches, which handle it for America.

THE announcements are made for next season's opera at the Metropolitan. The Sun gives this list:

"Among the artists engaged by Mr. Grau for his opera company next year are:

SAME OLD CROWD.

"Tenors—MM. Albert Alvarez, Ernest Van Dyck, Ettore di Marchi, who sang with the last Mapleson company at the Academy of Music five years ago, but has never appeared at the Metropolitan Opera House, and has lately sung with great success in 'La Tosca,' at Covent Garden; Gibert, a French tenor, who has appeared in New Orleans; Andreas Dippel, Thomas Salignac, Jacques Bars and Albetress, a new buffo who has not been heard here before.

"Baritones—Antonio Scotti, Giuseppe Campanari, David Bispham and Declery, a newcomer.

"Basses—Pol Plançon, Robert Blass, Journet and Anton Muhlmann.

"Sopranos—Emma Calvé, Emma Eames, Milka Ternina, Lucienne Bréval, Johanna Gadski, Suzanne Adams and Fritzi Scheff.

"Contraltos—Ernestine Schumann-Heink and Carrie Bridewell.

"Mr. Grau is now in negotiation with Marcella Sembrich, Sibyl Sanderson and Lilli Lehmann. He is also treating with Edouard de Reszké and Anton Van Rooy.

"The conductors are to be Armando Sepilli, Philippe Flon and Walter Damrosch. Among the new operas to be sung are, in all probability, Isidore de Lara's 'Messaline,' Lalo's 'Le Roi d'Ys' and Paderewski's 'Manru.'"

What is to become of Mancinelli? And why Lehmann again? Her voice was in ruins when she sung here several seasons ago. She has been engaged for a concert tour. Why doesn't she go to with the manager of a certain Western bureau, who is actually anxious to make up a company of vocal and instrumental wrecks. He is after Lehmann, Emil Fischer, Niemann, Gudehus, Joseph Joachim and Bundelcund, the centenarian virtuoso. What a company of musical curios that would be! The story that Grau is to retire when the lease of the Grau company of the Metropolitan Opera House expires is not new. But that will not be before the spring of 1903. A despatch last Saturday says that Grau will retire in 1902. We doubt it. So does the manager's legal man Friday. However, the announcement gave some one a chance to talk about the loss Grau's retirement would prove to the musical community, and we fancy that is all it was intended for. Advertisement is a good thing.

Nordica to Open the Munich Opera House.

A CABLEGRAM received in New York Monday announces Mme. Lillian Nordica as the prima donna engaged for the opening performance of the new Wagner Theatre at Munich, in September. "Tristan und Isolde" will be presented with Nordica as Isolde.

CRAIG-Y-NOS AT AUCTION.—LONDON, June 18—Craig-y-Nos Castle, the residence in Wales of Adelina Patti (Baroness Rolf Cederstrom), was put up at auction this afternoon at the London Mart. It was bought in for £45,000, after some excitement, caused by a false bid of £50,000, which was the reserve price.

The auction room was crowded with influential people and agents. Among those present was Baron Cederstrom. The bidding opened with an offer of £50,000, made by a prominent London auctioneer. No other offer was heard, and Auctioneer Lumley declared Madame Patti's castle sold at that figure. The bidder rushed up and told Mr. Lumley that he had not meant his offer to be taken seriously. Long conferences followed. Mr. Lumley went out and consulted Sir George Lewis, the well-known lawyer. There was great excitement throughout the auction room. The bidder, who was very pale, remained in his seat, perspiring, with the eyes of all upon him.

Sir George Lewis advised that no proceedings be taken and Mr. Lumley reopened the sale at £20,000. By thousands and five hundreds the bidding quickly advanced. At £45,000 a deadlock was reached, and Mr. Lumley announced that he must buy in the property for Madame Patti, the reserve price being £50,000.

GLENN HALL.—From the many favorable press notices of Glenn Hall, the Chicago tenor, whom Charles R. Baker is managing, the following are selected:

Glenn Hall, who has a tenor voice of richness and strength, sang with unaffectedness, pathos and fervor.—Harrisburg (Pa.) Patriot, April 27.

Glenn Hall, the tenor, has a light voice of very pleasing and artistic quality, and his singing in the cantata found great favor with the audience.—Syracuse (N. Y.) Evening Telegram, April 23.

Glenn Hall is one of the most gifted tenors that Lynchburg has had the pleasure of hearing in many a day, and the plaudits he received evidenced the genuine appreciation of the audience.—Lynchburg (Va.) News, April 28.

The work of Miss Feilding Roselle and Glenn Hall was splendidly rendered, and proved them finished artists.—Harrisburg (Pa.) Star-Independent, April 27.

DEATH OF CHARLES F. ALBERT.—Charles F. Albert, Philadelphia's famous violin maker, died at his home in that city on Monday. He was sixty-eight years old. Mr. Albert had a very wide acquaintance among musicians, both in this country and Europe, and was known as the repairer of instruments owned by all the great violinists who visited the United States.

HARRY J. FELLOWS, TENOR.

NO recount of the leading tenors of this country would be complete without mention of Harry J. Fellows, of St. Louis. This popular artist has in a quiet way won laurels from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and each season gains a stronger hold on the esteem of the musical public. His voice is of large compass and telling brilliancy, and his refined, genial personality and rare gifts have made him a favorite wherever he has appeared.

His training was under Randegger at London. Enjoying one of the highest salaried church positions in the United States, and having besides a large vocal class, a man of domestic tastes, he has persistently rejected overtures of managers who have made tempting offers to induce him to devote himself exclusively to the concert stage and to oratorio. Managers Jackson and Wakefield have proven the successful suitors, and Mr. Fellows has been secured as a star feature for the Leonora Jackson tour next winter under their management. He has sung with various notable organizations, the Apollo and Cecilia Clubs, of Brooklyn; the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, under Theodore Thomas; the St. Louis Choral Symphony, &c. The following brief press extracts tell of his reception in various cities:

HARRY J. FELLOWS.

Mr. Fellows is a great favorite and always receives an ovation.—Brooklyn Daily Eagle.

Mr. Fellows, with his rich, sweet, powerful voice, fresh and unworn, and under perfect control, scored an emphatic success.—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

A charming tenor. He sings with a style that shows experience and takes a high C with perfect ease.—Montpelier Daily Journal.

Mr. Fellows made a hit.—Cleveland Leader.

A beautiful tenor voice of good range.—W. S. B. Matthews, in Music, Chicago.

From the first he captured the heart of the audience. He is a singer who loves to please.—Mobile Daily Register.

Showed himself to be a splendid artist.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A lyric tenor with a deliciously sweet, smooth voice of wide range and much power. His enunciation is delightfully clear, and his whole work thoroughly artistic.—Los Angeles Daily Herald.

FELIX FOX SAILS FOR EUROPE.—Felix Fox, the Boston pianist, sailed for Europe on June 29 on the steamer City of Rome. After a short stay in Scotland and England, Mr. Fox will go to France and will spend several months at La Bomboule des Bains. The pianist will return to the United States in October. This past season has been a very successful one for him.

A SUCCESSFUL VIRGIL RECITAL.

A SUCCESSFUL piano recital was given at the Virgil Piano School, 29 West Fifteenth street, on Tuesday evening, June 25, by Miss Laura Race, pupil of C. Virgil Gordon.

Miss Race is a little girl of fourteen who has been studying with Mr. Gordon only the past season. The results she has accomplished under his tuition in the short space of ten months have been most remarkable, for, although she had played before coming to the Virgil School, at the time of entering her technic was extremely limited, and she had not a single piece at her command. Worse still, she had acquired many bad habits in playing, which in this short time have been eradicated. In addition she has acquired a velocity of over 1,000 notes per minute, an excellent technic and a repertory of some twenty pieces.

This was Miss Race's first attempt at playing an entire recital, as well as her first appearance in public. She was assisted by Albertus Shelley.

Miss Race opened the program with a Bach Fugue in C major, which was excellently played, the theme in the different voices being brought out with much clearness. Following this a Nocturne by Bendel was given with many beautiful tonal and artistic effects. The closing number of this group, the Allegro from the "Faschingsschwank," by Schumann, was played with much spirit and dash, gaining for the little player a round of applause and a bouquet of roses.

Mr. Shelley then played the "Morceau de Salon," by Vieuxtemps, in a finished manner, being compelled to respond to an encore.

For her second group Miss Race played the Adagio and Allegretto from the Beethoven Sonata, op. 27, No. 2; a beautiful Etude in D flat by Heller, and Godard's Second Mazurka, all of which were played with an excellent command of tone color and musical effect, the last one especially being so happily played that after several recalls she finally responded with an encore piece.

Mr. Shelley's second appearance elicited hearty applause, and he played the difficult "Zigeunerweisen," by Sarasate, with great ease and abandon.

Miss Race closed her program with the Scherzo by Mendelssohn, which was exceptionally well played; Schumann's "Slumber Song"; a graceful Minuetto by Schubert, and a difficult Waltz in A flat by Moszkowski, which she gave in a brilliant and dashing manner.

MRS. LUCIE BOICE WOOD.—Mrs. Lucie Boice Wood, daughter and pupil of Mrs. Henry Smock Boice, has been filling many engagements most successfully during the past season. The New York Herald speaks of her as follows:

Mrs. Lucie Boice Wood was the soprano soloist of the afternoon, singing twice, each rendering being enthusiastically encored. Her voice is wondrously sweet and sympathetic, and she sang "Supposing" for an encore with a witchery and grace that were simply irresistible.

The New York Press says in part:

* * * Prominent among the soloists was Mrs. Lucie Boice Wood who sang an aria from Gounod's "Queen of Sheba" and gave as an encore Niel's "Japanese Lullaby." Her mezzo voce throughout this number was exquisitely sweet.

EUNICE ST. CLAIR MARTENS.—Eunice St. Clair Martens, an American singer, who recently returned from Europe, will sing at one of the Kaltenborn concerts at the St. Nicholas Garden some time this month. The singer, a dramatic soprano, of pronounced gifts and handsome stage presence, is a pupil of Sbriglia. Before going abroad Mrs. Martens was known in the West as a successful concert and church singer. Her home is in Chicago.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Francken, of Brooklyn, will spend the summer at Twin Mountain House, in the White Mountains. Mr. Francken is a teacher and well-known in musical circles across the Bridge.

The Virgil Correspondence School.

THE CLAVIER METHOD BY MAIL.

A new, superior and eminently efficient system for Teachers and Players (only). Special Technic Course (24 lessons). Every principle explicitly stated and clearly illustrated. Each lesson taken gives the right to send a question letter, the answers to which will receive Mr. VIRGIL'S personal attention.

Certificates to qualified teachers of the CLAVIER METHOD.

Prospectus, explaining system, terms, conditions, &c., sent on application. Address

SECRETARY, VIRGIL CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL,
26 West 15th Street, New York.

YULISSE HARRISON,

Prima Donna Soprano.

OPERA, CONCERT, ORATORIO.

Now Touring in England and the Continent.

BAILEY

THIS IS TO { MUSICAL CLUBS / MUSICAL SOCIETIES / MUSICAL MANAGERS } and Speculators in Musical Attractions.

If you want to please your people, fill your houses and make money, then engage ARTISTS THAT DRAW—artists that the public REALLY want to hear.

Young WM. WORTH BAILEY

the Blind Violinist is TRULY a GREAT artist.

ELIZABETH NORTHROP, Soprano
EDWIN M. SHONERT, Pianist } Assisting Artists.

A Season of 50 Concerts is being arranged by

R. E. JOHNSTON,

SUMMER ADDRESS, 257 West 92d Street, New York City,

Whom you should write for particulars.

John Church Company's Publications.

THE following are some of the recent dates showing when compositions published by the John Church Company were performed:

ENGLAND.

Necklace of Love.....Nevin
Miss Grainger Kerr (1st).....Epping

In Maytime.....Dudley Buck
Miss Kerr (1st).....Epping
Madame McKenzie (6th).....The Camera Club
Walter Walls (9th).....Great Hall, Cannon street
Mme. Belle Cole (10th).....Adelaide Town Hall
Mme. Belle Cole (11th).....Adelaide Town Hall
Mme. Belle Cole (14th).....Adelaide Town Hall
Miss Alma Ribolla (16th).....Addison Crescent
Mme. Belle Cole (20th).....Adelaide Town Hall
Mme. Belle Cole (21st).....Adelaide Town Hall
Miss Jenkins Colyer (21st).....Hotel Cecil
Miss Grainger Kerr (23d).....Earl's Court

When First I Saw Thee.....Lassen
Miss F. Taylor (2d).....Kensington
Miss F Taylor (3d).....Cadogan Square
Miss Helen Hulme (14th).....Guildford

Eyes of Blue.....Oley Speaks
Miss F. Dewhurst (2d).....Farningham
Miss F. Dewhurst (4th).....Brighton
Madame McKenzie (6th).....The Camera Club
Miss Dewhurst (10th).....Epsom
Avon Saxon (10th).....Adelaide Town Hall
Avon Saxon (11th).....Adelaide Town Hall
Avon Saxon (13th).....Adelaide Town Hall
Avon Saxon (14th).....Adelaide Town Hall
Avon Saxon (15th).....Adelaide Town Hall
Francine Dewhurst (16th).....Eastbourne
Avon Saxon (16th).....Adelaide Town Hall
Avon Saxon (17th).....Adelaide Town Hall
Avon Saxon (18th).....Adelaide Town Hall
Avon Saxon (20th).....Adelaide Town Hall
Avon Saxon (21st).....Adelaide Town Hall
Miss F. Dewhurst (30th).....Kensington

The Lark Now Leaves.....Horatio Parker
Miss M. Vereker (2d).....Milden Hall
Miss M. Vereker (4th).....Slough
Miss M. Vereker (8th).....Guildford
Miss M. Vereker (9th).....Gunmakers' Hall
Mlle. Cheron (10th).....Adelaide Town Hall
Mlle. Cheron (11th).....Adelaide Town Hall
Miss Evelyn (13th).....West End
Mlle. Cheron (14th).....Adelaide Town Hall
Miss F. Taylor (14th).....Guildford
Mlle. Cheron (16th).....Adelaide Town Hall
Mlle. Cheron (17th).....Adelaide Town Hall
Mlle. Cheron (18th).....Adelaide Town Hall
Mme. Alice Esty (18th).....Brighton
Mlle. Cheron (20th).....Adelaide
Mlle. Cheron (21st).....Adelaide

Sweetest Flower.....C. B. Hawley
Madame McKenzie (3d).....Victoria Hall
Gilbert Denis (8th).....Watford
Wilson Bamber (9th).....Bloomsbury Hall
The Japs (10th).....Gloucester Gate
The Japs (10th).....Regent's Park
Miss Burnand (10th).....Birmingham
The Japs (13th).....Bayswater
Miss Stuart (13th).....West End
Mme. Belle Cole (13th).....Adelaide
Mme. Belle Cole (14th).....Adelaide
Mme. Belle Cole (15th).....Adelaide
Mme. Belle Cole (16th).....Adelaide
Mme. Belle Cole (17th).....Adelaide
Mme. Belle Cole (18th).....Adelaide
Mme. Belle Cole (20th).....Adelaide
The Japs (21st).....City
Mme. Belle Cole (21st).....Adelaide
Francois Checeaux (21st).....Ealing
The Japs (22d).....Ranelagh Club
Marian McKenzie (22d).....Newbury
Miss Alice Ward (22d).....Chesterfield
Miss Grainger Kerr (22d).....Mayfair
Mme. Belle Cole (11th).....Adelaide Town Hall
The Japs (25th).....Kensington
F. Choveaux (25th).....Camberwell
Grainger Kerr (25th).....South Kensington
Ley Vernon (25th).....Watford
Ley Vernon (27th).....Westminster
The Japs (29th).....Berkeley Square
Mr. Choveaux (29th).....Brockley

LAMPERTI SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

TO BE OPENED NOVEMBER 1, 1901.

Quartier, Parc Monceau,
Paris.

Temporary Address, 3 rue Gounod.

BOITO'S LONG AWAITED OPERA.

ARRIGO BOITO has published the text which he wrote for his long awaited opera, "Nero," and the verse has created a literary sensation in Italy.

The postponement of the publication of the work until after the death of Giuseppe Verdi, the intimate friend and associate of the composer and librettist, has aroused speculation as to the effect of the Italian master's death on the composer of "Mefistofele." No answer to this question has come from the only person likely to know, Boito himself. It is a fact that he has worked for many years on "Nero," and some have said that fully thirty years ago he began the work.

Boito, who wrote his poem so long ago that the charge that his inspiration came from "Quo Vadis" or any similar source will not hold, has divided the story into five scenes and four acts. The first act shows the Via Appia at night and for a while after the rise of the curtain no sound is heard but dismal chants coming from a distance. Two men are standing silent in the darkness. One is Simon Mago, who is digging a grave, and the other stands with his arms folded on his breast.

Presently the terror stricken and haunted Nero appears. In his arms he carries an urn containing the ashes of his mother. He has murdered her, and since the deed has been pursued by remorse that gives him no peace. He hopes for peace again after he has buried her ashes. He gives the urn to Simon, who buries it and offers him a cup of blood to drink to the manes.

As he is about to do this a beautiful woman surrounded with serpents appears before him. Thinking that she is a fury, he falls before her in terror. She is not a spirit, but the beautiful Asteria, who is in love with Nero and has followed him in the guise of a spirit. Nero, believing her a spirit, flees, and Simon, recognizing her beauty, determines to make use of her in his schemes with Nero. He leaves her fainting with grief at the neglect of Nero on the newly made tomb of Agrippina.

Gradually the daylight comes and a young Christian girl, Rubria, seeks the place to say her morning prayers. Asteria questions her as to the mysteries of her new faith and so does Simon, who returns to the tomb. While the three are talking the sound of music is heard. Nero is approaching, borne by six slaves and surrounded by his pageant of dancing girls, flute players and subjects. The sun is high in the heavens as the act ends with an apotheosis of the emperor.

All the elaborate rites of the Roman paganism are shown in the second act, which passes in the temple of Simon Mago. He performs miracles, and while the people make offerings of money and gems, the priests mock them and laugh at their credulity in chorus. Nero, still in search of peace, appears in the temple and is led to a seat in the sanctuary. He recognizes the goddess who suddenly came to him in the Campagna and, thinking again that she is his mother's ghost, he falls at her feet in terror.

She reveals her beauty to him and he is immediately seized with a longing for her. He implores her to come from the temple with him and she embraces him and falls into his arms. Furious that she has betrayed herself to the emperor, Simon bursts into the sanctuary and separates them. He orders the priests to throw Asteria to the serpents for violating her faith with him by revealing herself to Nero, when he thought she was a goddess.

The next act passes among the Christians and is much less dramatic in character, the action developing chiefly the love between Rubria, the Christian girl, and Flavel, a Christian and her betrothed. A duet between the two lovers is said by those who have heard it to be the gem of the opera. In the fourth and last act the more interesting Nero and his companions return to the scene.

It passes in the circus, and Simon Mago, who has been compelled by Nero to jump from a tower, sets fire to the amphitheatre to save himself. Thus does the destruction of Rome begin. The stage is covered with the bodies of the Christian martyrs and Flavel is seen searching in the ruins for Rubria. He finds her not yet dead, and opening her eyes, she smiles on him and the two lovers repeat the duet of the preceding act.

The action of the final scene passes in Nero's theatre. He and his companions have just finished a banquet and many of them lie drunk on the couches. In his delirium Nero begins to recite from the tragedy the words of Orestes, who killed his mother, but adapts the words to a confession of his own crime in the killing of his mother.

In vain his friends try to pacify him. In his insane fury, he rages and screams, and after having sought without success to quiet him with flowers and applause, his companions flee in terror, leaving him alone. Then the faithful Asteria comes, kisses him and kills herself while his lips are still pressed to hers.

Then the stage is filled with the spirits of those that he has killed and at the back of the stage there is a vision of the burning Christians as the arches of the theatre crumble. In terror Nero tries to flee from the ruined building. On all sides the spectres arise to hold him back. As his mother's curse is heard above the sound of the tempest a flash of lightning strikes him dead.

The first performance of the work, which is expected to take place at La Scala, may not be heard for at least another year, as Boito is determined that the work shall not be performed until every character is sung and acted in accordance with his ideas. He wants Ernesto Tamagno to sing Nero for the first time, and will doubtless be gratified in that particular. No singers have been mentioned for the other roles.—New York Sun.

WANTED—Pianist who is indorsed by Leschetizky, who has studied years abroad and made a brilliant Paris début, desires a salaried position which will relieve her of all business cares and responsibility; has had ten years' experience as teacher. Address PIANIST, care of this paper.

Frederic Field Bullard. — Many of the composer's most successful songs are included in the following list, from the Oliver Ditson Company's catalog: —

	Voice	Key	Compass	Price
A Stein Song	Bar. or Tenor	D	[d to F♯]	.50
	Bass	B♭	[b♭ to D]	.50
Barney McGee.	Bass	C	[G to e]	.50
Beam from Yonder Star.	High	B♭	[E♮ to a]	.40
	Med.	G	[c♯ to F♯]	.40
	Low	E♭	[a♮ to D]	.40
Good Night, Little Girl.	Med.	E♭	[E♭ to E♭]	.30
Heart of the World, The.	Low	C	[g to C]	.30
Jesus Call Us. (Sacred.)	Med. or High	C	[d to E or g]	.40
Lullaby of the Madonna.	Med.	Dmin.	[c to E♭]	.30
Nottingham Hunt.	Med.	G	[c to F♯ or g]	.40
	Low	E♭	[a to D or E♭]	.40
O Jesu, Crucified for Man. (Sacred.)	High	E	[E to F♯ or a]	.50
	Med.	C	[c to D or F]	.50
	Low	A	[a to B or D♯]	.50
The Indifferent Mariner.	Bass	E♭	[G to e♭]	.50
The Lass of Norwich-town. (Violin Obligato.) (Prize song.)	High	F	[c to g]	.60
The Peacock That Sailed Away.	Med.	G	[c to E]	.40
You Shall Not Go!	Low	B♭	[g or a to D]	.50
As Christ Upon the Cross.	High	G	[d to g or a]	.50
	Med.	E♭	[b♭ to E♭ or F]	.50

DUET FOR TENOR AND BASS

Hunting Song (from "King Arthur"). .50

Every singer should have our illustrated analytic catalog, "New Songs," mailed free.

OLIVER DITSON COMPANY, BOSTON.
CHAS. H. DITSON & CO., NEW YORK.
J. E. DITSON & CO., PHILADELPHIA.

A 370

Published by

G. SCHIRMER, NEW YORK.

Collection of Standard Operas.

COMPLETE VOCAL SCORES.
Edition de Luxe, in cloth. $1.00 extra.

Aïda. Verdi. (Italian and English),	$2.00
Amico Fritz. Mascagni. (Italian and English),	2.00
Barber of Seville. Rossini. (Italian and English),	1.50
Cavalleria Rusticana. Mascagni. (Italian and English),	1.50
Carmen. Bizet. (French and English),	2.00
Faust. Gounod. (Italian and English),	1.50
Flying Dutchman. Wagner. (German and English),	1.50
Lohengrin. Wagner. (German and English),	1.50
Lucia di Lammermoor. Donizetti. (Italian and English),	1.00
Mignon. Thomas. (French and English)	2.00
Romeo and Juliet. Gounod. (French and English),	2.00
Samson and Delilah. Saint-Saëns. (English),	2.50
Tannhäuser. Wagner. (German and English),	1.50
La Traviata. Verdi. (Italian and English),	1.00
Il Trovatore. Verdi. (Italian and English),	1.00

☞ Others in preparation.

Send for Catalogue of SCHIRMER'S LIBRARY EDITION of Musical Classics.

JEANNETTE

DURNO

CONCERT PIANIST,

3629 Vincennes Avenue, CHICAGO.

Mme. Matja von Niessen-Stone

MEZZO SOPRANO.

VOCAL RECITALS
in English, French, German, Italian and Russian.
For terms and dates address
ALICE E. JOSEPH, 7a Hanover St., London, W., England.

CONCERT DIRECTION

ROBERT STRAKOSCH

56 Rue La Bruyere, PARIS.

Mrs. Laurence Weakley,

CONTRALTO.

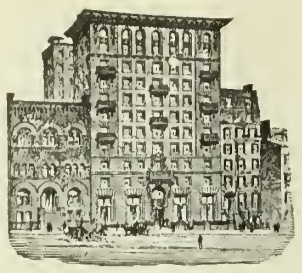
ADDRESS:
610 N. 8TH STREET,
ST. JOSEPH, MO.

RARE OLD VIOLINS

Remarkable values in fine old instruments from $50 to $10,000. Largest and finest collection in the world. Send for a copy of our Catalog, just issued, containing Biographies, Fac-simile Labels, Etc. Easy Terms.

LYON & HEALY, 133 Adams Street, CHICAGO

Boston Music Notes.



HOTEL BELLEVUE,
17 BEACON STREET,
BOSTON, June 29, 1901.

THE portrait and sketch of Auguste Goetze in last week's MUSICAL COURIER were of special interest to many people in this city who number themselves among the friends and acquaintances of that celebrated teacher. Among them may be mentioned Miss Aagot Lunde, whose intimate acquaintance extended over a period of five years or more, during which time Miss Lunde studied with Miss Goetze, living in her house and being with her constantly. It is to this teacher that Miss Lunde owes so much of her fine technic and charming interpretation of German Lieder; in fact, she has an unusually large repertory of German songs, of which it might be said she almost makes a specialty, although her friends always insist upon some of the very effective Norwegian songs Miss Lunde gives with so much spirit. That Miss Lunde is very versatile is easily shown when it is said that one of the most prominent composers of this city has many times stated that his songs have never been interpreted as satisfactorily by any singer as Miss Lunde, so with German, Norwegian, French, Italian and English, she may be said to really cover a large field

Miss Priscilla White will again be at the head of the vocal department of Lasell College the coming season. Her work has placed the vocal department on a high plane, with each season a largely increased number of pupils. In addition to her work at Lasell, Miss White has a delightful studio in the Pierce Building, where she has had a busy season, so busy in fact that it will not close until about the middle of July, after which time Miss White will join Miss Munger at Annisquam for the month of August.

Miss Etta Gallison, class of '99, Faelten Pianoforte School, has been awarded the gold medal for proficiency in sight playing at the Conservatory of Music in Geneva, Switzerland.

Baccalaureate vespers were given in the Memorial Chapel, Wellesley College, last Sunday evening. The program consisted entirely of works by Sir Arthur Sullivan and Sir John Stainer. Bruce W. Hobbs was the tenor soloist, and he selected a number of men from the Apollo Club to assist in the service. There were about 1,400 people present and the music was splendidly given. Those who took part were the Wellesley College Club, Mrs. Blanche Heimburghe Kilduff, Lester M. Bartlett, Bruce W. Hobbs, E. E. Holden, Charles E. Swain, J. K. Berry, H. C. Doane, Edward A. Osgood and Dr. George B. Rice. Associate Professor Macdougall was the organist.

Mrs. Gustavus Arnold, while in Boston last week, sang one evening for a number of friends, who were most complimentary in their thanks. Mrs. Arnold will sail for Europe on July 17 in the New England, going almost immediately to Switzerland, where she will resume work with her former teacher, Graziani.

Bruce W. Hobbs has a large summer class this year, so that he will be at his studio on Tuesdays, Fridays and Saturdays during the months of July and August, after which his regular season of teaching will begin.

Felix Fox, pianist, sailed for Europe last week. He is to spend the summer with Philipe, his former teacher, in the South of France.

The new officers elected at Glens Falls: President, Louis Arthur Russell (re-elected); secretary, F. W. Riesberg (re-elected); treasurer, J. Ellsworth Stille, of Gloversville. Program committee—Chairman, H. W. Greene, Carl G. Schmidt, Abram Lansing. Delegates to the M. T. N. A.—Mrs. Carola Loos-Tooker, Miss Lillian K. Wendell, William H. Rieser.

CONTRALTO EDITH M. CLARK FOR ASHEVILLE, N. C.—This young Boston lady has been engaged as contralto of the summer school and concerts, also remaining in Asheville as teacher of voice at Asheville College. This completes the quartet, consisting of Miss Estelle Harris, soprano; Miss Edith M. Clark, alto; Chas. A. Rice, tenor; Percy Hemus, bass.

Mr. Hemus has just returned from a three weeks' absence in the far West, having sung in Springfield, Mo., Kansas and elsewhere, with his usual success.

The reception for the artists will occur Monday evening, July 15, at Asheville College, and the school begins at once the first of the series of concerts the next week. Two grand pianos have been shipped, and all indications point to a brilliant series of concerts and financial success, inasmuch as the entire thing is under the direction of prominent local business men, who have gone at it systematically.

The prospectus may be had of either A. P. Babcock, Asheville College, Asheville, N. C., or of F. W. Riesberg, 954 Eighth avenue, New York, who are the musical directors.

SCHERHEY PUPIL SINGS AT THE PAN-AMERICAN.—Mrs. Dora Phillips, a professional pupil of Professor Scherhey, of New York, was the soprano soloist at the concert by the Brooklyn Saengerbund, given last week at the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo. The critics universally praised the quality of the singer's voice and her excellent vocal method. She sang with the orchestra an aria from "Le Cid," and her clear bell-like voice aroused the audience to a high pitch of enthusiasm. Although recalled five times, she did not respond with an encore, for she sang again in the second part of the concert, "Der Asra," by Rubinstein, and "O Kommt mit Mir," by Van der Stucken, revealing again warmth and beauty of tone and great intelligence.

SOUTHERN MUSIC TEACHERS' CONVENTION.

THE annual convention of the Southern Music Teachers, held at Chattanooga, Tenn., last month, proved one of the most important and successful musical events ever held in the State of Tennessee. Besides the concerts, as the attraction there was the organ recital at the Second Presbyterian Church by J. Fowler Richardson, of Atlanta, Ga. The assisting singer was Miss Ellen Rion, of Nashville, Tenn.

The afternoon concert was given at the Auditorium, and the soloists were Miss Grace Lee Brown, soprano, of Atlanta; C. C. Asbury, baritone, of Cincinnati; Oscar Pappenheim, 'cellist, of Atlanta. Joseph MacLean, of Decatur, Ga., was the accompanist.

Theodore Bohlmann, of the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, was the piano soloist at the evening concert. The singers in the evening were Charles C. Washburn, baritone, of Birmingham, Ala., and Miss Rion, of Nashville, who appeared at the organ recital. The accompanists of the evening were Miss Cornelia Handley, of Birmingham, and Miss Elvie W. Cocke, of Anniston.

The above two concerts and the organ recital were given on the second day of the convention. The first day was mainly devoted to meetings, at which several interesting papers were read and discussed. In the evening of the first day a free concert was given, and musical success for this event was largely due to the efforts of Miss Bianca Noa and Professor Morehead. The Music Club, of Chattanooga, gave a reception the first evening in honor of the delegates.

At the last business meeting the nominating committee recommended the re-election of R. H. Peters, of Spartanburg, S. C., as president; Miss Bianca Noa, of Chattanooga, as recording secretary; Joseph McLean, of Decatur, Ga., as corresponding secretary, and Frank Nelson, of Knoxville, as treasurer. These officers were duly elected.

A concert closed the three days' session. The performers were Henri G. Andres and Armin W. Doerner, of Cincinnati, ensemble pianists; Mrs. Lulu Gibson Joiner, of West Point, Miss., soprano; Josef O. Cadek, of Chattanooga, violinist; Frank Nelson, of Knoxville, pianist; Miss Mary Hart Law, of Spartanburg, S. C., accompanist.

There was more musical activity at the convention, but space unfortunately will not admit of lengthy reports.

CLAASSEN GOING ABROAD.—Arthur Claassen, the Brooklyn conductor and teacher, will sail for Europe, July 4, on the Barbarossa. He will visit Bayreuth and Weimar, where he is going to meet his teachers, Professor Muller-Hartung, Meyer-Oldersleben, J. W. Gottschalk and others. He will also present in the name of the New York Eichenkranz a golden emblem set with diamonds, to Edwin Schultz, the Berlin composer. The United Singers of Brooklyn will send a diploma to the Berliner Liedertafel, expressing their thanks for the splendid reception the Liedertafel and the united singing societies of Berlin gave to the delegates received by Emperor William September 1. Mr. Claassen will be back September 18.

WAGNER LUNACIES.—A German musician has been inspired anew by a cycle of Wagner operas to estimate the length of time that each opera lasts exclusive of the time of the intermissions. He estimated that "Rienzi" took 2 hours and 44 minutes; "Der Fliegende Holländer," 2 hours and 21 minutes; while the other operas were as follows: "Lohengrin," 3 hours and 7 minutes; "Tannhäuser," 3 hours and 8 minutes; "Tristan und Isolde," 3 hours and 17 minutes; "Die Meistersinger," 3 hours and 57 minutes; "Das Rheingold," 2 hours and 28 minutes; "Die Walküre," 3 hours and 18 minutes; "Siegfried," 3 hours and 44 minutes, and "Götterdämmerung," 3 hours and 51 minutes.

MISS ESTHER FEÉ, VIOLINISTE.
(PARIS—IN AMERICA NOVEMBER 1st.)
Exclusive Management CHARLES R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

LUDWIG BREITNER,
Eminent Pianist and Teacher, recently from Paris, France, will accept applications for lessons during the Summer months. Special Class for Teachers and Students preparing for professional careers.
For terms and particulars address
LUDWIG BREITNER, 311 Madison Ave., New York City.

JOS. S. BAERNSTEIN
BASSO
61 EAST 64TH STREET,
NEW YORK CITY.

London Organ School
AND INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC,
22 Princes Street, Cavendish Sq., W., London, Eng.
Established 1865. Principal: T. H. Yorke Trotter, M.A., Mus.Doc.Oxon.
At this college Private Lessons are given and classes held in all branches of Music, and in Elocution and Modern Languages.
There is a competent staff of Professors for Piano, Singing, Organ, Violin, Viola, Violoncello, Double Bass, Harp, Guitar and all Wood and Brass Wind Instruments.
A special feature is made of the training of Church and Concert Organists. The school has three 3-manual practice organs and a new grand concert organ, which has been recently completed by the Positive Organ Company on the Casson system.
The full Orchestra meets on Tuesday Evenings. The String Orchestra on Friday Afternoons.
For prospectus and full particulars apply to the office of this paper or to FRANCIS BURGESS, Secretary.

Madame
CLARA NOVELLO DAVIES
Professor of Voice Production.
Conductor of the Royal Welsh Ladies' Choir.
(Under Royal patronage.)
Madame Davies has a vacancy for two resident lady pupils
For Prospectus and Terms apply to
121 Victoria St., Westminster, LONDON, S. W.

GLENN HALL
TENOR.
Address CHAS. R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building,
or Kimball Hall, Chicago,

37 Avenue Brugmann,
Brussels, June 14, 1901.

A FESTIVAL of ancient and modern music will take place on July 17, at the Scheveningen Kursaal, under the direction of Vincent d'Indy.

A Belgian violinist, Madame Schmidt, has just made her début in Paris, at a reception given by the Princess of Polignac. She interpreted the Chaconne of Vitali and the Sonata of Castillon with profound sentiment and superb tone coloring.

The Parisian papers brought us enthusiastic accounts these last days of the visit made at the Cirque d'Hiver by Arthur Nikisch and the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, one conducting the other, together two incontestable Germanic celebrities. We have also just heard them at the Monnaie, and for us, as for the Parisians, this audition was a new treat of excellent music, excellently conducted and executed. The make-up of the Nikisch orchestra was the principal attraction for us. We were not deceived; a remarkable gathering of solid artists, and all rigorously disciplined.

In spite of the lateness of the season and the radiant charm of a summer's night, the hall was filled, thanks to the presence of the Wagnerites and the German colony. The reception was not below the temperature, and each selection was saluted by interminable ovations. The curious interpretation of the "Murmurs of the Forest," from "Siegfried," very living and full of movement, was accorded a merited encore. The program contained the "Leonore" overture and the "Symphony Heroique," of Beethoven; the Overture to the "Maître Chanteurs," the "Murmurs of the Forest" and the overtures to "Lohengrin" and "Tannhäuser."

Called upon at the last moment to replace an artist prevented from playing by a death in the family, Miss Rose Louise Samuels, the violinist, who at the beginning of the winter made a brilliant success at her début at the Cercle Artistique, made an impression of great artistic value on the audience of over 2,000 people, at a huge charity concert organized in Bruges by the Second Regiment de ligne for the benefit of a poor musician and his children. Accompanied by her sister, Miss Samuels played the Rondo Capriccioso of Saint-Saëns, the Romance in F of Beethoven, and the Zarisecky Mazurka. Here is what one of the principal critics of Bruges says about her playing: "We surprise no one in saying that the big success of this musicale was Miss Rosa Samuels, who recently—in January—made her début at the Cercle Artistique, of Brussels. Miss Samuels is a pupil of Ysaye, and this is to be divined by the amplitude of tone and the soupleness of the right hand of the artist. The Capriccioso of Saint-Saëns, &c., played with a precocious talent which seems to announce a brilliant future, procured for the young American enthusiastic applause, in which was joined the pianist, her brilliant partner. Magnificent bouquets of flowers were presented to both the graceful young musicians."

Were it necessary to establish a parallel between the works of the two French composers given at the sixth Ysaye concert from the general point of view, it would be necessary to recognize that those of Vincent d'Indy characterize themselves by a very rigorous orchestral coloring, while the works of Guy Ropartz distinguish themselves by the grace of the melodic contour. The Symphony No. 2, in F minor, of Guy Ropartz, written in a liberal style, commences with an adagio which seems like a gentle lamentation repeated successively by the string quartet. The wind and brass instruments intervene only in the demi teinte sonorities, and are almost inappreciable. The scherzo is the feature in this work. Built on a dashing and sprightly theme it is written with much skill. The second adagio resembles the first one a little too much, while the allegro molto, which terminates the symphony, has much distinction. Four poems for voice and orchestra after the intermezzo of Heine allow us to appreciate the clear and precise diction of the baritone Paul Daraux, who has a strong but somewhat uneven voice. What the public applauded greatly without taking it into account perhaps was the beauty of the poems of the German poet, for which we could have wished harmonies worthy of the verses. The second part of this concert was consecrated to the works of Vincent d'Indy, of which a melody, the first part of the "Wallenstein Trilogy," and a symphony on a French mountaineer theme were given. It is a very long time since one has had the chance in Brussels to hear this work, where the piano intervenes as a simple instrument of the orchestra, but with an extremely curious éclat. The finale, with a really devilish rhythm, was executed by Arthur Dégréef in an amazing fashion, which procured for the pianist an enthusiastic success. A charming "Madrigal" and a "Lied Maritime" of profound expression, very well sung by Mr. Daraux, showed us another side, all simplicity, of the souple and lofty talent of Vincent d'Indy. The fascinating first part of the "Wallenstein" terminated the program in a radiance of color and movement. All in all a very good concert.

LILLIAN.

WESTERVELT-JOHNSON RECITAL.—Miss Louise St. John Westervelt, soprano, and Miss Harriet Johnson, pianist, gave a charming recital on June 15, at Oak Terrace, Davenport, Ia. Miss Westervelt gave songs by Rubinstein, Bungert, Hugo Wolf, Mrs. Beach, Maude Valerie White, Campra, Bishop, and "Breton Folk Song"; the Romance from "Paul and Virginia," and the waltz and arietta from "Mireille," by Gounod. Miss Johnston's list included compositions by Schubert, Liszt, Scarlatti-Tausig, Chopin, Moszkowski and Schumann.

Miss Florence Traub will play the first movement of the D minor Concerto by Rubinstein with the Kaltenborn Orchestra at St. Nicholas Rink Wednesday evening, July 3.

MARY MÜNCHHOFF.

"SHE is the Sarasate among vocalists," says the Cologne Volkszeitung.

"Her voice has no equal in youthful elasticity, velvety smoothness and nightingale quality in the high registers," says a Chemnitz critic.

Below are recent criticisms, showing this young and charming American nightingale's continued success in Germany:

"Elle est grande dans son genre, mais son genre est petit," were the words of Catalinc in speaking of Henrietta Sonntag. The same could be said of Mary Münchhoff, but the word "petit" must not be understood to mean inferior or weak. The grand, heroic, passionate style is not hers, but the dainty, refined, childlike tones which she possesses surpass all others. She is the Sarasate among vocalists. In the highest registers her voice is as clear as a bell, and in tones that are as fine as a cobweb, not the slightest uncertainty is noticed. Her trill is finished to perfection; she has an ideal attack and her method of breathing never disturbs the flow of melody—a crag against which many so-called "stars" strike—all these vocal qualities compel us to exclaim: "She is great in her kind of art."—Cologne Volkszeitung, February 5, 1901.

Mary Münchhoff is still the same wonderful vocal virtuosa as two years ago, when she created a sensation here for the first time. The cavatina from Rossini's "Barber of Seville" and "The Bell" aria from Delibes' "Lakmé" were masterpieces of coloratura filigree and faultless intonation. Her voice is so charming, bright and penetrating that in these selections her efforts were more than a display of technical skill. Miss Münchhoff's progress in endeavoring to reign also in the realm of songs has been most excellent.—Dr. Otto Neitzel, in Cologne Zeitung, February 5, 1901.

Mary Münchhoff, in spite of her youth, is already a finished vocal star, and although she will continue to cultivate her voice and enlarge her repertory, she will remain essentially the same and, we trust, for a long time. The faultless, clear quality of her beautiful high soprano voice, the silvery tones, the easy, playful rendering of the most difficult coloratura, the ideal trill, and last, but not least, her amiable, naïve manner, which seem to say: "I am going to sing something beautiful now that will please both you and me"; this all has remained unchanged since her last appearance. Her first selection, Rossini's aria from "The Barber of Seville," proved this well. This "badly slandered Italian master would still make a great show" with many of his works, if singers like Mary Münchhoff were not such a rarity. Songs from Liszt, Schumann, Tschaikowsky, Brahms and Franz followed, the latter giving especial pleasure, as the compositions of this master demand not a technical but an artistic rendering. One is willing to listen to such a perfect rendering of "The Bell" aria from "Lakmé" as Miss Münchhoff offered! Amiable as ever, the great artist acknowledged the never-ending applause by an encore, one of Taubert's "Kinderlieder."—Cologne Tageblatt, February 5, 1901.

Winkler Plays at the Pan-American.

LEOPOLD WINKLER, the pianist, was one of the soloists at the concert which the Brooklyn Saengerbund gave at the Pan-American Exposition in Buffalo. Following are extracts from the reports in the Brooklyn and New York papers:

Mr. Winkler played Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody, No. 6; two etudes by Chopin and the A major Waltz by the same composer, most brilliantly. To refer to his technic is a waste of words. Everybody who has ever heard him play knows that he plays the most difficult passages with astounding ease and without dropping a note. The superb Wissner grand which he played did much to lighten his labors. The audience compelled the artist to give an encore, and he played "At the Spring," by Joseffy, only after many and repeated recalls.—New York Staats-Zeitung.

* * * He played the Sixth Rhapsody of Liszt. His playing revealed a truly wonderful technic and a round, soft tone, such as I have heard only from Joseffy. Deafening applause, which lasted for several minutes, followed.—Brooklyn Freie Presse.

The pianist Leopold Winkler, who played Liszt's Sixth Rhapsody and several of Chopin's compositions with uncommon technic and brilliancy, received much applause.—New York Morgen Journal.

Miss ADELE MARGULIES,
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Studios: Nos. 705-6 Carnegie Hall, New York.

MARIO DEL SOL,
Late with Ellis-Melba Opera Co. and Opéra Comique, Paris.
SCHOOL OF OPERA—Repertory, French and Italian Stage in Studio. Action and Mise-en-Scene.
Private Instruction. Classes Assemble 2 to 5 P.M.
Address:
MILLER BUILDING. Broadway and 65th St., New York.

ECOLE LYRIQUE.
POSE de la voix—TECHNIQUE, STYLE, RÉPERTOIRE.
OPÉRA, CONCERT.
Français, Anglais, Italien.
Direct Communication with European Managers.
Mr. HASLAM,
54 rue du Faubourg St. Honoré, PARIS, FRANCE.

M. I.
SCHERHEY,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Combined Italian-French-German Method.
CHURCH, CONCERT, ORATORIO, OPERA.
Studio: 780 PARK AVENUE, Cor. 73d St., NEW YORK.
Telephone: Seventy-ninth, 1152.

Mrs. HELEN TRUST
SOPRANO.
Vocal Recitals in English, French, Italian.
33 Grove End Road,
St. John's Wood, London, England.

THIRD AMERICAN TOUR
SEASON 1901-2.
161 Concerts
Last Season.
LEONORA JACKSON
ASSISTED BY Harry J. Fellows,
Tenor.
William Bauer, Pianist.
Direction ERNEST H. JACKSON and A. L. WAKEFIELD.
Address: NEW YORK, 31 Union Square West. CHICAGO, 71 Monroe Street.

ANCIENT BRITISH MUSIC.*

WE shall confine ourselves in this essay to ascertain, as well as we can, the origin and progress of music among the Kymry (or rather Cymry), who are avowedly the first people by whom the island is known to have been inhabited.

It may be presumed that the first musical efforts of the Kymry, as of all ancient nations, were merely vocal; but it is at the same time certain that they cultivated the art in its more artificial character at a very remote period; and perhaps their first transition from the music of nature was that of wind instruments. We find that the pipe or flute, whether under the name of pib or pibgorn, was in very early use; and most probably took the precedence of the other national instruments. An allusion to the pipe, or perhaps more properly the bagpipes, is found so early as the seventh century; when, at an Eisteddvod (congress of bards and minstrels) held by King Cadwaladr, a musician was reproved for playing a tune called the "Pipes of Morvudd" (Pibau Morvudd), and the cause of the reprimand was that the tune was in the minor key. The horn, also, under the name of corn, or corn buelin, was in early times a very common instrument, but chiefly employed on warlike occasions, or when any assemblages of the country were necessary; as in latter times has been the case in the "gathering of the clans" in the Highlands of Scotland. The most ancient Triadic memorials of Wales are full of allusions to this national custom.

Chaucer, who wrote in the fourteenth century, has the following notice respecting the pipes in Cornwall; and it is undisputed that the ancient Cornish and Welsh were descended from the same stock, and their separation took place, it is probable, about the seventh or eighth century.

The description of music to which the Welsh have been mostly attached, even from the earliest period of their history, is that of the harp, upon the antiquity of which instrument it is unnecessary to dwell; the frequent allusions to it in the sacred writings, and especially in the Psalms of David, prove it to have been in general use among the Hebrews. With the harp the Kymry generally associated the strains of the poet or songster, in a manner that may be regarded as peculiar to the country. This style of minstrelsy had its origin, it may be presumed, in the Bardic or Druidical institution, one of the chief duties of which was to disseminate useful instruction throughout the community, and this, as we learn from the Institutional Triads, was done by the medium of voice, song, and conventional usage. Numerous authorities might be produced from the ancient Welsh records to show that the art of music was thus, in primitive times, connected in an intimate manner with the most important establishments of the Kymry; but it will be sufficient to state that Hu the mighty, the patriarch of the nation, is celebrated in the historical Triads as having been the first to adapt vocal music to the preservation of memorial and invention, and as having thus contributed to the foundation of Bardism.

Several ancient authors allude to the cultivation of music among the Celts; Diodorus Siculus, who flourished in the century preceding our era, tells us that among the Celts were composers of melodies, who sang penegyrical or invective strains to instruments resembling lyres; which may safely be presumed to have been harps. The use of the harp, which had its origin in the public institutions of the Kymry, was, on the extinction of the political influence of the bards, diffused through the different ranks of society; and playing on the harp was cultivated by private individuals as a distinct art. We find from the Triads of the Social State, which are of considerable antiquity, that a harp was anciently one of the articles which the law required a gentleman by birth to possess; and that it was, moreover, accounted as one of the ornaments of a clan, and, for that reason, exempted from seizure by legal process; circumstances that prove the high estimation in which this species of music was held. A notice is given of the use of the harp at a congress held in the sixth century, under the patronage of Maelgwn Gwynedd (King of North Wales), on the banks of the River Conway, which, it appears, was attended by several harpers and poets. Iorwerth Beli, a bard of the fourteenth century, relates the event, principally on account of a stratagem practiced by Maelgwn, by which the poets acquired a singular triumph over the minstrels. Maelgwn had proposed rewards to the bards and minstrels, in a swimming contest across the Conway; he says:

Whey they came to land on the sea boundary of the ebb tide
The Harpers were worth nothing;
But by reason of the fair increase of the faculty of the wise,
The Poets composed equally well as before,
Notwithstanding their swimming.

This device was, no doubt, to give the poets the victory in the approaching congress. The laws of Hywel Dda (Howell the good) who flourished in the tenth century, have several allusions to the practice of playing on the harp, which was evidently in considerable repute at that period. Among the officers of the royal household, the domestic bard filled a conspicuous place; and as, upon entering his office, he was presented with a harp by the king, the nature of his employment may be accurately ascertained; but, although to play the harp was his principal occupation, he was also to unite with it the qaulification of singing.

Among the persons who had the privilege of frequenting the king's palace was the Crythor, or player on the crwth (or crowd), an instrument more exclusively national, perhaps, than the harp, although much inferior to it in estimation; it appears to have been played as a tenor accompaniment to the harp. The crwth was, in the fourteenth century, generally made of willow; and we gather from the poems of Iorwerth Beli, that it was not held in any high repute, for he says of it:

In the days of the high primary Bards, the fine ministers of song,
Impregnated with the three gifts of eloquence,
No honor was allowed to what resembles the noise of pigs,
The dirty gut-breaking Crwth of willow.

In the tenth century music was much cultivated in Wales; and of the esteem in which it was publicly held, we may gather from the value appropriated by law to different harps. Those of the king and Pencerdd (chief bard) were estimated at 120d. each; and those of private gentlemen at 60d.—prices which, with reference to the value of money in Wales at that period, were very considerable; and the privileges then enjoyed by the professors of the harp, in the sacredness of their persons, and the immunity of their lands, serve to corroborate the inference drawn in favor of the music of that time.

The twelfth century may be regarded as the Augustan era of music in Wales; for Giraldus Cambrensis, who flourished at that time, writes that "travelers who arrived at early hours, are entertained with the conversation of young women, and music on the harp, until the evening; for every family has its maidens and harps assigned for the purpose." And, in allusion to the particular style of music then prevalent, he says, "In their musical concerts they do not sing in unison, like the inhabitants of many countries, but in different parts; so that in a company of singers, which one freqeuntly meets with in Wales, you will hear as many different parts and voices as there are performers; who all at length unite, with organic melody (in harmony), in one consonance (concord), and the soft sweetness of B flat." (qu. G minor.) To this he adds, that he had never witnessed a similar custom, except in the North of England, beyond the Humber; a circumstance which, when we reflect that a tribe of the Kymry anciently peopled that part of the kingdom, tends greatly to prove the antiquity of the practice.

The century which elapsed from the era just considered, until the extinction of Welsh independence, was peculiarly marked by desolation and bloodshed. Yet the harp of the Kymrie was not silent during this ominous interval; for often among the mountains and glens were her wild notes heard, associated with the voice of the bard, to give joy and hope to the soul of the warrior, but her day and joy of triumph was drawing fast to its close; with the death of the last Llywelyn (1282) died, for a season, the spirit of minstrelsy and song among the mountains of Wales. Like the Israelites of old, when sitting down to weep near the waters of Babylon, the Welsh hung up their useless harps to lament over the fall of their country, and to wait the dawn of a more propitious era.

Having given an outline of the ancient Welsh music, from the earliest memorials respecting it, to the subjugation of the country by Edward the First, I shall now make a few remarks respecting the musical notation used in Wales. The most ancient specimen of Welsh musical notation now extant is in the library of the Welsh School, which was established in 1714. The whole of this specimen was published in the Archæology of Wales, a most valuable work, in three volumes, printed by the patriotic Owen Jones, Myvyr, at an expense of £2,000. The notation occupies about seventy pages of the third volume. The characters used are those of the ancient bardic alphabet, and it is very evident that chords were struck, for three and four letters are placed perpendicularly, one above another. The history of the above runs thus. This MS. purports to have been transcribed by Robert ab Huw, of Bodwigan, in Anglesey, in the reign of Charles the First, from a manuscript of William Penllyn, a celebrated minstrel of the preceding century. And it is stated in a note that the MS. comprises "The music of Britain, as settled by a congress, or meeting of chief musicians, by order of Gruffydd ab Cynan, Prince of North Wales, about A. D. 1100, with some of the most ancient pieces of the Britons, supposed to be handed down to us by the ancient bards."

Accompanying this manuscript are transcripts from another old writing in the possession of Sir Watkin Williams Wynn, Bart., entitled "The Repository of String Music Within the Three Principalities of Wales," having,

* By John Parry, in the Musical World of 1836.

Controule he would and foul-faile
With hornpipes of Cornwaile,
In flutes made he discordance
And in his musick with mischance.

Kindergarten Music Building.
The Original and Standard System of Kindergarten Music.
Kina K. Darlington
1069 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.

REBECCA MACKENZIE
SOPRANO.
Available for Concert, Oratorio and Song Recitals.
Address FRED O. RENARD, Manager,
444 Central Park West, NEW YORK CITY.

Mme. OGDEN CRANE.
The Art of Singing.
Special attention given to tone production.
Founded on the pure Italian method.
Sole teacher of Hattie Diamond Nathan, Edith Hutchins, Lillian Le Roy, Lillian Spitz and many others.
SUMMER SCHOOL:
Post Office Building, Asbury Park, N. J.,
From June 24 to September 14.
In New York Studio Thursdays,
3 East 14th Street,
Cor. Fifth Avenue, NEW YORK.

ALICE E. JOSEPH,
Late Private Secretary to Sir Augustus Harris.
THE OPERA AND CONCERT AGENCY,
7a Hanover Street, Regent Street, LONDON, England,
Authorized to represent all the Best Artists in the World!
ADVICE GRATIS.

HERBERT WITHERSPOON
Opera, Oratorio, Concert, Recitals.
BASS.
For Terms, Dates, &c., address
Residence Studio: 202 West 78th St., New York.

Elizabeth Hazard
SOPRANO
Drawing Room Concerts | Song Recitals
Direction Emile Levy | 141 Fifth Ave.

GODOWSKY.
Under the Management of HERMANN WOLFF, Flottwell Strasse, 1 BERLIN, W., Germany.
Manager for England and Dependencies: HUGO GOERLITZ, 119 New Bond Street, LONDON, England.
Engaged by the London Philharmonic Orchestra for June 20th. Recitals in London, St. James' Hall, May 31st and June 12th.

apparently, reference to the twelth century. It contains an explanation of several of the terms used in Welsh music, which are extremely complex. There are, besides, extracts from other old manuscripts of a similar nature, and relating, it would appear, to the same period. Such is the claim to antiquity which the document under notice bears on the face of it, and, if it may safely be granted, the evidence it supplies must be considered of singular value with reference to the subject before us. And it may be mentioned as an additional proof of its authenticity, as a record of Welsh music, that the notation is essentially different from any other now known. Dr. Burney describes this notation as one "by letters of the alphabet, somewhat resembling the tablature of the lute, but without lines, except a single one to separate the treble from the bass." Since Dr. Burney's time the whole of this specimen was submitted by the erudite Dr. William Owen Pughe to Bartholomon, the celebrated violinist. Bartholomon succeeded in deciphering most if not all of it, adopting as the basis of his experiment the notation of the ancient Spanish lute, as in use during the sixteenth century. which agrees with what Dr. Burney says of the conformity of the Welsh notation with the tablature of that instrument. It is extremely probable that the clue afforded by Bartholomon might have led to most successful results; but, unfortunately, only one of the tunes, as described by him, has been preserved, and that was inserted in the first volume of Welsh melodies published in 1809. This was, by a fortunate accident, transcribed by Dr. Pughe, or no instance of Bartholomon's success might now have remained; for, at his death in 1808, his manuscripts were dispersed, if not destroyed. This one comprises notations, illustrative of the twenty-four canons of music, together with twenty-nine ancient tunes, and a catalogue of more than 150 others, which may supply some idea of the musical treasures formerly possessed by the Kymry.

The deciphering of these would certainly tend, in some degree, to make us acquainted with the general proficincy anciently attained by the Welsh in the art of music; but we should still be far from ascertaining the particular skill of the performers; and whether they were acquainted with counterpoint or not, has been a subject of much discussion. Counterpoint was known in Italy as early as the eleventh century; about eighty years previous to the celebrated ordinance or Gruffydd ab Cynan; but that it was known and practiced in Wales, in the twelfth century, may be inferred from the testimony of Giraldus Cambrensis, already quoted, and still more satisfactorily from that particular musical diversion, before noticed, called, "singing or song in four parts, with accentuation," which can hardly apply to anything but to that peculiar description of harmony known by the technical denomination of counterpoint.

I shall, in conclusion, offer a few remarks on the harp. Of the high antiquity of this instrument, even among the Kymry, enough has been said from unquestionable authorities; we have also strong presumptive proof, in the very name of the harp in the Welsh language, differing, as it does, from what is used in any other, and having for its root a Welsh word peculiarly applicable to the character of the instrument. This root is Tel, which implies anything drawn straight or tight, which must have presented itself as the most obvious character of the harp upon its original adoption—hence Telyn, the Welsh for harp. It is somewhat singular, with reference to the word Telyn, that the promontory on which Toulon is situated was anciently called Cytharistes, which bears the same relation to the Latin cythara that Toulon does to the Welsh Telyn; and the form of the Bay of Toulon resembles the comb of the harp.

With respect to the peculiar construction of this instrument in former times, and its compass, there is necessarily some obscurity; we find, however, that it was first strung with hair, which continued in use until the commencement of the fifteenth century when strings of gut were introduced. Anciently, too, the harp had only a single row of strings; but the performer was able, it is said, to produce accidental notes by a peculiar management of the finger and thumb, now no longer known.

That considerable skill was employed in the mere mechanical effort of playing the harp is evident from the rudiments specified in the Welsh MS., which are seventeen in number, and seem to embrace with the most technical nicety every variety of manual dexterity of which the art is susceptible.

The directions given bear the stamp of antiquity, among which are: "The sixth tune is played as the fifth, only raising two notes on the upper thumb." "The twelfth is played like the tenth, only shaking the upper thumb." "The fourteenth is played like the thirteenth, but raising three notes on the upper thumb." The following curious terms are also used: "Choaking the thumb"; "shake of the four fingers" (evidently a double shake); "shake of the little finger" (not used now); "double scrape" (probably drawing two fingers along the strings in thirds or sixes); "single scrape"; "half scrape"; "throw of the finger"; "double shake"; "shake of the bee"; "trill of the thumb"; "double choak" (probably the present étouffé—or suddenly stopping the vibration of the strings) "forked choaking"; "back of the nail"; "jerk"; "great shake." To a modern harp player these directions must appear extraordinary.

In the days of Queen Elizabeth the number of strings on the harp was twenty-nine. The Welsh harp of the present day has three rows of strings, the two outer ones extending to about five octaves, the centre row (consisting of the flats and sharps) to about four octaves. The compass of the pedal harp is from double low E to E in altissimo, or six octaves; lately, however, Mr. Erard has extended this compass on his last patent instruments, besides increasing the power and quality of tone vastly.

I shall conclude this sketch with a stanza written by the late talented Mrs. Hemans, to the air of "Arhyd y nos," or "The Live-long Night," for the first volume of "Welsh Melodies":

In the dwellings of our fathers,
Round the glad blaze,
Now the festive circle gathers,
With harps and lays:
Now the rush-strewn halls are ringing,
Steps are bounding, hards are singing,
Aye! the hour to all is bringing
Peace, joy or praise.

This stanza is taken from a song supposed to have been sung by Gavran (a distinguished chieftan) and his companions at sea, who, in the fifth century, went on a voyage to discover some islands, which, by a traditional memorial, were known under the appellation of the "Green Isles of the Ocean." The expedition was not heard of afterward.—London Exchange.

Miss Elgie Bowen, a New Comic Opera Singer.

At a recent production of the "Geisha," by the Daly Musical Comedy Company, at Washington, Miss Elgie Bowen, a young and talented pupil of F. X. Arens, sang the role of O Mimosa San, scoring an instantaneous and pronounced hit. The Washington Post says of her:

Of the new principals who appeared for the first time, Miss Elgie Bowen scored the most pronounced hit. She has a clear soprano, of wonderful beauty and surprising volume, considering her fragile figure. After her first song, an encore speedily established friendly relations with the audience. On the "Jewel of Asia" song she received four encores, no small achievement for a comparative newcomer to the operatic stage. She is said to be only eighteen years old, and is considered by Manager Duff the most promising singer he ever engaged. If for no other reason than because of the beauty of her voice and the charming grace of her personality, no lover of music should miss "The Geisha."

Miss Elgie Bowen was the O Mimosa San, and displayed a very excellent dramatic ability, in addition to a voice of considerable strength and much richness, which was used with intelligent effect. She made a decided success, and was one of the most delightful surprises of the performance.—Washington Times.

This was the first appearance of Miss Bowen in a principal role. She will reappear in the same part at Manhattan Beach, where the Daly Opera Company is filling a summer engagement. Miss Bowen has received all her vocal training from Mr. Arens.

Jessie Shay.

The following extract from a report of the Kaltenborn concerts published in the Mail and Express, refers thus to Miss Jessie Shay's performance of Moszkowski's new piano concerto:

Miss Shay gave a praiseworthy performance, so far as the poor acoustics of the hall allowed the formation of an opinion; her fingers are as dexterous as ever, and her temperament, which is rather uncommon, was easily able to take in and give out what there was in the Moszkowski music.

So pleased were her hearers that the young pianist was obliged to add an extra number, with orchestra, of a threadbare sort that might have been written by Saint-Saëns after Berlioz. But it kept feet beating time on the St. Nicholas Garden floor, and so the owners of the said feet were happy.

The encore referred to in the above paragraph was the scherzo from Litolff's Fourth Piano concerto.

The following report from the Pittsburg Post, adds another tribute to Miss Shay's talents:

Miss Jessie Shay, the young American pianist who is a new candidate for musical honors, was heralded as the star attraction at the concert given last evening in Carnegie Music Hall. Miss Shay compares favorably with a number of fine pianists who have visited Pittsburg this winter, but has a vigorous, virile style, distinctly her own. Her selections were from Grieg, Raff, Moszkowski and other classics, each of which was vigorously applauded.

MILTONELLA BEARDSLEY.—Mrs. Miltonella Beardsley, the pianist and teacher, has closed her studio in the Pouch Mansion, Brooklyn, for the summer. Accompanied by her gifted little daughter, Constance Beardsley, Mrs. Beardsley will spend part of her vacation at "The Summit," the old country home of the Beardsleys, at Milford, Conn. Later on in the season the Beardsleys expect to go to the Maine woods, and on this journey Mrs. Beardsley and her little daughter will be joined by Dr. William E. Beardsley, the husband and father.

Mrs. Beardsley has an interesting class in Brooklyn. A number of her advanced pupils are themselves teaching in the Borough of Homes and Churches. In addition to her teaching, Mrs. Beardsley will devote this coming season some time to ensemble playing, a branch in which she particularly excels.

DR. HOCH'S CONSERVATOIRE
For All Branches of Music.
IN FRANKFORT-ON-THE-MAIN.
The Winter Term commences September 1. Tuition is given by Messrs. Director Prof. Dr. SCHOLZ and Prof. J. KNORR, Theory and History; Prof. J. KWAST, L. UZIELLI, E. ENGESSER. C. FRIEDBERG and MISS MAYER, Piano; H. GELHAAR, Organ; Prof HUGO HEERMANN, Prof. KOENING, F. BASSERMANN and A. HESS, Violin; Prof. B. COSSMANN and Prof. HUGO BECKER, Violoncello; H. ED. BELLWIDT and Miss SOHN and others, Singing. Fees: 360 to 450 Marks a year. Prospectus sent free. Applications should be sent as soon as possible to THE MANAGEMENT.

SOUSA AND HIS BAND

Office: Astor Court Building, New York.
Eighteenth Semi-Annual and Fifth Transcontinental Tour.
Monday, June 10, to Saturday, July 6,
INCLUSIVE,
PAN-AMERICAN EXPOSITION,
Buffalo, N. Y.
Sunday, July 7, to Monday, September 2,
INCLUSIVE,
MANHATTAN BEACH. New York City.

THIS SPACE IS TO BE DEVOTED TO THE INSERTION OF PORTRAITS OF SUCCESSFUL BOWMAN PUPILS
Mr. BOWMAN is assigning LESSON HOURS for next season. Early application is suggested. He may be addressed until SEPT. 5th at HIS SUMMER HOME, Grand View Cottage, SQUIRREL ISLAND, COAST OF MAINE
E. M. BOWMAN. Piano and Theory Studio: Steinway Hall, New York.
Organist and Conductor Baptist Temple Choir, Brooklyn.

THE ONLY "LESCHETIZKY" SCHOOL OF PIANO PLAYING IN AMERICA.
Named after PROF. THEO. LESCHETIZKY, of Vienna, by his special permission.
Mme. DE WIENZKOWSKA, DIRECTRESS AND FOUNDER.
PROF. LESCHETIZKY'S Sole Principal Assistant in this country, formerly in Vienna; also Concert Pianiste.
CARNEGIE HALL. Address Communications: 147 W. Eighty-second St., NEW YORK CITY.
LESCHETIZKY—"Mme. Wienzkowska's success as a piano virtuosa and teacher is eminent."
PADEREWSKI—"Mme. Wienzkowska is a finished pianiste and possesses an extraordinary ability of communicating to others a complete knowledge of her art."
HANS RICHTER—"I consider you an artist of finest esprit and taste, and a representative of a most solid school."

The Carlisle-Carr Concert Bureau and Greater Britain Musical Agency
(The Foreign and Colonial Bureau),
108 New Bond Street, LONDON, W., ENGLAND.
Opera, Oratorio, Concerts, At Homes, Garden Parties, Children Parties.
Sole control of the "Artists' Popular Concerts."
Telegraphic Address: "PANDECT," London.

"WALT" THOMPSON, DRUM MAJOR!

INSPECTOR "WALT" THOMPSON is greatly worked up over the rumor that went about yesterday to the effect that he was going to be drum major of the new policemen's band. The Inspector has got so used to reading descriptions of his famous golf cap that he does not mind pleasantries on that subject very much, but at a drum major's beaver he draws the line. So disturbed is the Inspector over the very suggestion that he should ever stoop to twirl a drum major's baton instead of his own faithful "willow" that when he was approached on the subject today he was inclined at first to imply that he did not know that there was going to be any band.

"What band?" said he. "Whose band? What have I got to do with any band?"

"Well, they say there is going to be a policemen's band, and that you're going to lead it."

"They say, eh? Who says?"

Several sources of information of more or less reliability were mentioned.

"That I'm goin' to—to——"

"To march at the head of it when it parades, with a drum major's cap and a drum major's baton, and if——"

"Wal—you can just put this down—that Walt Thompson won't be the leader of any band. Huh! Wal I say! Huh! You can just be pretty blanked sure o' that, that Walt Thompson won't ever walk in front of any band!"

After reiterating this statement with more or less picturesque expletives the Inspector became calm enough to explain that a band was being formed, and that Patrolman Clemmons, who is at the bottom of the scheme, had come to see him about it.

"He wanted permission to get Professor Donati, of the Catholic Protectory Band, to train 'em an' to get the patrolmen who can play to have their time fixed so that they could get together to practice. I did what I could for 'em, as I would for anybody tryin' something similar, but when it comes to leading a band—wal, you can just bet that Walt Thompson ain't goin' to br-r-r-r!"

Among those who will grace the new band is Roundsman Wagner, who will beat the bass drum. Wagner is the strong man who made some daring rescues at the Andrews fire. His biceps are like most men's thighs, which probably accounts for his being assigned to the bass drum. The other players, as far as they are now known, are as follows:

George W. Simerlein, Church Street Station; Alex J. Weddick, Oak Street Station; William McCracken, Fifth Street Station; John H. Meyers, Fifth Street Station; Benjamin V. Brace, West Thirtieth Street Station; George J. Kettler, East Fifty-first Street Station; Patrick A. Gibbons, West Thirtieth Street Station; John F. Coutant, West Thirty-seventh Street Station; Floyd B. Pitts, West Thirty-seventh Street Station; Frank J. Reilly, West Thirty-seventh Street Station; Joseph H. Prece, West Thirty-seventh Street Station; William Leschke, East Fifty-first Street Station; William H. Sellman, East Fifty-first Street Station; George A. Clemmens, East Fifty-first Street Station; George Wetzel, East Fifty-first Street Station; Charles Siberbauer, East Eighty-eighth Street Station; James Martin, Alexander Avenue Station; Cornelius Sullivan, Alexander Avenue Station; Michael Hickey, Alexander Avenue Station; Nicholas J. Dunne, East Fifty-first Street Station; Augustus B. Wood, Westchester Station; James J. O'Neill, Bronx Park Station; William A. Cook, Greenpoint Avenue Station, and Patrick J. Sheridan.—Sun.

Tamagno Set Back.

ERNESTO TAMAGNO, like many other distinguished singers, is noted for his prudence in financial matters and during his stay in this country many amusing stories were told of his small economies, which were remarkable in the case of an artist who has always received enormous compensation for his services.

That his spirit for bargaining is not altogether confined to money matters has recently been shown in a fashion that has put the tenor into an embarrassing position in Paris. He went there on his way to London, where he is singing at Covent Garden, to take part in the performance at the opera given in honor of the retirement of Madame Laurent, an actress of melodrama who has been for several years at the head of the orphanage for the children of French actors and has been decorated by the Government for her efforts in this field with the cross of the Legion of Honor.

All the noted French actors and singers were delighted to take part. Even Madame Patti, who was in Paris when the plan was proposed, said she would take the role of Juliette in the third act of Gounod's opera. Signor Tamagno said that he would sing in honor of Madame Laurent.

But it appears that his passion for bargaining proved too strong for him, and he could not bring himself to give something for nothing. So he decided that as it would be out of the question to expect payment in money on such an occasion, he would suggest the Legion of Honor as the appropriate reward for his services.

He adopted this course, with the most unpleasant results. The suggestion was of course rejected by the officials to whom it was made by the singer's friends, and President Loubet was so disgusted by the affair that he refused to attend the performance. The tenor also declined to take part, as his suggestion that he would like the decoration was received with so little courtesy. The result of the matter was that he left Paris vowing that he would never return. The feeling over the affair is such that he will in all probability never be asked to sing at the Opéra under any circumstances.—Sun.

Madame Schumann-Heink Sails Away.

Madame Schumann-Heink sailed for Europe on the steamer Columbia last Thursday. The famous contralto goes direct to her home near Dresden, where she can remain but one day with her children, as her engagement at Bayreuth calls her away immediately. At the Wagner festivals, Madame Schumann-Heink will appear in the roles of Erda, Waltraute, one of the Nornes in "Die Götterdämmerung," and Marie in "The Flying Dutchman." From Bayreuth she goes back to her home and spends one month with her family, and on September 20 she leaves Saxony for the United States. Her first appearance in this country in the autumn will be at the Maine Festival, and then she rejoins the Grau Company.

ELECTA GIFFORD.—Miss Electa Gifford, the operatic soprano, was one of the soloists at the second concert of the Litchfield County Choral Union given at the Armory, at Winsted, Conn. The following paragraphs from reports of the concert refer to Miss Gifford's singing:

Miss Electa Gifford, a coloratura soprano of brilliant attainments, who sang the "Bell Song" from "Lakmé" most satisfyingly, created great enthusiasm by putting in a high E at the end, as though it were a simple feat.—Hartford Courant.

Miss Gifford, the soprano, was a wonder. It is safe to say that no such voice was ever before heard in Winsted. Many singers may surpass Miss Gifford in sympathy and fullness of tone, but none can surpass her in the bird-like quality. Her high E, which could hardly be distinguished from the tone of a violin, seemed to he the limit of the human voice.—The Winsted Herald.

Arthur Mees was the conductor, and Nahan Franko, concertmaster of an excellent orchestra.

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.—A prominent vocal teacher of New York, remaining at home this summer, will have vacancy for a few good voices. Terms reduced. Address VOICE, care of MUSICAL COURIER.

WANTED—A bright business woman, who has some experience in the line of management of musical or dramatic artists; clever correspondent, quick witted, and with some knowledge of musical affairs. Address "Manager," care of this paper.

THE conductor of a Berlin singing society, well versed also in orchestral conducting, who has given concerts in Berlin with great success and received excellent criticisms, would like to take the place of director of a mixed or male chorus and to establish himself at the same time as teacher of the vocal art in a conservatory. References can be obtained from Prof. Dr. Joseph Joachim, director, and Prof. Adolph Schulze, head of the vocal department of the Royal High School of Music, at Berlin, and from Otto Floersheim, Berlin, W. Linkstrasse 17, in whose care letters on the subject should be addressed under the heading of "Conductor."

London, England.

CHEVALIER GEORG LIEBLING,
COURT PIANIST.
Engagements accepted for recitals and concerts. Professor at the Guildhall School of Music. Advanced pupils specially prepared for recitals and concerts, privately or in class.
Address 6 F, Hyde Park Mansions, London, W.

VOICE PRODUCTION and SINGING.
Invariable results of
Mme. MARIAN VELTRINO'S SYSTEM
GUARANTEED IN A SHORT TIME
to EVERY PERSON of ORDINARY INTELLIGENCE with AVERAGE MUSICAL EAR.
Perfect attack. Perfect ease. Clearness of Tone throughout the Voice. Richness, Roundness, Sweetness, Carrying Power. Freedom from breaks. No throat-aching.
Abundance of and control over breath.
Lost voices regained. Voices made,
Compass of at least two octaves.
Undeniable proof of the above statements can be given. Appointments and particulars of unique interest on request. Complete artistic training for opera, concert work, &c., follows above results.
Studio: 163 New Bond street, London, W.
(Established twelve years.)

MME MORIANI.
Private Academy for Voice Training and School for Opera
Complete Training for Voice, Style, and the Different Répertoires.
Special Class for Gentlemen on each Monday and Thursday from 5 to 7.
Mme. Moriana will continue her Lessons from July 1st to October on the Continent, thus affording change of air.
French Diction and Acting with Mr. Vermandele who has taught her pupils in Belgium for fourteen years.
For Terms and Particulars write to the Secretary of Mme MORIANI'S School, 3 York Place, Portman Square, W., London.

PROF. MICHAEL HAMBOURG'S
Academy for the Higher Development of Pianoforte Playing.
15 Warwick Road, Maida Vale.

MARIE WITHROW,
VOICE PRODUCTION,
84 New Bond Street, London.

RENÉ PAPIN,
Authorized Representative of the Yersin's Method French Diction,
7 Dorset Square N. W., London,
(Near Baker street station).

THE CONCORDE CONCERT CONTROL
and Orchestra, Entertainment and Lecture Bureau.
The COURT CIRCULAR says: The most reliable Bureau in London.
The Concorde Handbook of Artists (the most complete existing list of the best artists) free on application. Address: 310 Regent St., London, W.
Telephone: 4153 GERRARD. Telegraphic address: Conoordist, London. Telegraphic Code: The Concorde Code.

EDOUARD DAREWSKI,
Professor of Singing.
Percy House, Randolph Rd, Maida Vale, London.
Paderewski writing in March, 1898, says: "I know your remarkable qualities both as a singer and as a vocal teacher, and especially your method, which is ITALIAN IN THE BEST SENSE OF THE WORD."

Paris.

SCHOOL FOR ACTING.
EMIL BERTIN,
1er Régisseur de la Scène de l'Opéra Comique.
Stage Practice. In Cast.
41 rue des Martyrs, Paris.

FRENCH SCHOOL
M. DUMARTHERAY.
From Sounds to Literature, Pronunciation, Accent, Conversation.
(Opera.) 14 rue Taitbout.

PROFESSOR OF FRENCH,
Special Method for Foreigners.
MLLE. MARIE FOURNAISE,
American reference. 29 Boulevard de Batignolles.

INSTITUT MOZART.
Language. Complete Musical Education. Singing, Diction by best professors. Board and residence for pupils' comfort; quiet, convenient.
Apply to manager, MISS HEGEMANN,
7 rue du Commandant Riviere.

THE FRENCH LANGUAGE
Rapidly, easily and correctly acquired by KIMON'S PRACTICAL SYSTEM,
(3 francs, post free.)
Private lessons by M. D. Kimon,
10 rue Cambon, Paris.

MLLE. GRACE LEE HESS SCHOOL.
Supplementary Education.
French Language Obligatory.
145 Avenue Victor Hugo, Paris.

BALDELLI,
Italian baritone.
Théâtre Royal, Madrid. Professeur de Chant.
(Champs Elysées). 6 rue Euler, Paris.

Mme. ROGER-MICLOS,
PIANO—PARIS.
Elementary and Superior Class and Private Public Pupils' Concerts.
(l'Etoile.) 27 Avenue MacMahon.

Mme. ROSINE LABORDE,
PROF. DE CHANT,
62 rue de Ponthien, Paris.

LA VILLA VIOLETTE TROCADERO,
22 rue Raynouard. Mme. Fiessinger.
Assortment of rooms. Excellent table. Gardens. All facilities of 'bus and tram.

DELLE SEDIE, Paris.
Pure Italian Method. Complete course. Stage practice. Voice, lyric, declamation, languages, solfège, ensemble music, mise-en-scène.
Class and single lessons.
Regular course, three years. Terms moderate.
30 rue St. Petersbourg.

MLLE. MARTINI,
Artiste Opéra, Opéra Comique, Théâtre Lyrique, Professor of "Mime."
Silent Interpretation, Stage Business, Gesture, Pantomime, &c.
87 rue St. Lazare, Paris.

MISS JULIA KLUMPKÉ,
VIOLINISTE.
Pupil of MM. Eugene Ysaye and G. Rémy.
Concerts, Musicales, Lessons Violin and Accompaniment. 10 rue Froidevaux, Paris.

PARIS.
Only opportunity now in Paris for the Leschetizky Method.
Address
E. POTTER FRISSELL,
Pupil of Leschetizky, Sauer and Moszkowski.
Credit Lyonnais, Boulevard des Italiens.

MME. FLORENZA D'ARONA,
VOCAL PROFESSEUR,
20 Rue Clement Marot, Paris.
Special sessions during the summer in REPERTOIRE AND INTERPRETATION.

MME. J. VIEUXTEMPS,
Vocal Professor.
Classes and Private Lessons. Placing and Mending of Tones. 25 rue de Tocqueville (Monceau).

MLLE. KIKINA,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT,
Ancienne Elève de MARCHESI,
100 Avenue de Villiers, Paris.

MME. ROBINSON DUFF,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
4 rue de la Renaissance l'Alma, Paris.

MLLE. NILANDE,
Authorized Teacher of the Yersin Phono-Rhythmic Method. French Diction. French Language.
(Av. Marceau). 37 rue de Chaillot.

MME. MARIE ROZE,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT,
37 rue Joubert,
Chaussée d'Antin Paris.
Mise-en-scène. Ensemble practice in cast on stage.

MME. IDA LURIG,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
French—Italian—German.
Specialty of German Songs and Oratorio.
(Trocadero) 5 rue Petrarque, Paris.

PLATON BROUNOFF
Voice Culture, Coaching, Piano.
LECTURE-RECITALS ON RUSSIAN LIFE AND MUSIC.
Vocal Solo, Choral and Piano Illustrations.
10 EAST 17th STREET, NEW YORK.
BRANCH, 251 E. BROADWAY.

LIBRARY
OF THE
UNIVERSITY of ILLINOIS

MUSICAL COURIER.

A WEEKLY JOURNAL DEVOTED TO MUSIC AND THE MUSIC TRADES.

Twenty-Second Year. Price 10 Cents. Subscription, $5.00. Foreign $6.00.—Annually.

VOL. XLIII—NO. 2. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JULY 10, 1901. WHOLE NO. 1111.

EVELYN A. FLETCHER-COPP

Originator of the Fletcher Music Method.

New York.

MRS. RATCLIFFE CAPERTON,

Representative and assistant of LAMPERTI.
New York, 138 Fifth Avenue; Philadelphia, 408 South 18th Street. Summer residence, Dresden, Germany.
"Mrs. Ratcliffe Caperton is my only representative, and I advise all pupils desiring to study with me to be prepared by her."
Dresden, Sedanstrasse 17. G. B. LAMPERTI.

ALBERTO LAURENCE,

155 East 18th Street, New York.
The voice formed and developed; the art of singing taught; method after the purest Italian schools; a bad voice made good, true and beautiful.

HENRY T. FLECK,

Conductor Haarlem Philharmonic Society of the City of New York.
Address: Normal College, New York.

MISS NORA MAYNARD GREEN,

VOCAL TEACHER.
Studio: 303 Fifth Avenue, New York.

MAX KNITEL-TREUMANN,

BARITONE.
Voice Culture—Art of Singing.
Carnegie Hall, Room 837.
Mail address: 15 Washington Terrace, New York.

GEORGE M. GREENE,

Voice Culture and Artistic Singing.
Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.
Studio: 489 Fifth Ave., Mondays and Thursdays.
Residence and address:
417 West 23d Street, New York.

MR. C. WHITNEY COOMBS,

(Church of the Holy Communion). Organ lessons and practice given on one of Roosevelt's finest instruments. Special advantages for the study of church music and the training of boys' voices.
Address: 49 West 20th Street, New York.

TOM KARL,

Concerts, Recitals and Vocal Instruction.
Studio: Carnegie Hall.
Residence: 18 West 75th Street, New York.

MISS MARY FIDÉLIA BURT.

Author of Original Methods in Sight Singing, Ear Training, Musical Stenography. All materials copyrighted. No authorized teachers in Greater New York.
Address: 48 Lefferts Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.

E. H. LOCKHART, Bass-Baritone.

Studios: 121 East Twenty-third street, New York. Voices quickly placed and developed. Special work given for breath control. The Art of Singing taught by method used in the old Italian schools. Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.

DUDLEY BUCK, JR.,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Song Lecture Recitals.
810 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

HOWARD BROCKWAY,

COMPOSER-PIANIST.
Pupils received in Composition, Harmony, Piano and Song Interpretation.
Studio: 817-818 Carnegie Hall, New York.

WALTER HENRY HALL,

Conductor Oratorio Society, Brooklyn, N. Y.
Organist and Choirmaster St. James' Church, New York.
For terms for conducting, address St. James' Church, Madison Ave. and 71st St., New York.

MME. LOUISE FINKEL,

SCHOOL OF VOCAL MUSIC.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.

EUGENE A. BERNSTEIN,

PIANIST.
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Studio: 160 East 70th Street, New York.

LUCILLE SMITH MORRIS,

PIANIST. INSTRUCTION, Concerts, Recitals.
Pupil of Wm. Sherwood and Mrs. A. K. Virgil.
Certified teacher of Virgil Clavier Method.
Studio: 201 West 81st Street, New York.

RICHARD ARNOLD,

Concertmaster Philharmonic Society.
INSTRUCTION.
208 East 61st Street, New York.

MR. FRANCIS STUART,

TEACHER OF SINGING.
First season in New York. Ten years in San Francisco. Pupil of Lamperti, the elder.
Being in full possession of my method of singing, he has the ability to form great artists.—FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
Reception hours, Mondays and Thursdays, 2 to 3.
Studio: 86 Madison Ave., near Twenty-eighth St.

LILLIE D'ANGELO BERGH

SCHOOL OF SINGING.
Operatic course. Teachers' special course, all departments. Famous specialists. Prospectus. The Albany Broadway and 52d Street, New York.

ROSETTA WIENER,

PIANO, SIGHT READING and
New York School of Accompanying.
Carnegie Hall, 301-2.

MR. CHARLES LEE TRACY,

PIANOFORTE INSTRUCTION.
Certificated Teacher of the LESCHETIZKY METHOD.
Studio: Carnegie Hall, New York City.

MAX BENDHEIM,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
332 West 56th Street, New York City.

PAUL TIDDEN,

PIANIST.
314 East 15th Street, New York.
Will accept a limited number of pupils.

HERBERT HEMINGWAY JOY,

Voice Culture and Singing.
Italian School.
Studio: 116 Carnegie Hall, New York.

GUSTAV L. BECKER,

CONCERT PIANIST and TEACHER of PIANO and COMPOSITION.
Address: 1 West 104th Street, New York.

SIGNOR FILOTEO GRECO,

THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio: 51 West 35th Street, New York.

M. THEODOR BJORKSTEN AND MME. TORPADIE BJORKSTEN,

INSTRUCTORS IN SINGING.
New Studios: Carnegie Hall, New York.

PERRY AVERILL—BARITONE,

OPERA—ORATORIO—CONCERT AND VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
220 Central Park South, New York.

J. ARMOUR GALLOWAY,

Voice Culture and the Art of Singing,
Studio: Rooms 43 and 44 Y. M. C. A. Building, 318 West 57th Street, New York.

MARIE SEYMOUR BISSELL,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Pupils prepared for
Church, Concert and Oratorio.
Studio: 135 East 16th Street, New York.

MRS. MARY HISSEM DE MOSS,

SOPRANO,
106 West 90th Street,
New York City.

SAMUEL B. MOYLE,

BASSO CANTANTE.
Oratorio, Concert, Musicales, Voice Culture—Italian Method. Tone Placing and Reparation a speciafty. Studio: 136 Fifth Avenue, New York.

GEORGE SWEET,

OPERA, ORATORIO, CONCERT.
304 West 72d Street, New York.

J. HARRY WHEELER,

Voice Production and the Art of Singing.
Voices educated strictly in the Italian School.
Studio: 81 Fifth Ave., corner 16th St., New York.
July and August at Chautauqua Assembly.

MR. EDMUND SEVERN,
Violin, Composition, Ensemble.
MRS. EDMUND SEVERN,
Piano and Voice.
Studio: 131 West 56th Street, New York.
"Severn Trio."

ENRICO DUZENSI,

OPERA TENOR.
Will accept pupils for Voice Culture; good voice cultivated per contract; Italian method.
145 East 83d Street, near Lexington Ave.

CARL C. MÜLLER,

Translator of "Sechter's Fundamental Harmonies."
Author of "Tables for Harmonic Exercises."
Teacher of Piano, Harmony, Counterpoint and Composition. 1291 Lexington Ave., New York.

MME. HELENE MAIGILLE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION, REPERTOIRE.
Studio and residence: 1211-15 Carnegie Hall,
Summer course. New York.

MR. EMILIO AGRAMONTE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Summer Course.

ALBERT QUESNEL,

TENOR.
Opera, Oratorio, Concert, Musicale.
173 West 140th Street, New York.

SAUL HAROLD LICHTENSTEIN,

VIOLINIST.
Pupil of Sauret and Thomson.
Concerts, At Homes, &c. Pupils accepted.
Address: 103 West 114th Street, New York.

J. WARREN ANDREWS,

CONCERT ORGANIST and TEACHER.
Send for list of Pupils holding positions.
Address: Church of the Divine Paternity,
76th St. and Eighth Ave., New York City.

THE NEW YORK INSTITUTE FOR VIOLIN PLAYING AND SCHOOL FOR PIANO AND VOCAL CULTURE-

230 East 62d Street

Complete musical education given to students from the beginning to the highest perfection.
F. & H. CARRI, Directors.

MME. LUISA CAPPIANI,

VOICE CULTURE, SKILL OF SINGING.
"The Louella," 159 West 45th Street,
New York.

RICHARD T. PERCY,

Concert Organist and Accompanist.
Organ Lessons at Marble Collegiate Church, corner Fifth Avenue and 29th Street.
Studio: 1402 Broadway, New York.

MISS MARGARET GOETZ,

CONTRALTO (mezzo range).
Concerts, Song Recitals, Vocal Instruction.
Address: 36 Gramercy Park, New York.

THE ARENS VOCAL STUDIO

(affiliated with the American School of Opera.)
Coaching a specialty.
Normal courses for Voice Teachers.
305 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Reception hour, 2 p. m., Wednesdays excepted.

HENRY HOLDEN HUSS,

Instruction in Piano and Theory of Music.
Studio for non-resident pupils: Steinway Hall.
Personal address: 318 East 150th Street, New York.

FRANCIS FISCHER POWERS,

VOICE CULTURE AND THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio (and invariable address): Carnegie Hall, New York. New York season, October 20 to May 1; Kansas City, Mo., season, Pepper Building, May 15 to August 1; Los Angeles, Cal., season, Westminster Hotel, August 10 to October 10.

MRS. HADDEN-ALEXANDER,

PIANIST.
Powers-Alexander Studios,
Carnegie Hall, New York.

HENRY SCHRADIECK'S

VIOLIN SCHOOL.
Violin, Piano, Theory and Ensemble Playing.
Residence and Studio:
535 Washington Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

WILLIAM H. BARBER,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
Studio: Steinway Hall,
New York.

F. W. RIESBERG,

ACCOMPANIST.
Instruction—Piano, Organ, Harmony.
With THE MUSICAL COURIER.
Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.
Secretary-Treasurer New York State M. T. A.
Residence Studio:
954 8th Ave., corner 56th Street, New York.

S. C. BENNETT,

Instructor in Voice Building and the Art of Singing.
Teacher of Mme. Genevra Johnstone-Bishop and many other talented vocalists.
Studio: 836 Carnegie Hall, New York.

MME. EMMA RODERICK,

Rapid Development and Complete Education of the Voice. 118 West 44th Street, New York.

MRS. GRENVILLE SNELLING,

SOPRANO.
Concerts, Recitals, Musicals, Oratorio.
Address: 111 Fifth Avenue, New York.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF MUSIC,

179 East 64th Street, New York.
WM. M. SEMNACHER, Director.
I regard Mr. Semnacher as the greatest teacher of piano in this country.
Henry T. Fleck, Director of Music,
Normal College, New York City.

MRS. HENRY SMOCK BOICE,

VOICE CULTURE.
Musical Art Department of Adelphi College.
Residence-Studio: 127 McDonough St., B'klyn, N.Y.
Pupils prepared for Church, Concert, Oratorio.
138 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Monday and Thursday Afternoons.

MISS FANNIE HIRSCH,

CONCERT AND ORATORIO.
DRAMATIC SOPRANO. Steinway Hall, or
170 East 61st St., New York.

SERRANO VOCAL INSTITUTE,

323 East 14th Street, New York.

Conducted by EMILIA BENIE DE SERRANO and CARLOS A. DE SERRANO.

Teachers of Charlotte Maconda, Fannie Francisca.

JEANNÈ ARONE,

Graduate of Florenza d'Arona's celebrated method. Special Teachers' Course Diploma Vocal Instruction. Studio: 1219 Madison Ave., New York.

GUY DORÉ LATTA, OPERA TENOR

Voice Culture and Singing.
Tone production, placing and development a specialty. Guarantees to increase range and make any voice strong and beautiful. Summer rates.
372 West 120th Street, New York.

JOSEPH PIZZARELLO.

VOCAL INSTRUCTOR.
Voice Developed—Style—Opera.
43 West 34th Street, New York.

ALICE GARRIGUE MOTT,

VOCAL CULTURE.
Carnegie Hall, New York.

MR. AND MRS. THEO. J. TOEDT,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Home Studio: 151 East 62d Street, New York.

LENA DORIA DEVINE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Representative Teacher
of the methods of the famous master,
FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
136 Fifth Avenue, New York.

FRANCIS CARRIER,

BARITONE.
Concert and Oratorio.
18 East 22d Street, New York.
Direction of Remington Squire.

MISS EMMA HOWSON,

PRIMA DONNA.
Royal Italian and English Opera Company.
Lamperti Method Absolutely Taught.
Tuesdays and Fridays, 96 Fifth Ave., New York.

EMMA THURSBY,

SOPRANO.
Will receive a limited number of pupils.
Residence-Studio: 34 Gramercy Park, New York.

ISIDORE LUCKSTONE,

The Accompanist and Musical Director.
STYLE, REPERTOIRE, FINISH,
VOCAL CULTURE.
836 Lexington Ave., or address MUSICAL COURIER.

ARTHUR VOORHIS,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
100 Clifton Place, Jersey City, N. J.
Care MUSICAL COURIER, New York.

MME. ADELE LEWING

CONCERT PIANIST.
Authorized Teacher of the Leschetizky Method.
Special terms to out of town teachers.
Concerts. Recitals. Musicales.
Address: Care Steinway Hall, or 127 East 73d Street, New York.

MISS GENEVIEVE BISBEE,

PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Leschetizky Method. Summer courses.
1109-1110 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

KATHARINE PELTON,

Mezzo Soprano.
Sole Direction HENRY WOLFSOHN,
131 East 17th Street, New York.

CHARLOTTE A. BABCOCK,

Certificated Pupil of Dr. William Mason.
Pianoforte Instruction.
Studios: 810-14 Carnegie Hall, New York.
Summer season, Bernardsville, N. J.

SIGNOR A. CARBONE,

Member several years Metropolitan Grand Opera Company.
VOICE CULTURE. OPERA SCHOOL.
Summer Course.
Studio: 240 Fifth Ave., New York.

JOSEPH P. DONNELLY,

VOICE, ORGAN, PIANO.
Organist-Director All Saints,
Madison Avenue and 129th Street, New York.
Residence-Studio: 2033 Madison Avenue.
Brooklyn Studio: The Pouch Gallery.

MARK M. FONAROFF,

VIOLINIST INSTRUCTION.
References: Adolf Brodsky, Henry Schradieck, Alex. Lambert, H. E. Krehbiel.
129 East 82d Street, New York.

STELLA PRINCE STOCKER,

COMPOSER-DIRECTOR.
Recital-Lectures, ARTHUR STOCKER, boy soprano, assisting. For season 1901-1902.
Address: 11 Schmiede Strasse, Hamburg, Germany, or care P. J. Kreider, 251 West 71st Street, New York.

MARIE PARCELLO,

DRAMATIC CONTRALTO.
Music Rooms: 1103-4-5 Carnegie Hall, New York.

HUGO TROETSCHEL,

Organist Schermerhorn St. Evangelical Church.
Instruction: Piano—Organ—Theory.
Organ Lessons given on large three-manual Roosevelt Organ.
Residence: 384 Bainbridge St., Brooklyn, N. Y

MR. & MRS. WALTER H. ROBINSON,

TENOR AND CONTRALTO SOLOISTS
Oratorio, Concerts and Musicales.
Voice Production and Repertoire.
Studio: 405 Carnegie Hall, New York.

A. J. GOODRICH,

Personal or Correspondence Lessons in Harmony, Counterpoint, Composition, Orchestration and Practical Musicianship.

Author of "Analytical Harmony," "Theory of Interpretation," "Complete Music Analysis," "Synthetic Counterpoint," "Guide to a Practical Musicianship."

Glens Falls, N. Y

SAN FRANCISCO, July 1.

THIS is a very dull old town just at present, all or nearly all the professional side of our community being off on vacations and what not, and the only entertainment at present lies with benefits and lodge socials.

James Hamilton Howe and Mrs. Howe have taken their annual departure for Pacific Grove, Monterey, where the Summer School has formally opened session with a concert, in which numbers were given by Mr. Howe, Mary Weaver McCauley, of San Jose, and others of the faculty.

Dr. Franklin Palmer, the organist of St. Dominic's, has taken his family to Monterey for their vacation. They left last Monday. Dr. Stewart, as you already know, is in Buffalo winning laurels through his splendid handling of his chosen instrument, the grand organ. Many of our vocalists are in New York taking advantage of the slack season here to procure the advantages not to be procured this side of Gotham. Will King has taken a house in Mill Valley for the summer. John Marquardt, the violinist, and Madame Breitschuck-Marquardt, his wife, who is a talented solo harpist, who have both been counted among the leading musical lights of San Francisco, sailed last Saturday for Hong Kong. This is the beginning of a trip around the world which will eventually bring them to their old home in Germany. Fraulein Breitschuck and Herr Marquardt came to San Francisco during the Midwinter Fair season and were members of the Imperial Orchestra. They appeared at the Vienna Prater and afterward at the Fritz Scheel orchestral concerts, which are yet well remembered. During their "round the world" concert trip an attachment was formed which resulted very romantically in their marriage. We are sorry to lose this talented pair, who protest that their departure means "good-by," but their friends in 'Frisco are hoping it will only prove to be au revoir after all.

At St. Mary the Virgin's, out on Steiner and Union streets, a very beautiful and solemn requiem mass was sung on June 21 in memory of the late Rev. Father Bartlett, who was greatly beloved in the parish and out of it also. The music was rendered by a trained quartet, accompanied by the organ, and was conducted by John Haraden Pratt, F. C. M., master of the choir.

From friends in London Samuel Adelstein recently received the announcement that a grand morning concert was to be given in Albert Hall on Saturday, June 8, in aid of the funds of the East London Hospital for Children and Dispensary for Women, under the patronage of His Most Gracious Majesty the King. Among those taking part was the Ladies' Harp, Mandolin and Guitar Band (which is under the patronage of Her Royal Highness Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein), consisting of twenty-one first mandolins, twelve second mandolins, four mandolas, one lute, twelve guitars, four harps, four violins, two violas, two 'cellos, one bass and castagnettes and tambourine, sixty-four in all. This immense orchestra performed the Serenade by Marcelli, "Reverie," and "Toledo," by Mezzacapo, and "Preghiera," by Mahlendorff. Each of these compositions was performed under the personal direction of its composer. Among the names of the ladies comprising the orchestra were found many of the nobility. The following artists took part in this program: David Bispham, Whitney Mockridge, vocalists; M. Hollman, 'cellist; Miss Janotha, court pianist to His Imperial Majesty the German Emperor, King of Prussia.

Miss Grace Carroll, sister to Mrs. Carroll-Nicholson, both of whom are splendid contraltos, has returned from the East, where she has been pursuing the study of vocalism under prominent masters and is now preparing for a vocal recital to be given on September 4. Miss Ethel Bates will be her accompanist.

The Oakland Free Public Library has added materially to its music department by placing upon its shelves a list of selections from Allesandro, Bach, Beethoven, Blumenthal, Saenger, Chadwick, Chaminade, Emerson-Brown, Godard, Grieg, Heller, Kjerulf, Liszt, MacDowell, Mittel, Mozart, Nevin, Oesterle, Scarlatti, Scharfenberg, Shraedick, Schubert, Schytte, Spicker, Tschaïkowsky, Wagner-Liszt.

One of the most prominent musicians of the Capital City, Miss Carolee Wilsey, familiarly known to her associates as "Blossom," is soon to leave the ranks of those still in the enjoyment of liberty and bachelor-maidenhood and become a staid little matron, the wife of one of Sacramento's most successful lawyers, Judge Shields. Miss Wilsey is a pupil of Hugo Mansfeldt, and not alone a charming pianist, but a great favorite in the social swim. Great interest is evinced on all sides by this most appropriate pairing off of science and art.

MRS. A. WEDMORE JONES.

A WORK ON SINGING.

AN interesting work, and one causing some commotion, has just been published by Grus in Paris, entitled "L'art du chant en France." It is dedicated to Massenet, the composer, and Renaud, the distinguished baritone of the Opéra. To Massenet because, as the author says, "he has always considered the tessitura of the voice in the works with which he has so splendidly endowed the French school of composition"; to Renaud, the singer, "because he is indisputably the representative of the art of singing in France." Both of these distinguished men have replied to the author, accepting his dedication, and extolling highly this last contribution to the current literature on the subject of teaching singing.

One of the objects of the work is to analyze briefly the modes of training the singing voice, as exemplified in some of the more modern works of various authors on the subject, with a chapter devoted to the systems at present adopted in the Paris Conservatoire. The author says in his preface that although he is familiar with the proverb, "It is not wise at all times to speak the whole truth," he has determined to speak the truth come what may; adding that he has as guide his conscience, a long operatic experience, fifteen years' experience as teacher, and above all a sincere desire to expose some of the charlatans that dishonor his profession.

The criticism of the various published methods of singing commences with that of the well-known baritone singer Faure: "La voix et le chant." This work is severely rated for advocating the shock of the glottis (coup de glotte), especially, as is pointed out, that it is simply a matter of fact, known to all singers, that Faure never made use of this method of attack during his own professional career.

Of Victor Maurel's two works he says: "Mons. Maurel is an artist of incontestable merit, a conscientious seeker, and no one renders more homage to his great talent than myself, but in these two works ('Le chant rénové par la science' and 'Un problème d'art') he has not, according to my humble opinion, advanced the solution of the questions one single step." Of a work, "L'art du Chant," by Jules Audubert, he speaks in the highest terms:

"I had not the honor of knowing personally Audubert, but I have the best authority for believing that he was a most excellent professor. Well, he died miserably poor, in destitution. Yes! this talented man had not enough pupils to live, without care for the morrow, and yet we have here in Paris so-called professors of singing who receive large sums for lessons to pupils (mostly foreigners) to whom they teach absolutely nothing. These gullible students pass several years in a sort of fool's paradise, and then leave completely ignorant of the most elementary knowledge of the art of singing.

"But what matter if these incompetent pupils swell the already large number of mediocrities with badly placed voices, absurd style and defective pronunciation? They have the satisfaction of having been pupils of Madame M—— or Monsieur T——, and that suffices for their ambition. Poor, dead Audubert! He thought, simple artist as he was, that in slaving all his life to acquire the knowledge absolutely necessary for one destined to teach others, that he had earned the right to live. Why, not at all! What is necessary, above and beyond all, is a large capital, whereby one dazzles the class of gullible pupils mentioned. To be seen constantly in public; to give large entertainments, at which are heard these young students, who are not really pupils of these impostors except in name, and who have for teacher some talented professor vegetating in a corner, obscure and unknown."

Speaking of the dishonest manner in which some professors of singing in Paris claim the successful pupils of other teachers as their own he says: "No one in the world of artists is unaware of the fact that Madame C——, one of the principal singers of the Opéra, was never really a pupil of Madame S———, for the very simple reason that this latter has not one single quality requisite for a teacher." To bear out this statement is quoted an extract from the Figaro of May 18, 1892, signed Matho, and entitled "Madame Caron Intime." In this article is described Mme. Rose Caron's admission to the Conservatoire, which she left in 1878 without having gained the slightest recompense. She was then Mlle. Rose Meunier. Her subsequent trials and privations till she met M. Caron, ex-chef d'orchestre of the Nouveautés Theatre, who, although a humble musician and deformed, was a real artist and possessed of great natural intelligence. He it was who divined in his young wife the making of the really great singer that she afterward became, recommenced her studies, counselled and encouraged her with such success that an engagement at the opera La Monnaie in Brussels was the result. Shortly after, on her appearance as Brünnhilde, she was hailed as one of the greatest dramatic singers of the day. Continues the author of "L'Art du chant en France": "M. Matho does not indicate in any fashion that Madame S——— presided in any way over the studies of Mme. Rose Caron. The professors at the Conservatoire never saw anything in her, never discovered the possibilities of the future great artist. It was her husband, a poor hunchback, an obscure musician, who divined in his young wife the singer—hitherto misunderstood—and who alone guided her new studies with such glorious results."

The last of the works on singing reviewed by this writer is "Marchesi's Method," on which he is particularly severe. He says: "I do not wish to speak here of the method of singing written by Marchesi, as it resembles all the others, containing exactly the same exercises, more or less reversed, the same contradictions and the same errors. I will only occupy myself with her practical teaching, of that which her pupils receive from her directly. It appears that it is with the greatest regret that Madame Marchesi sees herself growing old. One can readily understand that. But it appears that it is not for the simple pleasure of living that she holds on so tenaciously to life. No! Marchesi has only one wish—that of living as long as possible because, as she says modestly to whomsoever will listen to her, 'When I die, with me will perish the art of singing.' She is, it appears, the only representative of Garcia on earth! Madame Marchesi is mistaken. I know several great artists, who after passing a brilliant public career are now making other singers, worthy of their teachers. Thank God that for the art of singing several professors whom I could cite have preserved the traditions of the great masters! I understand also that Madame Marchesi does not care to commence a pupil. Parbleu! I understand that. The work that consists of placing the voice, of equalizing the registers, giving the required sonority with the least effort, suppleness, charm, all this requires on the part of the teacher great knowledge and labor, to which must be added a patience able to stand any test. And it is these preliminary studies upon which the success of all the rest depends."

From the chapter on the teaching at the Paris Conservatoire we extract the following: "How comes it that they appear to have banished from the Conservatory classes all that would facilitate progress, and have retained only what would hinder it? This is the reason: For successful results in teaching teachers have to work. But these gentlemen prefer their case. So long as they can persuade their pupils to take a number of private lessons they do not trouble. Each professor has his own 'method' (which, of course, is always the best), and his own secrets on the art of teaching singing. One swears by the shock of the glottis, the other scorns it; a third maintains that the voice must be produced in the face, a fourth that it must come entirely from the chest, or from the stomach, &c.

"Ask from Professor X——, at the Conservatory, what is his opinion of his colleague, Professor Y——, and he will reply: 'He is an ass!' and vice versa. What is really amusing is that both are right. There are eight professors of singing at the Conservatory, and I affirm openly that not one speaks well of his colleagues. In one word, there is anarchy complete. If these teachers do not respect each other, what consideration should they expect from their pupils? None! And this is exactly what they get. Should this be doubted one has but to listen to the perfect frankness with which they speak of their masters."

It may be interesting to the readers of THE MUSICAL COURIER to know in reference to this last sentence that the pupils of one professor of singing (Duprez, the once famous opera singer) have signed a request to the authorities requesting that he be removed and some other teacher appointed in his stead. The incident is quoted in the Paris Figaro of June 17.

HASLAM WRITES.

JUNE 16, 1901.

Editors The Musical Courier:

I send you the list of new operas to be given at the Paris Opéra-Comique during the next season, 1901-1902, the program of works having been published to-day.

The first novelty will be "Troupe Jolicœur," by Coquard; the second "Griseldis," by Massenet, with Mlle. Bréval, Messrs. Fugère and Marèchal. Then will come although in an order not yet decided, "Titania," by Georges Hüe; "Aice," by the brothers Hillemacher; "Muguette," by Missa; "Carmélite," by Reynaldo Hahn, and "Pelleas et Melisande," by Debussy.

The revivals for the same season will be "Le Domino Noir"; "Le Roi d'Ys"; "Le pré aux clercs," and possibly "Werther." For Hérold's work we are promised an interesting and curious mise-en-scène.

In place of "Tristan," promised to the subscribers, but which has had to be postponed on account of Mr. Van Dyck's other engagements, will be given a work selected from the classic repertory: "Alceste," "Armide" or "Freischütz."

Surely activity such as this at one lyric theatre only disproves the recent statement of your London correspondent: "Paris—where they are content to do half a dozen operas again and again for a year."

Sincerely yours, HASLAM,
Professeur de Chant, Paris.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., May 15, 1901.

THE conclusion of the series of symphony concerts at the Los Angeles Theatre and the performance of "The Seasons" by the Oratorio Society at Simpson Auditorium practically close the musical season here, in so far as events of general interest and importance are concerned, and we are now engulfed with the annual deluge of pupils' recitals that usually wind up the season's activities.

Notwithstanding the distance in miles and time from the art centres of the older civilizations that makes Southern California a world apart by itself—and it is withal a delightful world—her cosmopolitan metropolis possesses an artistic vitality that should put to blush some of her older and bigger sister cities of the East. First in importance among her musical societies she boasts a symphony orchestra of forty-six members. The organization has just concluded its fourth season of concerts. The birth and continued existence of the orchestra are largely due to the interest, perseverance and indomitable energy of its capable director, Harley Hamilton, who has sacrificed considerable in a financial way and given time and talents in the efforts to make the organization what it now is—a permanent factor in the art development of our community. The instrumentalists included in the personnel of the orchestra are among the best players in the city—and probably no American city possesses a proportionately larger number of capable musicians than does Los Angeles, thanks to our health inviting climate.

The symphony concerts have received the appreciative support of music lovers of our community, though this season circumstances compelling a late and unpropitious opening of the concerts, coupled with the added expense of an enlarged orchestra, caused a deficit in this year's work. During the past season the symphony programs include among other works, Beethoven's Seventh and Eighth Symphonies, Raff's "Im Walde" Symphony, MacDowell's Indian Suite, Dvorák's "New World" Symphony, Mendelssohn's Scotch Symphony, the popular "Peer Gynt" Suite, by Grieg; Mozart's G minor Symphony, Goldmark's "Sakuntala," and the overtures to Wagner's "Rienzi," Mendelssohn's "Ruy Blas" and the same composer's "Midsummer Night's Dream."

Most prominent among the amateur musical organizations of Los Angeles is the First Congregational Orchestra, William H. Mead, director. In fact, the organization comes close to trespassing on professional ground, its excellent work during the past two seasons having secured for it a number of good concert engagements both in and out of town. From a small and very amateurish affair organized a few years ago as a musical adjunct to the Sunday school services at the First Congregational Church it has grown in numbers and efficiency under the fostering care of Mr. Mead till it has—more particularly within the past two years—grown into a creditable orchestra of about forty members. It is composed of some of the best amateur talent in the city, many of the players being the advanced pupils of leading teachers here. The orchestra gives a number of concerts during the season, playing mostly the better class of popular music and pleasing a large number of listeners, not a few of whom, doubtless, would be less appreciative of such classics as are served up for the edification of patrons of the symphony concerts. The Congregational Orchestra was honored with an engagement to play at the reception tendered Mrs. McKinley at the Woman's Club House last week during President and Mrs. McKinley's visit in this city.

Another amateur organization deserving notice is the Woman's Orchestra. Its name is more than suggestive of the sex of its personnel, although its director, Harley Hamilton, needs must stand as the one privileged exception to the admission of man to the fair Amazonian ranks. The orchestra was organized about ten years ago by Mr. Hamilton and was made up largely of his own pupils. It includes some talented performers and has done some creditable and pleasing work. Last year the orchestra was engaged for the Chautauqua at Long Beach, Cal.

The choral societies of Los Angeles, like many of those in other cities, suffer the vicissitudes of alternating enthusiastic interest, prosperity, financial depression and lethargy. The Los Angeles Choral Society, under the direction of Fred A. Bacon, can hardly be accused of being lethargic; indeed, there has probably never been a better balanced or better voiced chorus of enthusiastic workers in Los Angeles than the 125 or so singers that compose the present Oratorio Society. Last season's work was especially creditable. The oratorios given—"The Crea-

SHERWOOD,
Greatest American Pianist.
ESTHER FEE,
Violinist.
(Paris—In America Nov. 1.)
BRUNO STEINDEL,
The Noted 'Cellist.
CLARA MURRAY,
Harpist.
LEONE LANGDON KEY,
Organist.

CHARLES R. BAKER,
MANAGER OF
High Class and Distinguished MUSICAL ARTISTS,
Fine Arts Building,
CHICAGO.

ELECTA GIFFORD,
Soprano.
(Late of Royal Opera, Amsterdam.
MABELLE CRAWFORD,
Contralto.
GLENN HALL,
Tenor.
SYDNEY LLOYD WRIGHTSON,
The English Baritone.
MASTER LLOYD SIMONSON,
The Famous Boy Soprano.

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

MARY WOOD CHASE, PIANO VIRTUOSA
For Terms, Dates, &c., address HANNAH & HAMLIN, Managers.
Personal address: 3031 Prairie Avenue. 514 Kimball Hall, CHICAGO.

FRANK T. BAIRD,
THE ART OF SINGING.
34 Monroe St., Chicago, Ill.

Mr. & Mrs. BICKNELL YOUNG,
67 Kimball Hall,
CHICAGO, ILL.

EDWARD MEEK,
BARITONE.
Pupils Accepted.
924 Fine Arts Building, Chicago.

NINETEENTH YEAR.
1899-1900.
Mrs. REGINA WATSON'S SCHOOL
for the
HIGHER ART OF PIANO PLAYING.
297 Indiana Street, Chicago, Ill.

CLARA G. TRIMBLE, SOPRANO.
Address 619 Fine Arts Building, Chicago.

THE SPIERING QUARTET,
708 Fine Arts Building, Michigan Boulevard, CHICAGO.

MAURICE ARONSON PIANIST. Auditorium Building (Tower, 1406.) Chicago
Concerts, Recitals, Musicales, Lectures.
For the past four years chief assistant to Leopold Godowsky. Four Competent Assistants. Write for circular

W. C. E. SEEBOECK, PIANIST, Just returned from Europe, where he made very successful appearances.
Studio 727 FINE ARTS BUILDING, CHICAGO, ILL.

HELEN BUCKLEY, SOPRANO. Vocal Instruction. ORATORIO, CONCERTS, RECITALS.
5316 MADISON AVENUE, CHICAGO.

Mrs. GEORGE A. COE,
(BARTH and MOSZKOWSKI)
Pianist and Lecturer, 640 University Place, EVANSTON, ILL.

tion," "The Messiah" and "Elijah"—were, everything considered, very well done, and the public responded handsomely. However, the only performance of the society this season, that of Haydn's "Seasons," given April 25, did not prove a financial success, the attendance failing to meet the expenses by a good sized margin. I wholly agree with the Western Graphic's erudite critic, Mr. Kubel, in his assumption that, good as the old oratorios are, the people would better appreciate hearing some of the modern choral compositions. Not since the Treble Clef Club, under the direction of the late Mr. Dunster, gave the "Lady of Shallot" and a miscellaneous program, four years or so ago, has there been an adequate performance of the sort in this city. There is no lack of interesting modern choral works which might be presented in an excellent way by the capable and well drilled band of singers in the Oratorio Society, and efforts along this line would doubtless bear a fruitful financial harvest as well as give a hearing to meritorious works whose failure to claim recognition outside the larger art centres seems to lie in the fact of their not being sufficiently aged.

The development of musical Los Angeles is in no small measure due to the practical interest and patronage of her society people. The success of some of our most pretentious musical enterprises has been made possible through the support of these people who so largely represent the culture of the community. One of the best known and most select societies of a musical nature in Los Angeles is the Monday Musical Club, which will soon complete the ninth year of its existence. The club's membership is limited to thirty, and includes within it some of the best known musical and society young women of the city. The meetings are held bi-weekly, at which programs of excellence and interest are given. It is a woman's club, although by courtesy of invitation the sterner sex are sometimes privileged to enjoy some of the programs presented, as well as to occasionally participate in them.

Los Angeles is among the few cities of our great country that possess a model studio and art building—a building erected for the especial purpose of meeting the needs and conveniences of music teachers and artists. Such a structure is the Blanchard Art Building, one of the most substantial and handsome buildings in Los Angeles. On the ground floor is a well appointed music store, which may be entered from the entrance hall of the building as well as from the street. The second story contains a fine concert hall, seating 800 people, and opening off from which are lecture and reception rooms. The third and fourth stories contain well arranged studio suites, which are occupied by a large number of the most progressive music teachers and leading artists of the city. On the fourth floor are well appointed art galleries which are ever an attraction to art lovers. The confused intermingling of sounds, now of pianos predominating, then here and there a soaring voice, or a violin or flute coming into the foreground, are strongly reminiscent of old conservatory days to the staid music toiler traversing the corridors of the building. At the opening of each season a reception is given by the occupants of the building, the occasion being an affair treasured by the many who are fortunate enough to be favored with invitations.

The responsible head of the building is F. W. Blanchard, to whose managerial abilities Southern California owes a large debt of gratitude. The progressive daring of Mr. Blanchard has secured for Los Angeles and for some of the larger of its neighboring cities some of the highest priced and best musical attractions that have been heard in Southern California. Among others whom he has brought to Southern California during the past season for a series of recitals were Mlle. Dolores (Trebelli), Leopold Godowsky, Edward Baxter Perry and Miss Leonora Jackson and her company.

Miss Bessie Chapin, the talented young violinist, played before President McKinley at a reception given Mr. and Mrs. McKinley Wednesday evening by Gen. H. G. Otis, at the latter's beautiful home on West Lake. Miss Mollie Adelia Brown, soprano, and Miss Marion Gordon, mezzo soprano, were pleasing contributors to the occasion.

B.

PHILADELPHIA'S ORCHESTRA.

PHILADELPHIA, July 2, 1901.

PROFESSIONAL musicians in this city are in a sad state of mind because of the questionable methods that are being resorted to by the promoters of the Philadelphia Orchestra to put it on a permanent basis. Subscriptions to the amount of about $25,000 have been secured, the subscribers being led to believe that Philadelphia musicians would be employed to as great an extent as possible, with the idea of fostering a love of music and giving an impetus to the study of art in this city.

The managers of the concern, however, seem to have taken the usual Quaker City commercial view of the matter, and are seeking to make it a money making venture, and are not only not engaging Philadelphia musicians, but are interfering with the little business that they have heretofore been able to get to such an extent that tomorrow they will hold a meeting for the purpose of formulating a protest.

Dr. E. J. Keffer, a dentist, is taking the most active part in the collection of funds for the orchestra, and to him the musicians attribute the features in connection with the organization to which they object.

The principal complaint is the way in which the management of the orchestra is trying to make money. Philadelphia is not much of a place for music, and outside of the few visits of the Boston Symphony and Sousa little support is given to anything at all ambitious in the musical line. As a consequence, musicians have to depend for employment on the various theatre orchestras, college and school entertainments and commencements.

The theatres have been paying the union price of $16 a week, and in some cases a little more for their orchestra men. The Philadelphia Orchestra management has seen in this a chance to cut down expenses, and has gone to the theatre managers and offered to supply them with men for $14 a week, and in some cases less. The plan is to have the men engaged for the orchestra sign a contract for the season of eighteen weeks for $25 to $35 a week. They are at all times to be at the disposal of the orchestra management. Thus they can be farmed out to the theatres or for concerts on nights when the orchestra does not play, and whatever their services bring will go into the coffers of the orchestra management. This would make the concern decidedly profitable, and if the money is not diverted to some other channel the subscribers need have little fear that they will be called on for more money, as there will be ample funds coming in from the industry of the players to assure the permanence of the organization, even should the musical taste of the citizens fail to make the concerts profitable.

It is a question, however, whether the subscribers are aware of this money making plan, and whether, when they do hear of it, they will consent to be parties to a scheme that will seriously interfere with the opportunity of many musicians here to make a livelihood.

In the contract the men are required to sign there are many objectionable clauses. Principal among them is one that practically prohibits Philadelphia musicians becoming members, as it compels them to play with outside musicians, and that is against the rule of the union. They are expected to be ready to rehearse at any time called, whether night or day, and to go where the management directs; and when they go outside the city only railroad fare and sleeping apartments are to be paid for by the management. Their meals they are to pay for themselves.

There are men here, about a dozen, who are regarded among the best in the country in handling a bow. These men cannot play in the Philadelphia organization, and the prospect is now that Philadelphia will have to be satisfied with an orchestra composed of second rate fiddlers and blowers from Boston and New York.—Sun.

A WELL-KNOWN artist of European and American reputation will accept visiting or resident piano directorship in first-class American or Canadian college or conservatory. Address "ARTIST," care MUSICAL COURIER.

ESTABLISHED 1867.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, President.

The Largest and Most Complete Institution of Musical Learning in America.

COLLEGE BUILDING, 202 MICHIGAN BLVD.

The finest structure in existence devoted exclusively to a Musical College.

SCHOOL OF ACTING, MUSIC ELOCUTION, ORATORY, LANGUAGES.

BOARD OF MUSICAL DIRECTORS.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, DR. LOUIS FALK,
HANS VON SCHILLER, WILLIAM CASTLE,
BERNARD LISTEMANN, S. E. JACOBSOHN,
RUDOLPH GANZ, CHARLES GAUTHIER.
HERMAN DEVRIES,
HART CONWAY, Director School of Acting.

Catalogue Mailed Free.

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

HARRISON M. WILD CONCERT ORGANIST.
Studio 6, 241 Wabash Ave., CHICAGO.
Piano and Organ Instruction.

D. A. CLIPPINGER,
The Art of Singing.
Conductor,
410 Kimball Hall, Chicago, Ill.

EARL R. DRAKE,
VIOLIN VIRTUOSO.
Teacher.
Studio Kimball Hall, Chicago.

VICTOR GARWOOD,
Kimball Hall, Chicago.

William A. WILLETT, BARITONE.
Care Musical Courier, Chicago, or leading agents.

ALLEN SPENCER,
PIANIST. Concerts, Recitals.
Address: KIMBALL HALL, CHICAGO.

KARLETON HACKETT,
Teacher of Singing,
Kimball Hall, Chicago.

MARY PECK THOMSON,
SOPRANO,
620 Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

CAROLYN LOUISE WILLARD,
CONCERT PIANIST. Instruction.
Pupil of Ernst Jedliczka, Bloomfield-Zeisler.
For terms and dates address
4164 Lake Avenue, Chicago.

FREDERICK WARREN,
BARITONE,
Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.

Mrs. THEODORE WORCESTER, Pianist.
(GODOWSKY.)
Concerts, Recitals and Salon Musicales. Recitals from Russian Composers.
ADDRESS: 1402 Auditorium Tower, CHICAGO.

R. CAPOUL CUTTRISS WARDE,
SINGING MASTER.
The teacher of many prominent artists now before the public. Send for list.
STUDIO: No. 911 Cable Building, Cor. Jackson and Wabash, CHICAGO.

MINNIE CRUDUP VESEY, MEZZO CONTRALTO
CONCERTS, RECITALS, VOCAL TEACHER, COACHING.
Address HANNNH & HAMLIN, 514 Kimball Hall, CHICAGO.

Chicago Auditorium Conservatory
AUDITORIUM BUILDING, CHICAGO.
☞Send for Summer Catalogue.
FREDERIC GRANT GLEASON, Director.
ROY ARTHUR HUNT, Manager.

ROWDON Basso-Cantante,
623 Fine Arts Building,
CHICAGO, ILL.

Gottschalk Lyric School. Musical and Dramatic.
CATALOGUE MAILED ON APPLICATION.
L. G. GOTTSCHALK, Director. KIMBALL HALL, 243-253 Wabash Ave., CHICAGO.

MUSICAL KINDERGARTEN FOR THE PIANOFORTE
BY FANNIE CHURCH PARSONS.
For full information concerning normal instruction or children's class work, address
MRS. PARSONS' NORMAL TRAINING SCHOOL,
Handel Hall, CHICAGO, ILL.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY,
JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, Director, Kimball Building, 243 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO.
ALL BRANCHES OF MUSIC. DRAMATIC ART. TEACHERS' TRAINING DEPARTMENT.
JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, VICTOR GARWOOD, ALLEN H. SPENCER, GERTRUDE MURDOUGH, GLENN DILLARD GUNN, HOWARD WELLS, Piano; KARLETON HACKETT, NOYES B. MINER, HOLMES COWPER, GLENN HALL, RAGNA LINNE, MABEL GOODWIN, LOUISE BLISH, Singing; WILHELM MIDDELSCHULTE, Organ; JAN VAN OORDT, Violin; ADOLPH WEIDIG, Composition; JAN KALAS, Violoncello, and thirty other superior instructors.
Catalogue mailed free. 243 Wabash Avenue, care of American Conservatory.

NEW YORK STATE MUSIC TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION.

THIRTEENTH ANNUAL MEETING, GLENS FALLS, N. Y., JUNE 24-28, 1901.

The New Officers.

President—Louis Arthur Russell, of New York and Newark. (Re-elected.)

Secretary—F. W. Riesberg, of New York. (Re-elected.)

Treasurer—J. Ellsworth Stille, of Gloversville.

Program Committee—Chairman, H. W. Greene, of New York; Carl G. Schmidt, of New York, and Abram Lansing, of Troy.

Delegates to the M. T. N. A.—Mrs. Carola Loos-Tooker, of Gloversville; Miss Lillian K. Wendell, of Glens Falls, and William H. Rieser, of Rondout.

GLENS FALLS—where is it? was asked at the Saratoga meeting last year when the Hon. Addison B. Colvin came before the convention with his eloquent invitation to meet there; whereupon the speaker replied to the questioner from Buffalo that "it has the fastest mile track in the State, the track on which Buffalo horses are generally beaten." Mr. Colvin's promise that we should be treated right royally has been carried out, and the thirteenth annual convention is now history.

The advance guard of the association was astonished to find in Glens Falls, so much neglected on the map, seemingly insignificant as compared with Saratoga and Fort Edward, a little city of 15,000 people, with many evidences of prosperity, beautiful homes, efficient electric cars, fine hotels, tree embowered streets, culture, wide-awake business men, good looking girls, and indeed the place makes so little noise that few people know of its importance, with its many manufacturing interests, the Portland Cement Works, shirt factory, lumber industry, &c.

On all sides were heard exclamations of astonishment on these several points—but it did not stop there; more especially did the programs, their construction and carrying out, call forth much enthusisam, for be it known that never before were there such generally consistent, educational programs planned, with essays on subjects of interest, vocal, piano and organ recitals, grand miscellaneous concerts, a chamber music evening, a session on vocal and on school music, one on harmony and theory, a program of Norwegian composers, an oratorio ("The Messiah")—for all of which Chairman De Zielinski gets the praise and the glory forevermore.

There were some thirty soloists, a local chorus of sixty, the festival chorus of the same number, orchestra of twenty, with two mixed and one male quartet, not counting "The Messiah" solo quartet, so it will be seen that this last meeting partook somewhat of the character of a festival, which was President Russell's idea at the start. Undoubtedly the program committee was of wide influence, made up as it was of three ex-presidents, namely, J. de Zielinski, Dr. Gerrit Smith and Thomas Impett, and so old convention-goers all stated that the programs were better than at any previous meeting, and the local people said they had never heard such good music so well done.

Opening Banquet Monday Evening, June 24.

Half a hundred members, officers and guests of the association, gathered at the handsomely decorated U-shaped tables, with President Russell at the head, next him the guests of the evening, Hon. and Mrs. A. B. Colvin, Mrs. M. F. Battershall, William A. Bissell, Mrs. W. F. Bissell, Miss Inez Bissell, Miss Ella Hall Shields, Rev. Dr. and Mrs. J. R. Mackay, the Glens Falls Times, and scattered at various parts of the table, Chairman J. de Zielinski, of Buffalo; Thomas Impett, of Troy; Secretary-Treasurer F. W. Riesberg and Mrs. Katharine Riesberg, Mrs. M. Kirpal, Miss A. T. Briggs, Theo. Lindorff, Ellis Clark Hammann, Frederick E. Hahn (both of Philadelphia), Mrs. Belle Van Derveer, Mme. Katharine Evans von Klenner, Miss Amy Fay, William G. Merrihew, Mark Skalmer, Mr. and Mrs. Adolf Dahm-Petersen, Mme. Luisa Cappiani, Miss Lillian K. Wendell, Miss Grace Fee, Miss Kathryn Glinnon, Rev. Dr. Stearns, Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Coghill and others. The various condiments of the menu were excellent, but served so slowly that there was but little time for the toasts and "after dinner" remarks which were last year such a feature; also were missed those present last year, namely, Dr. Smith, F. H. Tubbs, Julia E. Crane, Dr. Hanchett, John Tagg, Herve D. Wilkins, D. M. Kelsey, Hattie Leonard Colburn, William H. Rieger, that unequaled mirth creator, Platon Brounoff, and others known everywhere.

Hon. A. B. Colvin made a splendid speech, full of wit and wisdom; Mr. de Zielinski talked; President Russell had something to say, and pretty Mrs. Coghill contributed her share in a Southern negro dialect recitation. It was well-nigh midnight before the company broke up.

First Day—Tuesday Morning, June 25.

The Empire Theatre lobby was a busy place this morning, what with the inpouring of season ticket and membership ticket people, the selling of single tickets, the John Church Company exhibit, as for years past in charge of W. L. Coghill; the returns of the vice-presidents to Secretary-Treasurer Riesberg and his mother, who assisted, and the meeting of many who who had not met for a year past. After an opening male quartet, afterward named "The Feejees," consisting of W. F. Bissell, Thos. Impett, W. A. Bissell and A. Dahm-Petersen, Rev. W. D. Stearns made the prayer, and was followed by the address of welcome by the Hon. A. B. Colvin, hearty, sincere, witty, with quotations from the poets, and this was responded to by President Russell, who then delivered the annual address, calling attention to many needed reforms in the association, followed by the annual statement of Secretary-Treasurer Riesberg. The books showed $1,277.35 received and $1,235.22 paid, leaving a balance of $42.13. The indebtedness at date was $839.20, the resources $906.50 from the advertisements in the program book, and the local guarantee fund of $800. The net income from the program book alone was over $500, which is more than ever before.

Following his financial statement the secretary-treasurer alluded to the necessity of reform in the business of running association finances, and gave the following brief résumé of the years since 1898:

1898, Second Binghamton Meeting—Poor financial results, because the 400 new members of the year before (when the meeting was held in the same place) all became renewal members at $1 each. These 400 paid $2 each in 1897.

1899, Albany Meeting—Poor local support, with only 150 local members, against 400 in the much smaller city of Binghamton. The chairman of the program committee worked hard, but he could not do it all, and others could not or would not support him.

1900, Saratoga Meeting—Again poor results, owing largely to the indiscriminate giving out of season tickets by the local chairman, some 120 chorus singers getting free season tickets, the one village paper getting fourteen; so there was a mass of deadheads.

The chairman of the local Saratoga committee turned over to the secretary-treasurer $540.50, while the receipts from the program book alone, under the secretary-treasurer canvassing, were over $1,000.

All this showed the need of reform, and the above statements were plain facts, undeniable. What was best to do would undoubtedly develop at the meeting.

Prize Winners.

President Russell then called Miss Lillian K. Wendell, of Glens Falls; Mrs. Belle Van Derveer, of Amsterdam, and Miss Kate Stella Burr, of New York, presenting to the first two each $10 in gold, and the latter being absent, it was sent to her, this forming the Mrs. George Tracy Rogers $25 prizes for the vice-presidents obtaining the most memberships in their respective counties.

This is the second time Miss Burr and Mrs. Van Derveer won prizes. Up to the time of the meeting the moneys turned in by these three vice-presidents was as follows: Miss Wendell, $84; Mrs. Van Derveer, $15, and Miss Burr, $12, which shows these women are workers.

The report of the specialist committees was next in order, followed by a talk on "How to Teach," by Amy Fay, that clever writer, pianist and teacher. An hour was given up to this very interesting talk, and after her paper many questions were asked, and the general interest taken, because of the omnipresence of the instrument, the piano, showed the committee had done wisely in asking Miss Fay.

Following Miss Fay came a vocal recital by Lewis Williams, baritone, assisted by Miss Rebecca Wilder Holmes, violinist, of Springfield, Mass., and Miss Anna Elizabeth Wilbur, pianist, of Troy. Mr. Williams sang songs by Schubert in such manner as to convince one that the deep German Lied is not for him; the last group of songs, Hawley's "Rose Fable," Chaminade's "Stay," and Parker's "'Lark Now Leaves His Wat'ry Nest" suit him better, and were applauded.

Miss Holmes played two Händel numbers with classic repose and style, and with considerable dash the Sarasate

AMY FAY.

"Habanera"; she is a growing young artist, recollected by many who attended the Binghamton meeting. Miss Wilbur proved a pleasant surprise, such was the grace and effectiveness of her playing, notably in the MacDowell concerto, with her teacher, Miss Marion Sim, at the second piano. If the Troy Seminary Conservatory can turn out many such pupils, then the beware, ye New Yorkers and Bostonians!

Tuesday Afternoon.

Otis R. Greene, of Cohoes, ex-secretary-treasurer, and whose brother was the first secretary-treasurer of the association, started things by a paper on "Vocal Music in the Public Schools; Some of the Influences That Retard Its Progress and Obscure Its Mission."

Mr. Greene held that the influences exerted by the wealthy publishing houses who deal in school supplies interfered in most cases with the right management, as did Sterrie A. Weaver last year, at Saratoga; that politics, and nothing but politics, was at the bottom of most school troubles.

Following Mr. Greene, Albert Gerard-Thiers gave his essay on "The Technic of Musical Expression," with vocal illustrations, F. W. Riesberg at the piano. This was listened to with evident interest, the points of his essay creating much interest. THE MUSICAL COURIER has ere this animadverted on this lecture, when delivered before the drawing room, Sorosis, &c., and will not here repeat, making place only for the interesting program:

Plaisirs d'Amour.....Martini
J'ai Perdu.....Henri III., Roi de France et de Pologne
Caro Mio Ben.....Giordani
It Was a Lover and His Lass.....Morley
Wenn ich in deine Augen seh.....Schumann
Still wie die Nacht.....Böhm
Could I?.....Tosti
At Parting.....Rogers
Midsummer Fancies.....D'Hardelot
Hey, Dolly, Ho, Dolly.....Sawyer

Marvin Grodzinsky, a lad of fourteen, gave a piano recital, playing much little known music, such as August

ST. LOUIS ADVERTISEMENTS.

HOMER MOORE, BARITONE.
The Odeon, St. Louis, Mo.

MRS. STELLA KELLOGG HAINES,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION,
101, 102, 103 Vista Building, Cor. Grand and Franklin, ST. LOUIS, MO.

ALEXANDER HENNEMAN,
VOCAL CULTURE.
Opera. Coaching. Oratorio.
Henneman Hall, 2723 Olive St., ST. LOUIS

Winding's op. 28, all delightful pieces; Graham Moore's "Chromatic Studies," De Zielinski's Prelude and Kaffenberger's Fugue in D minor, and three old style dance pieces by De Zielinski which are simply charming. The boy played without notes, and though at first a bit ill at ease, soon got his head, and played with much credit to himself and teacher.

A. Gerard-Thiers.

Vice Presidents' Meeting.

At this meeting there was considerable discussion as to the best way of increasing the association's income, and after various propositions had been made, that of Frank H. Shepard, that the membership dues be $2 annually, was considered most practical; it has heretofore been $2 the first year and $1 thereafter. The advisability of dividing the office of secretary-treasurer was discussed, the present incumbent of the hyphenated office, F. W. Riesberg, being asked his views first; he stated he had not considered the matter, and would not on impulse give an answer. Alterations in the constitution were also proposed, the recommendations passed, and at the business meeting next day acted on.

Tuesday Evening.

The first grand concert took the form of a concert of chamber music by the Trio Club, composed of M. Jaroslaw de Zielinski, piano; Frederick E. Hahn, violin, and Mark Skalmer, 'cello. Ellis Clark Hammann, pianist, and Miss Grace Preston, contralto, also assisted, and the composers of the two trios played were Carl Goldmark and Otto Malling, the Schütt Suite for violin and piano, op. 44, also being an important component of the program.

To many present this form of refined music was altogether new, indeed, doubtless many had never before heard such a combination as piano, violin and 'cello, and the entire program, carefully considered, played in dignified style, was heard with great attention. There was much genuine ensemble, each player striving for the good of the whole, and the two trios were notable performances. Perhaps the height of dramatic impulse was reached in the suite by Schütt, played by the two Philadelphians, Hahn, violin, and Hammann, pianist; here there was such perfect unity, such beautiful sinking of assertiveness, such dignity of purpose and such perfection of technical attainment, along with true warm blooded interpretation, that great enthusiasm was engendered and the two young men recalled.

Miss Preston sang the following:

I Chant My Lay.....Dvorák
Hark, How My Triangle.....Dvorák
Tune Thy Strings, O Gipsy.....Dvorák
In His Linen Vesture.....Dvorák
Cloudy Lights of Tatra.....Dvorák
In Haven, from Sea Pictures.....Elgar
Where Corals Lie, from Sea Pictures.....Elgar

The very difficult first group, the characteristic Dvorák songs, so gypsy-like in every strain, showed Miss Preston as a self-sacrificing artist, for they are not for the multitude, nor did they appeal to her hearers on this evening; they require wide range, a full control of method and voice and style, and appeal nowhere to the sense. So with the Elgar songs—but they certainly fitted well in the program, and gave many a singer present the thought that there were other things in singing besides mere display, word picturing or sentimentality. Miss Preston sang well indeed, with unimpeachable German, a repose that was a lesson to the fidgety singer one meets usually and made a deep impression at this, her first appearance.

Reception.

After the concert a reception was given the members by the Ladies' Reception Committee, composed of the following: Miss M. A. Rockwell, chairman; Mrs. William McEchron, Mrs. H. A. Bowden, Mrs. John R. Mackay, Mrs. A. B. Colvin, Mrs. George L. Richardson, Mrs. J. T. Finch, Mrs. W. F. Bissell, Mrs. E. W. West, Mrs. H. H. Pruyn, Mrs. W. W. Buckingham, Mrs. W. E. Baldwin, Mrs. H. L. Sherman, Mrs. John Loomis, Miss Mary Pruyn, Miss Jessica Little, Mrs. G. B. Greenslet, Mrs. F. H. Bullard, Mrs. Eugene Ashley, Mrs. L. P. Juvet, Mrs. J. W. Hunting, Mrs. W. W. Bronn and Mrs. E. S. Bullis.

Fred E. Hahn.

This was a well planned, delightful affair in all respects, the Hon. A. B. Colvin and his handsome better half introducing the members, the spacious parlors of the theatre; the big ballroom, the electric lights, the handsomely gowned women present, the bevy of young girls who flitted about with that favorite national dish, ice cream—of which there seemed limitless store—all conduced to make the affair most pleasant. No reception of recent years has been as well planned or as well handled; for one thing the accommodations permitting of this better than at other places.

Second Day—Wednesday Morning, June 26—Business Meeting.

This began with the annual business meeting, for active members only, when the recommendations of the vice-presidents' meeting were read by the committee in charge, and the members proceeded to make changes in the constitution, chief among which are these:

The annual dues shall hereafter be $2.

The new office of treasurer is created, without salary.

The secretary and the treasurer both to be members of the executive committee.

The auditing committee to be appointed.

The county vice-presidents to be elected by a system to be devised later; probably by the members of each county.

A committee to be named to consult as to the best place of meeting.

These changes were duly bulletined, along with nominations of officers, and at the business meeting next morning all changes were carried out as above.

It should be here stated that Secretary-Treasurer Riesberg made no objection whatever to dividing his office, but did object most vigorously to the suggestion that the secretary, because he was a paid officer, should not be a member of the executive committee. His objection was duly sustained by the members.

There followed a session on vocal music, of which the chairman was Herbert Wilbur Greene, of New York. Mr. Greene read a number of papers from various teachers in response to his query as to "What is most needed to improve the condition of singing and teaching?"

He later introduced Madame Von Klenner, who read a very bright paper on specialism in voice teaching. Lillie d'Angelo Bergh advanced the proposition that vocal teachers should be graded, or certificated, just as are doctors and lawyers, and there was considerable discussion. Madame Cappiani thinks "this is not possible in free America; the vocal teacher should get a legitimate diploma to teach music. The one thing possible is to educate vocal detectives;

Ellis C. Hammann.

the robbers of Italy are persecuted by the soldiers, and so should bad vocal teachers be hunted down, for they not only steal the money out of the pocket of the pupil, but, what is worse, scrape the voice out of the throat. Such

OLIVE MEAD, VIOLINIST.

Appearing during the coming season of 1901-2 with the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA in Boston for the third time. During July and August, please address MISS MEAD personally, 560 Park Avenue, New York.

Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

MRS. Carl Alves

Has Resumed Vocal Instruction at her Home Studio :
1146 Park Ave. near 91st Street, New York.

LOUIS V. SAAR.

Piano and Composition.
Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration.
Residence-Studio: 126 E. Eighty-third St., New York City.
Personal interview daily, 1 to 3.

JULIAN PASCAL

Pianist. Concert, Recitals, Musicales.
For Terms and Dates address care of
MUSICAL COURIER, 1135 Broadway, New York.

HENRI G. SCOTT,
BASSO.
ORATORIO, CONCERT, RECITALS.
ADDRESS: 14 E. 42d Street, NEW YORK. 2117 N. 20th Street, PHILADELPHIA.

MISS MONTEFIORE
VOICE.
Private Studio and Address:
THE ORMONDE,
2030 Broadway, corner 70th St., New York.

ETHEL L. ROBINSON,
(LONDON CONCERT DIRECTION)
Telegrams: "Musikchor, London."
122 Beaufort St., S. W., LONDON, ENGLAND.

vocal detectives should find out the bad teachers, and put them in prison, so that only good teachers remain."

There was some discussion, and an adjourned meeting named for next day in the parlors of the hotel, At this subsequent meeting a resolution was passed requesting the program committee of next year to arrange for a session in which vocal teachers may, through oral illustration and mutual criticism, arrive at some definite opinion as to the production of correct tone.

KATHARINE EVANS VON KLENNER.

Madame Von Klenner attracted absolute attention through her paper, in which many sharp things were said in plain fashion, and through her opinions, so well presented and defended. She was accorded big applause. An hour with Norwegian composers followed, the two participants being Alf Klingenberg, pianist, and Adolf Dahm-Petersen, baritone. These men presented a most unique program, as follows:

ALFRED KLINGENBERG.

Ballade, op. 24.....Grieg
Alf Klingenberg.
The First-Born.....Winter-Hjelmaer
Summer Sadness.....Kjerulf
Night on the Fjord.....Kjerulf
Adolf Dahm-Petersen.

Burlesque, from op. 48.....Sinding
Three Caprices, from op. 44.....Sinding
Rustle of Spring.....Sinding
Alf Klingenberg.

Sunset.....Grieg
I Love Thee.....Grieg
Adolf Dahm-Petersen.

Serenade.....Gröndahl
Etude.....Gröndahl
Etude.....Neupert
Humoresque.....Neupert
Album Leaf.....Grieg
Wedding Day.....Grieg
Alf Klingenberg.

Mr. Klingenberg, who with the coming of the autumn goes to the school which Scharwenka visited annually, and which Wm. H. Barber now visits during June, at Mexico, Mo., proved himself an artist of the first rank; he plays with lots of dash, yet with plenty of delicacy, and the strange harmonies of the North, with their constant open fifth drone basses, the peculiar intervals in the melodic scale, the sudden contrasts, much like the music of the Russians—all this proved vastly interesting to the audience, and no less so the modest and grave young man himself.

ADOLF DAHM-PETERSEN.

Mr. Dahm-Peterson has a baritone voice of unusual range and sonority, enunciates well, and has a fine stage presence; this, along with his style and vocal technic, created interest from the moment he came on the stage; he sings with much gusto, and it must be taken for granted that his interpretation of the Grieg songs is authoritative, for both he and Klingenberg are Norwegians. There is, besides, musicianship behind all he does, so the listener unconsciously feels the power that guides the singing.

Wednesday Afternoon.

This afternoon was given up to organ recitals by three eminent organists, namely, Carl G. Schmidt, of New York; Wilhelm Kaffenberger, of Buffalo, and William C. Carl, of New York and everywhere else, assisted by Mrs. Antonia Sawyer, contralto.

It was a pretty hot afternoon, way up in the 90's, but an audience of good size attended, Mr. Schmidt leading off with a paper on church music, in which he said many very sensible and practical things. This he followed with his recital of German composers, as follows:

CARL G. SCHMIDT.

Prelude to Fugue in C minor.....Bach
Intermezzo and Chromatic Fugue from Sonata in A minor.....Rheinberger
Sonata in A major.....Mendelssohn
Fantaisie.....Merkel
Introduction to Act III. and Bridal Chorus from Lohengrin..Wagner
(Arranged by S. P. Warren.)

Of these compositions that which appealed most to many present was the great Chromatic Fugue by Rheinberger, which rolls along in stupendous harmonies, big, big as is the ocean, undisturbed, ever grand; this Schmidt played finely in every respect. The Merkel Fantasia was pleasing.

ANTONIA H. SAWYER.

After Mrs. Sawyer finished singing "O Ye That Love the Lord," by Barnby, a listener nearby was overheard to

E. PRESSON
MILLER,
VOICE CULTURE.
METROPOLITAN COLLEGE OF MUSIC, 212 West 59th St., New York.

Carlos N. Sanchez
OPERATIC TENOR, TEACHER OF SINGING.
Voice Building a Specialty. Repertory: Church, Oratorio and Opera.
Studios: 138 Fifth Ave., New York.
Monday, Wednesday, Thursday and Saturday,
RESIDENCE: 758 WEST END AVENUE,
Corner 97th Street.

JOSEPHINE S.
JACOBY,
CONTRALTO.
Address: 104 West 58th Street, NEW YORK.

GEORGE ENSWORTH,
Address, 311 West 71st St., NEW YORK. BARITONE.

say "It seems to become the fashion now that singers speak their words so they can be understood"—would "fashion" were all the power behind this! The listener did not know that this was ever one of Mrs. Sawyer's best points; her power, the conviction with which she sang, her delightfully clear enunciation, all served to make her singing effective.

William C. Carl.

Organist Kaffenberger, of Buffalo, for the second time in the history of the State association proved himself the scholarly player, playing his entire program without notes, and this in itself imposes on the average hearer.

His pedaling in the Bach Fugue in D was great; his registration in the Parker "Eclogue" tasteful, and the "Venusberg" music which runs through the trio of Bartlett's Toccata in E made of this piece a bravous number.

Louise B. Voigt.

His program was made up of compositions bly French, German and American composers.

William C. Carl followed with this program:

Allegretto from Sixth Organ Symphony.....Widor
Musette en Rondeau.....Rameau
Intermezzo (Masterpieces).....Callaerts
(Dedicated to Mr. Carl.)
Allegro con Fuoco (Sonata VI.).....Guilmant
Pastorale in F major.....Lemmens
Etude for the pedals alone.....De Bricqueville
Toccata in E minor.....De la Tombelle

Though last, Mr. Carl still drew to himself undivided interest, all his pieces having been selected with due regard to time and place, and the result was that interest increased the moment he began playing. Undoubtedly the most interest was caused by his playing of the Etude for pedals alone, by Eugene de Bricqueville; this composer must have from four to eight feet, judging by the effect produced in much of the study—in any case, those present heard with astonishment harmonies of four notes, sustained, and later asked with consternation, "How did he do it?"

The toccata, by the French Baron de la Tombelle, closed the program brilliantly.

Wednesday Evening.

This was the second grand concert, with the following participants: Miss Louise B. Voigt, soprano, of New York; Miss Grace Preston, contralto, of New York; Robert Burton, tenor, of Buffalo; Miss Jessie Shay, piano, of New York; Miss Rebecca Wilder Holmes, violin, of Springfield, Mass.; Mark Skalmer, violoncello, of New Rebecca W. Holmes.

York; the Glens Falls Lyceum Choral Society, William G. Merrihew, conductor.

Accompanists: F. W. Riesberg and Mr. De Zielinski.

Now I don't want my back hair pulled, or my eyes scratched out for saying it—nevertheless I will say that the special star of the evening was handsome Louise B. Voigt, who had twenty-four hours previously changed her name to Mrs. Richard Byron Overstreet; with her brand new man she arrived at Glens Falls just in time to sing, conquer and run off, leaving behind many admiring people, for she sang with such artistic impulse and such tonal volume that she received an ovation and nothing less. Her aria was "Er Kommt Zurück," from Halévy's "The Jewess," and her group of songs these: "I Wait for Thee," Hawley; "He Loves Me" and "Before the Dawn," Chadwick.

Miss Jessie Shay played the Henselt Larghetto and Litolff Scherzo, with second piano (Mr. Riesberg), in brilliant fashion, making a great hit; later she played a group of three pieces by modern composers, and received much and long continued applause.

Miss Grace Preston's only appearance this evening was in the long and difficult aria by Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, entitled "Eilende Wolken," that concert aria which few contraltos attempt, for it takes most extraordinary endurance, great range, power and musicianship, all of which are Miss Preston's. The Scotch melody in it catches the ear, and its recurrence always finds pleased listeners; the poem, with its reference to the land of the Scot, makes the introduction of the melody apropos.

Mark Skalmer.

Violinist Rebecca Wilder Holmes played her best on this evening, notwithstanding the heat and consequent condition of the violin strings; her playing of the Wieniawski Polonaise in D was a tour de brillance, and later her playing of the Hungarian "Hejre Kati," by Hubay, showed that she had not listened to the Hungarian Joachim, her teacher, in vain. There were character and finish in her playing, and modesty and charm in her demeanor.

Robert Burton, tenor, sang well some songs by Bendel, and later Balfe's evergreen, "Come Into the Garden, Maud"; he was much applauded. The only remaining soloist was 'Cellist Mark Skalmer, who, though looking like a lad, yet plays with great finish and ripeness; his tone, though not large, is still pure and appealing, and he has a splendid left hand. He played the Popper Polonaise in D with much dash.

John Young.

A quartet, consisting of Miss Voigt, Miss Preston, Mr.

BROAD STREET CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC,
GILBERT RAYNOLDS COMBS, Director.
1331 South Broad Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE FREE.

Sara Anderson,
Soprano,
For terms and particulars address
51 East 64th St.,
NEW YORK CITY.

ST. NICHOLAS GARDEN, 66th Street, near Columbus Avenue.
KALTENBORN ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS.
Every Evening at 8:15. Admission, 50 cents.
VARIED PROGRAM NIGHTLY. AUTOMATICALLY COOLED. NO DRAFT.

EVAN Oratorio and Concert.
WILLIAMS,
TENOR.
For Terms, Dates, &c., address
WOLFSOHN'S MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th Street, City.

GRACE G.
GARDNER,
Concert and Oratorio
SOPRANO.
Pupil of Blasco, Milan; Schmidt, Berlin; Henschel, London.
Studio: 36 West 25th St., New York.

ARTHUR
BERESFORD,
BASSO-BARITONE.
STEINERT HALL, BOSTON, MASS.

J. FRED
WOLLE,
ORGANIST.
Address:
THE WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., New York.

Burton and Mr. Dahm-Petersen, sang De Zielinski's "Exultate Deo" well, though it seemed to me that this music was particularly out of place, and the Glens Falls Lyceum Choral Society, William G. Merrihew director, also appeared, singing three numbers with considerable style.

Thursday Morning.

The business meeting resulted in the election of the above named officers, and the changes in the constitution were made by majority vote of the members, as mentioned under Wednesday morning. Chairman De Zielinski was in natural line for promotion to the office of president, but absolutely declined the nomination, predicting divorce, business troubles, fights with lawyers, and all manner of troubles should he permit his selection; whereupon there was a general stampede Russellward, who was re-elected. For the fourth consecutive time Secretary-Treasurer F. W. Riesberg was elected, excepting that for the coming year he becomes secretary and J. Ellsworth Stille, of Gloversville, becomes treasurer, the new office just created.

DR. CARL DUFFT.

The committee on resolutions, consisting of J. Ellsworth Stille, of Gloversville; A. J. Goodrich, of New York city, and Mrs. Margaret H. Bradley, of Fort Edward, presented resolutions which were unanimously adopted, thanking the village of Glens Falls and its citizens for their kindly reception, and especially the Hon. A. B. Colvin, for his cordial and hospitable welcome; the ladies of Glens Falls who tendered the association such a hearty greeting; Rev. John R. Mackay and the trustees of the Presbyterian Church for so generously placing at their disposal their splendid church edifice; the newspapers for their valuable reports; the artists who have so charmed and delighted with their art, and to the essayists who have spent so much valuable time gathering material.

"That the thanks of the association are due to W. F. Bissell, chairman of the local committee, and to the specialist committees and the vice-presidents who have labored so earnestly and successfully for the benefit of the association; the members of the program committee, especially its chairman, J. de Zielinski, of Buffalo, and F. W. Riesberg, in carrying forward the aims and plans of the association; the president, Louis Arthur Russell, of Newark, N. J., for his able work at the head of the association."

The secretary, on motion of Mr. Shepard, was instructed to send telegrams of greeting to conventions in session in Indiana, Michigan and Iowa, which he did, as follows: "Warm greetings (about 95 in the shade) to our sister association from the members of the New York State Music Teachers' Association. Signed, L. A. Russell, president." The Indiana State M. T. A. returned the greetings, as follows: "Greetings warmly returned; highly appreciated. Very successful meeting despite heat. Signed, O. W. Pierce, president."

There followed a session on harmony and interpretation, the chairman being Frank H. Shepard, who read an essay on "The Practical Side of Harmony," in which he attacked many of the old fogy ideas prevailing, including the old-fashioned, non-progressive methods of teaching harmony. The paper was vigorously discussed. He introduced A. J. Goodrich, who gave a paper on "Modern Interpretation."

There followed a song and violoncello recital by Miss Gertrude Harrison, soprano, of Washington, D. C., and Mark Skalmer, 'cellist, of New York. Miss Harrison has a sweet voice and pretty personality, and sang in keeping with her looks, while young Skalmer again demonstrated his right to be reckoned with as one of the best 'cellists in America; he was a popular favorite throughout the meeting, and did much to add to the enjoyment of all. Said a local paper of him: "Mr. Skalmer is a 'cellist of exceptional ability, and his appearances have all been warmly greeted." The Troy Times said that "Mark Skalmer is on the threshold of a brilliant career. His best work was in the Golterman Capriccio and the Popper 'Harlequin,' in which his light bowing and graceful style shone eminently; Davidoff's 'At the Fountain' was also well played, and he got much applause, with Mr. Riesberg at the piano."

H. ESTELLE WOODRUFF.

Thursday Afternoon.

The only afternoon concert had the following artists: Miss Charlotte I. Bord, soprano, of Troy; Mrs. Antonia Sawyer, contralto, of New York; Robert Burton, tenor, of Buffalo; W. E. Chamberlain, baritone, of Cortland; Alberto Jonás, piano, director of the Michigan Conservatory of Music, Detroit, Mich.; Frederick E. Hahn, violin, of Philadelphia, Pa.; the Æolian Male Quartet, of Cortland.

These artists united in a very enjoyable concert, the special feature being the pianist, Alberto Jonás, who, however, permitted himself to alter his program, disappointing many by not playing the Schubert-Liszt "Erlking" as programmed, and raising the wrath of Chairman de Zielinski, who got on his hind legs over it. Jonàs played brilliantly, as usual, the Paganini-Liszt "La Campanella" being his best piece. Miss Charlotte I. Bord, a young Troy woman, with a sweet voice, shy manner and graceful personality, as well as superior method and mind, sang her two groups of songs more than well; they were both by American composers, as follows:

Ah, Me!.....Hyatt
A Red, Red Rose.....Hastings
A Rose Fable.....Hawley
Don't Sigh.....Jordan
Love Has Wings.....Rogers
Shoogy Shoo.....Ambrose

Said the Troy Times of her: "The singing of Miss Bord was marked by an artistic finish and confidence which made every listener an admirer of the Troy vocalist. The wave of tender interest flowing from the audience toward the effort of Miss Bord must have been a source of inspiration to her."

W. E. Chamberlain, a baritone, sang with much verve; he has a voice of ringing quality, under good control, and should in time take prominent place. His songs, too, were by American composers, Brewer, Beach, Chadwick and Hadley; indeed, but for the compositions for piano and violin the entire program would have been of American composers. This speaks volumes, inasmuch as the American composer was so long neglected; it means simply this, that he has attained such merit that singers sing him solely on his merit, and not only because he is an American composer.

Mrs. Antonia Sawyer repeated her previous successes, singing Chadwick's "Dear Love, When In Thy Arms I Lie"; Collins' "My Little One," and Nevin's "Rosary" and "O, That We Two Were Maying." Again her ever distinct enunciation and general style, as well as charm of manner and handsome appearance on the stage, caused much complimentary comment. Violinist Frederick E. Hahn was received with such spontaneous applause that he must have realized what the previous evening's work on his part had done for him; he augmented the high opinion held of him, in his playing of a Spohr Adagio, the Nachez "Gypsy Dances," Nocturne by Chopin, and Wieniawski Mazurka. His fire and tenderness, as well as fine appearance, drew much attention, manifested by insistent applause.

Mr. Burton again sang his tenor solos, and the Æolian Male Quartet contributed three numbers; the members are George Oscar Bowen, John F. Byrnes, Lee L. Wellman and J. G. Osgood, who together form an excellent combination.

Thursday Evening.

This was "The Messiah" evening, for which all sorts of dire things had been predicted, inasmuch as the local chorus had found it beyond their time and capacity to attempt; however, with the aid of a score of Troy singers, imported for the occasion, of some of the members and a few local people, a good sized chorus was gotten together, and President-Conductor Louis Arthur Russell overcame all difficulties.

ALBERTA V. SELLECK.

Nevertheless, let it be said this performance went off with credit to all concerned, Mrs. Marie Zimmerman, the Philadelphia soprano; Mrs. Antonia Sawyer, alto; John Young, tenor, and Dr. Carl Dufft, the popular bass.

Mrs. Zimmerman sang with much repose, but she

Elsa Marshall,
. . Soprano.
222 HOSEA AVENUE, CLIFTON,
CINCINNATI, OHIO.

CHARLES W.
CLARK
BARITONE.
Under Exclusive Management
HANNAH & HAMLIN,
514 Kimball Hall,
CHICAGO, ILL.

The Guilmant Organ School.
(COPYRIGHT.)
PRESIDENT: ALEXANDRE GUILMANT. DIRECTOR: WILLIAM C. CARL.
Reopens October 14.

SCHEDULE OF WORK:

FIRST YEAR.
The Organ—Private lessons, one each week.
Harmony—Class lessons, one each week.
Musical Form—MUSICAL DICTATION and MUSICAL KNOWLEDGE—Class lessons.
Service Playing—CHANTS, HYMN TUNES, ANTHEMS, ETC.—Class lessons.

SECOND YEAR.
The Organ—Private lessons, one each week.
Harmony and Counterpoint—Class lessons, one each week.
Musical Analysis—MUSICAL HISTORY, ORGAN TUNING—Class lessons.
Service Playing—CHANTS, HYMN TUNES, ANTHEMS, ETC.—Class lessons.

STUDENTS' RECITALS OCCUR EACH MONTH.

ADDRESS: THE GUILMANT ORGAN SCHOOL, 34 West 12th St., New York.

seemed rather inclined to hurry the "I Know That My Redeemer Liveth." Mrs. Sawyer's ever distinct enunciation was remarked on all over the house, and tenor John Young proved himself a fine artist, reliable at all time, with a pleasing voice, of much resonance and clear quality. As to Dufft no oratorio singer of the present day is better known, and he sang with tonal volume, rhythmical swing and fine style. Of several of the singers the Troy Times said:

Mrs. Zimmerman's clear diction, dignity of expression and glorious tones were those of the true artist. John Young, the tenor, has a voice exquisite in quality, and his style of singing is exceptionally well adapted to oratorio. Carl Dufft bravely met the demands of his part. He is an interpretative artist of the first type and of rare musical temperament. His tones have a firmness and resonance rarely heard.

There was an orchestra of about twenty pieces. Mr. Russell had the entire vocal and instrumental force well in hand, and certainly deserves much credit for putting the thing through.

Trolley Ride.

Friday morning the members, on the invitation of the Hon. A. B. Colvin, president of the Glens Falls, Sandy Hill and Fort Edward Street Railroad Company, took a ride throughout the town and environs, and enjoyed the bit of relaxation greatly; most of the officers were on hand, many of the vice-presidents, and so it was voted by all a most pleasant finish of a particularly social convention. On getting off the cars three cheers were given for Mr. Colvin, who had done so much to make the meeting enjoyable, and a series of 'rahs for his handsome wife and interesting family.

A Prominent Member.

Miss H. Estelle Woodruff, originator of the non-syllable sight reading method and author of "Woodruff's Comprehensive Music Course," is to teach at Round Lake, N. Y.,

Mrs. Belle Van Derveer.

during July and August. Miss Woodruff conducts the assembly chorus, and is director of the summer school of music, elocution and art. The winter season finds her busy in her New York studio, pupils coming from all parts of the country for the special normal and sight reading courses, which they claim are of the greatest value to them as singers and teachers. Miss Woodruff is also well known as a pianist, composer and lecturer upon musical subjects.

Two Prominent Vice-Presidents.

Miss Alberta V. Selleck, of Huntington.—Miss Alberta V. Selleck, of Huntington, L. I., vice-president for Suffolk County for seven years past, is a teacher of piano, voice and organ, and for five years past organist of St. Patrick's R. C. Church, having organized and trained a choir of twenty-five singers.

Last year she successfully formed classes for the study of the libretti and music of the opera; the class, after hearing the story and the music in different piano and vocal arrangements, went to New York and saw them presented at the Metropolitan Opera House. Miss Selleck studied piano under Miss Mary Burnham, a pupil of William H. Sherwood, and also studied with C. Whitney Coombs, of New York; voice with G. F. Le Jeune and Mr. Coombs, and organ with Dr. R. W. Crowe, of Brooklyn.

Miss Selleck is one of the best workers the association has, and makes it a point, not matter what the effort may cost, to attend the annual meetings.

Mrs. Belle Vanderveer, of Amsterdam.—Mrs. Belle Vanderveer is the prize winner for two years past of Amsterdam, Montgomery County. She was appointed by the N. Y. State M. T. A. to represent the association at the M. T. N. A. meeting at Put-in-Bay, and was invited by President Manchester to take part in the round table discussions, and read a paper. Mrs. Vanderveer is an organist and teacher of twenty years' experience, and has a conservatory in Amsterdam, teaching vocal and instrumental music and elocution. She has written a book of poems entitled "Soul Waifs," and has composed a number of songs, the latest being "Tell Mother I Died for Old Glory," a war song, and a negro lullaby, "Honey You Belong to Me."

Mrs. Vanderveer says she will yet have the New York State M. T. A. meet in Amsterdam.

Notes.

To W. F. Bissell the association is indebted more than to anyone else for the carrying out of local plans; he was always on hand, with a staff of ready men and women to assist, and, indeed, the convention could not have occurred but for him, and the immense amount of work done by him and by those under his direction. There were many excellent accompanists, as follows, and they all had their hands full:

Ellis Clark Hammann. Miss Marion Sim.
Adolf Dahm-Petersen. Jaroslaw de Zielinski.
F. W. Riesberg.

The attendance of teachers from all over the State was not nearly as large as last year at the Saratoga meeting; this was no doubt because of the Pan-American Exposition, to which many preferred to go, or were attending the same week, when the Saengerfest was taking place. Also, many of our leading teachers had school commencement week and could not leave their posts.

The weather was ideal, excepting that it got hot and hotter, until at the end one could take a pitcher of cold water, stand it on a window sill, and in five minutes have hot water for use.

A pathetic occurrence of the meeting was the fainting of a member, Miss Katie Peters, of Schenectady, at the Tuesday session, and her subsequent death at the hospital, due to heart weakness, from which she had long suffered. A goodly sum was collected and forwarded her stricken mother.

The stage was at all times a pretty picture, inasmuch as the local committee (this means W. F. Bissell again) had taken the pains to have plants, palms and other greens arranged at the sides.

There was a funny town clock that struck nine times when it was 6 o'clock in the morning, and twenty-four times at a quarter past 6; this seemed a regular thing there, however, and no one was disturbed by it.

The John Church Company had their usual very complete exhibit in the lobby, and W. L. Coghill, as usual for some years past, was in charge, and made many new friends for both himself and the John Church Company.

E. M. Zimmerman.

Thus ended the 1901 meeting of the New York State M. T. A. F. W. R.

Signor Carbone's New Studios.—A representative of The Musical Courier who visited the new studios of Sig. Agostini Carbone, at 240 Fifth avenue, found what are probably the most completely equipped vocal studios in this city. Occupying the entire top floor of the building, they are delightfully cool and airy. As one steps out of the elevator, one enters an elegantly furnished waiting room, which contains a table filled with the latest magazines and weeklies. The adjoining room, which is the studio proper, is a large room with excellent acoustics, and containing at one end a miniature stage. In short, nothing which might add to the comfort or convenience of Signor Carbone's pupils is lacking.

Rafaello La Marca Arrived.—This well-known basso-cantante has arrived, direct from Italy, and will make a specialty of teaching the true Italian school of voice. Among his best known American pupils is Miss Anna Plum, of Milwaukee, who highly recommends him. She regards him as the greatest vocal teacher in the world, having had a varied experience of ten years abroad. Other pupils are F. Stanton Heck, of New York, a baritone of fine voice, and John Dunsmore, the basso last season of the Bostonians. A Mr. Adam, tenor of New York, is also becoming well known.

ACCOMPANIST.
F. W. RIESBERG.
INSTRUCTION.
Piano, Organ, Harmony.
With The Musical Courier.
Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.
Secretary-Treasurer New York State M. T. A.
Residence-Studio: 954 Eighth Ave., cor. 56th St., NEW YORK.
Telephone: 452 Columbus.

OSCAR SAENGER,
Vocal Instruction,
Teaches until July 14.
Teacher of Josephine S. Jacoby, Contralto; Elizabeth D. Leonard, Contralto; Madame de Pasquali, Soprano; Sara Anderson, Soprano; Hildegard Hoffmann, Soprano; E. Léon Rains, Basso; Joseph S. Baernstein, Basso; John I. Young, Tenor, and other prominent singers now before the public
Studio: 51 East 64th Street, NEW YORK.

Mme. VON KLENNER, Garcia Representative,
WILL OPEN A
Special Summer School at Lake Chautauqua, N. Y.,
THIS SUMMER.
PARIS EXPOSITION, 1900.
Only Honorable Mention or Distinction of Any Vocal Instructor.
FOR PARTICULARS
Address 40 STUYVESANT STREET, NEW YORK.
Second Avenue and 10th Street.

VAN YORX Tenor,
6 E. 17 St., NEW YORK.
Under Management of WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., NEW YORK CITY.

Western New York Office THE MUSICAL COURIER,
749 NORWOOD AVENUE,
BUFFALO, July 5, 1901.

HAPPY Germans took possession of our Temple of Music, and the jolly crowd captured all the honors. It was Liederkranz Day, and to-day, of all days, I am proud of my countrymen. Director Dr. Paul Klengel was assisted by the following artists: Mme. Lillian Blauvelt, soprano; Miss Olive Mead, violin; Mme. Fannie Richter Fuchs, piano, and Carl Schlegel, baritone.

Madame Blauvelt captured the audience at once. Particularly good was the aria, "Il re pastore," for soprano, with violin obligato; aria for soprano, "To All Dear Loyal Friends"; "Sicilian Vesper Hymn" and "The Belfry Warden's Daughter," male chorus with soprano solo. She has a pure German enunciation. Many bouquets and a laurel wreath were presented her. Piano soli, "Legende" ("St. Francis on the Waves"), Liszt, and "Polonaise," Paderewski, by Mme. Fannie Richter Fuchs, were given with a brilliancy of execution truly marvelous. Both numbers teem with technical difficulties. She also received floral gifts. Miss Olive Mead won new laurels by her violin solos, "Faust" Fantaisie for violin, Wieniawski; Air, Goldmark, and "The Butterfly," Sauret. Carl Schlegel gave several fine baritone solos: aria from oratorio "Elijah," "It Is Enough," Mendelssohn, with Otto Graff at the organ. The baritone solo in the male chorus "Rheinfahrt" won him hearty recognition.

The male chorus of the Liedertafel has brought its singing to such a degree of perfection that Director Dr. Paul Klengel may well be proud. The following program was given with good attack and shading, the number of tenors and baritones being about equal. Particularly fine was the Maennerchor à capella, "Rheinfahrt," and "Wach' auf, du schoene Träumerin," Gericke. Following is the program:

Omnipotence, for soprano, male chorus and organ.....Schubert-Liszt
Soprano solo, Madame Blauvelt; organ, Otto Graff.
Waldweben, male chorus.....Weber
Male chorus—
Rheinfahrt, with baritone solo.....Beschnitt
Baritone solo, Carl Schlegel.
Wach' auf, du schoene Träumerin.....Gericke
Folksongs for male chorus—
Plaint.
Song of Finland.
Bohemian Folksong.
Old Black Joe.
(Arranged by P. Klengel.)
Male chorus—
From Youth's Happy Day.....Radecke
Spanish Lay.....Neubner
Down in the Valley.....Attenhofer
The Belfry Warden's Daughter.....Rheinthaler
(For male chorus, with soprano solo.)
Solo, Madame Blauvelt.
Neuer Fruehling.....Petschke

"Old Black Joe" was given in English. The male chorus seemed to hit the popular taste and it had to be repeated. The Liederkranz will take many mementos of their popularity from the Pan-American in the shape of floral offerings of many designs.

Carl Schlegel is a pupil of Prof. M. J. Scherhey. Schlegel is the possessor of a sympathetic baritone voice. His success was phenomenal. He sings with so much soul and just carried his audience away. The criticisms from the different papers regarding both Mr. Scherhey's pupils, Mrs. Dora Phillips and Carl Schegel, will follow in a later issue of THE MUSICAL COURIER.

Dr. Louis Falk, of Chicago, gave his organ recital this evening, assisted by Robert Burton, tenor, and William Gomph. A furious thunderstorm prevailed and in some way the current of electricity became detached and the large audience was left in total darkness. Both organists rose to the occasion, playing all sorts of popular and patriotic airs, in which the vast audience joined, singing "Onward, Christian Soldiers," "America" and "The Star Spangled Banner."

Mr. Burton warbled like a nightingale. The audience dispersed with three cheers for both organists and three cheers for the singer.

LOUDON G. CHARLTON.

JUST after the retirement of one musical manager last summer and the sad and sudden death of J. V. Gottschalk, Loudon G. Charlton came into prominence in the field.

Mr. Charlton had some experience, but more resource, ambition and pluck than there had as yet been opportunity for him to demonstrate. Yet he assumed, at a day's notice, the management of the Gottschalk concert bureau, with all its obligations artistic and financial, and with that, in addition to his own recently established office and list of artists, Mr. Charlton made a record during the season 1900-1901 in the field of concert management in New York.

In the city and out of it, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from Canada to the Gulf, this clever, energetic young impresario handled the artists he had acquired and those others who were thrust upon him without a serious blunder or error of any sort.

Dividing his time between the two New York offices he arranged bookings singly or in tours, and like a veteran attended to the intricate arrangements and the infinite number of details incumbent upon the work, kept a clear head, a cool, shrewd judgment and showed tact and discrimination.

In view of these pertinent facts there seems but one outcome for Mr. Charlton for the next season, and that is a more pronounced and substantial success in all ways than last. His preliminary announcement shows a splendid array of artists, headed by Mme. Lillian Nordica. She has intrusted her first recital tour in this country to Mr. Charlton's sole management, and he will also introduce to American audiences Eduard Zeldenrust, the celebrated Dutch pianist, and Gregory Hast, the eminent English tenor. Mesdames Charlotte Maconda and Webb-Gardner, soprani; Mme. Katharnie Fisk, contralto; Miss Lotta Mills, piano; Leonora Jackson, violin; Flavie Van den Hende, 'cello; Emil Hofmann, baritone; George Hamlin, tenor, and Albert Quesnel, tenor, all well and favorably known, are included in his list, and negotiations are now pending with other artists, foreign and American.

BARRON BERTHOLD.—When last heard from Barron Berthold, the tenor, was singing with remarkable success at Sydney, New South Wales.

HAROLD BAUER,
AMERICAN TOUR, 1902.
Commencing in January with BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
DATES NOW BOOKING.
For all particulars apply to GEO. W. STEWART, 120 Tremont Street, BOSTON, MASS.
General Representative for Europe: ROBERT STRAKOSCH, 59 Rue La Bruyère, PARIS.

MINNE HUMPHRYES
Soprano, Concert and Oratorio.
FOR TERMS, DATES, ETC., ADDRESS
Care MUSICAL COURIER, 1135 Broadway, or 801 Union Street, Brooklyn, New York.

RUBY CUTTER,
SOPRANO,
Dramatic and Coloratura.
CONCERT and ORATORIO.
REPERTOIRE.
Under the direction of HENRY WOLFSOHN.
Boston Address: 159 Tremont Street.

RAFAEL JOSEFFY.
Address: Letter Box 38, NORTH TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

MUSICAL PEOPLE.

Frederic Archer gave his closing organ recitals for this season at Carnegie Hall, Pittsburg, on June 29 and 30.

The pupils of Professor Graber gave a piano recital on June 21 in the Sunday school room of the Presbyterian Church at Joplin, Mo.

Miss Rachel Steinman, of Des Moines, Ia., who has studied with Van Ordt in Chicago, gave a violin recital at Grand Rapids, Mich., on June 21.

Among the June musical events at Dallas, Tex., was the piano recital given by the pupils of Mrs. Albert R. Harned at Watkin Music Hall on Main street.

Guy C. Latchaw, pianist; Miss Emma Kayser, violinist, and Carl Weber, violinist, gave the senior recital at the Findlay College Conservatory of Music, at Findlay, Ohio.

At the commencement exercises of the Leech College, of Greensburg, Pa., W. R. Anderson, who is vocal instructor of that institution, sang several songs and was well received.

Miss Juliet Kinney, of Oberlin Conservatory of Music, and Miss Clarine Kinney, of Highwood Park, gave a piano and literary recital on June 27 for the benefit of the North Hudson Hospital.

Miss Edith O. Lapham, pianist, gave the graduation recital of the Conservatory of Music connected with Drury College, at Springfield, Mo. W. A. Chalfant is the musical director of the Conservatory.

Patrick O'Sullivan, who has studied abroad for several years with such distinguished teachers as Harold Bauer, Xaver Scharwenka and Feruccio Busoni, is expected to return to his home at Louisville, Ky., some time this month.

The annual commencement exercises of the Roosa violin school at Elmira, N. Y., were held in the auditorium in the Realty Building. The graduates were: Miss Edith Miller, Miss Theo White, Joseph Samuels and Abraham Lande.

The pupils of Mrs. Marie W. Fobert gave their tenth vocal recital last month at the Rockland Opera House, Rockland, Mass. William Faxon, violinist, assisted the young singers. The accompaniments were played by Mrs. Fobert and Paul V. Donovan.

Harry Dibble's piano recital at New Liederkranz Hall, Louisville, Ky., was a brilliant success. H. N. Goodwin, one of the most thorough artists of the city, has just cause to be proud of his pupil. Another charming feature was the singing of Mrs. Cecilia E. Bailey.

Jacob L. Hjort, a pupil of Arturo Marescalchi, of Chicago, is now the musical director of the Lutheran Ladies' Seminary at Red Wing, Minn. The seminary is said to be the only one for Scandinavian young ladies in this country. The Rev. H. Allen is the president.

The Sickner Conservatory of Music, of Wichita, Kan., which was incorporated ten years ago, has just closed one of its most successful years, having an enrollment of 490 students; from ten States and forty-five different towns our mid-summer normal term has enrolled over 200 pupils. A. M. Sickner is the director.

Mrs. J. C. Bonshire, contralto, gave the closing recital at the Marion (Ind.) Conservatory of Music. She was assisted by Mrs. P. L. Nussbaum, violinist; Miss Ethel Case, pianist, and C. F. Tucker, baritone.

The pupils of John Knowles Weaver gave a piano recital last month at the First Congregational Church, Oshkosh, Wis. The young pianists were assisted by Miss Martha Rollins, soprano, and Daniel L. Johnson, basso.

The closing concert of the Cleveland School of Music, Alfred Arthur, director, was given on June 25. Solos and duets were given by the following: Grace Curtis, Luella Holley, Nora Durschlag, Ella Durhamer, George H. Wagner, Myrtle Skeel, Ida Stoll, Mrs. Ida Andrews Winckler, Lulu B. Garvin, Mrs. Belle Flagg and Maud Maxson.

Mariner and His Pupil in Maine.

THE cream of Bangor society attended the recital given by Master Arthur Beaupre, and the lecture by his teacher, Frederic Mariner. The appended criticisms give just tributes to both musical events:

Despite the oppressive atmosphere on Tuesday an audience which more than filled the hall attended the recital in the memorial parlors by Master Arthur Beaupre, a pupil at the Virgil school in New York city, assisted by local artists; the main numbers of the program were of course those by Master Beaupre, who gave a remarkable exhibition of the progress which he has made on the piano since last fall under the direction of Frederic Mariner. In each of his numbers he showed plainly the marked improvement which he has made since he went to the Virgil school, and all his friends are more certain now than ever before that he has a future before him.

Before the appearance of Master Beaupre for his first numbers Mr. Mariner, his teacher, spoke briefly to the audience, in which he told how the boy's ambition for study was aroused by the playing of Master Gallup here last summer. He then told of Arthur's life in New York, how he worked and what he had accomplished and of the methods which were employed in the development of his talent.

In each of his numbers Master Beaupre gave evidence of his genius and proved that rather than losing powers of expression which he had before going to Mr. Mariner he possessed them to a far greater degree, indeed his expression is one of his most remarkable qualities; liquidness and strength of touch are among the other notable characteristics of his work.

He played Beethoven's Sonata, op. 14, No. 2, beautifully, and his performance of this number alone would have been sufficient to prove the excellence of Mr. Mariner's instruction. The Chopin Waltz in A flat and two Grieg numbers, and particularly the Staccato Caprice, by Vogrich, were all highly enjoyed, the dainty movements in the last being particularly pleasing.

Master Beaupre was assisted by Miss Frances Weston, soprano, and Miss Kate Atherton Barker, violinist. Miss Abbie N. Garland was the accompanist.—Bangor (Me.) Daily Commercial, July 3, 1901.

A lecture given by Frederic Mariner, of New York, whose wonderful success with young Arthur Beaupre has excited general admiration, was given in the Memorial parlors Wednesday morning to a large audience, which contained almost all of the prominent musicians of the city. Mr. Mariner's address was of more than usual interest, and held the close attention of the listeners for more than two hours. Mr. Mariner gave a detailed description of the methods employed in the Virgil school, of New York, which Master Beaupre is attending. These methods came as a surprise to many of the people in the audience, and while perhaps some of the Bangor teachers did not agree with all of the points taken, the morning, on the whole, was one of uncommon interest to the musical people of the city.—Bangor Daily News, July 4, 1901.

MRS. POTTER-FRISSELL.—Mrs. Potter-Frissell, who has been living in Vienna, Dresden and Paris, and who has been writing many important letters to THE MUSICAL COURIER from those points, is due to arrive in this country soon, having accepted an important position as head of the musical department of St. Mary's College, Dallas, Tex., of which Bishop Garret is the dean.

AT MELBOURNE.—The concert given by the mayor of Melbourne, Australia, in honor of their royal highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York had as a quartet of singers Miss Ella Russell, soprano; Marie Van der Veer-Green, contralto; Signor Salvi, tenor, and Laurence Mooney, baritone.

Joseffy Returns.

RAFAEL JOSEFFY, accompanied by Mrs. Joseffy, returned from Budapest last Wednesday on the Deutschland. It will be remembered that the great piano virtuoso went to Hungary to look after his personal interests, his mother having left him sole heir to a generous estate. Mr. Joseffy's plans are not yet formulated for the coming season, either for teaching or playing, but in all probability he will be heard in public before the winter has passed.

Master Miner Walden Gallup will play the D minor Concerto by Mozart with the Kaltenborn Orchestra some time during the week of the 15th. The date will be given in our next issue. Master Miner is already one of the famous pupils of the Virgil Piano School, and this with less than two and one-half years' study.

Mrs. Norma Knupfel, who was identified here with the direction of the Leipsic Philharmonic Orchestra, left here for Bremen last Thursday on the Barbarossa. It is understood that she is to return to this country to manage a number of artists she is to bring over.

MME. DORIA DEVINE'S VACATION.—Mme. Doria Devine will spend the entire month of July at the Las Vegas Hot Springs, New Mexico. All communications may be addressed to the Hotel Montezuma, Las Vegas Hot Springs, New Mexico.

RUBEN.—Manager L. M. Ruben, who has been in Europe for a month or so, is expected back here this month.

Mr. Homer N. Bartlett. — Recent compositions by the well-known composer published by the Oliver Ditson Company: —

PIANO SOLOS

	Key	Grade	Price
Aeolian Murmurings. (Concert Study.) Op. 123.	G♭	6	.80
Ballade. Op. 119.	D♭	6	.75
Benten. (Caprice de Concert.) Op. 127.	E	5	.75
Caprice Español. Op. 115	E♭	5	.80
Capriccio in E Minor. Op. 190.	E min.	4-5	.75
Euterpe. (Mazurka de Concert.) Op. 6.	A♭	5	.75
Le Matin. (Mazurka.) Op. 192.	F	4	.60
On the Water. Op. 189, No. 1.	A	4	.60
Oriental Dance. Op. 189, No. 2.	D	4	.60
Valse Impromptu. Op. 106.	Var.	5	1.00

SONGS

	Voice	Key	Compass	Price
An Autumn Song.	Low	E♭	[g to E♭]	.50
On Wings of Living Light. (Sacred.) (Violin Obbligato and harp ad lib.)	Med.	A	[c♯ to F♯]	.75
Once in Royal David's City. (Christmas Song)	Low	D♭	[a♭ to F]	.60
Sweetheart, Sigh No More.	Med.	C	[g to F]	.40
The Days Gone By.	High	F	[c♯ to a]	.50
The Old Trundle Bed.	Med.	B♭	[d to F]	.40
The Wind is Awake.	High	D♭	[F to a♭]	.50
	Med.	B♭	[d to F]	.50
What My Lover Said.	High	G♭	[d♭ to g♭]	.50

"Selected Songs" and "Selected Piano Music," illustrated catalogs free.

OLIVER DITSON COMPANY, BOSTON.
CHAS. H. DITSON & CO., NEW YORK.
J. E. DITSON & CO., PHILADELPHIA.

A 371

Miss ADELE MARGULIES,
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Studios: Nos. 705-6 Carnegie Hall, New York.

Mme. SCHUMANN-HEINK, Mr. BISPHAM, Sig. CAMPANARI,
And other Members of the MAURICE GRAU OPERA CO.,
Are open for Concerts, Oratorios, Recitals and Musical Festivals during the Season 1901–2.
FOR TERMS AND DATES ADDRESS
ERNEST GOERLITZ, Sole and Exclusive Agent, Metropolitan Opera House, New York City.

M. I.
SCHERHEY,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Combined Italian-French-German Method.
CHURCH, CONCERT, ORATORIO, OPERA.
Studio: 780 PARK AVENUE, Cor. 73d St., NEW YORK.
Telephone: Seventy-ninth, 1158.

Mrs. HELEN TRUST
SOPRANO.
Vocal Recitals in English, French, Italian.
33 Grove End Road,
St. John's Wood, London, England.

THIRD AMERICAN TOUR
SEASON 1901-2.
161 Concerts Last Season.
LEONORA JACKSON
ASSISTED BY Harry J. Fellows, Tenor.
William Bauer, Pianist.
Direction ERNEST H. JACKSON and A. L. WAKEFIELD.
Address: NEW YORK, 31 Union Square West. CHICAGO, 71 Monroe Street.

MUSICAL COURIER OFFICES—FINE ARTS BUILDING.

CHICAGO, July 6, 1901.

THE Dearborn Theatre claims this week's novelty in the shape of a musical comedy entitled "The Explorers," a production which is of local interest, Lincoln Park having been selected as one of the scenes. In the latter portion of the opera winter climes are depicted, contrasting strangely with the July heat which audiences are at present experiencing. The music is light, but not unattractive. Bert Leston Taylor and Walter H. Lewis respectively are the librettist and composer, while the cast consists of Charles Dickson, Edward Mackay, Ruth White, Lillian Coleman, Harry Stubbs, Edithe Janet Walters, Joseph S. Welch, Joseph Sullivan, W. B. Rock, Sadie Stockton and R. J. Moye. Maude Lambert having retired, Maude Odell is now taking the part of Queen Lili in the comic opera "King Dodo," which enters its seventh week of popularity next Monday night at Studebaker Hall, Fine Arts Building. "Among the Breakers" has well been described as a "thrilling melodrama." That the Auditorium Conservatory's School of Acting was able to give a performance of so formidable a production is a matter for congratulation. Under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Dickson this play was presented in the Auditorium recital hall on the evening of July 2, an appreciative audience being present. Joseph de Stefani assumed the exacting and somewhat ungrateful role of David Murray, keeper of Fairpoint Light. His assistant, Larry Divine, was impersonated by David O'Keefe. Mother Carey's part, which is one of the most difficult, was played by Miss Agnes Dolan, an actress of unusual promise, many of whose lines were spoken with true dramatic fervor. E. M. Herries, as Peter Paragraph, a newspaper reporter, did some clever acting, while the most amusing character of the play, that of Scud, a colored servant, was well taken by E. Charles Flynn. The remainder of the cast consisted of W. J. Elliston, Herbert Mott, Miss Queena Robinson, Miss Ellen Wachter and Miss Raeburn Replogle.

Under the auspices of the Chicago Auditorium Conservatory an admirable program was presented last Saturday afternoon by prominent pupils, including those who were successful in winning the gold medals recently awarded by that institution. Robert Hood Bowers played an original "Suite Antique," consisting of minuet, sarabande, gavotte and gigue. Adam's "Pilgrim" was given by Miss Edna Lewis, soprano, whose finished singing aroused so much enthusiasm that the young musician was compelled to respond with an encore. Aldrich's "Pauline Pavlorna," an exceeding creditable dramatic number, was recited by Josephine McGillan, who likewise was recalled many times and prevailed upon to contribute a second selection. The concluding feature in the first part of the program proved to be a scene from Weber's "Der Freischütz," which Miss Estelle Solon and Miss Elsbeth Korrer interpreted artistically. A one-act play, "The Violin Maker of Cremona," was then presented by the Conservatory's School of Acting, the cast consisting of such talented dramatic exponents as W. J. Elliston, Henry Dickson, Laurence Dunbar and Miss Ooliata Zimmerman. This pathetic play was so adequately performed that it brought many persons in the audience to tears.

Charles R. Baker announces Miss Mabelle Crawford's engagement of one week's duration as soloist at tne Omaha Musical Festival, which will be inaugurated on Monday, December 9. The talented contralto will then go to Spirit Lake, S. Dak., in order to sing for the Chautauqua Assembly there; thus this concert tour is to be of an extended nature. Miss Crawford will sing in "The Messiah" with the Apollo Club, of Chicago, on December 5, and later in the same month will take part in the Milwaukee Arion Society's performance of this great oratorio.

A resumé of Miss Helen Buckley's past season is of interest, the gifted soprano having successfully filled a number of important engagements. In the course of one of her recent concert tours she gave a representative program before the Normal School in Emporia, Kan., singing twenty-four songs and playing her own accompaniments. After appearing in Sterling, Kan., she went to the Albion (Mich.) Festival, at which, it will be remembered, her singing proved to be a notable feature in the performance of "St. Paul." Her recital on the following day, at the residence of Otto Sand, conductor of the festival, was another artistic achievement.

During the past season many of Maurice Aronson's pupils met with success as pianists and teachers, prominent among them being Miss Erie Backus, Miss Katherine Ida Johnston, Arthur Wood and Charles I. Newberry. The latter gives sixty-three lessons a week in the towns of Smithfield and Canton, Ill., and meets with brilliant results as soloist and instructor. Mr. Newberry, who for the last two years has pursued his studies with Mr. Aronson, writes of a desire to return in September for further lessons, and expresses gratitude for what his teacher has accomplished on his behalf.

Among the many instructors whom Mary Wood Chase numbers in her large and representative class are Eric de Lamarter and Harry Shaffer, both of Muskegon, Mich. Concerning these promising young musicians the Muskegon Morning News makes the following comment:

"Mr. De Lamarter has been in Chicago studying organ music with Middelschulte, the celebrated teacher. He has given up the greater part of his time to the work, practising eight or nine hours every day, and is making such rapid progress in his studies that he gives promise within a few years of becoming one of the finest concert organists in the country. The fact that Mr. De Lamarter played at the last organ recital held in Central Music Hall previous to the tearing down of the building is a fact worthy of notice.

"Another of our musicians who is studying piano music in Chicago and making a great success of it is Harry C. Shaffer, of this city. Mr. Shaffer is taking lessons of Mary Wood Chase, with whom Mr. De Lamarter has also studied the piano. Mary Wood Chase is one of the youngest and also one of the finest pianists in the country, and has made a great success of teaching. As a pianist her fine technic compares favorably with that of Fannie Bloomfield-Zeisler, and she bids fair to rival that fine pianist. As an interpreter of Chopin she is particularly good and has something of the style of De Pachmann, whose playing of Chopin has been very popular. Mr. Shaffer speaks in the highest terms of Mary Wood Chase as a teacher of piano, and expects to complete a three years' course under her guidance."

The numerous friends of Mrs. Johanna Hess-Burr trust that the rest and medical treatment which she is now experiencing at Lakeside General Hospital, Milwaukee, Wis., will restore her to good health. When it is learned that during the past two years Mrs. Hess-Burr has had to contend with physical weakness, in the midst of professional duties, much sympathy will be extended toward her. In the fall she hopes to return to this city and resume teaching and concert engagements.

Theodore Spiering, director of the Spiering Violin School, in the Fine Arts Building, is spending the summer at Hartland, Wis.

Frederic Grant Gleason, director of the Chicago Auditorium Conservatory, has gone to Starlake, Wis., for the summer. William A. Willett, of the same conservatory, visited Cleveland, Ohio, this week. Phillip A. Laffey, of the violin department, will spend his vacation at Oshkosh, Wis., and Miss Beatrix M. Peixotto, one of the vocal instructors, has arranged to visit Lake Geneva, Wis.

W. S. B. Matthews has thus described the playing of Mrs. Theodore Worcester, the gifted Chicago pianist, who will be heard frequently in public next season:

Mrs. Theodore Worcester was, for many years, a pupil of that great master, Leopold Godowsky, from whom she acquired the distinguishing qualities of her work, which are ease, smoothness and refined intelligence. Mrs. Worcester makes a specialty of recital work, giving preference to the modern composers, of which her knowledge is very unusual. She plays well the most of the standard repertory of the instrument, but latterly she has been making a great deal of the Russian school, from which she plays one or two entire programs. Her range is unusual, and one of her best interpretations is that of the great Tschaikowsky concert in B flat minor.

In her Liszt interpretations she has profited from her work with Mr. Godowsky, bringing out the more refined and musical qualities of this composer, in place of emphasizing his sensationalism, which at times approaches vulgarity. In all this her beautiful finger work gives her resources of great value.

It is pleasant to observe a new player coming forward with programs composed mainly of pieces which are less common.

William H. Sherwood is now directing the piano department at the Chautauqua (N. Y.) Assembly.

Shirley Gandell, vocal instructor, has just been appointed a member of the Sherwood Music School's faculty.

SAAR IN THE CATSKILLS.—Louis V. Saar, the composer and pianist, is spending the summer in the Catskills with his family. He will return to New York on September 2.

Notice.

Mr. George Hamlin, the tenor, has made arrangements to accept, during the summer months, a limited number of pupils for instruction and coaching in singing. Apply at his studio—Kimball Hall, Wabash and Jackson, Chicago.

London Address: MR. N. VERT, 6 Cork St., London, W. Cable: "SHELDON TEW."

MR. H. WHITNEY TEW.

In America October, November and December, 1901. DATES NOW BOOKING.

American Address: Care THE MUSICAL COURIER, New York.

A Grand Piano IN AN UPRIGHT CASE.

SMITH & NIXON,

Cincinnati, Ohio,

Manufacture this instrument for MUSICIANS.

LAMPERTI SCHOOL OF MUSIC,

TO BE OPENED NOVEMBER 1, 1901.

Quartier Parc Monceau,
Paris.

Temporary Address, 3 rue Gounod.

HASLAM,

Professeur de Chant.

POSE, TECHNIQUE, STYLE, RÉPERTOIRE, OPERA, CONCERT.

☞ Direct Communication with European Managers.

54 rue Faubourg St. Honoré, PARIS.

ERICSSON

BUSHNELL.

For Dates, Terms, &c., address

177 Duane Street, NEW YORK.

The American Institute of Applied Music.

(Incorporated 1900.)

EDGAR O. SILVER, President,
212 West 59th Street, New York City.

Departments:
The Metropolitan College of Music.
The Metropolitan Conservatory of Music,
The Synthetic Piano School
The American Institute of Normal Methods.

Graded Certificates, Diplomas and the Degrees of Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc Special courses are open to students at any time.

The Faculty and Examiners: DUDLEY BUCK, A.C.M.; ALBERT ROSS PARSONS, A.C.M.; E. PRESSON MILLER; HARRY ROWE SHELLEY, A.C.M.; PAUL AMBROSE, WILLIAM F. SHERMAN, KATE S. CHITTENDEN, LILLIAN LITTLEHALES and others.

The residence department furnishes a refined and quiet home.
The advantages are unequaled in America.
For information address KATE S. CHITTENDEN, Dean.

AMERICANS AT BAYREUTH.

THE following Americans will be at the Bayreuth Festival this summer:

Schell, Miss., New York city.
Whitmer, T. C., Columbia, Mo.
Hallowell, Miss E., New York city.
Newcombe, V., New York city.
Laegler, C., Baltimore, Md.
Coyle, Miss E. B., Washington, D. C.
Bigelow, A., Boston, Mass.
Hicks, J. A., Brooklyn, N. Y.
Sheffield, Mrs. George, Boston, Mass.
Parsons, Miss G., New York city.
Scofield, Mrs. E., New York city.
Allen, F. G., Moline, Ill.
Kauser, Miss A., New York city.
Beigel, V., New York city.
Meyer, W., New York city.
Gale, W. C., New York city.
Travers, Miss S., New York city.
Adams, H. M., Galesburg, Ill.
Latimer, Miss M., Brooklyn, N. Y.
Warner, L. C., New York city.
Dickson, Mrs. C. T., New York city.
Peterson, Mrs. W., New York city.
Lumbard, Miss J. H., Berkeley, Cal.
Davison, Miss, New York city.
Drier, D. O., Brooklyn, N. Y.
Hoppenstedt, Mrs. G. L., Brooklyn, N. Y.
Wight, Delano, Cambridge, Mass.
Coffin, S., New York city.
Ferrin, Adele, Morristown, N. J.
Caldwell, R. A., New York city.
Loring, Miss, Boston, Mass.
Park, J. H., New York city.
Rogers, F. S., Albany.
Winkler, E. K., Aurora, N. Y.
McClosky, Miss, Pittsburg, Pa.
Clark, Mrs. C. W., New York city.
Lathrop, F., New York city.
Eames, Mrs. F. L., Brooklyn, N. Y.
Meyer, Mrs. H., New York city.
Latimer, Miss C., Brooklyn, N. Y.
Davison, E. M., Pittsburg, Pa.
Wood, Mrs. H. D., New York city.
Fisher, W. H., Cincinnati, Ohio.
McLeod, N., Brooklyn, N. Y.
Wilde, J. C., New York city.
McVickar, Bishop, Providence, R. I.
Schulz, Leo, New York city.
Murray, Mrs. J. F., New York city.
Odell, G. D. D., New York city.
DuBoy, Mrs. M. B., New York city.
Holt, R., New York city.
Bulkley, H. D., New York city.
Nordhoff-Jung, Dr. S. O., Washington, D. C.
Keeler, W. B., Boston, Mass.
Parker & Gray, New York city.
Weiler, F., Washington, D. C.
Selfridge, K., New York city.
Davison, E. M., Pittsburg, Pa.
Healy, Mrs. J., Boston, Mass.
Wilkins, Mrs. M. L., Cambridge, Mass.
Hammond, W. C., Holyoke, Mass.
Lauriat, Mrs. C., Brookline, Mass.
Stone, Mrs. F. C., Saginaw, Mich.
Frothingham, Mrs., Boston, Mass.
Hale, J. C., Cleveland, Ohio.
Hazen, Mrs. J. C., Pelham Manor, N. Y.
Hoffman, Dr. R., Baltimore, Md.
Bingham, Miss C., Cleveland, Ohio.
Starr, Miss F., Brooklyn, N. Y.
Morris, Mrs. G. C., Ann Arbor, Mich.
Thatcher, A. S., South Hadley, Mass.
Edgell, Mrs. G. S., New York city.
Goodrich, J. W., Boston, Mass.
Jefferys, Dr. J. A., Boston, Mass.
McKinity, Miss H., Painesville, Ohio.
Bigelow, W. P.

The above does not represent the complete list, but merely those who ordered their tickets through American sources. There are hundreds of Americans in Europe who have purchased their tickets through the London office of the Bayreuth performances or directly at Bayreuth. Estimating each purchase as representing two attendants it is probable that no less than 150 Americans will be present at each performance. This is a moderate estimate. The smallest percentage of the audiences will come from Germany itself, outside of those who are directly interested in opera or other musical matters professional.

THE KALTENBORN CONCERTS.

THE Wagner festival nights at the St. Nicholas Garden, arranged for Wednesday and Thursday, July 10 and 11, have aroused a more than passing interest among the music lovers in town. It is as a conductor of Wagner music that Mr. Kaltenborn has largely established his hold upon the New York public. When Wagnerian compositions are played at the St. Nicholas concerts the enthusiasm of the audience is great, and the young conductor is rewarded with rounds of applause. As a first violinist under one of the greatest of Wagnerian conductors, the late Anton Seidl, Kaltenborn imbibed the spirit of dramatic conducting, and thus it has come to be that New York's youngest orchestral conductor has raised up a following all his own. This evening, the first night of the festival, the concert will open with the "Tannhäuser" overture. Next will come three numbers from "Parsifal," the "Prelude," "The Flower Girl Scene" and Mr. Kaltenborn himself will play as a violin solo "The Parsifal Paraphrase." After the "Parsifal" excerpts, the "Rienzi" overture will be played. The "Lohengrin" prelude, the "Introduction to the Third Act" and the "Bridal Procession" will be played after the intermission. The "Lohengrin Narrative" will be sung by Tor Van Pyk.

The closing group for Wednesday night will be from "Tristan and Isolde." Thursday, the second night of the festival, will be devoted to parts from "The Nibelungen Ring," beginning in chronological order with "Das Rheingold" and concluding with "Die Götterdämmerung."

Miss Florence Traub, the young pianist, played with the orchestra last Wednesday evening, scoring a success with her brilliant performance of the first movement of the Rubinstein Piano Concerto in D minor.

Miss Traub, who is one of Mrs. Virgil's talented players, and who is well known to the music loving audiences of New York through her many public appearances in connection with the Virgil School, acquitted herself on this her first occasion of playing with an orchestra, with splendid honors. As an encore Miss Traub played the "Revolutionary Etude" by Chopin.

The operatic concert last Friday evening attracted one of the largest audiences of the week. Of especial interest at that concert was the singing of Mrs. Eunice St. Clair Martens, a Chicago artist, who recently returned from her studies in Europe. Mrs. Martens' voice, a rich, sympathetic dramatic soprano, completely filled the large auditorium. It is rare that one hears a voice of such power also combined with sweetness. As might be expected from a woman of such charming stage presence, Mrs. Martens won the audience, receiving after each of her solos a hearty recall. For her first number Mrs. Martens sang "The Swallow Song" from "Esmeralda," and after the intermission, when she appeared again, she sang an arioso by Delibes, and then the florid "Où voulez vous aller," by Gounod. As encores Mrs. Martens sang "Dear, When I Gaze," by Rogers, and the old English song, "When Love is Kind." Emile Levy accompanied for Mrs. Martens in his usual acceptable style.

The reorganized Kaltenborn Quartet played at the Sunday night concert. On Monday evening the vocal soloist was Miss Sadie Dorsel, soprano, a gifted pupil of Mme. Helene Maigille. More about Miss Dorsel's singing next week.

Following are the programs for Friday and Saturday evenings, and that for Sunday next:

FRIDAY, JULY 12.

Overture, Bohemian Girl.....Balfe
Ballet Music, Copelia.....Delibes
Bacchanale, Tannhäuser.....Wagner
Harp solo, selected.
Charles Schuetze.
Waltz, Where the Citron Blossoms.....Strauss
Tableau Music, Romeo and Juliet.....H. R. Shelley
Aria, Romeo and Juliet.....H. R. Shelley
Leo Liebermann.
Duo, Parting of Romeo and Juliet.....H. R. Shelley
Miss Charlotte Walker, Leo Liebermann.
Selection, Aida.....Verdi
War March, Rienzi.....Wagner

SATURDAY, JULY 13.

Overture, The Merry Wives of Windsor.....Nicolai
Selection, In Gay New York.....Kerker
Song, Oh, My Heart Is Weary.....Thomas
Miss Henrietta Wilson.
Reverie.....Bottesini
Violin solo, Mr. Kovarik.
Mice Around the Trap.....Koehler
Selection, Florodora.....Stuart
Waltz, Kroll's Ballklänge (by request).....Lumbye
American Fantaisie.....Herbert
Solo, for horn and flute, Serenade.....Titl
Mr. Schulze and Mr. Kurth.
Intermezzo, Salome.....Loraine
Galop, The Bells.....Parlow

SUNDAY, JULY 14.

Overture, Rienzi.....Wagner
Andante Cantabile, Symphony No. 4, C major.....Mozart
Scherzo, Symphony, The New World.....Dvorák
Serenade.....Schubert
Mrs. Elizabeth Hazard.
Kammenoi Ostrow.....Rubinstein
Flower Girls' Scene, Parsifal.....Wagner
Waltz, Morning Journals.....Strauss
Rhapsodie.....Lalo
I Love You.....Sobeski
Ich Liebe Dich.....Grieg
Mrs. Elizabeth Hazard.
Ballet Music, Orpheus.....Gluck
Reigen Seliger Geister.
Flute solo, Charles Kurth.
Furien Tanz.
Priests' March, Athalia.....Mendelssohn

The patrons of the St. Nicholas Garden during the recent hot wave were about the only amusement seekers in town who kept cool. The temperature in the huge auditorium registered only 74°, while outdoors it was 'way up in the nineties. The ice plant at the Garden is a wonderful success.

JESSIE SHAY AT THE KALTENBORN CONCERTS.—Miss Jessie Shay will make her second appearance this summer with the Kaltenborn Orchestra at the St. Nicholas Garden, on July 23. On that date she will play the Henselt F minor Concerto. The young pianist's performance of the Moszkowski Concerto in E major last month was one of the important musical triumphs at the St. Nicholas this season. Later on Miss Shay will play a third engagement at the Garden.

Miss Shay will spend the summer at Belle Haven, Greenwich, Conn.

RECHAB TANDY.—Rechab Tandy, the tenor, who is now in Toronto, has filled a large number of important engagements the past season, in concert, oratorio and recital work. He has also sung at many special Sabbath musical services in churches.

Published by
G. SCHIRMER, NEW YORK.
Collection of Standard Operas.
COMPLETE VOCAL SCORES.
Edition de Luxe, in cloth. $1.00 extra.

Aida.	Verdi. (Italian and English),	$2.00
Amico Fritz.	Mascagni. (Italian and English),	2.00
Barber of Seville.	Rossini. (Italian and English),	1.50
Cavalleria Rusticana.	Mascagni. (Italian and English),	1.50
Carmen.	Bizet. (French and English),	2.00
Faust.	Gounod. (Italian and English),	1.50
Flying Dutchman.	Wagner. (German and English),	1.50
Lohengrin.	Wagner. (German and English),	1.50
Lucia di Lammermoor.	Donizetti. (Italian and English),	1.00
Mignon.	Thomas. (French and English)	2.00
Romeo and Juliet.	Gounod. (French and English),	2.00
Samson and Delilah.	Saint-Saëns. (English),	2.50
Tannhäuser.	Wagner. (German and English),	1.50
La Traviata.	Verdi. (Italian and English),	1.00
Il Trovatore.	Verdi. (Italian and English),	1.00

☞ Others in preparation.

Send for Catalogue of SCHIRMER'S LIBRARY EDITION of Musical Classics.

JEANNETTE DURNO
CONCERT PIANIST,
3629 Vincennes Avenue, CHICAGO.

Mme. Matja von Niessen-Stone
MEZZO SOPRANO.
VOCAL RECITALS in English, French, German, Italian and Russian.
For terms and dates address
ALICE E. JOSEPH, 7a Hanover St., London, W., England.

CONCERT DIRECTION
ROBERT STRAKOSCH
56 Rue La Bruyere, PARIS.

Mrs. Laurence Weakley,
CONTRALTO.
ADDRESS:
610 N. 8TH STREET,
ST. JOSEPH, MO.

RARE OLD VIOLINS
Remarkable values in fine old instruments from $50 to $10,000. Largest and finest collection in the world. Send for a copy of our Catalog, just issued, containing Biographies, Fac-simile Labels, Etc. Easy Terms.
LYON & HEALY, 133 Adams Street, CHICAGO

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY
—BY THE—

MUSICAL COURIER COMPANY.

(Incorporated under the laws of the State of New York.)

St. James Building, Broadway and 26th St., New York.

TELEPHONE: 1720 Madison Square.

Cable Address: "Pegujar," New York.

ESTABLISHED JANUARY, 1880.

No. 1111.

MARC A. BLUMENBERG - - EDITOR-IN-CHIEF.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JULY 10, 1901.

LONDON, ENGLAND—
Hotel Cecil, Mr. Montague Chester, General European Representative.

BERLIN, GERMANY (Branch Office)—
Linkstrasse, 17 W., is in charge of Mr. Otto Floersheim.
Single copies for sale at the music store of Ed. Bote & G. Bock, Leipzigerstrasse 39, W.

DRESDEN—
Anna Ingman, Franklinstrasse 20.

LEIPSIC—
Hotel Hentschel, Mr. Alvin Kranich in charge.

PARIS, FRANCE—
Conducted from London Office.
Single copies for sale at Brentano's, 37 Avenue de l'Opera; 37 Rue Marbeuf; Galignani Library, 224 Rue de Rivoli; Shakespeare Library, 75 Avenue des Champs Elysées, Boulevard Kiosks.

VIENNA—
Edwin Stewart, correspondent.

ITALY—
5 Via Rondinelli, Florence, Italy, Mr. Joseph Smith in charge.

CANADIAN OFFICE—
In charge of Miss May Hamilton. Address Main Office, New York City.

CHICAGO OFFICE—
Fine Arts Building, Michigan Boulevard, C. A. Daniell in charge.

ST. LOUIS—
Nellie Allen-Hessenbruch, correspondent.

MILWAUKEE—
Controlled by Chicago Office.

INDIANAPOLIS—
Controlled by Chicago Office.

CINCINNATI OFFICE—
J. A. Homan in charge.

BOSTON OFFICE—
17 Beacon Street.

BROOKLYN OFFICE—
Hotel St. George, Clark, corner Henry Street.

BUFFALO OFFICE—
Mrs. Nellie M. Gould, 428 Ashland Avenue.

WASHINGTON OFFICE—
616 Twelfth Street, N. W., Berenice Thompson in charge.

SUBSCRIPTIONS:

Invariably in advance, including postage.

Single copies, Ten Cents.

United States, ...	$5.00
Great Britain, .	£1 5s.	Austria, . .	15 fl.
France, . .	31.25 fr.	Italy, . . .	31.25 fr.
Germany, . .	25 m.	Russia, . .	12 r.

SPENCER T. DRIGGS - - BUSINESS MANAGER

RATES FOR ADVERTISING.

PER INCH ON ADVERTISING PAGES.

Three Months.....	$25.00	Nine Months.....	$75.00
Six Months.....	50.00	Twelve Months.....	100.00

ON READING PAGES.

One inch, 3 months.....	$75 00
One inch, 6 months.....	125.00
One inch, 1 year.....	200.00

Special rates for preferred positions.

One page, one insertion.....	$300.00
One-half page, one insertion.....	175.00
One Column.....	100.00

All remittances for subscriptions or advertising must be made by check, draft or money order, payable to THE MUSICAL COURIER Company

Advertisements for the current week must be handed in by 2 P. M. on Monday.

All changes in advertisements must reach this office by Friday 5 P. M. preceding the issue in which changes are to take effect.

American News Company, New York, General Distributing Agents.

Western News Company, Chicago, Western Distributing Agents.

THE MUSICAL COURIER EXTRA.

Published Every Saturday During the Year.

GREATEST ADVERTISING MEDIUM FOR ALL MUSIC PUBLISHERS AND MANUFACTURERS and IMPORTERS OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS OR PARTS THEREOF. ALSO SPECIALLY DEVOTED TO POPULAR MUSIC and VAUDEVILLE.

For Particulars apply to "Saturday Extra Department."

THE vicious tremolo habit of singers was thoroughly discussed in THE MUSICAL COURIER several years ago. But it is an ever present evil, and we would be glad to reopen the discussion in our columns at any time.

THERE are so many good looking girls studying piano at the Marseilles Conservatory that at the regular examinations they are forced to wear masks so as not to influence the ardent jury. We know of some pianists who might wear masks in public.

THERE are several biographical works published relating to pianists, but they are not of an exalted order. The best thing for our correspondent is to procure Weitzmann's History of Piano Playing (Schirmer's) or Bie's History of the Piano and Piano Players (Schirmer's). Ernst Pauer has published a dictionary of pianists.

W. F. APTHORP'S book on the opera is the best we have yet seen. Gustav Kobbe has published an analysis of "Lohengrin" and "The Ring." This in response to a Houston correspondent. The most remarkable of all the critical studies of Wagner is, of course, Ernst Newman's. Henry T. Finck has written the best life of Wagner. All these books are to be found in Scribner's musical catalogue.

IN a Brooklyn contemporary we learn that "Leopold Winkler then sang Rhapsodie Hongroise, No. 6, by Liszt. He has a splendid voice, which was heard to excellent advantage by the large audience." This astounding feat was said to have been performed at the recent Buffalo Saengerfest. What puzzles the average reader is how could Mr. Winkler sing the octave passages in the finale of this well-known piano rhapsodie of Liszt. Next!

ELEONORA DUSE is to play in this country next winter. Gabriele d'Annunzio will accompany her. The Italian novelist has in one leap jumped into fame as the greatest of living Italian poets. "La Canzone di Garibaldi" is pronounced by the most discriminating continental and English critics as "a splendid poem, simple, robust, sonorous, vibrating with elemental melody and impregnate with elemental action." It is said to be truly epical, and all Italy welcomes with joy this return to mental and moral health of the gifted and once decadent poet.

THERE is to be a national censorship of theatrical performances, Congress having empowered the commissioners of the District of Columbia to adopt the necessary regulations. The prohibition is against any sort of indecency, whether conveyed by speech, gesture, music, or in any other way.

Now how is the commission to tell when music is indecent? It often is, but who in the name of Offenbach is to decide the matter? Here is a new occupation for the music critics.

THE late John Fiske was a great lover of music. He played the piano very well, Beethoven especially, and sang Schubert, Schumann and Brahms. His voice was a baritone. Once in a semi-humorous vein he wrote out his system of health rules as follows: "Always sit in a draught, when I find one; wear the thinnest clothes I can find, winter and summer; catch cold once in three or four years, but not severely, and prefer to work in a cold room, 55 to 60°. Work the larger part of each twenty-four hours, and by day or night indifferently. Scarcely ever change a word when once written, eat when hungry, rarely taste coffee or wine or smoke a cigar, but drink two or three quarts of beer each day, and smoke a pipe all the time when at work. Never experienced the feeling of disinclination for work, and, therefore, never had to force work. If I feel dull when at work, a half hour at the piano restores normal mental condition, which is one more argument for the hygienic and recuperative effects of music."

THE Rhode Island Society of the Cincinnati at its annual meeting in the Old State House at Newport, on the Fourth of July, passed, among other things, a resolution for the adoption of an original air or tune to the hymn "America." The idea of this is to do away with the singing of the hymn to the tune of "God Save the King."

Even as an original tune the text of "God Save the King" is without an idea. There isn't a musical thought involved in it, and it consists of a number of very commonplace sequences. It is even an ugly hymn. "America," as it is called, should have been set to some original popular music that would attract the public. There are thousands of songs and hymns to-day to which the text of "America" could be adapted with success. It is not even necessary to invent a new one, because such an invention is an inspiration.

IBSEN is more comfortable at present, though he remains seriously ill, and it is thought that the end must come within a few months. He is nursed with the greatest care by his wife, who never leaves him day or night, and he refuses to receive help from anybody else. Only with the greatest trouble can he make himself understood, and he has not enough strength to write what his tongue refuses to speak. During the few drives he has taken with his doctor it was plain to see that his formerly strong constitution has been undermined by the illness. It evidently cost him the greatest exertion to sit upright in the carriage. An impatient movement of the head showed that the drive and the sight of so many persons, who gazed at him curiously, fatigued him. His whole appearance made a sad impression. After the first attack he requested to be accurately informed as to the character of the affection. He knows that his condition is dangerous, and he daily feels his strength diminishing. With the greatest strength of will he hears the daily bulletins of the doctor, and himself gives orders as to how the inquiries are to be answered. His trouble is a cerebral one.

A WRITER in the London Musical Standard, Adolph Schloesser, asks whether the repeat marks in a sonata movement should be observed. We are inclined to the negative. Other days, other ways. The cyclical form is the best we know of, but the double bar is often a bore. Mr. Schloesser thinks so. He writes:

"We all know that in some of Beethoven's sonatas the first part is not repeated, that there is not even a double bar to show where the first part finishes and where the second part begins, though it is just as plain as if there were the usual double bar at the termination of the exposition. Think of the wondrous change and development of the form of the sonata from the earliest examples by Frescobaldi, Turini, Bach, Händel, Porpora, Rossi, Kuhnau, Corelli, &c., and later by Mozart, Haydn, Clementi, &c., until Beethoven outshone all preceding masters by his highest achievements. One cannot help wondering whether the repeat of the exposition is an actual necessity, that the structure of the movement requires it, or whether it is only an old habit, sanctioned by tradition. If a Beethoven has already broken with that habit in some of his sonatas he must have had good reasons for doing so. May not this new departure owe its origin to the fact that the subjects were at once so plainly stated that a repetition was superfluous? The backbone of the movement is the principal and the second subject; the second part opens with the working out; here the composer is free to make use of all his fancy, romanticism, contrapuntal devices and inventive power until he returns to the opening subject again, in the recapitulation. Where the first part is in a somewhat condensed form, and the second part much longer, the first part may be repeated in the interests of the symmetry of the whole movement, while otherwise the repetition of the first part does not appear to be absolutely imperative."

FOREIGN RELATIONS.

SOME peculiar affairs that have recently arisen in Germany must be of considerable interest to readers of musical matters in America, because of their peculiar application to our home conditions. We quote from the New York Staats-Zeitung of July 3 the following:

A strange story is told of Marcella Sembrich, the singer. The Chicago baritone, Hartman, endeavored to secure an engagement for her opera season at Kroll's Theatre in Berlin. The husband of the prima donna informed the applicant through the impresario, Wolff, that Madame Sembrich did not wish to have any Americans in her company.

Now, Madame Sembrich has just been engaged by Grau for the opera here. Her American engagements form the bulk of her money making resources, like those of the other singers, and this is exactly the case with Lilli Lehmann, who is engaged for a concert tour in this country, but who is really also coming over here to sing in the Grau company.

Madame Sembrich is like all of her associates of the operatic stage that come from Europe—a bitter opponent of everything that is American. She, as do the rest of them, ridicules this country and its people and for justifiable reasons, because in this operatic question the Americans are nothing else but an aggregation of fools. There is no reason whatever why the European artist who comes over here and sings for $500 a night, when he cannot get more than $100 a night in Europe on the Continent—there is no reason why he should not look upon us as a large aggregation of imbeciles—as mere money makers and people of inartistic consciences, who occupy the position in matters of art which President Schurman, of Cornell University, recently represented in an essay on the subject. It isn't a question at all as to the attitude of these opera singers—Lehmann and Sembrich in this case and of others, for they, from their point of view, have the best logical reasons for coming to such conclusions. The great question with us is, How much longer are we going to remain in this attitude? Here is a case in point which illustrates that they on the other side have no use for American artists, and they certainly have not. It is only on rare occasions that an American artist is heard in Europe. He isn't even tolerated in some sections of the Continent. Only after the greatest outlay of money and by the application of intrigue and wire pulling does an American at times succeed in being heard there, and out of a thousand Americans that study in Europe not more than one ever gets an opportunity for an artistic début or engagement. However, it is probable that the European people are right, and they look upon us purely as money makers and as people without artistic instinct, for they judge us entirely from the emulation and the monetary tribute which we pay to these foreign opera singers who come here. Madame Sembrich then, from her point of view, is right. Why should she have an American in her company? She knows that if she were to have an American in her company it would hurt her here. People in America would think less of her were she to have an American in her company. From a monetary viewpoint a baboon would be preferable. So again we say that it isn't Sembrich and Lehmann and Grau and those people, but it is the American idiot who is doing this thing and is receiving his just share of punishment.

In connection with this matter there is another little episode that has recently come to the knowledge of this paper. Mrs. Alma Webster Powell secured an engagement with the Berlin Opera. Whenever Mrs. Powell was put in the cast some other singer would send word that he or she could not sing on that occasion, and an opera had to be substituted which did not include Mrs. Powell. Now, nearly all of the singers that have come here from Germany have come from the Berlin Royal Opera—Lehmann, Niemann, Brandt, Alvary, Götze, Schumann-Heink and many others, and yet, whenever an American singer is to have an opportunity to show what she can do in opera, the intrigue forces her out, so that she is compelled to ask for a release, as Mrs. Powell was forced to, it being granted on June 11. Mrs. Powell immediately went to Munich, where she sang the Queen of the Night on the 29th of June, and made a success. We do not care to make this an official statement. We merely give this as information received from reliable sources that say they are prepared to prove their statements.

The conduct of the management of the Berlin Royal Opera has always been known to be so refined and on such an intellectual and æsthetic basis that it is difficult to perceive for one moment how it was possible for a cabal of opera singers to oust Mrs. Powell, but those things are done sometimes without the knowledge of the management. The intrigues of opera singers are notorious in the annals of opera in Europe for the last hundred years and more. They existed in the days of Mozart at Prague, and they went all through Italy, where they were part of the national life at one time, the people becoming interested in them, and they still exist in that country, as may be remembered in the recent case of Miss Goddard, of Boston, at Modena. The management itself participated in many of these intrigues, but in the case of the Berlin Royal Opera, with a man like Pierson at the head, it would be hardly reasonable to suppose that these underhand proceedings had his approval, and yet the circumstances lead us to conclude that the information is, to some extent, correct.

These personal matters are merely straws indicating the direction of the wind. Sembrich, we can reiterate, was perfectly justified in refusing to take an American singer in her company because it would injure her in America. Through the annual invasion of this foreign opera we have been gradually educated up to the fact that anything emanating from America pertaining to the art of music, be it a composition or the individual reproducer of it, is necessarily commonplace and ordinary, and has no right to demand a hearing on a basis of equality with Europe. That has been our text. We are reaping now the whirlwind, and after a while we will have become so thoroughly saturated with this thing that the American musician will have to become a millionaire first to make a success in his profession.

There is another matter here of some importance which bears upon this same subject. We publish the following, taken from the daily press:

WANT FOREIGN MUSICIANS DECLARED LABORERS.

The delegates of a number of local unions of musicians throughout the United States have decided to ask Congress to pass a law classifying foreign musicians as laborers. They say that the classification of musicians as artists by the immigration authorities puts the New York musicians in unfair competition with the musicians of other countries who are admitted as artists, whereas, if they were classified as laborers, they would come under the Contract Labor law.

Musicians are justified in this demand, namely, that every singer and every player coming here from Europe should come in under the Contract Labor Law. They are laborers; they are engaged in Europe as laborers; they receive labor wages as pay in Europe; that is to say, the laborer in this country sometimes gets twice as much money as the musical artists get in Europe, and they are recognized as laborers, and that is all, with a few exceptions—those exceptions being the musicians who have come to America first and made a reputation here, and after having made a reputation here they have returned to Europe and become known as artists. The musicians should make a great effort to put this law through Congress. It will at least afford an opportunity to put a duty on this thing which will, to some extent, compensate for the vast pay which these people get in America—a pay which we believe is, to some extent, divided with the managers. For years and years THE MUSICAL COURIER has been calling attention to these matters, and they are now finally coming to that point where they are attracting universal attention. And when they do, it will be generally admitted by everyone that THE MUSICAL COURIER foresaw these things and understood their trend and was advocating the proper steps all along for the benefit of music in America and the American musician.

PORTRAITS ON STUDIO WALLS.

MUSICIANS frequently reveal their learning and the seriousness of their art by their surroundings, more especially by the portraits upon the studio walls. In the case of a pianist of earnest purpose and thorough education one will find at least one good portrait of Beethoven. The Liszt pupils, of course, own an immense picture, with the autograph of the Weimar master signed to some appropriate inscription. Bach portraits and photos have become very common in the few years past, owing doubtless to the revival in this country of the immortal Bach works, and truly nothing in the pictorial line in musical life could be more inspiring than the noble physiognomy of Johann Sebastian Bach. (Born at Eisenach, March 21, 1685.)

One interesting group of portraits of musicians placed upon the market many years ago, and now out of print, was sold at auction incased in a wide gilt frame 2 feet wide by 3 feet long. The arrangement of the group is striking. Franz Schubert's homely but honest likeness adorns the top. Then come the three early symphony composers—Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven—in a row; Mendelssohn and Wagner, both taken with side whiskers, complete the bottom row. Altogether the arrangement is most graceful, and the portraits are excellent examples of the originals.

Some studios are so covered with pictures that one can scarcely find anything interesting to say of the arrangement, or disarrangement. When taste and symmetry are shown, the walls become a rare delight to the visitor. One of the most charming studios in this country has a frieze done in black and white pen sketches of the great musicians in chronological order, with scores or scenes illustrating the style of music which made them famous.

Sentimental pictures like "The Death of Chopin," "The Death Vision" of Von Weber and Paderewski's favorite pose abound, and are to be found in many studios. One woman known for her good taste in musical matters owns five pictures of Beethoven, none of them of intrinsic value, but each one nevertheless prized for its associations. One of the small pictures of the great Bonn master the woman picked up at a sale in a department store. The portrait engraved on celluloid is the one which gives the best view of the leonine head and physiognomy of Ludwig Van Beethoven. A facsimile of the composer's autograph is appended. The picture, included in a jumbled collection of Madonnas, holy families and country scenes, sold for 10 cents. No one could tell where the picture came from. The owner had the small portrait framed in ebony, and this with the clear pane of glass over the celluloid enhances the ivory-like effect of the background. Many people have admired this picture. Another of the woman's small pictures of Beethoven was given away as a souvenir by a piano house. This shows the composer as he approaches middle life. The portrait is colored, and the owner went to the expense of having it handsomely mounted on an easel. Another portrait is a large head of Beethoven. A fourth is a very small miniature picked up in Europe, and the fifth is included in the group of six musicians referred to above.

The sweet, spiritual face of Mozart is another one to inspire the soul of the one who studies the musical portrait galleries. Wagner being of our times, his pictures with autographs are to be found in the homes and studios of many musicians. With almost one accord the portraits of modern composers are intensely modern in expression and outline. Grieg, Dvorák, Moszkowski, Tschaikowsky, Brahms, Guilmant, Saint-Saëns, MacDowell, Foote and the rest look indeed like men in other walks of life in this age—commercial age, as Dr. Chauncey Depew expressed it in his Fourth of July speech in Paris.

MR. BETTS, in the London Daily News, writes of Boïto's new opera, "Nero":

"After publishing his libretto of 'Nero,' and after choosing Signor Tamagno as the creator of the Pagan Emperor, Dr. Boïto has withdrawn his opera from La Scala, and has gone into retirement, no one seems to know whither. Various reasons have been assigned for this step, but the true cause beyond much doubt is the diffidence of the composer, who is well aware that an opera begun a quarter of a century ago, and upon which he is still occasionally engaged, must show a strange mixture of styles. It may, perhaps, also be stated that for years past Dr. Boïto is understood to have been more or less engaged upon an opera entitled 'Orestiade,' the libretto being also from his own pen."

"NERO" SHELVED.

Of the poem itself, which has been published in Milan, the London Saturday Review has the following admirable criticism:

"At length we have the long looked for 'Nero' of that most singular of all Italian geniuses, Arrigo Boïto, and its publication is certainly the literary event of the year. If genius be indeed the infinite capacity of taking pains, then this tragedy is a work of genius. The archæology of it is quite surprising, superior far to the archæology of Sienkievics, yet we dare not say that it is overdone. The Pagan pictures are as fine and convincing a presentment in that kind as any we know, but the Christian scenes fall behind similar presentments by the author of 'Quo Vadis.' And they have not the same convincing necessity. In fact Boïto does not in this tragedy show in the same degree that quality which is his so peculiarly, the subtle power of interweaving, which reached its height in the libretto of Verdi's 'Falstaff.' 'Nerone' is a mosaic of scenes; there is a Pagan bit and a Christian bit, but the bits are as separate as white and colored marble, and the tragedy fascinates rather as a presentment of wonderful scenes than as a consistent picture. The author is careful to tell us in a brief note that the book now published differs somewhat in form from the version intended for 'scenic representation.' That version is the libretto of an opera by Boïto himself, the music of which, says popular report, is as good as finished. We hope that the many tongues of rumor are in the right. It is thirty years now since 'Mefistofele' was written, and we trust that this stalwart musical genius has been gathering strength. And when this new opera is produced in England, let us hope that there will be a proper rendering of its book by one of our better poets, or what serve for poets nowadays."

It is a pity if "Nero" is not soon heard. Boïto is dean of Italian composers since Verdi's death, and this new score may contain some revolutionary pages.

AN anonymous writer asks if it is envy, jealousy, malice or ignorance that prompted us to call Rostand a mediocrity. Not any of these, excitable sir or madame! Rostand is a clever rhetorician, a third rate poet, "a rhyming Sardou," and his literary pretensions are smiled at in Paris. But in England and America, where French is not spoken, the theatre going public—the most uncultured in the world—raved over Mansfield—who assumes eccentric manners to mask his mediocre acting—and poor Sarah Bernhardt, who has ceased to be regarded seriously in her native country for the past ten years and more. Rostand is simply a melodramatist writing pretty jingling verse. He has attempted to stem the modern realistic movement in the theatre, and the gifted Coquelin aided him in Cyrano. But a reactionary in art or literature does not last long. As a writer in the Academy truthfully says:

THE CASE OF ROSTAND.

"It is fitting that M. Rostand, the author of such astounding successes as 'Cyrano de Bergerac' and 'L'Aiglon,' should be crowned with academical glory. Where the popular M. Coppée sits the thrice popular M. Rostand may lounge. What matters that his work is of slight literary value, that his poetry is quite as bad as popular poetry should be? Is this not as it should be to explain his popularity? And when a dramatist, with the assistance of the ultra-divine Sarah, has made the round of both halves of our sphere it would be churlish to begrudge him a seat among the Immortals. But only strive to read, in the privacy of one's library, such a masterpiece as 'L'Aiglon,' and then ask yourself: 'What, in heaven's name, is the real value of academical choice?' "

Arthur Symons wittily remarked that Rostand appeals to the public as a millionaire appeals to society. He is having his little vogue, but in the real history of the drama he will cut no figure. Indeed, his success shows at what a low ebb is public taste. Bernhardt in "L'Aiglon" was simply absurd.

THE Sun last Saturday printed the two following reviews of two books about music:

Mme. Mathilde Marchesi, who for some years has been the idol of American girls who are sure that they have great voices and yearn to use them on the operatic stage, has written a book called "Ten Lessons in Singing," which the Harpers publish. The book should sell well on account of the firm belief that every young woman has who can emit a loud note that she has the making of at least a Nordica or an Eames in her, and also on account of the title, which appeals to the human failing of hoping to attain by a short cut the knowledge for which long years of study and practice are needed. Madame Marchesi puts that fact bluntly before her readers, and makes suggestions and gives hints that should be useful to those reading with understanding. Her ten lessons, however, consist mainly of chats about herself and her pupils and the singers and musicians she has seen and heard. She is very flattering to her foreign pupils. She says very nice things of Melba, and Melba writes a nice little preface about her. There is a picture of the two standing side by side for a frontispiece. W. J. Henderson writes an introduction, in which he, too, manages to say nice things about both Madame Marchesi and Madame Melba. They are all agreed, and most people will be of their opinion, that there is nothing that can come up to the Italian method of singing. Much that is of interest to musical people will be found in Madame Marchesi's reminiscences; though she employs the fetich of Garcia's name almost to excess, there is no doubt that Garcia has been a very great teacher of singing. To some people the tone in which she addresses her pupils may savor of gush, but perhaps her pupils like it. The naïve faith in her own system of instruction and management of her pupils is too genuine to be called self-advertising; but it is evident that a frame of mind resembling adoration is needed in approaching Madame Marchesi. The book is sure to be read with enthusiastic awe by some, with a good deal of amusement by others.

MARCHESI REVIEWED.

To the proposition laid down by Prof. Hugh A. Clarke, Mus. Doc., in "Highways and Byways of Music" (Silver, Burdett & Co.) "that poets and literary people in general are not only ignorant of music but singularly wanting in a due of appreciation of its position among the arts," it might be easy to join the corollary, based on no more sweeping a generalization, that musicians and persons of a musical temperament are as a rule ignorant of literature and unversed in the logical frame of mind which a literary training creates. One statement is as fair as the other. The desultory talks which Professor Clarke has collected are too slight for university extension lectures, but would probably do for women's clubs, as they deal pleasantly enough and with a show of erudition with various musical topics, but break out at times into a tone which a literary man might call flippant and a musician perhaps might designate as scherzando ma troppo. In his first essay, "Some Musical Myths," in which he puts together well-known stories about the origin of music in Greece and India and China and among the American Indians, Professor Clarke tells of a belief in India which we are glad to learn, namely, "that certain kinds of music are appropriate to certain seasons of the year, and that fatal effects will follow the performance of a piece of music at an inappropriate season." The Hindus are wise and the unmusical among us may regret that our civilization does not permit fatal effects for music out of place. A few pages further on Professor Clarke is humorous: "There must surely have been some strange power in these old tunes that is not possessed by any modern tune, except that mysterious one that nobody knows, that is said to have caused the death of the old cow." Professor Clarke has theories as regards the Teutonic element in music and also, apparently, as to modern tendencies in music.

ELSEWHERE may be found some extracts from "L'Art du Chant en France." This work just published is by P. Marcel, at one time a singer at the Paris Opéra. We understand that the absurd theories on the singing voice exposed therein are also to form the subject of the conférence to be given in Paris by the highly successful teacher M. Haslam, so well known to American students of singing.

THE next season of Chicago Orchestra will run 24 instead of 22 weeks, and the two additional weeks will prevent the orchestra from accepting many outside engagements. A few cities only will be visited hereafter. Mr. Thomas is averse to traveling, and a 24 weeks season was readily arranged.

THERE is a prospect of a legal row in case Mascagni should come to America under the management reported, as an Italian manager claims to hold a prior American contract with Mascagni made with him personally at Pesaro last summer. The editor of this paper happened to be in Florence at the time this contract was made.

Another Montefiore Pupil Sings in Public.

AT the annual concert of Simon Buchhalter, Friday, June 28, Miss Dora Gottlieb, another pupil of Caroline Montefiore, sang two effective songs by Robert Kahn —"Das Obdach" and "Der Gärtner." Miss Gottlieb created much enthusiasm with her rich dramatic soprano voice and refined interpretation. After many recalls she was obliged to sing again. There is a brilliant future before this young woman. Her voice is remarkable, and under the careful guidance of Miss Montefiore the method will be of the kind upon which reliable criticism is agreed.

Mrs. A. M. Virgil is conducting a highly successful summer school for teachers at 29 West Fifteenth street, New York. A number of very prominent teachers and directors of conservatories are here acquiring the Virgil method, for the purpose of introducing it in their schools the coming season.

"Kennst du der Mutter künste nicht?"—TRISTAN AND ISOLDE.

THE TEMPERAMENT OF ISOLDE.

I.

"I'D rather see her in her grave than as Isolde!" Mrs. Fridolin tightly closed her large, soft eyes, adding intensity to a declaration made for the benefit of her companion in a German railway carriage. The young woman laughed disagreeably.

"I mean what I say, Miss Bredd; and when you know as much about the profession as I do—when you are an older woman—you will see I am right. Meg—I should say Margaret—shall never sing Isolde with my permission. Apart from the dreadfully immoral situation, just think of the costume in the garden scene, that chiton of cheese cloth! And these Wagnerites pretend to turn up their nose at 'Faust!' I once told dear, old M. Gounod, when Meg was in Paris with Parchesi, his music was positively decent compared——"

The train, which had been traveling at a dangerous pace for Germany, slackened speed, and the clatter in the compartment ahead caused the two women to crane their heads out of the window.

"Bayreuth!" cried the younger theatrically, "Bayreuth, the Mecca of the true Wagnerite." Mrs. Fridolin gazed at her, at the neat American belted serge suit, the straw sailor hat, the demure mouse colored hair, the calm, insolent eyes—eyes that bored like a gimlet. "Oh! you love Wagner?" The girl hesitated, then answered in the broadest burr of the Middle West: "Well, you see, I haven't heard much of him, except when the Thomas Orchestra came over to our place from Chicago. So I ain't going to say whether I like him or not till I hear him. But I've written lots about the Ring——" "Without hearing it? How very American!"—— "And I'm a warm admirer of your daughter. Madame Fridolina always seemed to me to be a great Wagner singer. Now she can sing the Liebestod better than any of the German women——" "Thank you, my dear; one never goes to Bayreuth for the singing." "I know that; but as it's my first trip over here I mean to make the most of it. I am a journalist, you know, and I'll write lots home about Wagner and Fridolina."

"Thanks again, my dear young lady. I'm sure you will tell the truth. Margaret was refused the Brünnhilde at the last moment by Madame Cosima—that's Mrs. Wagner you know—and she had to content herself with Fricka in 'Rheingold' and Gutrune in 'Götterdämmerung,' two odious parts. But what can she do? The Brünnhilde is Gulbranson. She is a great favorite in Bayreuth, and has kept her figure, while poor Meg—wait till you see her!"

The train rounded the curve and leaving behind the strange looking theatre, surely a hieratic symbol of Wagner's power, entered the station full of noisy, gabbling, curious people—Bayreuth at last.

II.

The atelier was on the ground floor at the end of a German garden full of angular desolations. It was a large, bare, dusty apartment, the glare of the August sun tempered by green shades almost obscuring the big window facing the north. A young woman sat high on a revolving platform. She was very fat. As the sculptor fixed her with his slow glance he saw that her head, a pretty head, was too small for her monstrous bulk. The profile, pure Greek, the eyes ox-like, the cups full of feeling, with heavy accents beneath them. Her face, almost slim, had planes eloquent with surface meanings upon the cheeks and chin; while the mouth, sweet for a large woman, revealed amiability quite in accord with the expression of the eyes. These were the glory of her countenance, these and her resonant black hair. Isolate this head from the shoulders, from all the gross connotations of the frame, and the trick would be done. So thought the sculptor, as the problem posed itself clearly; then he saw her figure and shuddered.

"I am hopeless, am I not, Herr Arthmann?" Her voice was so frankly appealing, so rich in comic intention, that he sat down and despite himself laughed. She eagerly joined in: "And yet my waist is not so large as Mitwindt's. We always call her Bagpipes. She is absurd. And such a chest——! Why, I'm a mere child. Anyhow, all Germans like big singers, and all the German Wagner singers are big women, are they not, Herr Arthmann? There were Alboni, Parepa-Rosa—I know they were not Wagner singers; but they were awful all the same—and just look at the Schnorrs, Materna, Rosa Sucher, poor Klafsky and——" "My dear young friend," interrupted the sculptor as he took up a pointer and approached a miniature head in clay which stood upon a stand, "my dear"—he did not say friend the second time—"I remarked nothing about your figure being too large for the stage. I was trying to get it into harmony, your magnificent shoulders and antique head. That's all." His intonation was caressing, his speech that of a cultivated man, and his accent slightly Scandinavian. At times his voice seemed to her as sweetly staccato as a mandolin. He gazed with all his vibrating artistic soul into the girl's humid blue eyes; half frightened she looked down at her pretty dimpled hands, the hands of a baby despite their gladiatorial size.

"How you do flatter! All foreigners flatter American girls, don't they? Now you know you don't think my shoulders magnificent, do you? And my waist—O! Herr Arthmann, what shall I do with my waist? As Brünnhilde, I'm all right to move about in loose draperies; but as Fricka, as Gutrune—Gutrune who falls fainting beside Siegfried's bier! How must I look on my back? Oh, dear! and I diet all the time, never drink water at meals, walk half the day and seldom touch a potato. And you know what that means in Germany! There are times when to see a potato, merely hearing the word mentioned, brings tears to my eyes. And yet I get no thinner—just look at me!"

He did. Her figure was gigantic. She weighed much over 200 pounds, though the mighty trussing to which she subjected herself and her discreet manner of dressing made her seem smaller. Arthmann was critical, and did not disguise to himself the impossibility of the task. He had determined on a head and bust, something heroic after the manner of a sturdy Brünnhilde. All the preparations were made. There was the skeleton, the framework of lead pipe for the clay, with the crossbar for the shoulders and the wooden "butterflies" in position. On the floor were water buckets, wet cloths and a vast amount of wet clay—clay to catch the fleshly exterior, clay to imprison the soul—perhaps—of Fridolina. But nothing had been done except the tiny wax model, a likeness full of spirit, slightly encouraging to the perplexed artist. The girl was beautiful; eyes, hair, teeth, coloring—all enticed him as man. As sculptor the shapeless, hopeless figure was a thing for sack-like garments, not for candid clay or the illuminating commentary of marble. She drew a silk shawl closer about her bare shoulders.

"And Isolde—what shall I do? Frau Cosima says that I may sing it two summers from now; but then she promised me Brünnhilde two years ago after I had successfully sung Elsa. I know every note of Tristan, for I've had over a thousand piano rehearsals, and Herr Siegfried and Caspar Dennett both say that in time it will be my great role." "Who was it you mentioned besides the Prince Imperial?"—they always call Siegfried Wagner the Prince Imperial or the Heir Apparent in Bayreuth. "Mr. Dennett. He is the celebrated young American conductor—the only American that ever conducted in Bayreuth. You saw him the other night at Sammett's garden. Don't you remember the smooth faced, very good looking young man?—you ought to model him. He was with Siegfried when he spoke to me." "And you say that he admires your Isolde?" persisted Arthmann, pulling at his short reddish beard. "Why, of course! Didn't he play the piano accompaniments?" "Was his wife always with you?" "Now, Herr Arthmann, you are a regular gossipy German! Certainly she wasn't. We don't need chaperons in America, like your Ibsen women—are you really Norwegian or Polish? Is your name Wenceslaus, Bohemian or Polish? Besides, here I am alone in your studio in Bayreuth, the most scandal-mongering town I ever heard of. My mother would object very much to this sort of thing, and I'm sure we are very proper." "Oh, very," replied the sculptor, "when do you expect your mother. To-morrow, is it not?"

The girl nodded. Tired of talking she watched with cool nervousness the movements of the young man; watched his graceful figure, admirable poses; his long, brown fingers smoothing and puttering in the clay; his sharply etched profile, so melancholy and insincere. "And this Dennett?" he resumed. She opened her little mouth. "Please don't yawn, Fridolina," he begged. "I wasn't yawning, only trying to laugh. Dennett is on your mind. He seems to worry you. Don't be jealous—Wenceslaus; he is an awful flirt and once frightened me to death by chasing me around the dressing room at the opera till I was out of breath and black and blue from pushing the chairs and tables in his way. And what do you suppose he gave as an excuse? Why he just said he was exercising me to reduce my figure, and hadn't the remotest notion of kissing me. Oh, no, he hadn't, had he?" She pealed with laughter, her companion regarding her with tense lips. "No one but a Yankee girl would have thought of telling such a story." "Why is it improper?" She was all anxiety. "No, not improper, but heartless, simply heartless. You have never loved, Margaret Fridolina," he said, harshly. "Call me Meg, Wenceslaus, but not when mamma is present," was her simple answer. He threw down his wooden modeling spatula.

"Oh, this is too much," he angrily exclaimed: "you tell me of men who chase you—"a man Wenceslaus," she corrected him earnestly—"you tell me all this and you know I love you, without your love I shall throw up sculpture and go to sea as a sailor. Meg, Meg have you no heart?" "Why, you little boy, what have I said to offend you? Why are you so cynical when I know you are really so sentimental?" Her voice was arch, an intimate voice with liquid inflections. He began pacing the chilly floor of the studio.

"Let us be frank. I've only known you two months, since the day we accidentally met leaving Paris for Germany. You have written your mother nothing of our engagement * * * well, provisional engagement, if you will—and you insist on sticking to the operatic stage. I loathe it and I confess to you that I am sick with jealousy when I see you near that lanky, ill favored, German tenor Burgmann." "What poor, big me!" she interjected, in teasing accents. "Yes, you, Fridolina. I can quite sympathize with what you tell me of your mother's dislike for the role of Isolde. You are not temperamentally suited to it—it is horrible to think of you in that second act." "How horrible? My figure, you mean?" "Yes, your figure, too, would be absurd." He was brutal now. "And you haven't the passion to make anything of the music. You've never loved, never will, passionately——" "But I'll sing Isolde all the same," she cried. "Not with my permission." "Then without you and your permission." She hastily arose and was about to step down from her pedestal when the door opened.

"Mother! Why, mamma, you said you weren't coming until Sunday." Mrs. Fridolin could not see very well in the heavy shadows after the blinding sunlight without. "What are you doing here Margaret, and of all things alone up there on a throne! Is this a rehearsal for the opera?" "I'm not alone, mother. This is Wenceslaus—Mr. Wenceslaus Arthmann, the sculptor, mamma, and he is 'doing' me in clay. Look at it; isn't it sweet? Mr. Arthmann, this is my mother—and who is the young lady, mamma?" "Oh, I forgot. I was so confused and put out not finding you at the station I drove at once to Villa Wahnfried——" "Villa Wahnfried!" echoed two voices in dismayed unison. "Yes, to Frau Cosima, and she directed me here." She directed you here?" "Yes, why shouldn't she? Is there anything wrong?" asked the stately, high nosed lady with the gray pompadour, beginning to peer about suspiciously. "Oh, no, mamma, but how did Frau Cosima know that I was here?" "I don't know child," was the testy answer. "Come, get down and let me introduce you to my charming traveling friend, Miss Bredd." "Miss Saïs Bredd," put in the Western girl; "I was named Saïs after my father visited Egypt, but my friends call me Louie"—"and Miss Bredd, this is Mister ——" "Arthmann, madame," said the sculptor. They all shook hands after the singer had released her mother from a huge, cavernous hug. "But Meg, Meg, where is your chaperon?" Fridolina looked at the young man: "Why, mamma, it was the hausfrau who let you in, of course." Miss Bredd smiles cynically.

III.

Up the Via Dolorosa toiled a Sunday mob from many nations. The long nebulous avenue, framed on either side by dull trees, was dusty with the heels of the faithful ones, and the murmur of voices in divers tongues recalled the cluttering of the sea on a misty beach. Never swerving, without haste or rest, went the intrepid band of melomaniacs, speaking of the singers, the weather, veal, beds and prices until the summit was reached. There the first division broke ranks and charged upon the caravansary which still stood the attacks of thirsty multitudes after two decades. Lucky ones grasped schoppen. of beer and Rhine wine, hemmed in by an army of expectant throats, for the time was at hand when would sound Donner's motive from the balcony, music made by brass instruments warning the elect that "Rheingold" was about to unfold its lovely fable of water, wood and wind.

Mrs. Fridolin went to the theatre and longed with mother's eyes for the curtains to part and discover Fricka. She took her seat unconcernedly; she was not an admirer of Wagner, educated as she had been in the florid garden of Italian song. The darkness at first oppressed her. When from mystic space welled those elemental sounds, not mere music, but the sighing, droning, rhythmical swish of the waters, this woman knew that something strange and terrible was about to enter into her consciousness. The river Rhine calmly, majestically stole over her senses; she forgot Bellini, Donizetti, even Gounod; and soon she was with the Rhine Daughters, with Alberich. * * * Her heart seemed to stop. All sense of identity vanished at a wave of Wagner's wand, as is absorbed the ego by the shining mirror of the hypnotist. This then was the real Wagner, a Wagner who attacked simultaneously all the senses, vanquished the strongest brain; a Wagner who wept, wooed, sang and surged; ravished the soul until it was brought lacerated, and captive to the feet of the victorious master magician! The eye was promise crammed, the ears sealed with bliss, and she felt the wet of the waters. She breathed hard as Alberich scaled the slimy steeps; and the curves described by the three swimming mermaids filled her with the joy of the dance, the free ecstatic movements of free things in the waves. The filching of the Rhinegold, the hoarse shout of laughter from Alberich's love foresworn lips and the terrified cries of the luckless watchers were as real to her as life. Walhall did not confuse her, for now she caught clues to the meaning of the mighty epic. Wotan and Fricka—ah! Meg did not look so stout; and how lovely her voice sounded—Loki, mischief making, diplomatic Loki; the giants, Fafner and Fasolt; Freia, and foolish, maimed, malicious Mime—these were not mere papier-maché, but fascinating deities. She saw the gnomes' underworld, saw the ring, the snake and the tarnhelm; she heard the Nibelungs' anvil chorus—so different from Verdi's—saw the giants quarreling over their booty; and the sonorous rainbow seemed to bridge the way to a fairer land. As the Walhall march died in her ears she found herself outside on the dusky, picturesque esplanade, and forgot all about Meg, remembering her only as Fricka. With the others she slowly trod the path that had been pressed by the feet of art's martyrs. Mrs. Fridolin then gave tongue to her whirring brain:

"Oh! the magic of it all," she gasped. "I'm afraid I rather agree with Nordau, Mrs. Fridolin—the whole affair reminds me of a tank drama I once saw in Chicago." It was the cool voice of Miss Bredd that sounded in the hot, humming lane punctuated by vague, tall tress. * * *

[To be continued.]

AN advertisement in this issue announces that the concert, oratorio and recital engagements of the artists of the Metropolitan Opera Company are under the sole control of Ernest Goerlitz, Metropolitan Opera House, this city.

SOUSA'S RETURN.

JOHN PHILIP SOUSA and his band were welcomed by throngs of admirers at the Manhattan Beach Hotel last Sunday afternoon, when the first concert of the present engagement was given. The band had just come from Buffalo, where it had won a series of brilliant successes at the Pan-American Exposition.

Sunday afternoon the music pavilion was crowded. There was not a vacant seat and many persons were content to stand during the concert.

The program presented was excellent, the piece de resistance being Sousa's new march, "The Invincible Eagle.' This was received with every evidence of delight, and aroused unbounded enthusiasm. Of course it had to be repeated several times before the audience was satisfied. This march is one of sterling merit, full of originality and strength. It bids fair to become as popular as any of its predecessors. Sousa's melodic vein seems incessant; his fountain of inspiration is apparently inexhaustible

Sunday night another large crowd attended the concert, and gave the band and its leader a rousing reception.

THE FLETCHER MUSIC METHOD.

Evelyn A. Fletcher-Copp.

NEARLY five years ago the musical world was aroused to great interest and enthusiasm over the introduction into America of the Fletcher music method. No one invention in the way of musical instrument or system, it was said, had ever surpassed the importance of this method. Its aim is the simplification of the study of music, and this is accomplished, because musical study has been put on a pedagogical basis and the interest of the children aroused by the cleverly invented sets of apparatus.

The originator of the system, Evelyn A. Fletcher-Copp, has since then spent five very busy years, and has instructed over 300 teachers in her system. These teachers are scattered over the United States and Canada, and a small number are already in Europe. The system has been indorsed by the leading musicians in America and Europe, and among the list appear such prominent names as Dr. Hugo Riemann, Leipsic; William Cummings, Guildhall School of Music, London, England; Antoinette Sterling, Signor Garcia, Dr. William Mason, Thomas Tappert, B. J. Lang, John Orth and many others.

The system opens up a new field of success and usefulness for music teachers, for it makes it possible for almost every child to succeed in his music, and the gaining of his musical knowledge is a pleasure to himself as well as to those around him. Children are taught in classes, although the method can be as successfully taught privately. The apparatus invented by the originator is protected by patents, in order that she may keep the system in the hands of competent teachers adapted to this work, and she even limits the teaching of teachers to herself, as many another for the sake of pecuniary gain might accept a teacher quite unfitted to the work.

The method, besides giving a thorough knowledge of notation, chords, scales, intervals, keyboard, time and rhythm, gives a very systematic course in memorizing, analysis, ear training, a knowledge of musical instruments and many other things necessary, and yet so seldom taught to young pupils desiring to be all round musicians.

Evelyn A. Fletcher-Copp, who has for the last few years made her headquarters in New York, since her marriage has resided in Brookline (a suburb of Boston, Mass.), but as she will continue her work in the same way as heretofore, she expects to hold two normal classes each year in New York city. At present she is in Buffalo with a large normal class composed of teachers from as far south as Texas and as far west as the Pacific Coast.

Two years ago the method was very satisfactorily introduced into Europe by Miss Fletcher, who gave at that time some important lectures before large musical societies, such as the Incorporated Society of Musicians, of which she is a member, and the Royal Academy of Music for the Blind. She also gave demonstrations while in Leipsic, Berlin and Brussels. There is already a demand for another normal class in England.

The teachers of the Fletcher music method who are located in and about Boston have formed the Fletcher Association with a large membership. Lectures are given before this association by well-known musicians upon various topics, the one of last week being by John Orth, in "How to Practice."

There have been so many demands for lectures and lessons from Mrs. Fletcher-Copp that it is in the possibilities of the coming season that she makes an extended lecture tour through the West, perhaps as far as the Pacific Coast, where much interest is expressed in her system. In spite of the large number of teachers who are now using the Fletcher music method, the demand for instructors is greatly in excess of the supply. But time will correct that before many years. During the summer many teachers take advantage of the holiday time to secure lessons from Mrs. Fletcher-Copp who are unable to give up a winter to the study of the Fletcher music method.

Already a large number of applications for lessons have been made beginning with the September season.

LACHMUND IN MINNESOTA.—Carl V. Lachmund, of the Lachmund Conservatory of Music, is visiting his aged mother at Duluth, Minn. Later Mr. Lachmund and Mrs. Lachmund will visit the parents of the latter at Minneapolis. After returning from Minnesota the Lachmunds will go to Maine and spend the remainder of the summer in a camp.

The National Conservatory of Music of America, 128 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

JEANNETTE M. THURBER, PRESIDENT.

Artistic Faculty, consisting of { RAFAEL JOSEFFY, ADELE MARGULIES, LEOPOLD LICHTENBERG, LEO SCHULZ, HENRY T. FINCK, MAX SPICKER, CHARLES HEINROTH, AND OTHERS.

SUMMER TERM BEGINS IN MAY.

ADMISSION DAILY. . . . . .

O. B. BOISE TO FLOERSHEIM.

MY DEAR FLOERSHEIM—It just occurs to me that the twenty-fifth anniversary of the beginning of your career as musical critic is near at hand, and having observed its course I want to add my testimony to that of all honest musicians who are conversant with your aims and results.

Your artistic nature and assertive devotion to art interests have endowed your reviews with a weight which has accomplished incalculable good. That your big heart may beat faster whenever you see a spark of talent for another twenty-five years, as it has in the past, is the wish of your devoted friend, O. B. BOISE.

BERLIN, June 21, 1901.

COMPOSITIONS OF SEBASTIAN B. SCHLESINGER.

Op. 14.—Three Songs, published by J. H.Schroeder, New York, and Chappell & Co., London.
- Requiescat. For mezzo soprano.
- I Once Had a Sweet Little Doll, Dear. For soprano.
- Mother, Oh Sing Me to Rest. For mezzo soprano.

Op. 15.—The Broken Flower. For tenor or soprano, published by J. H. Schroeder, New York.

Op. 16.—The Buried Flower. Song for bass or alto voice, published by E. Schuberth & Co., 23 Union square, New York.

Op. 17.—Sing to Me Some Homely Ballad. For mezzo soprano, published by E. Schuberth & Co., 23 Union square, New York.

Op. 18.—Five Miniatures for Piano, published by Novello, Ewer & Co., 1 Berners street, London, W., and E. Schuberth & Co., New York.
- Pleasant Dreams.
- Good Morning.
- Melody.
- Meditation.
- Flirtation.

Op. 19.—Ave Maria. For soprano, published by Novello, Ewer & Co. and Oliver Ditson & Co., Boston.

Op. 20.—Shadows. Song for soprano or mezzo soprano, published by E. Schuberth & Co.

Op. 21.—I Would We Had Not Met Again, published by E. Schuberth & Co.

Op. 22.—Two Lyrics. I Shall Return Again. Bass or baritone. The Answer. Soprano or mezzo soprano, published by Oliver Ditson & Co., Boston.

Op. 23.—Maidens Who Laughed Thro' the Vines. For baritone, published by C. H. Ditson & Co., 867 Broadway, New York; Oliver Ditson & Co., Boston.

Op. 24.—Two Songs. for soprano, published by E. Schuberth & Co., New York.
- The Lost Word.
- A Valentine.

Op. 25.—I Love Thee. Duet for soprano and tenor, published by Novello, Ewer & Co.

Op. 26.—Improvisation. For piano solo, published by A. P. Schmidt.

Op. 27.—Nine Songs, published by A. P. Schmidt.
- The Midnight Wind, for bass or baritone.
- A Birthday Song, for mezzo soprano.
- When Twilight's Dews Are Falling, for soprano.
- Slumber Song, with violin obligato, for mezzo soprano.
- The Cry of the Dreamer, for contralto or baritone.
- A Thought of Home at Sea, for mezzo soprano.
- Rio Verde Song, for soprano.
- And Yet He's Far Away, for soprano.
- Summer's Madrigal, for soprano.

Op. 28.—Impromptu Caprice, for piano solo, published by A. P. Schmidt.

Op. 29.—Mr. Nobody, song for baritone, published by W. A. Pond & Co., 25 Union square, New York.

PAUR NEXT SEASON.

EMIL PAUR, with his symphony orchestra, will make an extended tour the coming season. The larger cities of the West, Southwest and Northwest will have the opportunity of hearing a remarkably strong orchestra conducted by a man who stands to-day in New York and the East where few, very few, other men of music have stood. Emil Paur is the only conductor America has ever had who has held the three great positions, namely: Conductor of German opera in the Metropolitan opera of New York, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and, subsequently, of the New York Philharmonic Society. Theodore Thomas was conductor of the Philharmonic and now is at the head of the Chicago Orchestra, while the late Anton Seidl had both the Philharmonic and the German opera. Mr. Paur's work the past four years, since he came to New York at the close of his five years' work as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has steadily grown in its influence and has shown results which four years ago would have been thought impossible, especially under the existing unfavorable circumstances for the growth of orchestral music in New York.

Mr. Paur is a forceful, intelligent and always artistic conductor, and therefore always interesting. Fortunate indeed are those cities which will be able to hear him and study him in contrast with others equally great. This is itself an education, in fact the very best. The names of the soloists will be announced as soon as the negotiations now pending are closed. The project has the backing of responsible persons, and the success of the venture is beyond doubt.

Von Klenner Summer Studio on Lake Chautauqua.

MME. EVANS VON KLENNER'S summer studio is now open at the Waldmere at Lakewood on Lake Chautauqua. Those who have seen the place declare it to be one of the finest summer schools ever conducted in this country. A number of Madame Von Klenner's pupils are with her and others are to follow this week. The school on the cool and invigorating lake will remain open throughout the summer, and one of the features will be the musicales later on in the season.

Madame Von Klenner has taken the house at 230 West Fifty-second street and by October 1 will open her New York school at that address. The house, a fine four story building, is conveniently located to the concert halls and in every way will prove an advantage to the Von Klenner pupils who may desire to take up a residence with their teacher. As the house is a large one, Madame Von Klenner will be able to accommodate a limited number of students.

Scottish Recitals by Amy Murray.

MISS AMY MURRAY, who is now touring the British possessions north of the United States, has received a letter from the honorary secretary of the Y. M. C. A. in Stirling, Scotland, offering her a re-engagement in the "Star Course." Miss Murray gave one of her Scottish recitals under the auspices of the Stirling Y. M. C. A. last October. In his letter to Miss Murray the honorary secretary states:

We shall be glad to hear if you will give us a lecture on a Friday evening in January or February next. You know you will get a warm welcome if you come back again, and none more so than from the Stirling Y. M. C. A. Yours faithfully, JAMES BANKS.

Subjoined are extracts from recent newspaper reports in the northern provinces:

Miss Amy Murray in her "Scotch Songs" last night afforded us the greatest musical treat that we have enjoyed for years. Her voice is highly cultured, strong, full of melody, sweet and possessed of that peculiar magnetic power which carries her audience along with her. Particularly was this noticeable in her rendering of "The Flowers of the Forest." It seemed as if her very soul were stirred to its depths while she sang of the brave young men who had fallen in the battles, "The Flowers of the Forest."—Daily Examiner, Charlottetown, P. E. I., June 29, 1901.

Miss Murray's voice is extremely rich and flexible, giving expression with equal ease to the dreamy pathos of "Sweet Afton" and "The Rowan Tree," the more piercing sorrow of "The Flowers of the Forest" and "Will Ye No' Come Back Again?" the arch sprightliness of "Whistle and I'll Come to Ye" and "Hey, Johnnie Cope," and the martial fire of "Bonnie Dundee" and "Cam' Ye by Athol." The closing piece on the program was Lady Nairne's well-known "Caller Herrin'," sung in the costume of a Newhaven fishwife more realistically than it is usually given. The Scottish harp or clarsach to which the Gaelic songs were sung created much interest, and Miss Murray's knowledge of "the tongue first spoken in Eden" was voted remarkable.—The Casket, Antigonish, N. S., June 20.

Kubelik in London.

E. A. DITHMAR, the well-known critic of the New York Times, cabled the following to his paper last Sunday:

LONDON, July 6.—Young Kubelik has finished his second series of concerts in London without quite justifying the claims of marvelous powers made for him. He is scarcely yet a violinist of the very first rank, but there is no doubt that he has made a great English reputation.

We understand from private sources that Rudolph Aronson has an option on Kubelik for the United States, and it is also rumored that Daniel Frohmann has secured a like privilege. We cannot vouch for the truth of either report.

THIS SPACE IS TO BE DEVOTED TO THE INSERTION OF

PORTRAITS OF SUCCESSFUL

BOWMAN PUPILS

Mr. BOWMAN is assigning LESSON HOURS for next season. Early application is suggested. He may be addressed until SEPT. 5th at HIS SUMMER HOME, Grand View Cottage, SQUIRREL ISLAND, COAST OF MAINE

E. M. BOWMAN. Piano and Theory Studio: Steinway Hall, New York.

Organist and Conductor Baptist Temple Choir, Brooklyn.

THE PAUR SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

EMIL PAUR, Conductor.

Conductor New York Philharmonic. Formerly Conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MISS ANNA MILLAR, Manager,

WISSNER PIANO USED. 540 Fulton Street, Brooklyn, New York.

Pears'

Do you know the most luxurious bath in the world?

Have you used Pears' Soap?

Sold all over the world.

Sarah Bernhardt says: "It is simply perfect."

BAILEY

THIS IS TO { MUSICAL CLUBS / MUSICAL SOCIETIES / MUSICAL MANAGERS and Speculators in Musical Attractions.

If you want to please your people, fill your houses and make money, then engage ARTISTS THAT DRAW—artists that the public REALLY want to hear.

Young WM. WORTH BAILEY

the Blind Violinist is TRULY a GREAT artist.

ELIZABETH NORTHROP, Soprano / EDWIN M. SHONERT, Pianist } Assisting Artists.

A Season of 50 Concerts is being arranged by

R. E. JOHNSTON,

SUMMER ADDRESS, 257 West 92d Street, New York City,

Whom you should write for particulars. NOTE—Send for Booklet and Souvenir.

CINCINNATI, July 6, 1901.

THE last of the closing series of Conservatory of Music recitals were of considerable interest. Many of the normal class presented their claims to good training.

On Monday evening, June 24, pupils of Miss Clara Baur, Miss Frances Moses, Miss Helen May Curtis, Hugo Sederberg, Louis Schwebel and Pier Adolfo Tirindelli appeared in the following program:

La Morena.....Chaminade
Spring Song.....Seeling
Tarentelle Fantastique.....Salmon
Miss Clara Putman.
Alhumblatt.....Bungert
Miss Florence Edmondson.
Piano soli—
Abends.....Raff
Caprice, op. 4.....Moszkowski
Miss Elizabeth Mudd.
Gondoliera.....P. Scharwenka
Etude, G major.....Moszkowski
Miss Clara Hindersman.
Recitation, Rivermouth Rocks.....Whittier
Miss Lena Ruscher.
Prés de Berceau.....Moszkowski
Sonata in F major, No. 7.....Mozart
Miss Emma Clark.
Aria, Daughter of the Regiment.....Donizetti
Mrs. Robert Parks.
Recitation, Oh, Sir! translated from the French by.....Alfred Ayers
Miss Sallie Reemelin.
Le Papillon.....Lavallee
Miss Bella Bowman.
Violin soli—
Legende.....Wieniawski
Mazurka.....Wieniawski
Miss Francesca Nast.
Concerto, A major.....Mozart
First movement. Cadenza by Reinecke.
(Orchestral part on second piano.)
Miss Alice Langdon.
Waltz Song.....Gumbert
Miss Carrie Rieder.
Impromptu, A flat major, op. 142.....Schubert
Les Deux Alouettes.....Leschetizky
Miss Bernice Hicks.
Rondo, D major.....Mozart
Etude.....Wollenhaupt
Tarentelle in A minor.....Raff
Miss Eliza Abbott.

I was particularly struck by the fact that both instrumentalists and vocalists showed the unity of system in force at the conservatory.

The results were substantial—nothing of the uncertain sort. It would hardly be in place to select one more than another for criticism, and yet there was something particularly satisfactory in the pupils of Miss Moses and Mr. Sederberg that deserves to be emphasized.

On Tuesday evening, June 25, the pupils of Miss Clara Baur, Miss Laura Anderson, Miss Frances Moses, Mrs. Ira Kennedy Wickersham, Miss Susan Monarch, Miss Frances Shuford and Miss Amalie Staaf were in evidence. Program:

March, from Leonore Symphony.....Raff
Arranged for eight hands.
Miss Della Eppinger, Miss Selma Benjamin, Miss Bella Bowman, Miss Madeline Mayer.
Valse Caprice, Eglantine.....Loeschhorn
Miss May Siebert.
Introduction and Allegro Scherzoso, op. 87.....Raff
Miss Nellie Hosbrook.
Valse Song, Nymphs and Fauns.....Bemberg
Miss Sadie Reed.
Gavotte, D major.....Pirani
Arranged for two pianos.
Miss Elizabeth Brown.
Sonata, op. 2, No. 3 (first movement).....Beethoven
Miss Ivy Edmondson.
Song, The Swallows.....Cowen
Miss Florence Teal.
Murmuring Zephyrs.....Jensen
Miss Grace Treharn.
Waltz, Impromptu, B flat major.....Raff
Miss Alma Mueller.
Le Papillon.....Lavallee
Miss Emily Wickersham.
Au Rouet, op. 35.....Godard
Miss Selma Benjamin.
Waltz Impromptu, D flat major.....Raff
Miss Clara Oehler.
Nocturne, D flat major.....Ravina
Miss Della Eppinger.
Songs—
Midsummer Dreams.....D'Hardelot
Dost Thou Know?.....Massenet
Miss Jeanne Beresford.
Caprice Espagnol.....Moszkowski
Miss Edith Witt.
Recitative, Fia dunque vero (La Favorita).....Donizetti
Aria, O Mio Fernando (La Favorita).....Donizetti
Miss Blanche Loewenstine.
Valse Caprice, No. 3.....Jensen
Miss Hilda Marks.
Concerto, No. 19 (first movement).....Mozart
Cadenza by Hummel.
(Orchestral part on second piano.)
Miss Carrie E. Willson.

The march from "Leonore" Symphony was given with a great deal of rhythmic precision and no small degree of brilliancy. Miss Moses deserves much credit for the training.

Mrs. Fanny Polk Hosea writes the following account of the Bohlmann-Monarch nuptials, which were solemnized on Monday afternoon, July 1, at the Conservatory of Music:

"The marriage of Theodor Bohlmann and Miss Monarch was solemnized at the conservatory with fitting impressiveness and that exquisite propriety that pervades all the functions of this institution, like its own atmosphere. Recital Hall, with flowers, palms and garlands, and beautiful organ music, seemed to grow into a church as the cortège walked to the altar, where the Episcopal service was read by Mr. Nelson, rector of Christ Church. Miss Monarch received her musical education at the conservatory, and is one of the most talented of the younger pianists of the day, so that this wedding tendered by Miss Baur to two members of her faculty possessed a double grace—showing affection for her pupil as well as regard for the artist professor whose home in distant Germany she sought to represent by this wedding and reception at his music home in America. Mr. Bohlmann is now on his way, as fast as the Barbarossa can take them, to show his lovely American bride to his family in Berlin, while, as in the case of the wonderful outburst of song that followed Schumann's marriage, may we not look for many lieder, for which Herr Bohlmann has so charming a talent? In this way only can such a man voice the new life begun under these happy auspices, and thus will the world be made richer."

Mr. and Mrs. Albino Gorno have gone East on their vacation, which they expect to spend in this country for the first time in many years, as they usually go to their lovely summer home on Lake Como.

Frederic Shailer Evans, of the Conservatory of Music faculty, sailed July 3 on the Lombardia for Italy. He is accompanied by his father and mother.

Mr. and Mrs. Georg Krueger sailed Thursday from New York for London, and thence go to Baden-Baden and the Black Forest for the summer months.

It is said that the May Festival Association, of Louisville, is contemplating giving an oratorio in September, and is negotiating for the services of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra for that occasion.

What is generally conceded by critics to be the best company that ever appeared during the summer at Chester Park began a season of opera two weeks ago in the beautiful pavilion of this resort with "The Black Hussar." The company is under the financial management of Thomas H. Persse, with Al. Roth as the business agent. Mr. Persse, who is well known in the East, is the tenor and leading voice of the company, and this combination of art and business in one and the same person ought to prove a successful and profitable one. The critic of the Enquirer thus spoke of the initial performance:

The beauty and fitness of this particular opera, however, are of minor importance to the fact that the company is the best one, taking everything into consideration, that has been heard here for several seasons, and probably the best balanced that has ever been heard in the park. Of late years opera as given here has been woefully in need of an adequate tenor, but Thomas H. Persse seems to fill all the requirements. Besides possessing a smooth, mellow voice of good range and excellent timbre, he has the presence necessary to make a satisfactory stage hero, and after the first act of last night's offering his popularity was assured. As the handsome Colonel of the Black Hussars he was a decided hit, and with the other principals earned an encore and a curtain recall at the end of this act.

In Edith Mason the company provides a soprano who is certain to become a strong favorite before the season has progressed much further. She has a voice of excellent quality and great flexibility. Combined with this she has a charming personality, and in the character of Minna displayed good command of all those little tricks that the actor's art brings to the aid of music.

Hattie Belle Ladd was here with the Murray-Lane Opera Company three years ago, and shows considerable improvement over her former work both in voice and acting. As Rosetta there was but little opportunity for individual display, but such chances as were afforded were well handled.

The chorus deserves a special mention. A number of the girls are really pretty, and all have good voices. The chorus is larger than the one of last year, is better trained and far better from a musical standpoint. In fact, the company is unusually strong in Kindergarten Music Building.

The Original and Standard System of Kindergarten Music.
Kina K. Darlington
1069 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.

REBECCA MACKENZIE
SOPRANO.
Available for Concert, Oratorio and Song Recitals.
Address FRED O. RENARD, Manager,
444 Central Park West, NEW YORK CITY.

Mme. OGDEN CRANE.
The Art of Singing.
Special attention given to tone production. Founded on the pure Italian method. Sole teacher of Hattie Diamond Nathan, Edith Hutchins, Lillian Le Roy, Lillian Spitz and many others.
SUMMER SCHOOL:
Post Office Building, Asbury Park, N. J.,
From June 24 to September 14.
In New York Studio Thursdays,
3 East 14th Street,
Cor. Fifth Avenue, NEW YORK.

ALICE E. JOSEPH,
Late Private Secretary to Sir Augustus Harris.
THE OPERA AND CONCERT AGENCY,
7a Hanover Street, Regent Street, LONDON, England,
Authorized to represent all the Best Artists in the World!
ADVICE GRATIS.

HERBERT WITHERSPOON
Opera, Oratorio, Concert, Recitals.
BASS.
For Terms, Dates, &c., address
Residence Studio: 202 West 78th St., New York.

Elizabeth Hazard
SOPRANO
Drawing Room Concerts Song Recitals
Direction Emile Levy 141 Fifth Ave.

GODOWSKY.
Under the Management of HERMANN WOLFF, Flottwell Strasse, 1 BERLIN, W., Germany.
Manager for England and Dependencies: HUGO GOERLITZ, 119 New Bond Street, LONDON, England.
Engaged by the London Philharmonic Orchestra for June 20th. Recitals in London, St. James' Hall, May 31st and June 12th.

musical excellence. The sextet by Messrs. Persse, Gaillard and Engleton and Misses Mason, Ladd and Fairbairn was faultlessly rendered, and it was this at the close of the first act that awoke the latent enthusiasm of the audience.

Nearly the entire company, all of whom are from the Madison Square Opera Company of New York, are strangers here, but the universal verdict last night was that they are welcome strangers.

"The Mikado" was finely staged and well presented this week.

Virgil Alonzo Pinkley, formerly of the College of Music, and for the past year in charge of a school of elocution of his own in the Pike, was elected president of the National Association of Elocutionists at the convention of the society in session at Buffalo.

Cecilia Rosa (Rosa Shay) has returned from the East and is spending her vacation with her parents in a lovely home at Winton Place. She will be the prima donna of the Rosa Cecilia Shay English Opera Company next season.

The company will give grand opera in English. They begin their tour in the early fall at Richmond, Va. The cardinal idea is to present grand opera in English. The repertory will be extensive and will include some of the old Italian operas as well as the modern works. Thos. Shay, father of the prima donna, is one of the most successful criminal lawyers in the country. Miss Shay is enjoying the most exuberant health and besides a glorious voice is possessed of the genius of hard work.

J. A. HOMAN.

Mme. Lamperti in Paris.

MME. EDVIGE LAMPERTI, the widow of the late Maestro Lamperti, of Milan, has decided to open a school for singing in Paris this coming fall. It will be in the Quartier Parc Monceau. Voice production, the art of singing, opera, concert, church singing, &c., and for the purpose of finishing pupils, facilitating their débuts will be the chief advantages. Madame Lamperti has been an opera singer herself, and of course is thoroughly equipped for the work before her. She participated with her husband in giving singing lessons to some of the greatest artists before the musical world.

In connection with this school there will be a pension under the direction of a distinguished lady from Italy, who will take particular care of the young ladies in Paris, so that their home affairs will be conducted with the proper environment. Other information on this subject will be published as soon as the school opens.

MINNE HUMPHRYES.—Minne Humphryes, one of the professional pupils of Miss Caroline Montefiore, has succeeded through her beautiful voice and excellent vocal method in capturing the discriminating musical opinions in various cities. The following extracts are from recent reports of her singing:

The solo of Minne Humphryes, "I Will Extol Thee," from "Eli," was rendered exquisitely with remarkable power and sweetness.—Mansfield (Ohio) News.

Minne Humphryes, soprano, was heard to excellent advantage in Proch's Theme and Variations and an English ballad. Both were heartily encored.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Miss Minne Humphryes was compelled to respond to an encore for her rendition of "Se Saran Rose," which was the most artistic number on the program.—Newburgh (N. Y.) Daily Register.

SOUSA AND HIS BAND

Office: Astor Court Building, New York.

Eighteenth Semi-Annual and Fifth Transcontinental Tour.

Sunday, July 7, to Monday, September 2,
INCLUSIVE,
MANHATTAN BEACH,
NEW YORK CITY.

MARY MÜNCHHOFF IN SWITZERLAND.

PHILHARMONIC CONCERT, JANUARY 27, 1900.

Several times we have had the pleasure of listening to the two queens of colorature song and priestesses of the traditional bel canto—Adelina Patti in Paris and Desirée Artôt in Dresden and Berlin. After these stars vanished musical enthusiasts, who had already been infatuated with Malibran and Jenny Lind, wrung their hands in desperation. Their lamentations knew no bounds over what they believed to be the death of vocal art.

Mary Münchhoff, from Omaha, U. S. A., made her appearance here on Friday and took the exceptionally large audience by storm. The artist sang first the cavatina from "Barber of Seville," something that every one has heard a hundred times and is still for the connoisseur an exquisite musical gem. She showed a wonderfully clear, even, very high soprano voice, absolutely free from tremolo. The middle register is round and voluminous. The aria was a triumphal flight over keen-edged staccati, perfect chromatic roulades and faultless, even trills and trill cadenzas, and in her song numbers Miss Munchhoff filled the measure of her vocal jugglery to overflowing. We consider Mary Munchhoff, on account of her multifarious talent, one of the most interesting concert singers that we have ever heard.—Luzerner Tageblatt.

PHILHARMONIC CONCERT.

On November 18 the third subscription concert attracted us to Basel. We beg permission to join heartily in the song of praise which has already been sung to the vocal artist, Mary Münchhoff, on page 313 of this paper. Miss Munchhoff is a native of Omaha, Neb., and has studied with Marchesi in Paris. She lives in Berlin, but flies like a merry song-bird untiringly through the whole of Europe. She will soon be honored with an opportunity to appear in the Gewandhaus in Leipsic. Her voice is so beautiful that the "stern critic's" eyes filled with tears on first hearing her. Wherever Miss Münchhoff appears she is greeted as an artist of the highest rank.—C. H. Richter, Schweizerische Musikzeitung, Geneva, December 29, 1900.

The Schubert Club arranged a very interesting evening of song for its members yesterday, and the hall was therefore crowded. Every one awaited with great suspense the appearance of Mary Münchhoff, whose celebrated artistic reputation was already well known; the fact that she came from Omaha, U. S. A., increased the interest. Formerly European stars wandered over the seas, in order to acquire gold and jewels in abundance as well as fame. The Americans have recently reversed this order and begun to send artists over to us. In Vienna Sibyl Sanderson was forced to learn that it was no easy task to gain recognition in old Europe. In spite of our customary naïve weakness for exotic persons and things, sensational advertising alone makes no impression on us. There were therefore many persons among the audience yesterday who were rather skeptical about the success of Mary Munchhoff. But the old saying will bear another variation: "She came, she sang, she conquered." Mary Münchhoff was honored with a storm of applause before she had finished the cavatina from "The Barber of Seville," and this was enthusiastically renewed at the close of every number. Her magnificent appearance and winsome beauty enhanced her triumph. Above all, the artist is a genuine concert singer. With her high, bell-like, excellently cultivated voice she pipes and trills until our hearts seem to grow warm. Now and then a wave of deep feeling breaks over her singing and then the applause is always doubled. This was the case in "Haideröslein" and "Solveig's Song," by Grieg. The artist sang Italian and French as well as German, but she is never theatrical. It is her countenance that is so expressive and her smile.—Triester Tageblatt, March 10, 1901.

PHILHARMONIC CONCERT.

Mary Münchhoff celebrated here also a genuine triumph, which seemed to us perfectly justified. As a concert singer she presents an extraordinary and celebrated appearance. She possesses not only a magnificent voice but stupendous vocal skill. She is especially gifted with remarkably high head tones, which she produces with extreme ease. No tremolo disturbs our enjoyment of her pure, refined tones. In her selection of songs the first one, "Du bist die Ruh," by Schubert, was rendered with classical repose and charmed us greatly. Löwe's exceptionally pretty song, "Niemand hat's gesehen," called forth a storm of applause.

Undeniably Mary Münchhoff is an adept in her art, and wherever she appears she is sure of an enthusiastic welcome.—Baseler Tageblatt, November 19, 1900.

Julie Rive-King's Vacation.

JULIE RIVE-KING is at her summer home, Charlotte, Monroe County, this State, and with her are a number of her advanced pupils, who will continue their studies during the months of July and August. Appended are additional criticisms of Madame King's recitals:

Mme. Julie Rive-King gave a piano recital yesterday afternoon in the Pike, presenting a program which taxed her versatility and her powers both as a musician and virtuoso. In these days of extreme virtuosoship, when tremendous velocity seems to have been made more the gauge of greatness than musicianly equipment, it is refreshing to have the opportunity of hearing one who, with her superb technical resources, never loses sight of the requirements of true art. * * *

Her interpretation of the Brahms Sonata in F minor was a scholarly piece of work. Her conception of it was broad and deep. The intellectual side of Brahms was thoroughly grasped, but his poetry side was just as happily expressed. * * *

The Liszt transcription of the Bach Fugue in G minor was given with marvelous clearness and rhythmic force. Beautifully sustained was the melody in the andante of the Schumann Sonata in G minor.—Cincinnati Tribune.

Madame Rive-King, whose name recalls memories of the early days, gave a piano recital last night at University Hall before an appreciative audience. The years have merely mellowed her art. * * *

The program was a comprehensive one, several of her own compositions being included. She pleased best in the Beethoven "Rondo Capriccio" and the Liszt "Rhapsodie Hongroise."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

The program presented by Mrs. Rive King at the Chamber of Commerce was well calculated to display to the fullest extent her versatility of pianism. And it must be confessed that whether interpreting the mysticism of Schumann, the polyphony of Bach, the romanticism of Chopin, the intellectuality of Brahms or the virtuosity of Liszt, the pianist was fully adequate to the task she assigned herself.—Cleveland Leader.

Recitals by Pupils of J. H. Hahn.

J. H. HAHN, of Detroit, is a worker in the cause of music. His versatility is well understood among musicians; above all, his qualities and success as a teacher stand pre-eminent.

The following programs of piano recitals by pupils of Mr. Hahn are models of catholicity and arrangement:

PROGRAM OF MISS GEORGIA RICHARDSON.

Sonate in E flat, op. 31	Beethoven
Elfentanz	MacDowell
Berceuse	Chopin
Etude in C sharp minor, op. 10	Chopin
Prelude and Fugue in C sharp major	Bach
Concert Polonaise	Hahn
Suite in C minor	Foote
Novelette in E major	Schumann
Angelus	Klein
Rhapsodie Hongroise No. 10	Liszt

PROGRAM OF MISS MARIE GAULT.

Sonata in A major, op. 120	Schubert
Prelude and Fugue in B flat major	Bach
Etudes, C sharp minor, op. 25, and E minor	Chopin
Romance in F major, op. 15	Foote
Quadriglia, op. 21	Von Bülow
Traumswirren (Dream Visions)	Schumann
Warum? (Why?)	Schumann
Aufschwung (Exaltation)	Schumann

PROGRAM OF CARL BEUTEL.

Fourth Piano Sonata (Keltic)	MacDowell
Prelude and Fugue in A minor, No. 20	Bach
Nocturne in E major, op. 62	Chopin
Valse in E major, op. 34	Moszkowski
Piano Concerto in F minor	Arensky

Orchestral accompaniment on second piano by J. H. Hahn.

GRACE GARDNER.—Miss Grace G. Gardner will leave New York about July 15 for her vacation, which she will spend at the mountains and the seashore. Before returning to New York Miss Gardner will give several concerts in Ohio.

1901

STATEMENT OF
THE TRAVELERS
INSURANCE COMPANY of Hartford, Conn.

Chartered 1863. (Stock.) Life, Accident and Employees Liability Insurance.

JAMES G. BATTERSON, President,
PAID-UP CAPITAL, $1,000,000.00

JANUARY 1, 1901.

Total Assets, (Accident premiums in the hands of Agents not included.)	$30,861,030.06
TOTAL LIABILITIES (Including Reserves),	26,317,903.25
EXCESS SECURITY to Policy-holders,	$4,543,126.81
SURPLUS	3,543,126.81
Paid to Policy-holders since 1864,	$42,643,384.92
Paid to Policy-holders in 1900,	2,908,464.03
Loaned to Policy-holders on Policies (Life),	1,586,652.20
Life Insurance in Force,	109,019,851.00

GAINS FOR THE YEAR 1900:

IN ASSETS,	$3,167,819.96
IN INSURANCE IN FORCE (Life Department Only),	8,685,297.06
INCREASE IN RESERVES (Both Departments), (3½ per cent. basis),	2,484,392.52
PREMIUMS COLLECTED,	6,890,868.55

SYLVESTER C. DUNHAM, Vice-President.
JOHN E. MORRIS Secretary
J. B. LEWIS, M. D., Medical Director and Adjuster.
EDWARD V. PRESTON Superintendent of Agencies.
HIRAM J. MESSENGER, Actuary.

THE ONLY "LESCHETIZKY" SCHOOL OF PIANO PLAYING IN AMERICA.

Named after PROF. THEO. LESCHETIZKY, of Vienna, by his special permission.

Mme. DE WIENZKOWSKA, DIRECTRESS AND FOUNDER.

PROF. LESCHETIZKY'S Sole Principal Assistant in this country, formerly in Vienna; also Concert Pianiste.

CARNEGIE HALL. Address Communications: 147 W. Eighty-second St., NEW YORK CITY.

LESCHETIZKY—"Mme. Wienzkowska's success as a piano virtuosa and teacher is eminent."
PADEREWSKI—"Mme. Wienzkowska is a finisbed pianiste and possesses an extraordinary ability of communicating to others a complete knowledge of her art."
HANS RICHTER—"I consider you an artist of finest esprit and taste, and a representative of a most solid school."

The Carlisle-Carr Concert Bureau and Greater Britain Musical Agency

(The Foreign and Colonial Bureau),
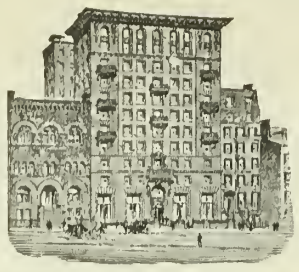
108 New Bond Street, LONDON, W., ENGLAND.

Opera, Oratorio, Concerts, At Homes, Garden Parties, Children Parties

Sole control of the "Artists' Popular Concerts."
Telegraphic Address: "PANDECT," London.

Boston Music Notes.



HOTEL BELLEVUE,
17 BEACON STREET,
BOSTON, July 6, 1901.

The lists of passengers on the outgoing steamers read more like a list of subscribers to the Symphony concerts, or the attendance at a concert during the winter season. It seems as if it was a safe estimate to say that more than half the musicians of Boston and vicinity have gone to Europe this summer. On the steamer sailing last Wednesday were Fred. R. Comee and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Baermann, Miss Lilian Shattuck and Miss Jennie Daniell.

Some of the returning ships are bringing back some of the travelers who left early in the season. George W. Chadwick reached Boston one day last week. He is still obliged to use crutches in walking, although his ankle is well, but not strong. In another month he expects to walk as well as ever.

Quite a number of teachers are coming in to their studios two days during the week, living at some convenient suburb for the summer. But as a rule the studio buildings are like small deserted villages and it will not be until about the first of September that they begin to resume life and activity.

Everett E. Truette will give organ concerts at the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo September 6, 7 and 8. Mr. Truette has rented his cottage at Winnecook Lake for the summer and will spend his time at Moosehead Lake, Me., returning to Boston September 1. The past has been the busiest season he has ever had, so the woods and mountains look particularly attractive this year.

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Faelten are at their summer home, beautifully situated at Lake Sunapee, N. H. The house stands on an elevation overlooking the lake and town of Sunapee.

Madame Decca is teaching all the summer at her studio, coming in from Winthrop twice a week.

Mrs. Richard Blackmore, Jr., is spending the summer with her mother at Waverly, N. Y.

May Sleeper Ruggles has been engaged for the contralto parts at the New Hampshire Music Festival, to be held at the Weirs late in July or early in August. She has booked a number of song recital engagements for next season. She is now singing at the Harvard Church, Brookline, and is filling a number of summer engagements in this vicinity.

Alberto Randegger.

THE Leipsic Stadt Theatre will shortly produce Alberto Randegger's one act opera "Werther's Schatten." Mr. Randegger is a pianist, and at one time was a resident in this country. He is a nephew of Randegger, the London singing master.

MRS. JOHANNA WEBER DEAD.—KANSAS CITY, Mo., July 8—Mrs. Johanna Weber died at her home here to-day aged sixty-five. Mrs. Weber was born in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany. She was the daughter of Louis Pabst, whose family was distinguished in music and art. She sang in concert in London, Berlin, Vienna and also on several occasions at the palace of the Emperor. In 1860 she was married to August Weber, a music dealer, at Peoria, Ill., coming to Kansas City with her husband in 1886.

MANAGER wanted for a New York music publishing and importing house. Thorough acquaintance with American and European trade required. Apply under V. R., care MUSICAL COURIER.

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.—A prominent vocal teacher of New York, remaining at home this summer, will have vacancy for a few good voices. Terms reduced. Address VOICE, care of MUSICAL COURIER.

WANTED—A bright business woman, who has some experience in the line of management of musical or dramatic artists; clever correspondent, quick witted, and with some knowledge of musical affairs. Address "Manager," care of this paper.

MISS ESTHER FEÉ, VIOLINISTE.
(PARIS—IN AMERICA NOVEMBER 1st.)
Exclusive Management CHARLES R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

JOS. S. BAERNSTEIN
BASSO
51 EAST 64TH STREET,
NEW YORK CITY.

London Organ School
AND INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC,
22 Princes Street, Cavendish Sq., W., London, Eng.
Established 1865. Principal: T. H. Yorke Trotter, M.A., Mus.Doc.Oxon.

At this college Private Lessons are given and classes held in all branches of Music, and in Elocution and Modern Languages.
There is a competent staff of Professors for Piano, Singing, Organ, Violin, Viola, Violoncello, Double Bass, Harp, Guitar and all Wood and Brass Wind Instruments.
A special feature is made of the training of Church and Concert Organists. The school has three 3-manual practice organs and a new grand concert organ, which has been recently completed by the Positive Organ Company on the Casson system.
The full Orchestra meets on Tuesday Evenings. The String Orchestra on Friday Afternoons.
For prospectus and full particulars apply to the office of this paper or to FRANCIS BURGESS, Secretary.

MARIO DEL SOL,
Late with Ellis-Melba Opera Co. and Opéra Comique, Paris.
SCHOOL OF OPERA—Repertory, French and Italian Stage in Studio. Action and Mise-en-Scene.
Private Instruction. Classes Assemble 2 to 5 P.M.
Address:
MILLER BUILDING. Broadway and 65th St., New York.

Madame CLARA NOVELLO DAVIES
Professor of Voice Production.
Conductor of the Royal Welsh Ladies' Choir.
(Under Royal patronage.)
Madame Davies has a vacancy for two resident lady pupils
For Prospectus and Terms apply to
121 Victoria St., Westminster, LONDON, S. W.

GLENN HALL
TENOR.
Address CHAS. R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building, or Kimball Hall, Chicago.

London, England.

CHEVALIER GEORG LIEBLING,
COURT PIANIST.
Engagements accepted for recitals and concerts. Professor at the Guildhall School of Music. Advanced pupils specially prepared for recitals and concerts, privately or in class.
Address 6 F, Hyde Park Mansions, London, W.

VOICE PRODUCTION and SINGING.
Invariable results of
Mme. MARIAN VELTRINO'S SYSTEM
GUARANTEED IN A SHORT TIME
to EVERY PERSON of ORDINARY INTELLIGENCE with AVERAGE MUSICAL EAR.
Perfect attack. Perfect ease. Clearness of Tone throughout the Voice. Richness, Roundness, Sweetness, Carrying Power. Freedom from breaks. No throat-aching.
Abundance of and control over breath.
Lost voices regained. Voices made,
Compass of at least two octaves.
Undeniable proof of the above statements can be given. Appointments and particulars of unique interest on request. Complete artistic training for opera, concert work, &c., follows above results.
Studio: 163 New Bond street, London, W.
(Established twelve years.)

MME. MORIANI.
Private Academy for Voice Training and School for Opera.
Complete Training for Voice, Style, and the Different Répertoires.
Special Class for Gentlemen on each Monday and Thursday from 5 to 7.
Mme. Moriana will continue her Lessons from July 1st to October on the Continent, thus affording change of air.
French Diction and Acting with Mr. Vermandele, who has taught her pupils in Belgium for fourteen years.
For Terms and Particulars write to the Secretary of Mme MORIANI'S School, 3 York Place, Portman Square, W., London.

MARIE WITHROW,
VOICE PRODUCTION,
81 New Bond Street, London.

PROF. MICHAEL HAMBOURG'S
Academy for the Higher Development of Pianoforte Playing.
15 Warwick Road, Maida Vale.

RENÉ PAPIN,
Authorized Representative of the Yersin's Method French Diction,
7 Dorset Square N. W., London,
(Near Baker street station).

THE CONCORDE CONCERT CONTROL
and Orchestra, Entertainment and Lecture Bureau.
The COURT CIRCULAR says: The most reliable Bureau in London.
The Concorde Handbook of Artists (the most complete existing list of the best artists) free on application. Address: 310 Regent St., London, W.
Telephone: 4153 GERRARD. Telegraphic address: Concordist, London. Telegraphic Code: The Concorde Code.

EDOUARD DAREWSKI,
Professor of Singing.
Percy House, Randolph Rd, Maida Vale, London.
Paderewski writing in March, 1898, says: "I know your remarkable qualities both as a singer and as a vocal teacher, and especially your method, which is ITALIAN IN THE BEST SENSE OF THE WORD."

Paris.

SCHOOL FOR ACTING.
EMIL BERTIN,
1er Régisseur de la Scène de l'Opéra Comique.
Stage Practice. In Cast.
41 rue des Martyrs, Paris.

FRENCH SCHOOL
M. DUMARTHERAY,
From Sounds to Literature, Pronunciation, Accent, Conversation.
(Opera.) 14 rue Taitbout.

PROFESSOR OF FRENCH,
Special Method for Foreigners.
MLLE. MARIE FOURNAISE,
American reference. 29 Boulevard de Batignolles.

MME. ROBINSON DUFF,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
4 rue de la Renaissance l'Alma, Paris.

THE FRENCH LANGUAGE
Rapidly, easily and correctly acquired by KIMON'S PRACTICAL SYSTEM,
(3 francs, post free.)
Private lessons by M. D. Kimon,
10 rue Cambon, Paris.

MLLE. GRACE LEE HESS
SCHOOL.
Supplementary Education.
French Language Obligatory.
145 Avenue Victor Hugo, Paris.

BALDELLI,
Italian baritone.
Théâtre Royal, Madrid. Professeur de Chant.
(Champs Elysées). 6 rue Euler, Paris.

Mme. ROGER-MICLOS,
PIANO—PARIS.
Elementary and Superior Class and Private Public Pupils' Concerts.
(l'Etoile.) 27 Avenue MacMahon.

Mme. ROSINE LABORDE,
PROF. DE CHANT,
62 rue de Ponthien, Paris.

LA VILLA VIOLETTE
TROCADERO,
22 rue Raynouard. Mme. Fiessinger.
Assortment of rooms. Excellent table. Gardens. All facilities of 'bus and tram.

DELLE SEDIE, Paris.
Pure Italian Method. Complete course. Stage practice. Voice, lyric, declamation, languages, solfège, ensemble music, mise-en-scène.
Class and single lessons.
Regular course, three years. Terms moderate.
30 rue St. Petersbourg.

MLLE. MARTINI,
Artiste Opéra, Opéra Comique, Théâtre Lyrique, Professor of "Mime."
Silent Interpretation, Stage Business, Gesture, Pantomime, &c.
87 rue St. Lazare, Paris.

MLLE. NILANDE,
Authorized Teacher of the Yersin Phono-Rhythmic Method. French Diction. French Language.
(Av. Marceau). 37 rue de Chaillot.

Mme. FLORENZA d'ARONA,
VOCAL PROFESSEUR,
20 Rue Clement Marot, Paris.
Special sessions during the summer in REPERTOIRE AND INTERPRETATION.

MME. J. VIEUXTEMPS,
Vocal Professor.
Classes and Private Lessons. Placing and Mending of Tones. 25 rue de Tocqueville (Monceau).

MLLE. KIKINA,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT,
Ancienne Elève de MARCHESI,
100 Avenue de Villiers, Paris.

INSTITUT MOZART.
Language. Complete Musical Education. Singing, Diction by best professors. Board and residence for pupils' comfort; quiet, convenient.
Apply to manager. MISS HEGEMANN,
7 rue du Commandant Riviere.

MISS JULIA KLUMPKÉ,
VIOLINISTE.
Pupil of MM. Eugene Ysaye and G. Rémy.
Concerts, Musicales, Lessons Violin and Accompaniment. 10 rue Froidevaux, Paris.

MME. MARIE ROZE,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT,
37 rue Joubert,
Chaussée d'Antin Paris.
Mise-en-scène. Ensemble practice in cast on stage.

MME. IDA LURIG,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
French—Italian—German.
Specialty of German Songs and Oratorio.
(Trocadero) 5 rue Petrarque, Paris.

SARAH KING PECK,
SOPRANO,
CONCERTS AND ORATORIO.
55 West 85th Street, New York.

LIBRARY
OF THE
UNIVERSITY of ILLINOIS

MUSICAL COURIER.

A WEEKLY JOURNAL DEVOTED TO MUSIC AND THE MUSIC TRADES.

Twenty-Second Year. Price 10 Cents. Subscription, $5.00. Foreign $6.00.—Annually.

VOL. XLIII—NO. 3. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JULY 17, 1901. WHOLE NO. 1112.

Photo by Davis & Sanford, New York.

STELLA HADDEN-ALEXANDER

New York.

MRS. RATCLIFFE CAPERTON,

Representative and assistant of LAMPERTI.
New York, 138 Fifth Avenue; Philadelphia, 408 South 18th Street. Summer residence, Dresden, Germany.
"Mrs. Ratcliffe Caperton is my only representative, and I advise all pupils desiring to study with me to be prepared by her."
Dresden, Sedanstrasse 17. G. B. LAMPERTI.

ALBERTO LAURENCE,

155 East 18th Street, New York.
The voice formed and developed; the art of singing taught; method after the purest Italian schools; a bad voice made good, true and beautiful.

HENRY T. FLECK,

Conductor Haarlem Philharmonic Society of the City of New York.
Address: Normal College, New York.

MISS NORA MAYNARD GREEN,

VOCAL TEACHER.
Studio: 303 Fifth Avenue, New York.

MAX KNITEL-TREUMANN,

BARITONE.
Voice Culture—Art of Singing.
Carnegie Hall, Room 837.
Mail address: 15 Washington Terrace, New York.

GEORGE M. GREENE,

Voice Culture and Artistic Singing.
Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.
Studio: 489 Fifth Ave., Mondays and Thursdays.
Residence and address:
424 West 23d Street, New York.

CARL M. ROEDER,

PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
Residence and Studio:
330 Alexander Avenue, New York.

MR. C. WHITNEY COOMBS,

(Church of the Holy Communion). Organ lessons and practice given on one of Roosevelt's finest instruments. Special advantages for the study of church music and the training of boys' voices.
Address: 49 West 20th Street, New York.

TOM KARL,

Concerts, Recitals and Vocal Instruction.
Studio: Carnegie Hall.
Residence: 18 West 75th Street, New York.

MISS MARY FIDÉLIA BURT.

Author of Original Methods in Sight Singing, Ear Training, Musical Stenography. All materials copyrighted. No authorized teachers in Greater New York.
Address: 48 Lefferts Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.

E. H. LOCKHART, Bass-Baritone.

Studios: 121 East Twenty-third street, New York. Voices quickly placed and developed. Special work given for breath control. The Art of Singing taught by method used in the old Italian schools. Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.

DUDLEY BUCK, JR.,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Song Lecture Recitals.
810 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

HOWARD BROCKWAY,

COMPOSER-PIANIST.
Pupils received in Composition, Harmony, Piano and Song Interpretation.
Studio: 817-818 Carnegie Hall, New York.

WALTER HENRY HALL,

Conductor Oratorio Society, Brooklyn, N. Y.
Organist and Choirmaster St. James' Church, New York.
For terms for conducting, address St. James' Church, Madison Ave. and 71st St., New York.

MME. LOUISE FINKEL,

SCHOOL OF VOCAL MUSIC.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.

EUGENE A. BERNSTEIN,

PIANIST.
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Studio: 160 East 70th Street, New York.

LUCILLE SMITH MORRIS,

PIANIST. INSTRUCTION, Concerts, Recitals.
Pupil of Wm. Sherwood and Mrs. A. K. Virgil.
Certified teacher of Virgil Clavier Method.
Studio: 201 West 81st Street, New York.

RICHARD ARNOLD,

Concertmaster Philharmonic Society.
INSTRUCTION.
208 East 61st Street, New York.

MR. FRANCIS STUART,

TEACHER OF SINGING.
First season in New York. Ten years in San Francisco. Pupil of Lamperti, the elder.
Being in full possession of my method of singing, he has the ability to form great artists.—FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
Reception hours, Mondays and Thursdays, 2 to 3.
Studio: 86 Madison Ave., near Twenty-eighth St.

LILLIE D'ANGELO BERGH

SCHOOL OF SINGING.
Operatic course. Teachers' special course, all departments. Famous specialists. Prospectus. The Albany Broadway and 52d Street, New York

ROSETTA WIENER,

PIANO, SIGHT READING and New York School of Accompanying.
Carnegie Hall, 301-2.

MR. CHARLES LEE TRACY,

PIANOFORTE INSTRUCTION.
Certificated Teacher of the LESCHETIZKY METHOD.
Studio: Carnegie Hall, New York City.

MAX BENDHEIM,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
332 West 56th Street. New York City.

PAUL TIDDEN,

PIANIST.
314 East 15th Street, New York.
Will accept a limited number of pupils.

HERBERT HEMINGWAY JOY,

Voice Culture and Singing.
Italian School.
Studio: 116 Carnegie Hall, New York.

GUSTAV L. BECKER,

CONCERT PIANIST and TEACHER of PIANO and COMPOSITION.
Address: 1 West 104th Street, New York.

SIGNOR FILOTEO GRECO,

THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio: 51 West 35th Street, New York.

M. THEODOR BJORKSTEN AND MME. TORPADIE BJORKSTEN,

INSTRUCTORS IN SINGING.
New Studios: Carnegie Hall, New York.

PERRY AVERILL—BARITONE,

OPERA—ORATORIO—CONCERT AND VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
220 Central Park South, New York.

J. ARMOUR GALLOWAY,

Voice Culture and the Art of Singing,
Studio: Rooms 43 and 44 Y. M. C. A. Building, 318 West 57th Street, New York.

MARIE SEYMOUR BISSELL,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Pupils prepared for Church, Concert and Oratorio.
Studio: 135 East 16th Street, New York.

MRS. MARY HISSEM DE MOSS,

SOPRANO,
106 West 90th Street,
New York City.

SAMUEL B. MOYLE,

BASSO CANTANTE.
Oratorio, Concert, Musicales, Voice Culture—Italian Method. Tone Placing and Reparation a specialty. Studio: 136 Fifth Avenue, New York.

GEORGE SWEET,

OPERA, ORATORIO, CONCERT.
304 West 72d Street, New York.

J. HARRY WHEELER,

Voice Production and the Art of Singing.
Voices educated strictly in the Italian School.
Studio: 81 Fifth Ave., corner 16th St., New York.
July and August at Chautauqua Assembly.

MR. EDMUND SEVERN,

Violin, Composition, Ensemble.
MRS. EDMUND SEVERN,
Piano and Voice.
Studio: 131 West 56th Street, New York.
"Severn Trio."

ENRICO DUZENSI,

OPERA TENOR.
Will accept pupils for Voice Culture; good voice cultivated per contract; Italian method.
145 East 83d Street, near Lexington Ave.

CARL C. MÜLLER,

Translator of "Sechter's Fundamental Harmonies."
Author of "Tables for Harmonic Exercises."
Teacher of Piano, Harmony, Counterpoint and Composition. 1291 Lexington Ave., New York.

MME. HELENE MAIGILLE.

VOCAL INSTRUCTION, REPERTOIRE.
Studio and residence: 1211-15 Carnegie Hall,
Summer course. New York.

MR. EMILIO AGRAMONTE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Summer Course.

ALBERT QUESNEL,

TENOR.
Opera, Oratorio, Concert, Musicale.
173 West 140th Street, New York.

SAUL HAROLD LICHTENSTEIN,

VIOLINIST.
Pupil of Sauret and Thomson.
Concerts, At Homes, &c. Pupils accepted.
Address: 103 West 114th Street, New York.

J. WARREN ANDREWS.

CONCERT ORGANIST and TEACHER.
Send for list of Pupils holding positions.
Address: Church of the Divine Paternity,
76th St. and Eighth Ave., New York City.

THE NEW YORK INSTITUTE FOR VIOLIN PLAYING AND SCHOOL FOR PIANO AND VOCAL CULTURE.

230 East 62d Street

Complete musical education given to students from the beginning to the highest perfection.
F. & H. CARRI, Directors.

MME. LUISA CAPPIANI,

VOICE CULTURE, SKILL OF SINGING.
"The Louella," 159 West 45th Street,
New York.

RICHARD T. PERCY,

Concert Organist and Accompanist.
Organ Lessons at Marble Collegiate Church, corner Fifth Avenue and 29th Street.
Studio: 1402 Broadway, New York.

MISS MARGARET GOETZ,

CONTRALTO (mezzo range).
Concerts, Song Recitals, Vocal Instruction.
Address: 36 Gramercy Park, New York.

THE ARENS VOCAL STUDIO

(affiliated with the American School of Opera.)
Coaching a specialty.
Normal courses for Voice Teachers.
305 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Reception hour, 2 p. m., Wednesdays excepted.

HENRY HOLDEN HUSS,

Instruction in Piano and Theory of Music.
Studio for non-resident pupils: Steinway Hall.
Personal address: 318 East 150th Street, New York.

FRANCIS FISCHER POWERS,

VOICE CULTURE AND THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio (and invariable address): Carnegie Hall, New York. New York season, October 20 to May 1; Kansas City, Mo., season, Pepper Building, May 15 to August 1; Los Angeles, Cal., season, Westminster Hotel, August 10 to October 10.

MRS. HADDEN-ALEXANDER,

PIANIST.
Powers-Alexander Studios,
Carnegie Hall, New York.

HENRY SCHRADIECK'S

VIOLIN SCHOOL.
Violin, Piano, Theory and Ensemble Playing.
Residence and Studio:
535 Washington Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

WILLIAM H. BARBER,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
Studio: Steinway Hall,
New York.

F. W. RIESBERG,

ACCOMPANIST.
Instruction—Piano, Organ, Harmony.
With THE MUSICAL COURIER.
Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.
Secretary-Treasurer New York State M. T. A.
Residence Studio:
954 8th Ave., corner 56th Street, New York.

S. C. BENNETT,

Instructor in Voice Building and the Art of Singing.
Teacher of Mme. Genevra Johnstone-Bishop and many other talented vocalists.
Studio: 836 Carnegie Hall, New York.

MME. EMMA RODERICK.

Rapid Development and Complete Education of the Voice. 118 West 44th Street, New York.

MRS. GRENVILLE SNELLING,

SOPRANO.
Concerts, Recitals, Musicals, Oratorio.
Address: 111 Fifth Avenue, New York.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF MUSIC,

179 East 64th Street, New York.
WM. M. SEMNACHER, Director.
I regard Mr. Semnacher as the greatest teacher of piano in this country.
Henry T. Fleck, Director of Music,
Normal College, New York City.

MRS. HENRY SMOCK BOICE,

VOICE CULTURE.
Musical Art Department of Adelphi College.
Residence-Studio: 127 McDonough St., B'klyn, N.Y.
Pupils prepared for Church, Concert, Oratorio.
138 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Monday and Thursday Afternoons.

MISS FANNIE HIRSCH,

CONCERT AND ORATORIO.
DRAMATIC SOPRANO. Steinway Hall, or
170 East 61st St., New York.

SERRANO VOCAL INSTITUTE,

323 East 14th Street, New York.

Conducted by EMILIA BENIE DE SERRANO and CARLOS A. DE SERRANO.

Teachers of Charlotte Maconda, Fannie Francisca.

JEANNE ARONE,

Graduate of Florenza d'Arona's celebrated method. Special Teachers' Course Diploma Vocal Instruction. Studio: 1219 Madison Ave., New York.

GUY DORÉ LATTA. OPERA TENOR

Voice Culture and Singing.
Tone production, placing and development a specialty. Guarantees to increase range and make any voice strong and beautiful. Summer rates.
372 West 120th Street, New York.

JOSEPH PIZZARELLO,

VOCAL INSTRUCTOR.
Voice Developed—Style Opera.
13 West 34th Street, New York.

ALICE GARRIGUE MOTT,

VOCAL CULTURE.
Carnegie Hall, New York.

MR. AND MRS. THEO. J. TOEDT,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Home Studio: 151 East 62d Street, New York.

LENA DORIA DEVINE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Representative Teacher of the methods of the famous master, FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
136 Fifth Avenue, New York.

FRANCIS CARRIER,

BARITONE.
Concert and Oratorio.
18 East 22d Street, New York.
Direction of Remington Squire.

MISS EMMA HOWSON,

PRIMA DONNA.
Royal Italian and English Opera Company.
Lamperti Method Absolutely Taught.
Tuesdays and Fridays, 96 Fifth Ave., New York.

EMMA THURSBY,

SOPRANO.
Will receive a limited number of pupils.
Residence-Studio: 34 Gramercy Park, New York.

ISIDORE LUCKSTONE,

The Accompanist and Musical Director.
STYLE, REPERTOIRE, FINISH, VOCAL CULTURE.
836 Lexington Ave., or address MUSICAL COURIER.

ARTHUR VOORHIS,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
100 Clifton Place, Jersey City, N. J.
Care MUSICAL COURIER, New York.

MME. ADELE LEWING

CONCERT PIANIST.
Authorized Teacher of the Leschetizky Method.
Special terms to out of town teachers.
Concerts. Recitals. Musicales.
Address: Care Steinway Hall, or 127 East 73d Street, New York.

MISS GENEVIEVE BISBEE,

PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Leschetizky Method. Summer courses.
1109-1110 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

KATHARINE PELTON,

Mezzo Soprano.
Sole Direction HENRY WOLFSOHN,
131 East 17th Street, New York.

CHARLOTTE A. BABCOCK,

Certificated Pupil of Dr. William Mason.
Pianoforte Instruction.
Studios: 810-14 Carnegie Hall, New York.
Summer season, Bernardsville, N. J.

SIGNOR A. CARBONE,

Member several years Metropolitan Grand Opera Company.
VOICE CULTURE. OPERA SCHOOL.
Summer Course.
Studio: 240 Fifth Ave., New York.

JOSEPH P. DONNELLY,

VOICE, ORGAN, PIANO.
Organist-Director All Saints,
Madison Avenue and 129th Street, New York.
Residence-Studio: 2033 Madison Avenue.
Brooklyn Studio: The Pouch Gallery.

MARK M. FONAROFF,

VIOLINIST—INSTRUCTION.
References: Adolf Brodsky, Henry Schradieck, Alex. Lambert, H. E. Krehbiel.
129 East 82d Street, New York.

STELLA PRINCE STOCKER.

COMPOSER-DIRECTOR.
Recital-Lectures, ARTHUR STOCKER, boy soprano, assisting. For season 1901-1902.
Address: 11 Schmiede Strasse, Hamburg, Germany, or care P. J. Kreider, 251 West 71st Street, New York.

MARIE PARCELLO,

DRAMATIC CONTRALTO.
Music Rooms: 1103-4-5 Carnegie Hall, New York.

HUGO TROETSCHEL,

Organist Schermerhorn St. Evangelical Church
Instruction: Piano—Organ—Theory.
Organ Lessons given on large three-manual Roosevelt Organ.
Residence: 384 Bainbridge St., Brooklyn, N. Y

MR. & MRS. WALTER H. ROBINSON,

TENOR AND CONTRALTO SOLOISTS
Oratorio, Concerts and Musicales.
Voice Production and Repertoire
Studio: 405 Carnegie Hall, New York

A. J. GOODRICH,

Personal or Correspondence Lessons in Harmony, Counterpoint, Composition, Orchestration and Practical Musicianship.

Author of "Analytical Harmony," "Theory of Interpretation," "Complete Music Analysis," "Synthetic Counterpoint," "Guide to a Practical Musicianship."

Glens Falls, N. Y.

MUSICAL COURIER OFFICES—FINE ARTS BUILDING.

CHICAGO, July 13, 1901.

THE Western reader is forcibly impressed by the fact that modern journalism is remarkably resourceful in its employment of contrasting methods for the treatment of any given theme. As nature's charms, or as art's characteristics, are being dealt with in a thousand diverse fashions, so more serious subjects attract fluent and fantastic pens. Educational problems claim universal interest. What must constitute the qualifications of the teacher? asks one writer. Of how exacting a nature should be the pupil's requirements? inquires another.

In a recent article on "The College Beautiful" advantages to be derived from congenial educational environments are graphically described by a literary authority, whose selection of this topic is peculiarly happy, inasmuch as he is able to give an illustrative account of a famous school of art, which is his realized ideal. The writer does not select that which may exist in the imagination as a pedagogical feature of some Utopian country. Instead of resorting to any such "castle in the air," he establishes the surroundings and equipments of the Chicago Musical College as the basis of his well founded argument, the conclusion reached in regard to the institution being embodied in the following paragraph:

"Everywhere is the evidence of luxury and good taste, of a wise expenditure of money in creating an atmosphere which will tempt the imagination away from what is sordid to a contemplation of the spirit of art, which, when all is said and done, is as intangible as a dream."

Inspired by Col. Francis W. Parker's claim, made last Sunday in Detroit, that the Sunday school should be placed upon a "more common sense basis," a step in that direction being the abolition of such hymns as "I Want To Be An Angel," the Chicago Inter Ocean of July 9 offers the following editorial comment:

Doubtless Colonel Parker's objection to such songs is that they are not sufficiently intellectual—that they express only the "rudimentary emotions." So a conference of divines in New York some years ago went on record against "Jerusalem the Golden," that popular hymn, rescued by Dr. Neale from Bernard of Morlaix's mediæval Latin satire, as "too florid and pagan." In like manner "There Is a Fountain Filled With Blood"—that old Methodist favorite—has been censured as "grossly material," and "There Is Rest for the Weary" as too "barbaric in its imagery."

The critics of such hymns as these forget that the average man does not sing to express his adhesion to some fine-spun theory of transcendental philosophy. If he did, George Eliot's "Choir Invisible" might well stand first in all our hymn books. He sings to express his emotions—to voice a belief that is felt and lived rather than defined with scholastic precision. And if he takes the concrete symbols of the Orient rather than the mental imagery of the Occident to embody his feelings it is because they better serve his need. Christianity is an Oriental religion, and nineteen hundred years' use of its forms has ingrained them into the popular consciousness.

Who that has succeeded in mentally visualizing Gustavus Adolphus singing at the head of his troops on his death field "Fear Not, Little Flock," or Oliver Cromwell chanting his Ironsides to victory with "Let God Arise," or has heard men sobbing in an old-fashioned Methodist meeting, as they sang of the fountain whose flood alone could wash clean their souls, can doubt the power of such hymns?

And they have power because they express no mere intellectual concept, but the emotions of a living belief. To the great majority of mankind religion always has been and doubtless ever will be a matter of intuitive feeling rather than of reasoned conviction. To express that feeling they sing, and they prefer those hymns which give their emotions concrete form. When they consent to abandon such hymns for mere rhythmical definitions of abstract principles they will cease to be religious.

William Norris having resigned in order to meet other engagements, the title role in "King Dodo" will next week be played by Raymond Hitchcock. Lillian Green's spirited acting and singing have been much missed of late in this popular operatic production at the Studebaker Hall, Fine Arts Building. It continues to be noticeable that the tenor, Miro Delamotta, not only sings creditably but acts carefully. As a rule the comic opera tenor who is fortunate enough to possess fine stage presence and creditable voice labors under the delusion that these qualifications supply all necessary demands; however, the operatic hero at the Studebaker evidently entertains considerable respect for the histrionic requirements of Pedro's role. Manager Louis Francis Brown is to be congratulated upon the fact that "King Dodo's" popularity has not begun to wane.

On July 7 the May Festival of the United Workingmen's Singing Societies of the Northwest was held in the First Regiment Armory, the large hall being appropriately decorated with lyres and the flags of the United States and Germany. Several thousand persons heard the musical program, which consisted chiefly of orchestral selections and folksongs. The third convention of the societies will be held at St. Louis in 1903.

A brilliant list of artists will be under the direction of the Hamlin Company next season. Already the names include: Sopranos—Genevieve Clark Wilson, Jessica De Wolf, Lucille Stevenson Tewksbury and Helen Smyser; contraltos—Sue Harrington Furbeck and Elaine DeSellem; tenors—George Hamlin and Holmes Cowper; baritones—Charles W. Clark and Sydney Biden; pianist—Augusta Cottlow; violinist—Herr Anton Witek; concert organist, Arthur Dunham; the Spiering Quartet, the Chicago Sextet Club and Carl Armbruster, musical lecturer.

It is interesting to learn that the Hamlin Company has secured the exclusive management of the celebrated European violinist, Herr Anton Witek, first concertmeister of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, who has never before appeared in America.

Glenn Hall, the eminent Chicago tenor, who sang in the "Redemption" with the Handel and Haydn Society of Boston, last Easter, has been re-engaged by that well-known organization for a concert on November 11. Mr. Hall is under the direction of Charles R. Baker.

On July 18, under the auspices of the Auditorium Conservatory, pupils of Robert Stevens, director of the piano department, and of Errico Sansone, violin instructor, will present an artistically arranged and representative program, consisting of compositions by Bach, Chopin, Schumann, De Beriot, Moszkowski, Paderewski, Brahms, Mozart, Gleason, Henselt and Pratt.

Walter Keller, of the Chicago Auditorium Conservatory, will give a recital on the new organ at the First Methodist Church, Evanston, on July 20. He will be assisted by the well-known baritone William A. Willett, of the same institution.

Frederick Warren, baritone, of the Auditorium Conservatory, will sing at a benefit concert to be given at the Pennoyer Sanitarium on July 15. His other engagements include private recitals at Waukegan, Ill., and Chicago, on July 26 and 29 respectively.

Miss Mabelle Crawford's concert appearances last week at Omaha, Neb., inspired the following appreciative estimate, written by Thomas J. Kelley, musical editor of the Omaha Bee:

Miss Crawford is a contralto who has forged ahead to the front ranks of American contraltos by hard, painstaking, honest study, eternal digging, deeper and deeper every year, a happy, healthy, sweet manner withal. Miss Crawford stands to-day on the pedestal she has herself carved out of the marble of reputation as one of the very few great contraltos we possess. Her voice is delightful. Her use of it is a most interesting study of brain work and muscle ease. Her temperament is the true fire, the emotional expression, the poetic delineation. She is a great artist. And she is an American.

George Hamlin, tenor, and Sydney Biden, baritone, gave their recital of classic songs and duets before the National Music Teachers' Association, at Put-in-Bay, on July 3, with distinguished success.

The Hamlin Company announces that Genevieve Clark Wilson, soprano, has been engaged for a concert at Neenah, Wis., on Friday, July 19. Miss Wilson has sung at Neenah several times, and is a great favorite there.

William H. Sherwood writes to his representative, Charles R. Baker, that the present season is the most successful he has had at the Chautauqua (N. Y.) Assembly in thirteen years.

The MacDowell Club, of Brook, Ind., conducted by Frederick Warren, of Chicago, will give a concert on Friday, July 19.

Miss Elsbeth Korrer, of the Auditorium Conservatory, is spending the vacation weeks at her home in Wisconsin, and Miss Fay Hill, of the same conservatory's piano department, is giving a number of piano recitals at Chautauqua resorts.

During July and August band concerts will be given at frequent intervals in the following Chicago parks: Lincoln, Humboldt, Jackson, Douglas, Washington and Garfield.

George Hamlin Honored.

George Hamlin, of Chicago, has accepted a personal invitation from Horatio W. Parker to sing the tenor role in "Hora Novissima," at New Haven, Conn., on October 22, when the bi-centennial of Yale University will be celebrated.

Sherwood's Success at Put-in-Bay.

William H. Sherwood received an ovation on July 3, the occasion being the Music Teachers' National Convention at Put-in-Bay. The climax of the American pianist's recital was Raff's March in D, op. 91, No. 4, which was characterized by brilliant execution and artistic interpretation. The enthusiastic applause was noteworthy, owing to the exceptionally discriminating nature of the audience. Mr. Sherwood expressed a desire to eliminate Liszt's Twelfth Rhapsody; however, notwithstanding the heat and also the length of the program, his hearers would not permit the pianist to leave out this number, at the conclusion of which there was a chorus of "bravos." Among those present was Charles R. Baker, Mr. Sherwood's manager, who carried away with him half a dozen contracts for this artist's appearance next season, three of the engagements being in Texas.

SARA ANDERSON AT BAYREUTH.

BAYREUTH, June 28, 1901.

SINCE the inauguration of the Wagner festivals, held each alternate year at Bayreuth, but two American sopranos have had the honor of being engaged to sing principal roles—Lillian Nordica, about six years ago, and this year Sara Anderson, who during the past two years has sung with such great success in most of the large centres of the United States.

Miss Anderson was originally asked to sing Senta in "The Flying Dutchman," but this being her début in opera she refused and accepted the roles of Gutrune in "Die Götterdämmerung" and Blumenmädchen in "Parsifal." After her first rehearsal, however, so enthusiastic was Frau Wagner over the work of this young American singer that she at once prevailed upon her to sing in addition Freia in "Rheingold," Rossweisse in the "Walküre" and "Eine Knappe" in "Parsifal."

These are honors which the young American artist must appreciate. Miss Anderson has made wonderful strides since her student days in Paris, and that is not very long ago, either, only three years by the calendar. Her appearance at the Worcester Festival last year was a triumph, and now all the musical world will hear of her success in opera here at the Mecca of the Wagnerites.

Miss Anderson will return to New York about October 1, and begin her season in the United States. Many concert dates are already booked for her.

THE AMERICAN OPERA COMPANY.—The American Opera Company, organized by William G. Stewart, which is filling an engagement in Providence, R. I., opened up last Monday night with a presentation of "Mikado." From the press notices which have been received it would appear that they had taken the place by storm. The Evening Telegram said: "Its principals are thorough going artists; its chorus a highly capable one." The Journal mentions the reputed coldness and critical spirit of Providence first night audiences and then says: "A few more audiences like that of last night and this reputation will be undeserved. * * * In the performance last evening there was no one particular star who stood pre-eminent above all the rest of the company, but each one fitted well into the part taken." The News remarks that "The chorus is fresh and full, and the principals leave very little to be desired." All of the principals, many of whom have been pupils of the American School of Opera, of this city, received individual "puffs." Miss Ruth Peebles, a former pupil of the school, and Miss Odette Bordeaux, were specially represented by photographs.

Western New York Office THE MUSICAL COURIER,
749 NORWOOD AVENUE,

FREDERIC ARCHER, of Pittsburg, Pa., played at the Temple of Music on June 22 before a crowded house. He was enthusiastically received. He is an artist well known and admired here and abroad.

Chas. E. Clemens, of Cleveland, gave several organ concerts at the Temple of Music.

Both programs showed thoughtful care. Each number, a gem from some noted composer, afforded as wide a range as possible, and Mr. Clemens' technic and registration leave nothing to be desired. He is a magnetic musician, carrying his audience with him, and the applause he won was his just due. Mr. Clemens began his career at the age of twelve as organist of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Devonport, England. In 1889 he went to Berlin, Germany, and his merits were not slow to be recognized. He accepted a position as organist at the Royal Chapel of St. George and of instructor at the Klindworth Conservatory, enjoying the distinction of being the only Englishman ever enrolled among the staff of professors in a Berlin institute. His organ recitals were always attended by told of his intention to emigrate to America. He inaugu- the Empress Friedrich, who expressed great regret when rated a vested choir at St. Paul's Episcopal Church in Cleveland, and is conductor of the Singers' Club and of the Akron Musical Club.

Chas. E. Clemens.

Henry Houseley, of Detroit, gave two organ concerts June 26 and 27. I am sorry not to have heard him, but as he is to appear again for a recital, we will have the pleasure of greeting him.

Harrison M. Wild was the organist on June 28, 29 and 30. His home is in Chicago. He is organist and choirmaster in Grace Episcopal Church, and is conductor of the Apollo Musical Club and the Mendelssohn Club of that city. His playing is characterized by remarkable brilliancy of execution, variety of touch and expression and musicianly interpretation, while behind it there lie sincerity of purpose, and not only a physical but a mental reserve force known by no better name than intellectuality. His career is destined to be as brilliant in the future as it has been in the past. His selections were from Dubois, Lemaire, Lorenz, Bach, Wagner, Buck, Luccas, Guilmant and some other American composers.

Harrison M. Wild.

"Concert Variations," by Dudley Buck, showed his remarkable proficiency in pedal phrasing. In some parts he brought out the music by the pedals alone. Buffalo soloists were Miss Julia O'Connor and Mrs. Hoag Haughty, both giving several soprano selections.

On July 1 and 2 Albert Jordan, of Brantford, Ont., gave two organ recitals. The feature of the concert was the violinist Poure, who shows good schooling. The boy soprano Lloyd Ames assisted.

Louis Falk, of Chicago, gave several concerts. July 3 he was assisted by the tenor Evan Williams, who sang "The Holy City," "The Sorrows of Death," from Mendelssohn's "St. Paul," and "All Through the Night." A beautiful accompaniment was played by William Gomph.

This notice of the recitals given July 7 and 8 by F. W. Riesberg, is written by Miss Mary Howard, music critic of the Buffalo Express:

The organ recitals at the Temple of Music on Sunday and Monday were given by F. W. Riesberg, formerly organist in the First Baptist Church and the Lafayette Presbyterian Church at Buffalo, and now organist and director of the Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark, N. J., and widely known in New York musical circles.

Mr. Riesberg's programs were largely made up of compositions of the French school, which were especially well adapted to hold the popular interest, as well as to show off the resources of the organ as to registration. The nice coloring of Dubois' "March of the Magi Kings," and the simplicity and sweetness of the "Swiss Melody," by Otto Froehlich, appealed so strongly to the audience that it tried to secure a repetition of both pieces. An organ duet, "Plymouth Church March," by John Zundel, played by Mr. Riesberg and his sister, Mrs. J. S. Marvin, furnished a touch of novelty.

F. W. Riesberg.

The vocalist at both recitals was Miss Estelle Harris, of New York, whose success was pronounced. Her full and brilliant voice filled the large auditorium with ease, and her singing of the Bach-Gounod "Ave Maria," with Mr. Riesberg at the piano, Mrs. Marvin at the organ and the violin obligato by J. K. Hartfuer, won an enthusiastic encore.

The Harmonie Quartet sang before the New York State Teachers' Association Saturday. The quartet is composed of Mrs. Harriet Welch Spire, first soprano; Miss Julia Agnes O'Connor, second soprano; Miss Neenah Lapey, first contralto; Mrs. Robert H. Heussler, second contralto; under the direction of Miss Mary M. Howard. They made their début about one year ago at the Orpheus and Saengerbund concerts, and have had many engagements since. Miss Howard has arranged many numbers for them and under her efficient training they are doing splendid work. Saturday they sang "Juanita" and "A Southern Lullaby."

Archer Gibson, of Baltimore, gave three organ concerts July 9, 10 and 11. He is organist and choirmaster of the First Presbyterian Church and teacher in the Peabody

SHERWOOD,
Greatest American Pianist.
ESTHER FEE,
Violinist.
(Paris—In America Nov. 1.)
BRUNO STEINDEL,
The Noted 'Cellist.
CLARA MURRAY,
Harpist.
LEONE LANGDON KEY,
Organist.

CHARLES R. BAKER,
MANAGER OF
High Class and Distinguished MUSICAL ARTISTS,
Fine Arts Building,
CHICAGO.

ELECTA GIFFORD,
Soprano.
(Late of Royal Opera, Amsterdam)
MABELLE CRAWFORD,
Contralto.
GLENN HALL,
Tenor.
SYDNEY LLOYD WRIGHTSON,
The English Baritone.
MASTER LLOYD SIMONSON,
The Famous Boy Soprano.

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

MARY WOOD CHASE, PIANO VIRTUOS
For Terms, Dates, &c., address HANNAH & HAMLIN, Managers.
Personal address: 3031 Prairie Avenue. 514 Kimball Hall, CHICAGO

FRANK T. BAIRD,
THE ART OF SINGING.
34 Monroe St., Chicago, Ill.

Mr. & Mrs. BICKNELL YOUNG,
67 Kimball Hall,
CHICAGO, ILL.

EDWARD MEEK,
BARITONE.
Pupils Accepted.
924 Fine Arts Building, Chicago.

NINETEENTH YEAR.
1899-1900.
MRS. REGINA WATSON'S SCHOOL
for the
HIGHER ART OF PIANO PLAYING.
107 Indiana Street, Chicago, Ill.

CLARA G. TRIMBLE, SOPRANO.
Address 619 Fine Arts Building, Chicago.

THE SPIERING QUARTET,
708 Fine Arts Building, Michigan Boulevard, CHICAGO.

MAURICE ARONSON PIANIST. Auditorium Building, (Tower, 1406.) Chicago.
Concerts, Recitals, Musicales, Lectures.
For the past four years chief assistant to Leopold Godowsky. Four Competent Assistants. Write for circular

W. C. E. SEEBOECK, PIANIST, Just returned from Europe, where he made very successful appearances.
Studio 727 FINE ARTS BUILDING, CHICAGO, ILL.

HELEN BUCKLEY, SOPRANO. Vocal Instruction. ORATORIO, CONCERTS, RECITALS
5316 MADISON AVENUE, CHICAGO.

Mrs. GEORGE A. COE,
(BARTH and MOSZKOWSKI)
Pianist and Lecturer,
640 University Place, EVANSTON, ILL.

Conservatory of Music, Baltimore. Mr. Gibson came well heralded; is said to be one of the finest organists of the country, playing with great artistic perception and much feeling. He was assisted by William J. Sheehan, basso, who is a popular singer and teacher of Buffalo. At his second concert he was assisted by Mrs. Howard Humphrys, soprano, Lockport. MRS. KATHERINE RIESBERG.

FLORENCE DODD SAILS FOR ENGLAND.—Miss Florence Dodd, who has been a very successful teacher at the Clavier Piano School for the past two seasons, sailed for Europe by the steamer Laurentian of the Allen Line, Wednesday, July 10.

Miss Dodd has been associated with Mr. Virgil in his work since 1895 in London and Berlin, and for the past two years in New York.

Notwithstanding she had studied under several of the best teachers of England and Germany, she quickly recognized the advanced ideas of Mr. Virgil, and was one of the first to study with him in London. She has been an enthusiastic worker ever since, and to her indefatigible and untiring thought is due much of the success of the Virgil method in London, Berlin and New York.

Miss Dodd will spend the summer with her parents at their country house in Surrey, England, returning in October to resume teaching in the Clavier Piano School.

ZIEGFELD EN TOUR.—Dr. F. Ziegfeld, of the Chicago Musical College, sails to-day from Europe on the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, and is due here next Tuesday. He spent June 27 in St. Germain-en-Laye and Contrexeville, and then in Paris and Northern France. He has become a universal traveler.

ESTABLISHED 1867.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, President.

The Largest and Most Complete Institution of Musical Learning in America.

COLLEGE BUILDING, 202 MICHIGAN BLVD.

The finest structure in existence devoted exclusively to a Musical College.

SCHOOL OF ACTING, MUSIC ELOCUTION, ORATORY, LANGUAGES.

BOARD OF MUSICAL DIRECTORS.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, DR. LOUIS FALK,
HANS VON SCHILLER, WILLIAM CASTLE,
BERNARD LISTEMANN, S. E. JACOBSOHN,
RUDOLPH GANZ, CHARLES GAUTHIER.
HERMAN DEVRIES,
HART CONWAY, Director School of Acting.

Catalogue Mailed Free.

RUMORS ABOUT THE ORCHESTRA.

Secretary E. A. Woods, of the Art Society, Makes a General Denial of Trouble—Wilson Manager of All Concerts.

(Pittsburg Leader.)

"FREDERICK M. RANKEN, manager for Victor Herbert's Pittsburg Orchestra."

The gossips are telling how this innocent looking caption on the letter heads of the popular director of the Pittsburg Symphony Orchestra is going to stir up what in the vernacular of the street is designated as "a hot time" in the city's crack musical organization. The Leader has already printed the report that Mr. Ranken, a well-known manager of comic opera companies and the writer of the book of Herbert's "Ameer," in which Frank Daniels has been starring, has been engaged to supplant George H. Wilson in the management of the Pittsburg Orchestra's out of town tours, but the busybodies of the musical world look beyond the mere rumored change in the management of the concerts outside of Pittsburg, and see, or imagine they see, the inception of a bitter internecine fight, which, they predict, will either disrupt the orchestra or result in the resignation of Mr. Herbert.

According to the official statement made by William N. Frew, chairman of the orchestra committee, when the Leader told him of the report from New York that Mr. Ranken was to succeed Mr. Wilson as manager of the Pittsburg orchestra, Mr. Wilson was re-elected manager of the orchestra some time ago, and will serve until next March at least. Unofficially it is said that the real trouble may develop into a contest between Mr. Herbert and Mr. Frew, the latter having taken up the cudgel in behalf of Mr. Wilson. Some misunderstandings between the orchestra director and manager occurred last season in regard to the railroad arrangements for the tours, and this is made the excuse for the employment of Mr. Ranken, who, so the story goes, is to stay in Pittsburg during the season and collaborate with Mr. Herbert in the writing of several new operas. All the parties concerned in the controversy are out of the city at present, and it was impossible yesterday to obtain a statement from them regarding any of the many rumors that have been afloat.

When the report became known, however, that a Wood street printing house had been given an order to print a quantity of letter heads for Mr. Herbert with the name of Mr. Ranken on and the title of business manager of "Victor Herbert's Pittsburg Orchestra," following it, there were those who foresaw dire things for the Symphony Orchestra.

It is known that Mr. Wilson has some very close friends in the orchestra committee and there are some, also, whose loyalty to him might be questioned. Some dissatisfaction was engendered, it is said, by the so-called "Pops" (popular concerts) given at Duquesne Garden at the close of the regular orchestra season and Mr. Wilson was censured for them, not by the orchestra committee, but by individual guarantors. It seems that an effort had been made to secure the orchestra for the Pittsburg Exposition, but Mr Wilson objected and succeeded in preventing the engagement, on the ground that it would cheapen the organization to play at popular prices. Once having done so it could not expect the public to pay the high prices of the regular season. Then came the "Pops" at cheap prices. What could not be done for the Exposition, in a way a public institution, it was asserted should not have been done for private enterprise.

Mr. Herbert's objection to Mr. Wilson, it was reported was based simply on the railroad arrangements for the past season. Mr. Ranken's wider experience in traveling over the country with a theatrical troupe he believed would be of greater benefit to the organization in making its engagements for the coming season. Mr. Frew, however, did not look at matters in this light and stood by Mr. Wilson. Then came the order to the printer for the "Victor Herbert's Pittsburg Orchestra" stationery, a fact which it is understood has not as yet reached the orchestra guarantors. The organization in the past has been advertised as "The Pittsburg Orchestra, Victor Herbert, Director." The guarantors have been proud to have Mr. Herbert's name on all their printed matter, but some of them, it seems, object to subordinating the organization to the director.

Edward A. Woods, secretary of the Art Society, when questioned in regard to the stories going the rounds, said: "There is absolutely no truth in them so far as the removal of Mr. Wilson is concerned or of any quarrel in the organization. Mr. Wilson's work has been highly commended both by the Art Society and the orchestra committee, and he has been re-engaged as manager for the Pittsburg Art Society and the Pittsburg Orchestra. He will have the assistance of W. B. Clayton, as he had last year. It requires somebody to travel with the orchestra when it is out of town, and Mr. Wilson is too busy to do this all the time. His re-engagement means that he will have charge of the orchestra concerts at home and abroad.

"If it is true that Mr. Ranken is coming to Pittsburg, and that stationery is being printed with his name on as manager for 'Victor Herbert's Pittsburg Orchestra,' that is a private matter between Mr. Herbert and Mr. Ranken. It may be that Mr. Herbert is going to take the orchestra out for a few weeks on his own hook, and if he wishes to do this and stand the expense I don't see why anybody should object."

CHOIR'S PAY HELD FOR LEADER'S DEBT.—BINGHAMTON, N. Y., July 14—The choir of the First Congregational Church, one of the largest and most fashionable in this city, has been obliged to go without its pay because the check given for its salary was seized by its leader's groceryman in payment for a bill.

Arthur Forwood Bower, who came to this city from New York to lead the choir and officiate as organist, had, it is alleged, contracted a grocery bill of $72. The bill was presented, but not paid.

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

MISS ESTHER FEE, VIOLINISTE.

(PARIS—IN AMERICA NOVEMBER 1st.)

Exclusive Management CHARLES R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

HARRISON M. WILD, CONCERT ORGANIST.

Studio 6, 241 .. Wabash Ave., CHICAGO.

Piano and Organ Instruction.

D. A. CLIPPINGER,
The Art of Singing.
Conductor,
410 Kimball Hall, Chicago, Ill.

EARL R. DRAKE,
VIOLIN VIRTUOSO.
Teacher.
Studio Kimball Hall, Chicago.

VICTOR GARWOOD,
Kimball Hall, Chicago.

William A.
WILLETT, BARITONE.
Care Musical Courier, Chicago, or leading agents.

ALLEN SPENCER,
PIANIST. Concerts, Recitals.
Address: KIMBALL HALL, CHICAGO.

KARLETON HACKETT,
Teacher of Singing,
Kimball Hall, Chicago.

MARY PECK THOMSON,
SOPRANO,
620 Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

CAROLYN LOUISE WILLARD,
CONCERT PIANIST. Instruction.
Pupil of Ernst Jedliczka, Bloomfield-Zeisler.
For terms and dates address
4164 Lake Avenue, Chicago.

FREDERICK WARREN,
BARITONE,
Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.

MUSICAL KINDERGARTEN FOR THE PIANOFORTE
BY FANNIE CHURCH PARSONS.
For full information concerning normal instruction or children's class work, address
MRS. PARSONS' NORMAL TRAINING SCHOOL,
Handel Hall, CHICAGO, ILL.

Mrs. THEODORE WORCESTER, Pianist.
(GODOWSKY.)
Concerts, Recitals and Salon Musicales. Recitals from Russian Composers.
ADDRESS: 1402 Auditorium Tower, CHICAGO.

R. CAPOUL CUTTRISS WARDE,
SINGING MASTER.
The teacher of many prominent artists now before the public. Send for list.
STUDIO: No. 911 Cable Building, Cor. Jackson and Wabash, CHICAGO.

MINNIE CRUDUP VESEY, MEZZO CONTRALTO
CONCERTS, RECITALS, VOCAL TEACHER, COACHING.
Address HANNNH & HAMLIN, 514 Kimball Hall, CHICAGO.

Chicago Auditorium Conservatory
AUDITORIUM BUILDING, CHICAGO.
Send for Summer Catalogue.
FREDERIC GRANT GLEASON, Director.
ROY ARTHUR HUNT, Manager.

ROWDON Basso-Cantante,
623 Fine Arts Building,
CHICAGO, ILL.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY,
JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, Director, Kimball Building, 243 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO.
ALL BRANCHES OF MUSIC. DRAMATIC ART. TEACHERS' TRAINING DEPARTMENT.
JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, VICTOR GARWOOD, ALLEN H. SPENCER, GERTRUDE MURDOUGH, GLENN DILLARD GUNN, HOWARD WELLS, Piano; KARLETON HACKETT, NOYES B. MINER, HOLMES COWPER, GLENN HALL, RAGNA LINNE, MABEL GOODWIN, LOUISE BLISH, Singing; WILHELM MIDDELSCHULTE, Organ; JAN VAN OORDT, Violin; ADOLPH WEIDIG, Composition; JAN KALAS, Violoncello, and thirty other superior instructors.
Catalogue mailed free. 243 Wabash Avenue, care of American Conservatory.

Gottschalk Lyric School. Musical and Dramatic.
CATALOGUE MAILED ON APPLICATION.
L. G. GOTTSCHALK, Director. KIMBALL HALL, 243-253 Wabash Ave., CHICAGO

HANS VON BULOW'S "NIRVANA."

THE number of the Bayreuther Blätter for June, 1900, includes a remarkable letter (undated, bearing the postmark, Zurich, October 26, 1854) from Wagner to Bülow, then published for the first time. It has been translated by C. A. Barry for the Zeitschrift der Internationalich Musik Gesellsschaft:

DEAR HANS—Best thanks for your letters, and still more for what you sent with them! Your compositions have much engaged and excited my attention; but from the very first in making acquaintance with them I found myself in straits, for the reason that you ask for an opinion upon them which it is impossible for me to give. In the first place, how shall I come to a clear perception of their effect? You know my infamous piano playing, which only allows me to reproduce what I have already acquired a clear perception of. What I can take in with the eye, in contradistinction to what I would know of the matter, is too little for me to form a just idea of it. You must allow, too, that in every respect your style is of a kind which precludes a judgment of it without one's having previously experienced the effect of a performance of the work. Hence I should have first to put myself in your place as pianist, and then to think of an orchestra—in every way a distinguished one—in order to attain an exact idea as to what effect your music would have. What without such help I have with difficulty scraped together, the imperfect image which was all I could represent to myself, I neither would nor could hold for the thing itself, and therefore declare to you that you still owe me a hearing of your compositions. But should I accordingly have formed an opinion, which in my naïve manner I believe I have brought to my comprehension, you must content yourself with the following quite personal expression of it.

Your power of invention has at once struck me; your gift in this direction is undeniably strong, and especially reveals itself in the more recently composed orchestral Fantasia. The thematic structure in your design, and carrying out, is large and lucid, and, especially in the Fantasia, is original, emanating, as it does, entirely from the subject. Your several motives are clearly characterized, but in the "Cæsar" Overture, not nearly so precise as in the Fantasia; at least, after the single scanty impression which I have acquired I cannot yet, except in an arbitrary manner, make up my mind that the several motives throughout correspond with the subject matter; but that also is the fault, perhaps here, of the material, which is at least not quite favorable; this also, as it seems to me, tends to make the themes themselves less original, less telling. Thus, for instance, the principal theme in the bass strikes me as not very remarkable, but rather as somewhat bombastic; an effect which is always produced when one is not quite sure what to do with the given poetical motive. This is advantageously altered in the Fantasia; here you are more at home with the matter, and if ever a music piece was invested with a mood of feeling it is this one; that it is a ghastly mood is another matter. Altogether in this composition you are far more independent, and all therein is unmistakable. In both works I am amazed at your technic; under which head, according to my opinion, in the management of difficult forms, whether in detail or in gross, you cannot well be surpassed. I cannot do otherwise, then, than award you mastership, to the extent of holding the opinion that you can do anything you like. If, on the other hand, I have an underlying doubt in regard to your formal matter, it is as to your attitude toward harmonic euphony; in that particular I avow to you that I have received no other impression than that of a highly important piece performed by instruments which are out of tune, and for this reason I am longing for an adequate performance which might rid me of these disagreeable impressions. I know from experience that there are subjects of musical representation which can only be expressed by inventing harmonic situations likely to offend the ear of the musical Philistine. But if I detected this in my own work, I was always simultaneously impelled by a strong desire to conceal as far as possible the harshness of my harmonic progressions, and at last to present them in a manner which (according to my feeling) would no longer be regarded as harsh. Now I cannot yet get rid of the feeling as if you proceeded just in the contrary way, viz., as if you thought it desirable that the harshness should be felt as harshness; and this I notice in the most unpleasant way where I perceive the entire invention to consist in such harshness.

Here follow some examples of the harsh harmonies which Wagner criticises. Of one of these Wagner remarks: I have with a regular course of training tried to reconcile myself to it, because I saw that you have laid so great stress upon it. At certain moments I have succeeded, especially when I endeavored to regard it as typical of suicidal mania. But this did not last long, and I soon fell back into my old infirmity, which makes me believe that the mission of art is to impart the strangest and most unusual feelings to the hearer, in such a way that his attention may not be diverted by the material of audition, but rather that as it were without resistance he may yield to my flattering enticement and absorb into himself what is most strange.

Observe, Hans, that I too, had in truth just similar experiences even in my earliest composing period, when I put everything else aside till I had discovered such a harmonic device. But at that period I could not create anything good, and was not in a position to write a music piece so much to the point, and testifying to such mastership, as your Fantasia. I can only wonder at you; you have certainly misapprehended yourself, you have far too much inventive faculty to let yourself be amused with such pleasantries. Observe, there is something cold and Jewishly indifferent about the business, if others (as in fact really happens) only take notice in our communications of such oddities, and talk to us as if the matter itself was nothing.

You see how little importance I attach to this matter, and that according to my conviction my criticism of your works refers only to unessentials, not to essentials. Therefore accept my judgment, though I cannot altogether regard it as a judgment, as one very favorable to you. I do not call to mind that I was ever so effected by a new piece, in spite of imperfect acquaintance with it, as now by this Fantasia. Have you heard it played? That you do not say. * * *

This letter (writes Mr. Barry), gives rise to some reflections. As regards its main purport, it came as a response to Bülow, who had asked for Wagner's opinion of some of his (Bülow's) compositions); and it will be observed that while awarding Bülow high praise and encouragement, Wagner also gave him some candid criticism. In the case of two out of three passages which Wagner suggested that Bülow should reconsider, the latter made no alterations. As regards the "subject matter" so much spoken of, it is unfortunate that Bülow's letters to Wagner are not forthcoming so as to establish its identity. Wagner's letter does not once mention "Nirvána" as the subject of the Orchestral Fantasia, and he only writes as if he is quite familiar with the subject treated. It was at a later date that this work was published as an orchestral "mood picture" (Stimmungsbild) with the title of "Nirvána." At the close of Wagner's letter we find that he had just made acquaintance with some of the works of Schopenhauer, who was the first to popularize in Germany the Indian idea of "Nirvána." As a result of Wagner's letter Bülow applied to his friend C. Ritter for information respecting Schopenhauer. We cannot therefore come to any other conclusion than that Bülow knew nothing about "Nirvána" when he wrote this composition in or before 1854, and it must have been a title adopted subsequently. But mention is made in several of Bülow's letters of an Orchestral Fantasia in the same key (B minor) which he composed as an overture to Byron's "Cain." Looking then to the expressions in the present letter regarding pessimism, &c., it seems almost certain that "Nirvána" and "Cain" are identical.

I had the good fortune to attend both the rehearsals and the performance of "Nirvána" at a festival of the "Allgemeiner Deutscher Musik-Verein" held at Meiningen in 1867. In many respects the occasion was to myself a memorable one; for it was then that I was first personally introduced to Liszt. I recall that one day at a rehearsal I was looking over the score of "Nirvána," in company with the late Walter Bache, when Liszt suddenly rushed up to us, seized hold of the score, and, turning over the leaves backward and forward, analyzed its form for us in a most astonishingly rapid manner. I have preserved the program book of the festival. It contains an explanation of the drift of "Nirvána," presumably contributed by Bülow himself, which runs as follows: "Nirvána"—the Indian term of expression, popularized by Arthur Schopenhauer, for that likewise Indian idea of a metaphysical world of non-existence, as opposed to "Samsára," the visible world of illusion, in which we move and have our being, and which alone on this account is accessible to our perception—is the title of this psychological picture in music. Its "program" throughout rests upon no external pragmatical occurrence, but dramatically develops a series and succession of inner moods, which, if the composer has succeeded in depicting them in sound, may awake a kindred echo in the heart of everyone who takes life in earnest, and does not regard death as a passing jest leading to a new life. It represents the ardent longing for release from the torments of individual existence, in passionate conflict with a vehement will clinging to life; this last refusing to sacrifice the dream of a true blessedness distinct from the ethical, which can only be acquired through self-abnegation, through the denial of the will to live. The introduction and the conclusion of the musical piece inclose symmetrically the arena of this struggle (the Allegro). The introductory theme, which points to voluntary self-sacrifice cannot be conquered by any of the various counter-streams of the middle section, in which the strongest motives for a retention of existence, hate and love, make a trial of their power. This holds the battlefield, a solution which optimism might regard as a so-called tragical one, but the last sigh of the vanishing "Nirvána" is not intended by the author in this sense.

Some further explanation of it has been given by Bülow's biographer, Bernhard Vogel.* He writes: "In 'Nirvána' a mood picture which exactly coincides with its subject matter is brought before us. The Buddhistic doctrine of fleeing from the world here finds its orchestral equivalent and a glorification which, as far as we know, has never before been attempted by musical art. In accordance with the nature of the subject, the tone poem is pervaded by a gloomy and sorrowful character; where pessimism strives to entrance, only a gloomy color can be in place, and this diffuses itself in broad streams over many pages of the score, without, however, sacrificing all claims to contrast; but it seems as if the gleam of light too suddenly vanished again to establish an equipoise to the night of despair."

In a report of this festival which appeared in the Guardian I myself wrote as follows: "As a work of art 'Nirvána' is a miracle of complexity, abounding in instrumental effects and melodious themes, one or more of which, either alone or in combination, are treated contrapuntally in nearly every bar, with extreme cleverness. Interesting as a musical study as the score of it is, the attempt to portray in musical tones a metaphysical idea of the utmost abstruseness, in the absence of spontaneity of idea and of continuous melody, results in an impression both dreary and unsatisfactory." Against the above I may now say that, so much more pessimistic music having appeared since 1867, it might be desirable to reconsider this opinion.

*"Hans von Bülow. Sein Leben und sein Entwickelungsgang." von Bernhard Vogel. Leipsic, Max Hesse's Verlag, 1887.

Amy Whaley Studying with Miss Montefiore.

MISS AMY WHALEY, the soprano vocalist, who traveled with the Marine Band last season, is now studying with Miss Caroline Montefiore. Before she returns to her duties in the autumn Miss Whaley expects to add a number of big arias and good songs to her repertory. She will devote most of her summer to serious study at the Montefiore studio in the Ormonde. Miss Whaley has been re-engaged for the tour with the Marine Band next season.

VICTOR BAILLARD IN THE ADIRONDACKS.—Victor Baillard, after a more than successful season teaching and singing, is in the Adirondack Mountains at Cascade, taking a rest, hunting and fishing. He teaches only two days each week, just to keep the moths out. Baillard is going to do more singing than ever next winter, and we expect to hear of great things from him.

HAVANA'S POLICE BAND.—The Havana Police Band, which is playing at the Pan-American Exposition, is making a remarkable impression there. The conductor is Captain Tomas, who has trained the band up to that point where it has become a rival of the most important military bands. It is expected that this band will give some concerts in New York before its return to Cuba.

The Bostonians are busy choosing people for their next season. William H. MacDonald and H. C. Barnaby have been hearing voices about twice a week at the Berkeley Lyceum, and last Saturday they engaged eight people who were presented to them through William G. Stewart's American School of Opera—in which school, by the way, they have considerable confidence.

ST. LOUIS ADVERTISEMENTS.

HOMER MOORE, BARITONE.
The Odeon, St. Louis, Mo.

MRS. STELLA KELLOGG HAINES,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION,
101, 102, 103 Vista Building, Cor. Grand and Franklin, ST. LOUIS, MO.

ALEXANDER HENNEMAN,
VOCAL CULTURE.
Opera. Oratorio.
Coaching.
Henneman Hall, 2723 Olive St., ST. LOUIS

STELLA HADDEN-ALEXANDER.

STELLA HADDEN-ALEXANDER is a musician of thorough training as well as a pianist of rare and exceptional gifts. In her playing she combines refinement with power, and poetry with intellect, and more cannot be said of any pianist.

Inheriting musical talent from her mother, a skillful organist and singer, the childhood of Stella Hadden was passed amid a charming artistic atmosphere. The mother taught her child the rudiments, and the little one's advancement, while in no way forced, made an impression in the musical world. At twelve Miss Hadden was an accomplished pianist, and about that time she entered upon her studies with Eugene Bonn, graduate of the Royal Conservatory of Munich. For five years Miss Hadden studied with this excellent master, and in the meantime she received intellectual training at Oberlin College, the alma mater of many successful men and women in the arts and sciences. Her studies in mathematics and literature added breadth and spiritual discernment to her music, and before she had passed out of her teens her piano playing appealed strongly to the discriminating critic.

Michigan was the birth State of the little musician, but her permanent home for years was Ohio, and after leaving Oberlin she went to Boston to study the different musical branches with such masters as George W. Chadwick, J. C. D. Parker, Louis C. Elson and Otto Bendix. At the end of the first year in Boston, Miss Hadden gave a recital, and when it is announced that two of her numbers were the Beethoven "Emperor" Concerto and the Chopin Polonaise in E flat, all who heard her realized that she had arrived, as the French say. That renowned American pianist, William H. Sherwood, prepared Miss Hadden for Germany. She went to Berlin and put herself under the judicious guidance of Carl Klindworth, and happy indeed did the selection of that professor prove for the young American student. All great singers know that the study of the piano or organ is an aid in making them more musical, and most pianists of fame long since discovered that study of vocal music or the violin helped them to phrase correctly. Like Von Bülow, Klindworth inclined to this broad opinion, and he urged Miss Hadden to take singing lessons, and Julius Hey became her instructor. The natural love of the young pianist for literature made her long for the works of Goethe, Schiller, Heine and other famous poets and prose writers of the Fatherland. Becoming in due time a ready German scholar, the young American girl was able to enjoy these treasures to the full and apply them to her music. About this time Miss Hadden developed her inclination for the romantic composers, and in her performances of the works of Schumann and Chopin gave unmistakable evidence of temperament. After her return from Europe, the pianist continued her studies with MacDowell, and her reverence for that great artist amounts to worship. In another column we review Mrs. Hadden-Alexander's performance of MacDowell's "Sonata Tragica" at Clavier Hall last Friday evening.

The "lucky" star pursued the young pianist in her marriage to Arthur Bengough Alexander, a young man who combines in a remarkable degree the practical with the ideal. He is a successful man of business in the day, and in the evening he enters the artistic world as a singer. His voice, a noble basso cantante, has been finely trained. He and his wife have given recitals together, and the series given by them in the public school lecture course attracted more than ordinary interest. Mr. Alexander is a member of the choir at St. Bartholomew's P. E. Church on Madison avenue. A young son of fine talents completes the happiness of the Alexander household. A happy domestic life is something the professional woman prizes as only the awakened and soulful woman can, and when this is evident to all, the home life of the artist ever stands as a rebuke to those who declare art and matrimony irreconcilable.

Last season Mrs. Hadden-Alexander devoted much of her time to a class of pupils, some of them from out of town whose importunities she could not resist. This coming autumn and winter, however, she will be heard often in concerts and recitals. The announcement was no sooner made than she heard of societies and clubs ready to engage her. In the past Mrs. Hadden-Alexander has played at concerts under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute, with the Kneisel Quartet, with clubs, in the different cities and of notable importance a recital at Mendelssohn Hall.

As THE MUSICAL COURIER published last winter, Mrs. Hadden-Alexander and Francis Fischer Powers opened studios jointly at Carnegie Hall, and on October 1 next they will resume their work together under auspices more extended. The different departments of the Powers-Alexander studios will be conducted as follows:

SEASON OF 1901-2.

THE POWERS-ALEXANDER STUDIOS, AT CARNEGIE HALL, NEW YORK.

Open for the above season on October 1.

DEPARTMENTS.

Voice Culture and the Art of Singing—Francis Fischer Powers. Assistants, Horace Horton Kinney and George Goldsmith Daland.
Piano—Mrs. Hadden-Alexander.
Violin—Miss Julia C. Allen.
French Diction for Singers, German and Italian—Mrs. Adele Laeis Baldwin (authorized teacher of the Yersin method).
Choral Singing—Mrs. Rous-Wilkinson.
Expression, Strength, Grace of Body, &c.—Miss Dorothy Coates.
Harmony, Theory and Analysis—Frank H. Shepard.
Violoncello—Charles Russell.
Sight Reading—George Goldsmith Daland.
Coach Master (for Mr. Powers)—Horace Horton Kinney.
Drill Master (for Mr. Powers)—Harold Stewart Briggs.

Following are some of Mrs. Hadden-Alexander's press notices:

Mrs. Alexander is a pianist of great power and enthusiasm, and has assured for herself a commanding position on the concert stage.—Cleveland Leader.

Mrs. Alexander is a woman of strong individuality, an artist broad and sympathetic in her readings.—Toledo Blade.

* * * It is not too much to say that her equal has not been heard in New Orleans for many years. She has a wonderful command over the instrument, a firm yet delicate touch, and her shading and tone color are exceptionally fine.—New Orleans States.

Among the best numbers on the program were the piano solos of Mrs. Hadden-Alexander, who was most enthusiastically received and encored. Her fire, brilliancy and temperament recall Teresa Carreño, and to these qualities Mrs. Alexander adds great poetry and delicacy of tone.—New York Press.

Mrs. Hadden-Alexander is a pianist who has gained reputation abroad, and this has been greatly increased since her return to America. Her power of interpretation is remarkable, while brilliancy of technic and warmth of tone color vitalize all her interpretations. In sweep and power her strong passages are masculine rather than feminine. The great charm of her playing, and that which distinguishes it from the work of most women pianists, is its power to make the listener think. Beneath her touch the piano becomes a living, talking personality. The character of the woman is felt in every note—sympathetic, tender and intellectual. Whether she brings us the old masters or the American composers who have won their laurels, she never fails to reveal the musical idea in the clearest possible form. Her programs give peculiar intellectual pleasure to drawing room and club entertainments. She is a favorite in many homes of the choicest people in New York city.—New York Tribune.

The recital given on Thursday afternoon by Mrs. Hadden-Alexander attracted a large number of the pianist's friends and admirers. It was held at Mendelssohn Hall, and was made up of MacDowell's "Sonata Tragica," the Schubert-Liszt "Erlkönig" and compositions by Bach, Schumann, Chopin, Raff, Grieg, Brockway and Liszt. The admirable technic of the performer was rewarded with applause and a quantity of beautiful flowers.—Harper's Bazaar.

* * * Her work is characterized by dash and brilliancy, coupled with refined seriousness and strength. * * * The MacDowell selections were given a superb reading.—Albany Journal.

Mrs. Hadden-Alexander, of New York, who entertained the guests of the New York City Chapter with her wonderful musical talent Monday night is one of the women to be proud of, and the New York delegation made the most of her. She is a pianist of superb technic. She has had the instruction of the best masters in the United States and in Berlin, and the result is the most exquisite combination of power, execution and sentiment, and the elaboration of a divinely bestowed talent. Withal, Mrs. Alexander is a charming woman.—Washington Evening Star.

Mrs. Hadden Alexander gave a piano recital at Mendelssohn Hall yesterday afternoon, and showed herself a facile and agreeable pianist.—New York Herald.

The music room at Rauscher's was crowded last evening to hear the program offered by Mrs. Hadden Alexander, of New York, who proved before she had fairly begun on rather a lengthy program that she is a most capable pianist. Her best work, perhaps, was shown in the MacDowell and Chopin numbers and the "Tarantella" of Moszkowski, this number winning for the performer a storm of applause.—Washington Post.

Mrs. Alexander showed herself to be a thorough artist. She plays with a great deal of brilliancy, finely tempered with exquisite feeling, and a technic that could only have been attained by many years of earnest work. Nothing finer in the way of a technical performance at the piano has ever been given in this city.—Washington Times.

* * * She has the fine intelligence that produces rare tone color. Her physical power is magnificent. Behind these accomplishments is still the endowment of temperament. Her playing is very brilliant, very correct and very beautiful; has strength, freedom and distinction, and is characterized by absolute control of her technic, insuring perfect ease and abandon by an intellectual mastery of her subject and a sympathetic understanding of the composer's intentions. She has an immense repertory at her command.—Elmira, N. Y., Advertiser.

Mrs. Alexander is a broad, romantic player. She is a painter who uses her colors in masses and does not care to work out the minute details. This does not mean that she slights the delicate passages, for she plays them daintily and with beautiful liquid tone. It means that the dominant tone of her playing is brilliant and virile, that she excels when she has a story to tell, and succeeds best when this story is a romance, full of fire and life.

The poetic fire of her playing took the audience by storm. Her marvelous strength and unusual technic were momentarily forgotten in the dramatic fervor of her interpretations.—Nebraska State Journal.

Mrs. Alexander plays with enthusiasm and great power, yet her tone remains musical even when most forceful. Her touch is varied and her tone color proportionately so. Her technic is ample and her sympathetic temperament enables her to infuse her playing with the spiritual quality. The audience was thoroughly in sympathy with the pianist and recalled her several times. The artist gave ample evidence that she will take a commanding position on the concert stage by reason of her sound musicianship and broad culture.—American Art Journal.

While this was Mrs. Hadden-Alexander's first appearance in Manchester, it is sincerely to be hoped that it will be far from her last, for it is a privilege which those in New Hampshire seldom enjoy to listen to an artist who combines such perfection of technic and pedaling with such delicate shadings of expression. She not only possesses all the finish which years of the most capable schooling bestow, but is fortunate enough to have one of those rarely sympathetic natures which make possible a soulful rendition of a composer's score—a nature which feels what the inspiration of the writer was when the composition was produced, and whose fingers operate in harmony with it.—Manchester, N. H., Union.

Mrs. Alexander's playing brought out all of the strength, the realism, the tenderness, the feeling of MacDowell's compositions, and thrilled the listeners with awe and exquisite pleasure. That such a strong and splendid program could be given by one performer in an evening is remarkable, showing not only rare ability but great physical and mental endurance. Mrs. Alexander played from first to last from memory.—Decatur, Ill., Review.

GERARD-THIERS.—Albert Gerard-Thiers, the voice specialist, left for Europe June 29 for the summer months, his studio being left in the capable care of his pupil, Miss Louise Gerard. Mr. Gerard-Thiers will visit his old-time friend and maestro, Delle Sedie, in Paris and then go to Chiensee, in Upper Bavaria, this latter being the place of action of the beautiful poem "Eliland," an illustrated lecture song recital which Mr. Gerard-Thiers is completing. He tendered his pupils a farewell reception in his studio on the afternoon of the 27th.

OLIVE MEAD, VIOLINIST.

Appearing during the coming season of 1901-2 with the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA in Boston for the third time.
During July and August, please address MISS MEAD personally, 560 Park Avenue, New York.
Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

MRS. Carl Alves
Has Resumed Vocal Instruction at her Home Studio:
1146 Park Ave. near 91st Street, New York.

JULIAN PASCAL
Pianist. Concert, Recitals, Musicales.
For Terms and Dates address care of
MUSICAL COURIER, 1135 Broadway, New York.

MISS MONTEFIORE
VOICE.
Private Studio and Address:
THE ORMONDE,
2030 Broadway, corner 70th St., New York.

LOUIS V. SAAR,
Piano and Composition.
Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration.
Residence-Studio: 126 E. Eighty-third St., New York City.
Personal interview daily, 1 to 3.

HENRI G. SCOTT,
BASSO.
ORATORIO, CONCERT, RECITALS.
ADDRESS: 14 E. 42d Street, NEW YORK.
2117 N. 20th Street, PHILADELPHIA.

ETHEL L. ROBINSON,
(LONDON CONCERT DIRECTION)
Telegrams: "Musikchor, London."
122 Beaufort St., S. W., LONDON, ENGLAND

CINCINNATI, July 13, 1901.

HOWARD S. BARNETT, who is baritone soloist at the Walnut Hills First Presbyterian Church, recently sang in recital the difficult aria from "Hans Heiling"—"An Jenem Tag."

Mr. Barnett's voice is a pure baritone of the heroic type, and he shows good taste in his singing, as was evinced in the "Heiling" number, which was sung with spirit.

Mr. Barnett is connected with the Mendelssohn Male Quartet, of Cincinnati, and will be with that organization in its Chautauqua work in the South and West during the latter part of July and all of August.

Adolph H. Stadermann will have charge of the organ department of the College of Music next year. He will be associated with Mr. Sterling, who will retain a few of the more advanced pupils. Mr. Sterling is the newly appointed dean of the college.

Mr. Stadermann well deserves the honor, and with his persistent application, earnest endeavor and particular talent for teaching, the organ department of the college may look forward to a very bright future.

Mr. Stadermann is a Cincinnati product and was born in this city November 24, 1875, of German parents. He seems to have inherited his musical talents from his father's side. His grandfather was an organist in Saxony; an uncle is now organist in Charlottenburg, Berlin, and another relative, Karl Stadermann, was a piano virtuoso and concertized in America about the time of the Civil War.

Mr. Stadermann received his entire school and musical education in the city of his birth. At an early age he showed decidedly musical tendencies and received his first piano lessons from his father. At the age of about ten he was placed under the tuition of J. A. O. Schweers, who taught him piano for nearly six years. During this time he studied harmony, first with Mr. Schweers and then for some time with Christian Henkel.

He entered the College of Music in September, 1892; passed the academic matriculation examination on January 14 following, and continued his studies at the institution for seven years.

He studied organ under James P. Donnelly and received his organ certificate June 16, 1894. The study of piano he pursued under Sidney C. Durst (two years), Charles A. Graninger (two years), and Albino Gorno (three years). For two years he was also a member of the Prima Vista piano classes of Benjamin Guckenberger and Almon W. Vincent. He studied harmony, counterpoint and composition for three years under John A. Broekhoven, and the normal class course under Vincent and Broekhoven was finished during the same three years.

Mr. Stadermann enjoyed the advantages and distinction of a three years' free scholarship in musical directorship under Frank Van der Stucken, conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, the studies embracing orchestra and chorus conducting, orchestration, chorus arranging and composition. He appeared frequently at college recitals and concerts in the capacity of pianist, organist or composer.

His first practical experience as organist he received at St. Edward's Church, where he assisted James P. Donnelly, now organist of All Saints' Church, New York. On April 22, 1894, he took his first regular position as organist of St. Paul's P. E. Church, Newport, Ky. After playing a few months at the Church of the Assumption he received the appointment of organist and choir director of the Sacred Heart Church. Here he remained with honor to himself for three years, and then accepted the position of organist at St. Lawrence's Church, Price Hill. Here he organized a large choir and double quartet; planned and supervised the building of the large new organ (the largest church organ in Cincinnati), and inaugurated same brilliantly on August 5, 1900, being assisted by a fine, select chorus of eighty-five voices, specially organized for the occasion.

Owing to some misunderstanding between the board of trustees and himself, Mr. Stadermann resigned his position and accepted a re-engagement at the Church of the Sacred Heart upon the most advantageous terms. Here he is still active, and his work is highly appreciated.

Since its organization Mr. Stadermann has been organist of the Catholic Festival Chorus of nearly 1,000 voices, and at its concerts in Music Hall he presides over the large organ in an efficient manner, whether as accompanist or soloist.

Mr. Stadermann is a man of considerable executive ability and a very successful teacher. Besides attending to his duties at the college, Mr. Stadermann will continue to teach a limited class of private pupils at his residence in Glenway avenue, Price Hill, and probably at his city studio.

Oscar Ehrgott is much pleased with the results of his summer school. It is in a very flourishing condition, and the normal classes are exceptionally well attended.

J. A. HOMAN.

HADDEN-ALEXANDER RECITAL AT CLAVIER HALL.

ALTHOUGH we are in the heart of midsummer, there was considerable serious music played in town last week. Certainly one of the important events was the piano recital in the faculty series at the Clavier Piano School last Friday evening. The performer was Mrs. Hadden-Alexander, whose work at the school during the summer session has been recognized and greatly appreciated. The artist had the rare privilege of playing only before musical people, and throughout the evening she held the undivided attention of the students and teachers assembled in the pretty hall. The program presented follows:

Sonata Tragica.....MacDowell
Rigaudon.....Raff
Hark, Hark, the Lark!.....Schubert-Liszt
Waldesrauschen.....Liszt
Cortège Rustique.....Templeton Strong
Etude de Concert.....Agathe Backer-Gröndahl
Fantaisie, F minor, op. 49.....Chopin
Tarantelle.....Moszkowski

Another engagement called the writer away from the recital after Mrs. Hadden-Alexander played the MacDowell Sonata, but it was something higher than a pleasure to have heard that truly great work played with such unfailing insight and emotion. The beautiful singing tone, the phrasing and then the power in the climaxes, all went to stamp the performance as one of the few to be remembered. It was evident that Mrs. Hadden-Alexander had dissected the sonata as some people read over and over again a favorite essay or chapter of a great book. The "tragedies" unfolded in the composition are those of the modern world. The sufferers are intelligent, almost awakened, and therefore realize why trials have come to them.

As is generally known, Mrs. Hadden-Alexander was for a time a member of MacDowell's artist class, but that advantage alone would not enable her to play MacDowell's masterpieces if she had not divined certain things herself. A master may advise his pupil, make suggestions &c., but a great interpreter must make discoveries of his (or her) own, and this Mrs. Hadden-Alexander has done for her art.

SUMMER SEASON OF CLAVIER PIANO SCHOOL.

DURING the past week progressive teachers from nearly every State in the Union have been arriving at the Clavier Piano School and enrolling for the special course in technic under Mr. Virgil. This is a six weeks' course arranged particularly for teachers, from July 8 to August 17.

It has been a busy week for both teachers and students, lectures being given each day by Mr. Virgil and by Mr. Shepard, harmony teacher. Mr. Virgil's lectures, which were largely preparatory for the regular class work, which began July 13, were recognized as of great value by the class of earnest students. Much enthusiasm has been created by the lectures on harmony by F. H. Shepard, whose decidedly original and concise method of presenting facts and principles ought to mark an epoch in musical pedagogy.

On Monday afternoon Miss Mary Fidelia Burt gave a lecture on her method of ear training and sight reading, with illustrations, by a class of her young pupils. On Thursday evening Miss Frances Temple Ellery, with the assistance of her pupils, gave an exhibition of physical training for pianists. Recitals by the faculty and students of the school will be given on Monday, Wednesday and Friday evenings during the course. Wednesday, July 10, Perlee V. Jervis gave the first faculty concert. Program as follows:

Moment Musicale, op. 94, No. 3.....Schubert
Nachtstück, op. 23, No. 4.....Schumann
Gavotte.....Bach-Saint-Saëns
Improvisation, op. 46, No. 4.....MacDowell
Novelette, op. 46, No. 1.....MacDowell
Scotch Poem, op 31, No. 2.....MacDowell
March Wind, op. 46, No. 10.....MacDowell
Frühlingsrauschen, op. 32, No. 3.....Sinding
Norwegian Bridal Procession.....Grieg
Silver Spring.....Mason
Liebestraume, No. 3.....Liszt
Gondoliera.....Liszt
Polonaise in E.....Liszt

On Friday evening Mrs. Stella Hadden-Alexander, the well-known pianist, a member of the faculty, gave a program, which will be found elsewhere.

On Monday evening, July 15, S. M. Fabian, who has been the artist teacher for the school for the past season, and who has been engaged for the coming year, will give a recital.

Further programs are announced as follows: Frank Norris Jones, of Washington, a pupil of Mr. Fabian, Wednesday evening, July 17; Miss Harriette Brower, of Albany, N. Y., one of the teachers of the summer term, Friday evening, July 19; Miss Bertha Hoberg, of New York, one of the advanced pupils of the school, Monday evening, July 22.

JESSIE SHAY AT GLENS FALLS.—Miss Jessie Shay, the pianist, created a furore with her playing at the recent convention of the State Music Teachers' Association at Glens Falls. The following extract is from a recent criticism:

In the concertos Miss Jessie Shay played beautifully, as she did also in her solo numbers, and was recalled many times. This young artist is coming rapidly to the fore; she plays with a delicate execution which was appreciated by the critical audience.—New York Press, July 1, 1901.

E. PRESSON MILLER,
VOICE CULTURE.
METROPOLITAN COLLEGE OF MUSIC, 212 West 59th St., New York.

Carlos N. Sanchez
OPERATIC TENOR, TEACHER OF SINGING.
Voice Building a Specialty. Repertory: Church, Oratorio and Opera.
Studios: 138 Fifth Ave., New York.
Monday, Wednesday, Thursday and Saturday.
RESIDENCE: 758 WEST END AVENUE,
Corner 97th Street.

JOSEPHINE S. JACOBY,
CONTRALTO.
Address: 104 West 58th Street, NEW YORK.

THE PAUR SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
EMIL PAUR, Conductor.
Conductor New York Philharmonic. Formerly Conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra.
MISS ANNA MILLAR, Manager,
WISSNER PIANO USED. 540 Fulton Street, Brooklyn, New York.

Musical . . . . People.

The piano pupils of Mrs. J. Antoinette Fuller-Cox gave their closing recital at the Assembly Rooms, Middletown, N. Y.

Louis Koemmenich, the conductor of the Brooklyn Saengerbund, will spend the remainder of the summer with his family at Lake George.

H. E. Saltsman and William de Ford, two Washington (D. C.) musicians, have closed their studios, and are spending the summer at Atlantic City.

The pupils of A. B. Kingsley gave their closing piano recitals at the Cortland (N. Y.) Opera House on the morning, afternoon and evening of July 2.

Norma Meyer, the child flute player, has returned with her parents to her old home in Detroit. Miss Meyer came to New York to study with Eugene Weiner.

Miss Marion Weed at her song recital in Rochester this week sang songs by Schubert, Schumann, Franz, Rubinstein and Brahms, and an aria from "Oberon."

A song recital by Frederick Warren, of Chicago, was recently given at the home of Mrs. Henry Herman, 137 Sheridan road, Waukegan, Ill. Miss Zella L. Marshall, pianist, assisted Mr. Warren.

Miss Eva Willcuts, pianist, gave a recital on July 2 at Masonic Hall, Duluth, Minn., at which she was assisted by Miss Virginia Willcuts, 'cellist. The young pianist is a pupil of Miss Emma Schmied.

An excellent program was presented at the closing exercises of Glenn C. Gorrell's school of music at Culpepper, Va. The concert was given at the Culpepper Opera House on the last Friday night in June.

The Utica (N. Y.) Maennerchor gave their annual excursion a fortnight ago. In a special train of seven coaches the members and their families traveled to Trenton Falls. The concert at the falls was under the direction of Professor Breitenbach.

The concert given last month by the Pilgrim Choral Society, of Montclair, N. J., under the direction of Valentine Youngman, was for the benefit of the Pilgrim Chapel fund. The talent included Mrs. Grace Toennies, soprano; Elliott Marshall, violinist, and Miss Carrie S. Young, pianist.

The graduating piano recital of the department of instrumental music of the State Normal School at Potsdam, N. Y., was given on June 21 by Myrtle A. Smith, assisted by Edith L. Barnum, soprano. Miss Smith is a pupil of F. E. Hawthorne, and Miss Barnum a pupil of Julia E. Crane.

F. E. Hawthorne, director of the department of instrumental music of the State Normal School at Potsdam, N. Y., accompanied by Mrs. Hawthorne, has gone to Europe for a year's study. During his absence Miss Alice H. Houghton, a graduate of Professor Hawthorne, will have charge of the work in the instrumental department.

Eugene Weiner and his small but select orchestra are delighting the patrons of the exclusive Oriental Hotel at Manhattan Beach. A recent Sunday program included selections from the works of Mozart, Weber, Wagner, Paderewski, Brahms, Händel, Mascagni, Halévy and Sullivan.

Robert Max Garrett was the only "Bachelor of Music" graduated this year from the University of Idaho. The commencement exercises were held on June 12. At the graduation recital, held several days before the commencement, Mr. Garrett was the pianist, and Miss Mabel Louise Hinckley, contralto, the assisting vocal soloist. At the commencement exercises Mr. Garrett played the first movement from Rubinstein's D minor Concerto.

Miss Lavinia M. Dimick, a successful Rochester (N. Y.) teacher, presented her advanced class at her June recital in a most attractive program. Miss Anna Binder, soprano, and Miss Pearl Watson, reader, assisted. The piano numbers were given by Messrs. Lester, Jay and Hondorf, Helen Dimick, Edna Agne, Grace Green, M. Olive Delano, Edith Young and Margaret Knight.

A large audience applauded the program given at the annual recital of the pupils by Miss Kate B. Cresswell, on June 27, at Cambria Library Hall, Johnstown, Pa. The following appeared: Lulu Good, Lillie Parks, Bessie Stophel, May Wilson, Reginald Zimmerman, Ella Sloan, Hattie Ellis, Maggie Marshall, Elsie Wilson, Mamie Burns, Cora Ellis, Roy Reese, Edith Hill, Fred Zimmerman, Agnes Ellis, Julia Wolfe, Nora Ott, Nettie Beaner, Lilian Reese, Maggie Koontz, Ernest F. Woodward and Laura Stewart.

The pupils of Mrs. Ida Raplie Ross gave a piano and vocal recital at the Oster piano store, Rochester, N. Y., July 2. The pupils taking part were Misses Edna Whitney, Alice Wickham, Florence Whitney, Laura Amsler, Mae Suter, Amelia Rosenbloom, Agnes Brayer, Mabelle Ernisse, Helen Wickham, Erna May Ross, Inez Torrey (pupil of Mrs. Ida Wilson), Miss Josephine Walzer and Mae Walzer, John Long and Edward William Long.

The graduating exercises of the Highland Park College of Music at Des Moines, Ia., were held at the Y. M. C. A. Prof. O. H. Longwell, the dean of the normal department, presented diplomas to the following graduates:

Piano—Miss Mildred De La. of Perry; Miss Agnes Donahue, of Des Moines.

Vocal—Miss Blanch Britton, of Des Moines; Miss Grace Lavinia Clark, of Des Moines; Mrs. Gertrude Selby, of Des Moines.

Violin—Miss Cassie Mullineaux, of Rock Rapids; Miss Josephine Gamble, of Dixon, Ill.

Miss Josephine Hills, of Des Moines, received a post-graduate diploma as a reward for her work in the violin department.

Frank Nagel is director of the piano department, Dr. Arthur Heft, of the violin, and Grant Hadley, of the vocal.

The thirteenth annual recital and concert of Herbert L. Rees' Music School was held at Belvidere Hall, Richmond, Va., on July 1. At the close of the program the following prizes were distributed:

First Honor—gold medals: Misses Sadie Rowe, Lillian Harris, Bessie Cary, Edna Umlaf.

Second Honor—silver medals: Misses Annie Heffley, Hazel Joynes, Vera Harris.

Medal for attendance, Essie Haley.

Medal for improvement: Misses Louise and Sophie Hooper.

The two gold medals offered by The Cable Company for proficiency during the session were awarded to Misses Clara Tyler and Pearl Bosher.

The following received diplomas: Misses Lizzie Whittle, Addie Heffley, Alice Stout, Annie Herndon, Birdie Shuman, Daisy Fleming, Erma Braunan, Mary Wright, Mabel Yarborough, Ruh Emlauf, Lolia Wharton, Edith Maury.

Professor Rees was presented with an umbrella stand by the class.

On evening of July 3 Professor Rees gave a reception at his home, 318 South Laurel street, in honor of the graduating class.

The pupils of Newell L. Wilbur gave a piano recital in the music rooms of Butler's Exchange, Providence, R. I., on July 2. The pianists were assisted by L. E. Denison, baritone. Among those who appeared were Miss Edith King, Miss Sarah LeValley, Miss Sallie K. Cady, Miss Annie I. Lynch, Miss Grace E. Littell, Miss Elsie B. Dana and Master Cresson L. Beeler.

Five interesting programs were given at the annual recitals of Miss Evelyn Jackson's School of Music at Atlanta, Ga. Diplomas were awarded to Misses Norma Harrison and Caroline Westmoreland. The honor roll follows: Miss Minnie Van Epps, highest; Miss Harriett Loyless, first honor in sixth class; Misses Minnie Van Epps, Pansy Spencer and Alice May Rushton, first honor in fifth class; Miss Pauline Hope, first honor in fourth class; Miss Angie Harding and Miss Mary Lou Berkeley, first honor in third class; Misses Marie Moore, Edith Dunson and Mary King, first honor in second class; Miss Sarah Rawson, first honor in first class. The following, although not first honor, stood high on the yearly roll: Misses Corrie Hoyt Brown, Caroline King, Nellie Murphy, Elizabeth Rawson, Mignon McCarty, Alberta Williams, Helen Isham, Ella B. Rushton, Laurie Hope, Lucy May Bacon, Charley May Barksdale, Marian Cullom, Susan Cobb, Frederick Tupper, Florence Stein, Mary Lou Smith, May Andrews, Georgina Still, Kathleen Moss, Estelle Fitzgerald, Agnes Smith, Master Rucker McCarty and Master Sidney Moss.

Amy Murray's Tour.

DURING the past fortnight Miss Amy Murray, who is traveling in the Northern Provinces, gave recitals at Moncton, Campbellton, Chatham and Bathurst, N. B. She has dates for two more weeks in Nova Scotia, and then Miss Murray will go to Maine for a month's rest. In September she will return to New Brunswick for a brief tour, chiefly return dates. Special notice has been taken everywhere of the "Clarsach," the Celtic harp upon which Miss Murray accompanies herself when she sings the Highland songs. Recently she received a letter from an eminent Gaelic scholar in Inverness, in which the writer declared to the fair artist:

"Scotchmen all the world over should feel that you are doing them a great and important service."

Following is an additional criticism of Miss Murray's recital at Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island:

A voice of wonderful sweetness and power, and rich in musical qualities, distinct articulation, graceful and animated gestures, ease of manner and a charming personality, were the forces that Miss Amy Murray summoned to her aid in the Opera House last evening, to draw forth from a delighted audience enthusiastic applause over the singing of the "Auld Scots Sangs." The inexpressible sweetness of the old, old story that tells of the "wooin' of the lassie when the kye comes hame," the tenderness that pervades every limpid line of Burns' "Afton Water," the stirring appeal of "Bonnie Dundee," the grace and daring of "Young Lochinvar," the deep sorrow of the mourners wailing over the "Flowers of the Forest," these and other attributes cut down in full bloom were portrayed in most expressive song.

Probably the most interesting numbers were the three beautiful and touching Gaelic melodies, softly sung to the clarsach, or harp accompaniment. Though the words were unintelligible to nearly all present, the sentiments conveyed could not be mistaken.—The Daily Patriot, Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, Saturday, June 29, 1901.

BIRDICE BLYE.—Miss Birdice Blye played before the Authors' Association at Winona Lake, during their meetings from June 24 to 29, making her tenth engagement with them.

Many prominent writers from all parts of the country were present, and added to the interest of the exercises.

Many delightful excursions on the lake were enjoyed, and it was decided that the new boat nearly ready to launch should be named "Birdice Blye" in honor of the distinguished young artist.

Eugen d'Albert is at present living in the Villa Mantanina, near Florence. He is working on a three act comic opera, which has already been accepted by the Berlin Royal Opera House.

BROAD STREET CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC,
GILBERT RAYNOLDS COMBS, Director.
1331 South Broad Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE FREE.

Sara Anderson,
Soprano,
For terms and particulars address
51 East 64th St.,
NEW YORK CITY.

ST. NICHOLAS GARDEN, 66th Street, near Columbus Avenue.
KALTENBORN ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS.
Every Evening at 8:15. Admission, 50 cents.
VARIED PROGRAM NIGHTLY. AUTOMATICALLY COOLED. NO DRAFT.

EVAN WILLIAMS,
Oratorio and Concert.
TENOR.
For Terms, Dates, &c, address
WOLFSOHN'S MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th Street, City.

GRACE G. GARDNER,
Concert and Oratorio
SOPRANO.
Pupil of Blasco, Milan; Schmidt, Berlin; Henschel, London.
Studio: 36 West 25th St., New York.

ARTHUR BERESFORD,
BASSO-BARITONE.
STEINERT HALL, BOSTON, MASS.

J. FRED WOLLE,
ORGANIST.
Address:
THE WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., New York.

2046 Leavenworth Street,
San Francisco, July 8, 1901.

A CHARMING recital of the piano pupils of Miss Gertrude Gerrish was given in Steinway Hall at Sacramento on Tuesday evening, July 2, with the assistance of Miss Sue Pierson, violinist, and Master Howard Odbert, guitarist. The little ones, who were first on the program, won repeated applause for their excellent fingering and interpretation. Of the older pupils "The Spinning Wheel," Bendel, by Miss Eva Carroll, and Nocturne in F, op. 23 (Schumann), and Etude, op. 10, No. 5 (Chopin), by Miss Leslie Genung, were most remarked as solo work. The due, "Serenade Hongroise" (Joncieres), Mrs. S. H. Warren and Miss Gerrish; Moszkowski's lovely "Italy," for two pianos, performed by Mrs. J. H. Talbot and Miss Gerrish; "Pas des Cymbales," op. 36 (Chaminade), by Miss Ethel McLaughlin and Miss Gerrish, were all pronouncedly finished work. Special mention should be made of the quartet, ending Part I., "Military Galop," by Lichner, which was performed by Miss Maida Neff, Miss Gertrude Hughes, Miss Flora Cronemiller and Miss Goldie Ward. It was an excellent program excellently presented and a performance of which both teacher and pupils may feel justly proud. The program complete is as follows:

PART I.

Duet, Through Forest and Field, op. 214.....Schultz
Miss Ruth Leason, Miss Hazel Rakestraw.
Switzerland, op. 85.....Ludwig Mendelssohn
Miss Eloise McLaughlin.
Boating on the Lake, op. 62.....Kullak
Miss Sarah Edna Hughes.
Sonatine, op. 151.....Diabelli
Andante. Rondo.
Master Elmer Odbert.
La Fontaine, op. 221.....Böhm
Miss Flora Cronemiller.
Guitar Solo Waltz, Alicia.....Graf
Master Howard Odbert.
Serenade Badine.....Gabriel Marie
Miss Goldie Ward.
Tanz Vergnugen, op. 60.....Scharwenka
Master Leland Lash.
Gavotte Moderne, op. 25.....Tours
Miss Gertrude Hughes.
Quartet, Militaire Galop, op. 118.....Lichner
Miss Maida Neff, Miss Flora Cronemiller, Miss Gertrude Hughes, Miss Goldie Ward.

PART II.

Saltarelle, op. 49.....Gregh
Miss Maida Neff.
Bolero, op. 27.....Lack
Miss Hazel Barrett.
Duo, Serenade Hongroise.....Joneières
Mrs. H. S. Warren, Miss Gerrish.
Bereeuse, op. 38, No. 1.....Grieg
Pas des Amphores.....Chaminade
Miss Jessie Shaw.
Spinning Wheel.....Bendel
Miss Eva Carroll.
Duet, Italy, op. 23.....Moszkowski
Mrs. J. H. Talbot, Miss Gerrish.
Violin solo, La Cinquantaine.....Gabriel Marie
Miss Sue Pierson.
Les Deux Alouettes.....Leschetizky
Mrs. H. S. Warren.
Duo, Pas Des Cymbales, op. 36.....Chaminade
Miss Ethel McLaughlin, Miss Gerrish.
Nocturne in F, op. 23.....Schumann
Etude, op. 10, No. 5.....Chopin
Miss Leslie Genung.
Quartet, Danse des Bayaderes, No. 1, de l'Opera Feramors..Ruhinstein
Miss Eva Carroll, Miss Leslie Genung, Miss Jessie Shaw, Miss Hazel Barrett.

The Church of Saint Mary the Virgin has been undergoing some much needed enlarging, and the altar is now about 90 feet from the choir. The music on Sunday consisted of the regular English Mass at 11 a. m., and at Vespers, 4 p. m., the "O Salutaris" and "Tantum Ergo," from Händel, arranged especially for organ, choir and cornet by the organist and director, John Haraden Pratt, F. C. M.

The Pacific Grove (Monterey) Summer School of Music has opened this season with unusual success. This is the third season, and as the movement was an experiment and a decided innovation on this Coast, the outlook is decidedly encouraging for future success.

The opening concert, given in Assembly Hall June 26, was by members of the faculty, assisted by Miss Naoma Alfrey, reader, of Chicago. The numbers were performed in the following order:

Violin, Adagio Pathetique.....Godard
Miss Holladay, accompanied by Miss Sarah Holladay.
Piano, Rigoletto Fantaisie.....Liszt
Miss Tuck.
Vocal, Heaven Hath Shed a Tear.....Kucken
(Violin obligato by Miss Holladay.)
Mrs. McCauley.
Recitation, Uncle Eb's Fishing Story.....Holden
Miss Alfrey.
Vocal, Toreador, Hola!.....Trotere
Mr. Lawrence.
Piano, Tarantelle.....Liszt
Mr. Howe.
Violin, Am Springquell.....David
Miss Holladay, accompanied by Miss Sarah Holladay.
Vocal—
Invocation.....D'Hardelot
Council to Nina.....Wekerlin
The Song My Mother Sang.....Böhm
The Curl.....Neidlinger
Mrs. McCauley.
Recitation, An Easter Symbol.....Ruth McHenry Stewart
Miss Alfrey.
Piano—
Nocturne in D flat.....Chopin
If I Were a Bird.....Henselt
Miss Tuck.
Vocal, Hosanna.....Granier
Mr. Lawrence.

The first recital of the school was given on Wednesday evening, July 3, at Assembly Hall, with good attendance. The program is here given:

Sonata in D for piano and violin.....Beethover
Mr. Howe and Miss Holladay.
Vocal—
Ave Maria.....Howe
A May Morning.....Denza
Mrs. Howe.
Piano—
Novelette in F.....Schumann
Gondoliera.....Liszt
Murmuring Zephyrs.....Jensen-Niemann
Mr. Howe.
Violin, Ballade and Polonaise.....Vieuxtemps
Miss Holladay.

The members of the faculty are Mary Weaver McCauley, soprano; Miss Ethel Kathryn Holladay, violinist; Miss Minnie Alice Tuck, Mus. Bac., pianist; Milton L. Lawrence, tenor, and James Hamilton Howe, Mus. Bac., pianist.

Peter Allen, who had fully decided to give his new opera on this Coast with native talent, has changed his plans and taken his work to New York, where he will try to dispose of it. In the original plan Miss Helen Heath, of the Von Meyerinck School of Music, was selected as the prima donna, and was, I hear, engaged professionally to be retained through an extensive tour. Miss Heath did a bit of very artistic work in "Hansel and Gretel," which was given in part at Sherman & Clay Hall early in the spring, and Mr. Allen was greatly attracted both by her voice and graceful personality. She is very young but an artist to her finger-tips, and will yet be heard from professionally and with credit to herself and the school.

Little Enid Brandt, the wonder of child wonders, is to give another recital in the fall, and to this end is preparing the "Concertstück" of Weber, op. 79, which already the baby plays entirely from memory. As is known, the composition is thirty pages in length, and its memorizing may well be considered a marvelous achievement for a child of eight years. She reads it with orchestral accompaniment, without any alterations to make it easier for her tiny hand, and in perfect tempo, with the Fantaisie Impromptu in C minor and several other difficult selections from Bach, Chaminade and Schumann. The improvement in the child's playing during the past six months is said to be beyond belief, and will only be appreciated when she appears in her next concert, which will probably be in November, a year from her last appearance. Mrs. Brandt has received some very flattering offers for her little daughter to concertize from the South to New York, but as the child is so extremely young her parents have decided to keep her at her studies for the present at least. The little tot is at present taking a vacation in the company of her mother at St. Helena.

Young Albert Elkus, of Sacramento, has of late been turning his attention largely to composition, in which he has already presented some specimens of his talent which speak loudly of great latent ability in this line. He has just finished a setting to music of Tennyson's "Home They Brought Her Warrior Dead," from "The Princess," and is at present working on a piano sonata, also a song cycle built upon Tennyson's "Lady of Shalott." Mr. Elkus is not yet out of his teens, but has won public recognition as a finished pianist. He is a pupil jointly of his mother and Hugo Mansfeldt.

Mrs. A. Wedmore Jones.

Elsa Marshall,
. . Soprano.
222 Hosea Avenue,
Clifton,
CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Madame
CLARA NOVELLO DAVIES
Professor of Voice Production.
Conductor of the Royal Welsh Ladies' Choir.
(Under Royal patronage.)
Madame Davies has a vacancy for two resident lady pupils
For Prospectus and Terms apply to
121 Victoria St., Westminster, LONDON, S. W.

GLENN HALL
TENOR.
Address CHAS. R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building,
or Kimball Hall, Chicago,

The Guilmant Organ School.
(COPYRIGHT.)
PRESIDENT: ALEXANDRE GUILMANT. DIRECTOR: WILLIAM C. CARL.
Reopens October 14.

SCHEDULE OF WORK:

FIRST YEAR.
The Organ—Private lessons, one each week.
Harmony—Class lessons, one each week.
Musical Form—Musical Dictation and Musical Knowledge—Class lessons.
Service Playing—Chants, Hymn Tunes, Anthems, Etc.—Class lessons.

SECOND YEAR.
The Organ—Private lessons, one each week.
Harmony and Counterpoint—Class lessons, one each week
Musical Analysis—Musical History, Organ Tuning—Class lessons.
Service Playing—Chants, Hymn Tunes, Anthems, Etc.—Class lessons.

STUDENTS' RECITALS OCCUR EACH MONTH.

Address: THE GUILMANT ORGAN SCHOOL, 34 West 12th St., New York.

Boston Music Notes.

HOTEL BELLEVUE,
17 BEACON STREET,
BOSTON, July 13, 1901.

NINA K. DARLINGTON, author of "Kindergarten Music Building," is in constant receipt of letters from former pupils who are now teaching this method throughout the United States. The following extracts from a letter give the views of "Kindergarten Music Building" by a correspondence student:

"This method of teaching the 'Science of Music for Children' is one which lays the foundation for a true and thorough knowledge of music, and a child who has been a member of a class in 'Kindergarten Music Building' is able to continue more thoroughly the study of music in any branch which he or she may choose.

"The more I understand of the thought and principle which prompted the method of 'Kindergarten Music Building,' the clearer is the idea that the teaching of St. John is the groundwork of the whole—'Love.' Love for the child and the work, then helping the teacher to 'become as a little child.' There is also the leading of the child mind to look up from nature and its teachings to the Source and Giver of all good things.

"Nina K. Darlington, the author of this method, has found the true keynote for the perfect education of America's future musicians, and I trust that I may be one of the helpers in this good work."

Miss Aagot Lunde has just issued a most attractive circular, with a short sketch and a number of press notices selected not only from the press of this country, but also from the leading papers of Germany and Sweden, the best known critics of those countries having given their praise of her voice and method, in fact all that goes to make up the artist.

The circular is beautifully gotten up, with violet cover, the name of the artist appearing on the outside in silver letters. A recent photograph is the frontispiece, then follow the sketch and notices. The whole folds into a convenient shape for mailing or handling, and is one of the prettiest in form and design that has appeared up to date.

Miss Lunde, who has been spending some time at Chohasset, will probably go to York Harbor, Me., during the summer.

The New Hampshire Music Teachers' Association Festival will be held at Music Hall, The Weirs, N. H., the week of July 29 to August 2. The New Hampshire Philharmonic Orchestra of seventeen pieces will furnish the instrumental accompaniment. Miss Josephine Page, of Laconia, and Miss Ada M. Aspinwall, of Concord, are to be the piano accompanists, the chorus being under the direction of Henri G. Blaisdell, of Concord, as usual. The principal work of the week will be the production of "The Messiah" on Friday evening, with full chorus and orchestra, the soloists being E. Kileski, Mrs. May Sleeper Rugges, Ion Jackson and Frederic Martin. In addition to these soloists others will appear during the week; they include Mrs. Sara Martin, soprano, and J. H. McKinley, tenor. Ernst Perabo will give a piano recital on Friday afternoon, and James W. Hill a church organ recital at the Free Baptist Church, Lakeport, on Wednesday afternoon. Mr. Hill will be assisted by Mrs. Mary Montgomery-Brackett and Mrs. Sara Dickey-Simpson. Mr. Hill will also give a lecture-recital on Verdi and Wagner Thursday forenoon, assisted by Mrs. Brackett, Mrs. Simpson, Miss June Smith and Harriet W. Willey. J. Melville Horner will assist Mr. Hill at both recitals, and will in addition give a song recital on Wednesday evening. Chorus rehearsals will occur during the week, and on Tuesday afternoon there will be a concert by minor State talent. Thursday afternoon's concert will be by State soloists, including among others Miss Aspinwall, of Concord; Harry C. Wittemore, of Manchester; Milo Benedict, Concord; Charles S. Conant, Concord, and Mrs. S. Scott Owen, of Portsmouth.

At the New England Conservatory of Music the eleventh annual session of the summer school of the American Institute of Normal Methods has begun, and will last until July 27. The instruction is intended to fit teachers to become specialists in vocal music methods used in public schools, and thereby raise the standard of instruction.

The faculty is made up of Samuel W. Cole, director of music in the public schools of Brookline and Dedham, who acts as superintendent of the Eastern School; Leonard B. Marshall, director of music in the public schools of this city; Dr. Hugh A. Clarke, professor of music in the University of Pennsylvania; Alexander T. Cringan, professor of music in Toronto, Canada, and in the Ontario (Canada) Normal School; Leo R Lewis, professor of music at Tufts College; Mrs. H. E. Holt, director of music in the public schools of Lexington; Miss Minnie M. Jameson, director of music in the public schools of Woburn and Plymouth; Miss May Louise Harvey, of Boston, and Miss L. Marie Hawn, director of music in the public schools of Springfield. All of these members of the faculty are to lecture or give instruction in the vocal music department. There is a department for teaching the synthetic piano method, under the instruction of Miss J. W. Cushing, of this city. In the various lectures, vocal and piano music, harmony and counterpoint, sight singing and the Ward method of reading by phonics are all among the subjects considered. Two recitals each week while the school is in session will be given in Sleeper Hall.

Dexter Brigham Hathaway, of Grafton, Mass., the oldest clarinet player and drummer in the United States, reached his eighty-seventh birthday anniversary on Thursday. He was born in Westboro, July 11, 1814. In his tenth year he received a small drum as a present, and on Tuesday, May 3, 1824, he drummed on the Common in public for the first time. When fifteen years of age he began to play the clarinet. In 1829 he came to Boston to hear the celebrated cornet player, Edward Kimball. At the outbreak of the Civil War Mr. Hathaway enlisted in the band of Company E, Twenty-first Massachusetts Regiment. In 1863 P. S. Gilmore was sent to recruit bands in Massachusetts, and Mr. Hathaway joined as a clarinetist and was sent to New Orleans.

HARRIS-RIESBERG AT PAN-AMERICAN RECITAL.—Miss Estelle Harris, soprano, and F. W. Riesberg, organist, united in the two recitals of July 7 and 8, and the following is from the Commercial of Buffalo:

A large proportion of the visitors went to the grounds purposely to hear the exceptionally good musical program. Mr. Riesberg's playing was a source of great delight to the assembled thousands. He played with remarkable ease and delicacy. Miss Harris, the soprano, was quite as prominent a feature of the program as was Mr. Riesberg. She has a voice of wonderful clearness and strength, and sings charmingly. The Bach-Gounod "Ave Maria" was applauded so enthusiastically and persistently that she had to sing it twice.

Musicale by Pupils of E. Presson Miller.

A MIDSUMMER musicale was given at the residence of Miss M. E. Palmer, Tucson, July 2, by Miss Vivia Brewster, of Lorado, Tex., assisted by Leo Liebermann, the well-known tenor of New York. In spite of the heat the audience thoroughly enjoyed every number. The following program was rendered:

My Mother Bids Me Bind My Hair.....Haydn
Polly Willis.....Arne
Miss Brewster.
Romance, Mignon.....Thomas
Mr. Liebermann.
Aria, Lucia.....Donizetti
Miss Brewster.
Quand je dors.....Liszt
Tes yeux.....Trabadelo
Mr. Liebermann.
'Tis Love.....E. Presson Miller
The Reason Why.....E. Presson Miller
The Bluebell and Bumble Bee.....E. Presson Miller
Miss Brewster.
A Memory.....Edna Rosalind Parke
A Thought.....Edna Rosalind Parke
Love.....Edna Rosalind Parke
Mr. Liebermann.
Obstination.....Fontenailles
Open Thy Blue Eyes.....Massenet
Miss Brewster.
Mr. Miller at the piano.

Miss Brewster, a girl with a good presence, is the possessor of a soprano voice of exceptional brilliancy and range, which she uses intelligently. Every number was well sung, especially the "Lucia" aria and the three songs by Mr. Miller, in which she captivated her audience. Her trills and coloratura in the former were beautifully done. She leaves for her home shortly, and will appear in several concerts there and in Austin, returning to New York in September to continue her studies with Mr. Miller. Leo Liebermann, whose season has been very successful, sang his numbers with great charm and expression. For the two French songs he substituted "Ich Liebe Dich," by Mildenberg, and "Donna Vorrei Morir," by Tosti, with splendid effect. Mr. Liebermann's high, resonant tenor has been greatly admired, and he is making rapid strides in his art. Mr. Miller accompanied at the piano.

SIBYL SAMMIS' SUCCESS.—Miss Sammis must have made an instant hit on her reappearance at Lexington, Ky., to judge by the appended:

Miss Sibyl Sammis was greeted as an old favorite when she appeared Saturday night at Chautauqua. Few people have ever sung or spoken before the Kentucky Assembly that can claim such popularity as Miss Sammis. She possesses a beautiful voice, rich, full and yet with intonations of such sweetness and tenderness that it seems as if its music and not its words convey what it would tell. She was heard with much delight and will be heard with equal delight each time she sings.—Lexington Herald.

One of the principal features of the entire program was the singing of Miss Sibyl Sammis. Her opening selection was "The Nation's Guard," and as an encore she sang "The Star-Spangled Banner." No other soloist has ever gained the popularity with a Kentucky Assembly audience as has Miss Sammis, and last night her reception almost reached an ovation. Miss Sammis has a soprano voice of power and sweetness. It is wonderful in its range and vivid in its expression, while the tenderness and sweetness of its music somehow finds its way to one's heart to make its message known. She has a voice that appeals to the music within one; this is, perhaps, the secret of her success as a singer.—Lexington Daily.

Much of her success is due to her teacher, Madame Linné, of Chicago, with whom she studied before going to Paris.

MARION MURLESS SINGS.—This young artist sang at a concert at Rockville, Conn., within a fortnight, having much success. The local paper said her voice was lovely in quality, well trained, and that her selections were greatly enjoyed by the audience. She shows much promise. Much of her success is no doubt due to her teacher, Miss Bissell.

ACCOMPANIST.
F. W. RIESBERG.
INSTRUCTION.
Piano, Organ, Harmony.
With THE MUSICAL COURIER.
Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.
Secretary-Treasurer New York State M. T. A.
Residence-Studio: 954 Eighth Ave., cor. 56th St., NEW YORK.
TELEPHONE: 452 COLUMBUS.

OSCAR SAENGER,
Vocal Instruction,
WILL RESUME TEACHING ON SEPTEMBER 16.
Teacher of Josephine S. Jacoby, Contralto; Elizabeth D. Leonard, Contralto; Madame de Pasquali, Soprano; Sara Anderson, Soprano; Hildegard Hoffmann, Soprano; E. Léon Rains, Basso; Joseph S. Baernstein, Basso; John I. Young, Tenor, and other prominent singers now before the public
STUDIO: 51 East 64th Street, NEW YORK.

Mme. VON KLENNER, Garcia Representative,
HAS OPENED A
Special Summer School at Lake Chautauqua, N. Y.
PARIS EXPOSITION, 1900.
Only Honorable Mention or Distinction of Any Vocal Instructor.
FOR PARTICULARS
Address THE WALDMERE, LAKEWOOD, LAKE CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y.
or 40 STUYVESANT STREET, NEW YORK, Second Avenue and 10th Street.
AFTER OCT. 1, 230 WEST 51st STREET.

VAN YORX Tenor,
6 E. 17 St., NEW YORK.
Under Management of WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., NEW YORK CITY.

A FORMIDABLE LIST.

OSCAR SAENGER has just closed a highly successful season and has gone to the mountains for a brief rest, after which he will travel until September 16, when he will resume teaching at his studio, 51 East Sixty-fourth street. Following is a list of persons who have studied with Saenger during the past season, numbering 185. They have come from all part of the United States and Canada, and several even from France:

Miss Sara Anderson
Mrs. Emma Aron
Miss Cyrille Aronson.
A. C. Angus.
Miss Katherine Arnold
Miss Ada Austin.
Miss Lilias V. Armstrong.
Miss Blanche Amson.
Miss Georgina Ballin
Chas. E. Burnham.
Mrs. Maud H. Banton.
Miss Bessie Bowman.
Miss Margaret Berry.
Mrs. Alexander D. Brownlie.
Miss Birnenfeld.
A. E. Blight.
Miss Emma Broking.
Miss A. Bowne.
Miss Helen M. Burdick.
Miss Alice Kraft Benson
Mrs. Milton E. Blanchard.
Miss Alice Chalk.
Miss Georgia Cope.
Miss Mary Cook.
Miss Katherine Colvin.
Miss Sara Cohen.
Miss May E. Cosgrove.
F. M. Cleary.
Miss Julia J. Calhoun.
Miss Katherine Dean.
Miss Susan E. Dinsmore.
Miss Amelia Dessau.
Daniel C. Donovan.
Mrs. A. B. Dexter.
Normand J. D'Esterre.
Miss Ella Daker
Mrs. P. Daly.
Louis A. Espinal.
Miss Elsie Ray Eddy.
Mrs. W. S. Ellis.
William Howell Edwards.
Miss Ensminger.
Mrs. H. D. Emerson.
Miss Sarah Fried.
Miss Martha Falk.
Miss Jeanne Frankel.
Miss Alice Goldthwaite.
Miss Sadie Gans.
Miss Carolyn M. Gilbert.
Eric V. Goodwin.
Miss Miriam Gilmer.
William A. Gracey.
Miss Mamie T. Gill.
Carl Heller.
Mrs. Katherine Hanford.
Miss Violet Hart.
Miss Elsa Herzfeld.
Mrs. Philip C. Horneck.
Miss Katherine Harris.
Miss Ruby R. Harkness,
G. W. Hawkins.
Allen C. Hinckley.
Miss Jennie Hawley.
Miss Edith Hodgson.
Mrs. Edwin Ising.
Mrs. Josephine S. Jacoby.
Miss Jessie McGibeny.
Tillotson Neel.
Miss Elizabeth Nash.
Miss Mary E. Oaks.
Thomas F. O'Connor
Charles Rufus Osgood.
Miss Katherine Pike.
Miss Millie E. Pottgiser.
Miss G. Passedoit.
Miss N. K. Prase.
Mrs. Lilian Warner Patchen.
Miss Katherine Pope.
Miss Hanna Phillips.
Miss Alice M. H. Pfizer.
Mrs. Payne.
Mrs. E. H. Peacock.
Miss Anna V. Roche.
Miss I. M. Ryerson.
Mrs. Marie F. Rappold.
Miss B. Reinheimer.
Mrs. Ella M. Von Ryhiner.
Miss Amy Ray.
Miss Gertrude Rosenthal.
Mrs. Julia H. Rhode.
William G. Rockwell.
George W. Reift.
Miss Fay Randall.
Miss Gertrude Robbins.
Miss Lizzie Reid.
Miss Alice T. Roberts.
Mrs. Joseph Franklin Roe.
Miss Mary L. Ryan.
Miss Maude Ramey.
Mrs. Carrie R. Sapinsky.
Mrs. Isaac W. Spiegelberg.
George R. Strauss.
Miss Laura Strauss.
Miss Mabel G. Seamans.
Mrs. M. J. Stein.
Miss Minnie Seldner.
Sydney Segal.
Herman Springer.
Miss Minnie Sands.
Edward S. Stearns
Miss Marie Stoddart
Miss Rose M. Sonn.
Miss Grace W. Sims.
Miss Maud Simpson.
Mrs. Alice C. Stock.
Miss Anna L. Schwartz.
Miss Mildred Strauss.
Miss Florence Schaeffer.
Miss Mabel A. Shaw.
Miss Esther Steinberger.
A. C. Stephan.
Mrs. Orlando J. Smith.
Miss Clyde Searcy.
Miss H. Simon.
Miss Gertrude Sinn.
Miss Marie Stillwell.
Miss Kate Schneider.
Mrs. W. W. Smith.
Chas. F. Shaw.
M. W. Smith.
Victor Streator.
Miss Frances Seligsberg.
Albert Jeannotte.
Miss Stella Kahn.
Mrs. Trekla W. Kempner.
Mrs. Martha Royle King.
Miss Estelle Lawrence.
Miss Selma J. Levy.
Miss Martha L. Lewis.
Miss Rosalie Loew.
Mrs. H. W. Leimkauf.
Miss Marguerite Lewis.
Miss Alice Merritt.
George S. Madden.
William F. Muenster.
Miss Bertha Miehling
Miss Blanche Morrison.
Mrs. George Elmer Miles.
Miss Laura Mueller.
Miss Annabelle Mack.
Miss Grace Mangam.
Paul H. Mueller.
Miss Edith G. Mackey.
Frederick R. Meigs.
Miss Elsa Marshall.
Miss Grace Musselman.
Miss Grace E. Murdock.
Mrs. Julia Dills Maddox.
Miss Helen R. McDermott.
Mrs. N. K. Standart.
Captain Stott.
Miss Nelda Von Seyfried.
Miss Minnie Tracey.
Miss Clara Turnbull.
William A. Templeton.
Miss Florence Turner.
W. S. Thunder.
Miss Thorley.
Samuel Thorstenberg.
Miss Frances M. Votry.
Miss Anna Winkopp.
Mrs. John C. Westervelt.
Herbert Wellington.
Mrs. Fred. S. Wardwell.
Miss Gertrude Wait.
Miss Rose Walter.
Mrs. I. H. Weinberg.
Miss Wilson.
Henry Wolcot Warner.
Mrs. Henry Wolcot Warner.
Miss Marie B. Weber.
John Young.
Miss Georgia Yager.
Mrs. Ernest F. Young.
Mrs. Rebe W. Zimmerman.

Gregory Hast.

GREGORY HAST, the English tenor, who is famous for his London ballad concerts in the Queen's and Royal Albert Halls, and for his appearances at the St. James' Hall Pops, the Patti and Crystal Palace Saturday concerts, will tour America in November and December this year under Loudon G. Charlton's direction.

Mr. Hast's voice, wide in range and of beauty and purity in quality, he uses with exceptional artistic style. His interpretation is cultivated and refined, and he has unusual linguistic facility. French and Italian songs, German lieder and old English ballads are included in his extensive and varied repertory, besides over sixty oratorios and cantatas. Mr. Hast's musical career was begun as boy soloist at St. Peter's, Vauxhall, under Alfred Ayres, the organist. Later he studied oratorio with the tenor Sims Reeves. He has held several of the important church appointments in London. Since the retirement of Edward Lloyd Mr. Hast has filled the place of principal tenor at the London ballad concerts. He has achieved signal success at the Richter concerts at Manchester, as well as at the Queen's Hall oratorio concerts and at important music festivals in London and elsewhere.

Mr. Hast can give but the months of November and December to America, as he is booked for an early autumnal tour abroad with Blanche Marchesi; another in January and February, 1902, with Whitney Tew, and in March he has other foreign dates to fill.

Vittorio Carpi's Verdi Concert.

RECENT correspondence from Italy gives the news of a very elaborate concert given in the studio of the well-known teacher, Vittorio Carpi, in Milan, when the program was devoted to the works of the late Verdi. The Carpi pupils—among whom was the American girl Winnie Titus, a promising soprano—were assisted by some of the best artists in Milan. The soloists on the program under the direction of Sig. Carpi were Anna Kribel Vanzo, Jane Mansour, Winnie Titus, Vittorio M. Vanzo, Giuseppe Moretti and Antonio Russolo.

SOUTHERN MUSIC TEACHERS.

A MOST successful meeting in every way was the second annual convention of the Southern Music Teachers' Association, held in Chattanooga recently.

Although there was no increase of attendance over last year, the good accomplished was infinitely greater.

Through the impossibility of raising a large guarantee fund, the program committee were thrown on the resources of the South for their artists, and the meeting has proved that we need never be dependent on Northern artists for good programs. With three exceptions, all who appeared on the programs are members of the association and all the concerts were of artistic excellence.

The first meeting of the association was devoted to the address of welcome, response and president's address, after which the committees were named and the members adjourned until evening, when a complimentary concert and reception were tendered the S. M. T. A. members by the Music Club, Schubert Club and Woman's Chorus of Chattanooga. The concert was excellent throughout, the best of the local talent taking part. Worthy of special mention were the chorus numbers, given by the Midwinter Festival Chorus, Albert H. Morehead, director. His chorus sings like one voice. The numbers were "Marvelous Work," from "The Creation," with solo part by Miss Lois Stock, and a group of songs—"The First Spring Day," Mendelssohn; "O Hush Thee, My Baby," Sullivan, and "Barcarolle," unknown, the first two of the group being sung without accompaniment.

The reception which followed the concert was attended by 250 of Chattanooga's best musical and literary people.

The next morning from 9 to 11 was devoted to the vocal teachers, many interesting papers being read. The first paper was a report of the "Public School Commission," by B. C. Davis, of Atlanta, chairman.

An interesting paper on "Public School Music as it Relates to Higher Musical Training," by J. W. Jeudwine, of Raleigh, N. C., was read.

Prof. August Geiger, of La Grange, Ga., discussed in his paper, "A Few Defects in the Music Course of Our Colleges and Private Schools." After the discussion called forth by this paper, Frank Stayton Thompson, of Richmond, Va., read an instructive paper on "Respiration and Breath Control." The meeting closed with a violin solo by Josef O. Cadek, of Chattanooga, "Norwegian Legend," by Roy L. Smith, also of Chattanooga. This fine composition was beautifully played by Mr. Cadek, accompanied by the author.

At the business meeting, which followed the report of Ferdinand Dunkley, of Asheville, N. C., chairman of the program committee, excited much interest.

The place for the next meeting was voted on at this meeting, Asheville being chosen, and the date set for June 24, 25 and 26, 1902.

An account of the recitals will be given next week.

Mrs. Joseph Reynolds, one of the best musicians of the South, and her husband are among the guests registered at the Aldine Hotel, Saratoga. Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds reside at Memphis, Tenn., where they are leaders in society.

HAROLD BAUER,
AMERICAN TOUR, 1902.
Commencing in January with BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
DATES NOW BOOKING.
For all particulars apply to GEO. W. STEWART, 120 Tremont Street, BOSTON, MASS.
General Representative for Europe: ROBERT STRAKOSCH, 59 Rue La Bruyère, PARIS.

MINNE HUMPHRYES
Soprano, Concert and Oratorio.
FOR TERMS, DATES, ETC., ADDRESS
Care MUSICAL COURIER, 1135 Broadway, or 407 First Street, Brooklyn, New York.

RUBY CUTTER,
SOPRANO,
Dramatic and Coloratura.
CONCERT and ORATORIO.
REPERTOIRE.
Under the direction of HENRY WOLFSOHN.
Boston Address: 159 Tremont Street.

RAFAEL JOSEFFY.
Address: Letter Box 38, NORTH TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

MINNEAPOLIS NOTES.

Miss Belle A. Rolston was married recently to John C. Rexford, of Janesville, Wis. Miss Rolston has been home but a short time, having studied for years abroad.

Signor and Signora Valenza gave a delightful concert recently, assisted by Cragg Walston, violinist. Signora Valenza received many flowers and was recalled several times. Signor Valenza gave several harp numbers delightfully, and was also given enthusiastic recalls.

James Parsons Beach, the pianist, who has been spending the past year in Boston studying, will return to Minneapolis in September.

Miss Ella Beatrix Carter, pupil of Hermann Zoch, and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Carter, Casselton, N. Dak., gave a piano recital recently in the First Unitarian Church.

The marriage of Miss Ruth Anderson and Charles d'Arlington Reohr took place at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Anderson, 1826 Chicago avenue. Rev. Charles C. Reohr read the service. Miss Anderson's personal attractions fully equal her musical powers, for which she has attained a considerable reputation abroad as well as in her own country.

Mrs. Bellaire, Miss Celestia Bellaire and Miss Louise Bellaire have located in St. Paul on their return from New York.

A pleasing program of organ numbers was given recently by Hamlin H. Hunt, in Plymouth Church, the selections being admirably rendered. W. Scott Woodworth was the soloist.

At the concert given at the Welsh Church recently Miss Clara Williams sang a group of charming songs.

FAILURE OF "THE FORTUNE TELLER."

EUGENE COWLES, who, after a remarkably successful season, returned from London in time for the annual "washing" of the "Lambs" at Bayside, L. I., recently, entertained his brother Lambs with a hard luck story on theatrical advertising in London during the run of "The Fortune Teller" at the Shaftesbury. Cowles is two weeks in advance of the Nielsen Opera Company, from which he resigned, owing to differences with the autocratic Alice, which he refuses to discuss either in public or in private. Stories have been known to float across the Atlantic before, however, and it is persistently rumored that Mr. Cowles, who was the basso profundo of the Nielsen company, would prefer to walk the sidewalks of New York indefinitely rather than sing again in the same company with the refractory prima donna. He has signed with Frank L. Perley, who is still Miss Nielsen's manager, but expects to be in another big organization, plans for which Mr. Perley has hidden up his sleeve.

But speaking of advertising, Mr. Cowles says the Nielsen Opera Company went into London on rubbers and the eighty odd members had to walk on tiptoe throughout their stay by special order of the original advertising man of the Shaftesbury Theatre.

"Mr. Perley and George Bowles were both 'white-headed,' says Cowles, "when they found what they were up against. Mr. Musgrove was away most of the time and the man employed by the theatre to handle the publicity business had the most beautiful 'piano' way of doing things. If he belonged to the New York Fire Department he would have the bells muffled. We were practically unheralded in London. Nothing was known about my one except the star until the first night. Our names were not even in front of the house, a common practice at all other London houses.

"And that first night was a terror. The 'booh-ers club' opened upon us in the second act, and if it hadn't been for Charley Mitchell, the old prize fighter, they would have arranged our funeral on the spot. When the 'booh-ers' started their racket in the pit, Mitchell jumped up in one of the stalls in front of them and drowned them out. Someone started to 'booh' again, but Mitchell, pointing him out, exclaimed:

"'Here you, over there; do that again and I'll come over and wring your neck.'

"Well, they all know Charley, and as none cared for a set-to with him they let us alone. But it was a close call. We had made good from the opening chorus and there was really no occasion for interference.

"The trouble was they didn't understand that hoary old joke which Joe Cawthorne tells Herbert about the bird named 'Enza,' and when Cawthorne said: 'I opened the cage and in-flew-enza,' they didn't conceive that he was not telling it for a new 'wheeze' and began to 'booh-oo-ooo' to beat the band. 'We've heard that before,' they cried, and they didn't catch the meaning until some time later."—Evening Sun.

HELEN TRUST.—Here are some British press notices earned by the well-known soprano:

MRS. TRUST'S CONCERT.—Mrs. Helen Trust gave a most attractive concert in the Bechstein Hall yesterday, when her charming style and her unaffected way of singing were displayed in four old English songs, Arne's cantata, "Cymon and Iphigénia"; Dibdin's "Sweet Robin," Boyce's "Tell Me, Shepherd," and Carey's Pastoral. Songs by Massenet and Chaminade, sung to harp accompaniment, exhibited her skill in French diction, and the great air from Mozart's "Re Pastore," her neat execution of florid music.—The Times, June 13, 1901.

An interesting program was drawn up by Mrs. Helen Trust for her afternoon concert yesterday. * * * Mrs. Trust came forward with a group of old English songs, of which the first was a cantata, "Cymon and Iphigénia," by Arne (born 1710, died 1778). This was a quaint piece, half recitative, with two short airs. Next came Dibdin's "Sweet Robin," a gay and light little ditty. This was followed by a slower and more sustained air by Boyce (born 1710, died 1779), entitled "Tell Me, Shepherd," and the set ended with a bright Pastoral by Carey (born 1663, died 1743). Mrs. Helen Trust's perfect control of her voice and its flexibilities were well displayed in these items, while her enunciation was perfectly clear and distinct. Later in the scheme Mrs. Trust offered five French songs. "Le Crépuscule," by Massenet, offered the concert giver an opportunity for a display of exquisite delicacy of tone.—Standard, June 13, 1901.

Mrs. Helen Trust interpreted her songs with refinement and taste, and may be congratulated on the success of her concert.—Morning Post, June 13, 1901.

Yesterday afternoon at the Bechstein Hall Mrs. Helen Trust gave a concert of considerable artistic interest. She herself sings admirably, with a most refined style and accompanied by most desirable graces of manner. She has a voice of much distinction and she knows how to use it. Her singing of a series of old English songs was altogether delightful.—Pall Mall Gazette, June 13, 1901.

At her concert yesterday afternoon at Bechstein Hall Mrs. Helen Trust solved the by no means easy problem of preparing a program which had a genuine musical interest without being above the heads of fashionable afternoon concert-goers. She is always at her best in eighteenth century music, and the group of songs by Arne, Boyce and their contemporaries, with which she began, could hardly have been sung with more elegance and refinement. After these came a well chosen selection of modern French composers, sung to a harp accompaniment contributed by Miss Miriam Timothy. The latter proved a highly effective innovation, particularly in such delicate trifles as Massenet's "Zanetto" and "Le Saif Tu." Later in the afternoon Mrs. Trust gave a good performance of Mozart's "L'Amero."—The Daily Graphic, June 14, 1901.

MARY MÜNCHHOFF.

The American Nightingale's Success In the Leipsic Gewandhaus Under Nikisch.

FIFTEENTH GEWANDHAUS CONCERT.

A lucky star has beamed over the choice of vocal soloists for several evenings, and a new surprise of a most agreeable sort awaited us in the appearance of Miss Mary Munchhoff, of Omaha. She excels all her distinguished predecessors in the Gewandhaus during this season in possessing an unusually crystal-clear voice, an exceptional attack, which is light and sure in all intervals, even that of an octave; furthermore in the highly cultivated trill and florid colorature. An opportunity of freely unfolding these last attributes was given in Handel's aria and recitative from "L'Allegro, il Penseroso ed il Moderato." She sang several songs with piano accompaniment, by Schubert, Grieg and Brahms, and her efforts fulfilled all the expectations which had been aroused by critics in other places. "Liebesbotschaft" and "Solveig's Song" were exquisitely rendered, and an encore, given to appease the stormy demands of the audience, was excellently adapted to her talent.—Adolf Ruthardt, in Leipziger Tageblatt, February 2, 1901.

A young coloratura singer, Mary Münchhoff, from Omaha, appeared for the first time in the Gewandhaus, and the great success she attained is rarely the fate of an unknown singer. A few years ago we heard her in a concert and enjoyed the beauty of her voice. She has returned to Leipsic as a finished vocal artist. Her excellently cultivated soprano voice captivates every listener by its magical sweetness and refined purity. Especially the wonderful high tones are charming. Her masterly coloratura was no less effective, and gave occasion to a comparison with the most celebrated artists, for instance, Marcella Sembrich. One is justified in prophesying future greatness for such vocal talent.—Bernhard Sanberlich, in Leipziger Generalanzeiger, February 2, 1901.

Mary Munchhoff, of Omaha, a singer possessing extraordinary vocal skill, was presented to the public, and we have rarely heard a voice of such crystal-clear quality, so free from the slightest fault. Her technic, especially in the high registers, as far as the third octave, can be recommended as a model to many German singers. She displays such an abundance of expression and fine feeling that one is fairly enraptured and filled with enthusiasm. Her vocal skill was displayed not only in selections with orchestral accompaniment, but also in songs with piano. The encore given caused the audience to regret that the program did not contain more numbers for the artist.—Neueste Nachrichten, Essen, October 16, 1900.

The concert given by the Mozart Club yesterday was very brilliant. Considering the modern musical taste which prevails, it is doubly pleasing to meet an artist possessing peculiar talent. Mary Münchhoff belongs to this class. Her extraordinary soprano is of great compass and rare quality. The charming tones of the middle register remind one of Arnoldson's voice, whereas the high tones up to high E possess the soft, round quality of an ensouled flute. It might be said that the marvelously pure attack in the high registers was a specialty of this artist, but Mary Munchhoff can furthermore boast of a large number of other remarkable artistic attributes.—Darmstadter Tagbcher Anzeiger, November 23, 1900.

Mary Munchhoff, a concert singer from Berlin, whose natural sphere is the colorature, is one of the most remarkable and at the same time amiable artists that we have ever met. Her voice is distinguished more for beauty of quality and charming smoothness than for power and volume. She displays an extended compass and tones of bell-like quality, which come forth like strings of pearls unfolding a beauty that is fairly ravishing, especially in the high registers. Attack, formation of tone and method of breathing are ideal; she possesses furthermore an easily flowing colorature and a masterly technic.—Darmstadter Tageblatt, November 23, 1900.

Mary Münchhoff's remarkable colorature aroused the greatest enthusiasm in her audience. Her great vocal skill is all the more worthy of admiration because its attainment in a voice so full and strong as hers shows earnest and persevering study. Her brilliant staccato belongs to the first rank and also her magnificent trill.—Stuttgarter Neues Tageblatt, November 16, 1900.

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.—A prominent vocal teacher of New York, remaining at home this summer, will have vacancy for a few good voices. Terms reduced. Address VOICE, care of MUSICAL COURIER.

Miss ADELE MARGULIES,
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Studios: Nos. 705-6 Carnegie Hall, New York.

Mme. SCHUMANN-HEINK, Mr. BISPHAM, Sig. CAMPANARI,
And other Members of the MAURICE GRAU OPERA CO.,
Are open for Concerts, Oratorios, Recitals and Musical Festivals during the Season 1901–2.
FOR TERMS AND DATES ADDRESS
ERNEST GOERLITZ, Sole and Exclusive Agent, Metropolitan Opera House, New York City.

M. I.
SCHERHEY,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Combined Italian-French-German Method.
CHURCH, CONCERT, ORATORIO, OPERA.
Studio: 780 PARK AVENUE, Cor. 73d St., NEW YORK.
Telephone: Seventy-ninth, 1152.

Mrs. HELEN TRUST
SOPRANO.
Vocal Recitals in English, French, Italian.
53 Grove End Road,
St. John's Wood, London, England.

THIRD AMERICAN TOUR
SEASON 1901-2.
161 Concerts
Last Season.
LEONORA JACKSON
ASSISTED BY Harry J. Fellows,
Tenor.
William Bauer, Pianist.
Direction ERNEST H. JACKSON and A. L. WAKEFIELD.
Address: NEW YORK, 31 Union Square West. CHICAGO, 71 Monroe Street.

HOTEL CECIL, LONDON,
July 6, 1901.

SURELY so terrible a mistake was never made in this world as that which I made a few weeks ago. I actually described Julian Sturgis, librettist of Doctor Stanford's "Much Ado About Nothing," as a pantomime writer. In so doing I was (it would seem) confusing him with another gentleman whose name, though it sounds the same, is spelt differently. This was very fearful. I don't know whether my life is safe, for it is impossible to tell who is the more angry—Julian Sturgis, because he has been called a writer of pantomimes, or the other gentleman, because he has been blamed for so bad a libretto as that of "Much Ado About Nothing." My excuse is that while I knew of one gentleman capable of writing so deplorable a book—for I had winced under his pantomimes—I did not even know of the existence of Julian Sturgis. But, after all, how is it the old rhyme runs?

Strange that such difference should be
'Twixt Tweedledum and Tweedledee.

It really matters not at all. No one will go to hear "Much Ado About Nothing" at Covent Garden, and though Charles Manners told me the other day that he intended to play it in the provinces I fancy he will not play it often. It is also announced to be given somewhere in German. Oh! these German opera houses—but, there also, I dare prophesy it will not be given often. I have no prejudice against Professor Stanford; I have never in my life met him; but I know that dry scores do not remain green, for the simple reason that they never were green; and I believe that the cash-down sort of galvanism is no effective substitute for the great resurrection of the dead.

Last week I did not attend the opera once, and I see no reason to regret it. But on Monday I went as in duty bound to hear Ternina's Isolde. It was certainly a very memorable performance. That Ternina is a wonderful woman I should never dream of denying. When you see her in one of her best parts—certainly not when you see her in so wretched an opera as "La Tosca"—you could swear that her voice was the finest in the world and her face the most beautiful and expressive in the world, and her acting the most splendid in the world. Yet, all the same, when one comes to analyze her with care one finds that not one of these propositions is sound. Her voice, though good, is not one of the greatest ones; her vocal art is just good enough to make one remember other artists who, inferior in intention, are more perfect; her style of beauty I will not discuss; her acting, noble though it is, is for minutes together far inferior to, say, Calvé's. The really marvelous characteristic of the woman is her power of forming a complete, consistent conception of a part and using now her voice, now her acting, now her facial expression, to drive home to the audience everything she has seen in the part. I admire her, I say, enormously; and I repeat that her Isolde is a memorable feat. But to my mind it does not compare with her Brünnhilde. Most of my brethren grow rhapsodical when they speak of her Isolde; to me it is only a very powerful representation of a part in an opera; it is not, as the others say, Isolde herself living and quivering and shivering in the flesh. But as this was her last appearance in a singularly trying season, perhaps she was unable quite to do herself justice. The newly imported tenor from somewhere in Germany or Denmark, Mr. Forchhammer, is an industrious worker at his job; persistent, conscientious, not inartistic, but decidedly not great. Brema's Brangaene was, as I am afraid it will always be now, too pompous, too important, and by very far too self-conscious. Being Brema's it of course has its dozens of fine points, but it does not come near her splendid Brangaene of the years that are past, dead and well-nigh forgotten.

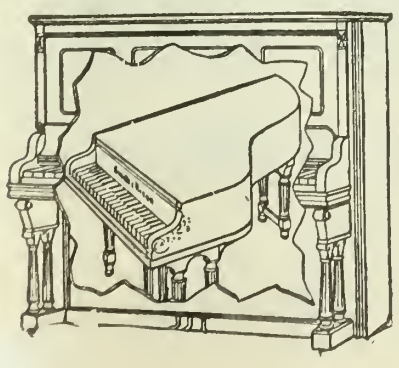
The playing of the orchestra under Lohse was really magnificent. This conductor was totally unknown to me when he first arrived here (I do not mean merely that I had not met him—for I have not done that yet, nor am I likely to do so—but that in my insular ignorance I had never heard of him); and I am not too vain to admit that one or two of his earlier performances did not delight me. But as he went on the truth was borne in upon me that here was a very great artist. In this belief his last "Tristan" confirmed me. There is nothing to be said of the others. The scenery was deplorable. The first scene might not make a cat laugh, because cats do not make a habit of going to sea, and so do not know what is possible and what i impossible in the rig of a ship. But had a sea lion o other ferocious maritime animal been among the audienc the other night, he would—granted that he was carnivorou —certainly have left the occupants of the stalls untouched mounted the stage, inquired for the scene painter, eate him, and then have taken as dessert as much as he coul devour of the people who "manage" our only opera an consider such things fit for what claims to be one of th greatest opera houses in the world. The last scene wa even worse, for it simply sets at naught Wagner's care fully written directions. But what would you of Coven Garden? It is shockingly bad, and it will never be bette because not an ounce of brains goes to the managemen of it.

However, even Covent Garden had the sense to reviv Isidore de Lara's "Messaline" on Tuesday evening. I don' for a moment suggest anything so absurd as that this wa done on artistic grounds. On artistic grounds the wor was by a fluke produced two years ago; and as it drew some of the largest houses of the season the managemen desired to play it again last year. That proved impossibl as the proper artists were not procurable and there was n time—in such a house as Covent Garden—to train fres ones. However, this season Tamagno was again availabl —he created the part of Helion at Monte Carlo in 1899 Calvé was available, having learned the part of Messalin for a recent Milan performance; and so on. So it was de termined to revive the work. I can fairly say that it wa enthusiastically received by a crowded house.

Calvé is not nearly so good as was Heglon in her par Tamagno does not sing his as well as Alvarez did, bu he looks it better. Of the tenor I prefer to say nothin until after the next representation. Gilibert showed hin self as perfect an artist as ever. The orchestra und Flon was dull and sleepy. But, I say, the public accepte the work, as was just, and it has undoubtedly now gon into the permanent repertory. As for the critics, the were divided—as usual. Some of them—like Verno Blackburn—told the truth about the opera; most of the hedged, as they generally do; a few showed their incom petence, or greatness, or hopeless bias, by describing as a bad, not to say a disgusting, work. The Times, i particular, fully came up to my expectations. This new paper, which I believe has about the smallest circulatio of any London journal, is always worth reading. O since this statement is a little too sweeping, let me sa that I always find it worth reading to learn Dr. Stan ford's views. Naturally the Times does not approve "Messaline." It finds "Messaline" immoral, &c. I critique is couched in the most ladylike terms, and doub less at least half a dozen old maids will be stimulated t come to hear Isidore de Lara's achievement. I woul that my writings had so gigantic and widespread an in fluence! But as fate has denied me that privilege I ca at least boldly speak my mind, and say that though "Me saline" is by no means without its defects, it remains i spite of them by a long way the best opera written by a Englishman for years. It is going to be given in Amer ica, and such of the inhabitants of that country as hav survived the heat wave will be able to judge it for them selves.

Paderewski has given a second recital. Which is t say, he has clean beaten the retiring tenor or prima donn After they reach the modest age of 150 or 160 years the begin to retire, and they generally go on retiring ther until death interrupts their triumphant progress. But her is Paderewski, as yet quite a young man, and he has a ready acquired the difficult art of giving his "only recital the season" twice over. Unfortunately in the process acquiring it he seems to have forgotten a goodly part

LAMPERTI SCHOOL OF MUSIC,
TO BE OPENED NOVEMBER 1, 1901.
Quartier Parc Monceau,
Paris.
Temporary Address, 3 rue Gounod.



A Grand Piano
IN AN UPRIGHT CASE.
•
SMITH & NIXON,
Cincinnati, Ohio,
Manufacture this instrument for
MUSICIANS.

HASLAM,
Professeur de Chant.
POSE, TECHNIQUE, STYLE, RÉPERTOIRE,
OPERA, CONCERT.
Direct Communication with European Managers.
54 rue Faubourg St. Honoré, PARIS.

London Organ School
AND INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC,
22 Princes Street, Cavendish Sq., W., London, Eng.
Established 1865. Principal: T. H. Yorke Trotter, M.A., Mus.Doc.Oxon.
At this college Private Lessons are given and classes held in all branches of Music, and in Elocution and Modern Languages.
There is a competent staff of Professors for Piano, Singing, Organ, Violin, Viola, Violoncello, Double Bass, Harp, Guitar and all Wood and Brass Wind Instruments.
A special feature is made of the training of Church and Concert Organists. The school has three 3-manual practice organs and a new grand concert organ, which has been recently completed by the Positive Organ Company on the Casson system.
The full Orchestra meets on Tuesday Evenings. The String Orchestra on Friday Afternoons.
For prospectus and full particulars apply to the office of this paper or to FRANCIS BURGESS, Secretary.

ERICSSON
BUSHNELL.
For Dates, Terms, &c., address
177 Duane Street, NEW YORK

The American Institute of Applied Music
(Incorporated 1900.)
EDGAR O. SILVER, President,
212 West 59th Street, New York City.
Departments:
The Metropolitan College of Music.
The Metropolitan Conservatory of Music,
The Synthetic Piano School
The American Institute of Normal Methods.
Graded Certificates, Diplomas and the Degrees of Mus. Bac. and Mus. Do Special courses are open to students at any time.
The Faculty and Examiners: DUDLEY BUCK, A.C.M.; ALBERT RO PARSONS, A.C.M.; E. PRESSON MILLER; HARRY ROWE SHELLEY, A.C.M.; PA AMBROSE, WILLIAM F. SHERMAN, KATE S. CHITTENDEN, LILLIAN LITTLEHALE and others.
The residence department furnishes a refined and quiet home.
The advantages are unequaled in America.
For information address KATE S. CHITTENDEN, Dean.

the art of playing the piano well. At one time his most remarkable feature was not his hair, but his determination always to fetch a fine tone out of his instrument, never to play a wrong note if it could be avoided, always to phrase with all his brain and his heart. These things one notices no longer. Nowadays he plays divinely for a few minutes, then he lapses into sheer slovenliness; into wretched, hard, harsh tone; into sentimentality, into phrasing that would not honor an academy student. On Tuesday part of the Beethoven op. 111 was magnificent, but afterward it drifted off into mere inanity. As for some Mendelssohn "Songs Without Words," one cannot think of them without growing blasphemous. His tone was nearly always poor; but I blame that, on this occasion at least, on the piano. JOHN F. RUNCIMAN.

[The pianos used by Paderewski in his recitals in England are built on a system that might have been acceptable to piano virtuosity half a century ago. Since the Liszt-Rubinstein period they are no longer adapted to the concert room. We heard Paderewski play on one of those grands in Queen's Hall after a triumphant American tour, during which he used a grand piano with a 70-ton tension. Everything in connection with the piano was relative to that tension, including its quality. The old school, thin toned, light tensioned, Parisian grand piano used by Paderewski in England would not be tolerated in a concert hall in America for five minutes, and Paderewski could make no success in America on such a piano. Just as a great violinist who is in the habit of playing a Stradivarius or Guarnerius violin would fail if he played on a Mircourt fiddle.

With all the fine material used and attention paid to detail and finish Paris does not know how to build a piano. The music studios of that city are filled with tin pans, most of them out of tune continually and unfit for use for accompanying.—EDITOR MUSICAL COURIER.]

ASHEVILLE, N. C., SUMMER SCHOOL.—The artists for this school, who also participate in the regular subscription concerts during July and August, left for the famous Southern mountain resort on Sunday, excepting Baritone Percy Hemus, who had but just returned from his Kansas-Missouri trip, and he left later. Miss Estelle Harris, soprano; Miss Edith Clarke, contralto (of Boston); Charles A. Rice, tenor (who goes middle of August); Claude Trevlyn, violinist, and F. W. Riesberg are there on the ground; the opening reception at the Women's College was held Monday evening, and the first concert occurs next Thursday. So far this summer it has not been above 80° Fahr., a welcome state of things to the parboiled New Yorker. The handsome booklet relating to the summer school and concerts will be sent on application to A. P. Babcock, Asheville, N. C.

PERCY HEMUS IN TOPEKA, KAN.—Mr. Hemus gave some successful recitals a fortnight ago in Kansas and Missouri, and the following, from the Topeka Capital, gives an idea of his success:

A large and fashionable gathering of Topeka musicians took place yesterday morning at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Parkhurst, in Potwin, when Percy Hemus, the well-known baritone, gave a recital. * * *

Mr. Hemus' voice is a baritone of rare strength and sweetness. Its qualities are those which result from a combination of unusual natural talent and exquisite cultivation. He sings with an easy grace that is yet forceful and eloquent, and at all times delightful. From an artistic standpoint the recital was probably the most complete success of any similar entertainment given in Topeka since the Henschel concert early in the winter.

THE KALTENBORN CONCERTS.

AMONG the novelties which the Kaltenborn Orchestra will play at the St. Nicholas Garden this month is a quartet for French horns by Heinrich Hubler. The composer describes it as "A Concertstuck" with orchestral accompaniment. Another composition which Mr. Kaltenborn is about to rehearse is the Beethoven Septet for violin, viola, 'cello, bass, horn, clarinet and bassoon. The Theodore Thomas Orchestra has played this work with duplicate parts, but Mr. Kaltenborn will undertake to present it this time at this concert in the original form, he himself playing the violin part. Both the new horn quartet and the Beethoven Septet will be played at the concert on Sunday night, July 28. As a special compliment to Mr. Kaltenborn, his old teacher Edward Mollenhauer and his youngest son will appear at the concert on July 27, playing together a violin duet with the orchestra. Miss Mercedes O'Leary (as her name would indicate), a young American pianist of Spanish and Irish extraction, will appear as soloist at the concert on Friday evening, July 26. She will play the Grieg Concerto in A minor. Miss Jessie Shay, who scored a brilliant success with her performance of the Moszkowski Concerto at the Kaltenborn concerts last month, will play again next Tuesday evening, July 23. This young artist selected a novelty for her previous appearance, and at her second engagement will play the Henselt F minor Concerto, a work not heard in New York in recent years.

The two nights of the Wagner festival attracted audiences which taxed the capacity of the auditorium. Mr. Kaltenborn himself played solos at both the Wednesday and Thursday concerts. A fair sized audience assembled for the operatic concert on Friday night. The advanced announcements of the first performance in concert form of Harry Rowe Shelley's new opera, "Romeo and Juliet," apparently did not raise a ripple in the big town, for musicians and critics were conspicuous by their absence. It has always been the policy of THE MUSICAL COURIER to uphold American composers and encourage the performance of their works, but the critical understanding even of the most pronounced American type must draw the line at Mr. Shelley's ambition at operatic writing. The most that this Brooklyn organist and choirmaster has succeeded in doing in his latest is to produce a curious medley of hints from composers of at least five countries—Gounod, Mascagni, Wagner, Sullivan and Dvorák—all borrowed from in a freehanded fashion. The tenor solo, which strongly suggests Gounod, was delightfully sung by Leo Liebermann, a pupil of E. Presson Miller, who is going to make his mark in the world. The duo, which is Wagnerian, was sung by Mr. Liebermann and Miss Charlotte Walker. The orchestration of Mr. Shelley's work is thin and commonplace. One Mr. Finck, of the Evening Post, stated on various occasions that a musical composition to be worthy of consideration must have an idea. There is no musical idea in Mr. Shelley's work so far as can be traced. It is without basis, and there is no development, for there is no thematic material from which to develop.

Mrs. Elizabeth Hazard, the soprano, appeared on Sunday night for the third time. She sang Schubert's "Serenade" to violin obligato played by Mr. Kaltenborn, and the piano accompaniment by Emile Levy, in the first part of the program, scoring her usual success with the large audience. As an encore she sang "The Suwanee River," revealing again those beautiful high notes for which her singing is marked. In the second part of the concert Mrs. Hazard sang Grieg's "Sunshine Song" in English and that composer's impassioned love song, "Ich Liebe Dich," in German. She sang the latter particularly well, and was recalled twice and then added Macfarlane's effective little "Marguerite," without accompaniment. Singing without the piano showed the purity as well as sweetness of Mrs. Hazard's voice.

Last evening (Tuesday) Leopold Winkler and Mr. Kaltenborn were the soloists. Review of that concert next week.

Following are the programs for the remainder of this week and Sunday next:

WEDNESDAY, JULY 17.
Miscellaneous Night.

Overture, Manfred ..... Schumann
Ballet music, Boabdil ..... Moszkowski
Scherzo valse Malaguenna.
Symphonic Poem, Les Preludes ..... Liszt
Wotan's Farewell and Magic Fire Scene, Die Walkure ..... Wagner
James Fitch Thomson.
Spring ..... Van der Stucken
Rondo d'Amour ..... Van Westerhout
Waltz, Roses from the South ..... Strauss
Overture, Il Guarany ..... Gomez
Spanish Rhapsodie ..... Chabrier
Danse des Sylphes ..... Berlioz
Blumengelflüster ..... Von Blon
March, from Symphony Leonore ..... Raff

THURSDAY, JULY 18.
Wagner Night.

Fest Overture ..... Lassen
Ballet Suite, La Korrigane ..... Widor
Oboe solo, Adelaide ..... Beethoven
Joseph Eller.
Snowflakes ..... Bendel
Spring ..... Van der Stucken
Miss Mary Mansfield.
Waltz, Vienna Woods ..... Strauss
Overture, Tannhäuser ..... Wagner
Siegfried Idyl ..... Wagner
Aria, Dich theure Halle, Tannhäuser ..... Wagner
Miss Mary Mansfield.
Introduction to Third Act, Tristan und Isolde ..... Wagner
Corno Englese solo, Joseph Eller.
Flower Girls' Scene, Parsifal ..... Wagner
Centennial March ..... Wagner

FRIDAY, JULY 19.
Operatic Night.

Overture, Semiramide ..... Rossini
Selection, Cavalleria Rusticana ..... Mascagni
Selection, La Traviata ..... Verdi
Violin solo, Romance in F, op. 50 ..... Beethoven
Joseph Kovarik.
Ballet music, Copelia ..... Delibes
Waltz, Pomone (by request) ..... Waldteufel
Prologue, Pagliacci ..... Leoncavallo
Ballet music, Le Cid ..... Massenet
Entr'acte, Philemon et Baucis ..... Gounod
Grand March, Queen of Sheba ..... Goldmark

SATURDAY, JULY 20.
Popular Night.

March, Avant ..... C. Kaltenborn
Overture, William Tell ..... Rossini
Intermezzo, Naila ..... Delibes
Waltz, Copelia ..... Delibes
Selection, The Geisha ..... Jones
Reverie ..... Bottesini
Violin solo, Mr. Kovarik.
Reve du Bal ..... Eilenberg
Chanson Provençal ..... Dell' Acqua
Miss Minnie Fischer.
Waltz, Hofballtänze ..... Strauss
Irish Fantaisie ..... Herbert
Senegambian Patrol ..... Rosey
Selection, Florodora ..... Stuart
Wedding March ..... Mendelssohn

SUNDAY, JULY 21.
Sacred Night.

Overture, Rienzi ..... Wagner
Allegro Moderato... } Unfinished Symphony ..... Schubert
Andante con Moto.. }
Kammenoi Ostrow ..... Rubinstein
Trio, for horn, flute and harp, Abendlied ..... Popp
Mr. Schulze, Mr. Kurth, Mr. Schuetze.
Symphonic Poem, Mazeppa ..... Liszt
String Quartet—
Andante Cantabile ..... Tschaikowsky
Gavotte, Bonheur ..... Hartog
(By special request.)
The Kaltenborn String Quartet.
Waltz, Freuet Euch des Lebens ..... Strauss
Prelude, Parsifal ..... Wagner
Violin soli—
Air ..... Bach
Largo ..... Händel
Franz Kaltenborn.
Spanish Rhapsodie ..... Chabrier
Coronation March ..... Svendsen

Published by
G. SCHIRMER, NEW YORK.
Collection of Standard Operas.
COMPLETE VOCAL SCORES.
Edition de Luxe, in cloth. $1.00 extra.

Aida. Verdi. (Italian and English)	$2.00
Amico Fritz. Mascagni. (Italian and English)	2.00
Barber of Seville. Rossini. (Italian and English)	1.50
Cavalleria Rusticana. Mascagni. (Italian and English)	1.50
Carmen. Bizet. (French and English)	2.00
Faust. Gounod. (Italian and English)	1.50
Flying Dutchman. Wagner. (German and English)	1.50
Lohengrin. Wagner. (German and English)	1.50
Lucia di Lammermoor. Donizetti. (Italian and English)	1.00
Mignon. Thomas. (French and English)	2.00
Romeo and Juliet. Gounod. (French and English)	2.00
Samson and Delilah. Saint-Saëns. (English)	2.50
Tannhäuser. Wagner. (German and English)	1.50
La Traviata. Verdi. (Italian and English)	1.00
Il Trovatore. Verdi. (Italian and English)	1.00

☞ Others in preparation.
Send for Catalogue of SCHIRMER'S LIBRARY EDITION of Musical Classics.

JEANNETTE DURNO
CONCERT PIANIST,
3629 Vincennes Avenue, CHICAGO.

Mme. Matja von Niessen-Stone
MEZZO SOPRANO.
VOCAL RECITALS—in English, French, German, Italian and Russian.
For terms and dates address
ALICE E. JOSEPH, 7a Hanover St., London, W., England.

CONCERT DIRECTION
ROBERT STRAKOSCH
56 Rue La Bruyere, PARIS.

Mrs. Laurence Weakley,
CONTRALTO.
ADDRESS:
610 N. 8TH STREET.
ST. JOSEPH, MO.

RARE OLD VIOLINS
Remarkable values in fine old instruments from $50 to $10,000. Largest and finest collection in the world. Send for a copy of our Catalog, just issued, containing Biographies, Fac-simile Labels, Etc. Easy Terms.
LYON & HEALY, 133 Adams Street, CHICAGO

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY
—BY THE—
MUSICAL COURIER COMPANY.
(Incorporated under the laws of the State of New York.)

St. James Building, Broadway and 26th St., New York.
TELEPHONE: 1720 Madison Square.
Cable Address: "Pegujar," New York.

ESTABLISHED JANUARY, 1880.
No. 1112.

MARC A. BLUMENBERG - - EDITOR-IN-CHIEF.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JULY 17, 1901.

LONDON, ENGLAND—
Hotel Cecil, Mr. Montague Chester, General European Representative.

BERLIN, GERMANY (Branch Office)—
Linkstrasse, 17 W., is in charge of Mr. Otto Floersheim.
Single copies for sale at the music store of Ed. Bote & G. Bock, Leipzigerstrasse 39, W.

DRESDEN—
Anna Ingman, Franklinstrasse 20

LEIPSIC—
Hotel Hentschel, Mr. Alvin Kranich in charge.

PARIS, FRANCE—
Conducted from London Office.
Single copies for sale at Brentano's, 37 Avenue de l'Opera; 37 Rue Marbeuf; Galignani Library, 224 Rue de Rivoli; Shakespeare Library, 75 Avenue des Champs Elysées, Boulevard Kiosks.

VIENNA—
Edwin Stewart, correspondent.

ITALY—
5 Via Rondinelli, Florence, Italy, Mr. Joseph Smith in charge.

CANADIAN OFFICE—
In charge of Miss May Hamilton. Address Main Office, New York City.

CHICAGO OFFICE—
Fine Arts Building, Michigan Boulevard, C. A. Daniell in charge

ST. LOUIS—
Nellie Allen-Hessenbruch, correspondent.

MILWAUKEE—
Controlled by Chicago Office.

INDIANAPOLIS—
Controlled by Chicago Office.

CINCINNATI OFFICE—
J. A. Homan in charge.

BOSTON OFFICE—
17 Beacon Street

BROOKLYN OFFICE -
Hotel St. George, Clark, corner Henry Street.

BUFFALO OFFICE—
Mrs. Nellie M. Gould, 428 Ashland Avenue.

WASHINGTON OFFICE—
616 Twelfth Street, N. W., Berenice Thompson in charge.

SUBSCRIPTIONS:

Invariably in advance, including postage.

Single copies, Ten Cents.

United States,			$5.00
Great Britain,	£1 5s.	Austria,	15 fl.
France,	31.25 fr.	Italy,	31.25 fr.
Germany,	25 m.	Russia,	12 r.

SPENCER T. DRIGGS - - BUSINESS MANAGER

RATES FOR ADVERTISING.

(PER INCH ON ADVERTISING PAGES.)

Three Months	$25.00	Nine Months	$75.00
Six Months	50.00	Twelve Months	100.00

ON READING PAGES.

One inch, 3 months	$75 00
One inch, 6 months	125.00
One inch, 1 year	200.00

Special rates for preferred positions.

One page, one insertion	$300.00
One-half page, one insertion	175.00
One Column	100.00

All remittances for subscriptions or advertising must be made by check, draft or money order, payable to THE MUSICAL COURIER Company

Advertisements for the current week must be handed in by 2 P. M. on Monday.

All changes in advertisements must reach this office by Friday 5 P. M. preceding the issue in which changes are to take effect.

American News Company, New York, General Distributing Agents.
Western News Company, Chicago, Western Distributing Agents.

THE MUSICAL COURIER EXTRA.
Published Every Saturday During the Year.
GREATEST ADVERTISING MEDIUM FOR ALL MUSIC PUBLISHERS AND MANUFACTURERS and IMPORTERS OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS OR PARTS THEREOF. ALSO SPECIALLY DEVOTED TO POPULAR MUSIC and VAUDEVILLE
For Particulars apply to "Saturday Extra Department."

THE Duke of Argyll is not only writing the memoirs of his mother-in-law, Queen Victoria, but is doing the libretto for a new opera on which Hamish MacCunn is engaged.

THE comic opera of Richard Strauss which is to be sung next season at Dresden is called "Feuersnoth," and relates the experiences of a sort of Till Eulenspiegel, who plays merry pranks in Munich, a subject we imagine that will prove very congenial to this remarkable composer.

VERNON BLACKBURN wrote the following exquisitely ironical sentence in the Pall Mall Gazette:

"It would be absurd on the part of any critic to deny that in spite of Joachim's accomplishments and taste, his ways have, in these days, declined upon mistune."

WE read as if in a stupor of concerts given by fashionable women in Paris to raise funds so as to enable "poor but gifted musicians" the joy of a visit to Bayreuth. For what? Surely not for the singing, or for the interpretation of Wagner! It is so like musical Paris to discover Bayreuth when in its decadence.

THE Herald tells the following curious story in its literary news:

"Miss Bessie Bedford, the novelist, who wrote 'The Harp of Life,' under the pen name of 'Elizabeth Godfrey,' and who lives at Southbourne, a suburb of Bournemouth, has been condemned by a jury to pay a sum of 40 shillings as compensation to 'Dan' Godfrey, Jr., the conductor of the municipal band and director of the winter gardens at Bournemouth.

"The injury alleged by Mr. Godfrey was that he has been made the principal character of the novel, and that there are passages in it calculated to do harm to his professional reputation. Evidently the jury did not assess the damages very highly.

"Miss Bedford may even find some set-off in the enhanced reputation the story has obtained, but the moral shows the danger of taking a living person as a model for a character of a novel. Every jury might not be so gently disposed."

We have read the novel in question, and think the damages correct, though the work itself is far from being worth that amount.

THE BACHE BROTHERS.

A MOST sympathetic and interesting memorial of the two Bache brothers has been written by their sister, Constance Bache. It is called "Brother Musicians; Reminiscences of Edward and Walter Bache." Walter Bache, it may be remembered, was the young English pianist who did so much for Liszt's original music in London. Edward Bache, the elder brother, was born in 1833, and as a violinist and a boy of thirteen played the violin at the Birmingham Festival of 1846, when "Elijah" was conducted by Mendelssohn. The reminiscences of the brothers cover a quarter of a century of music in England, a most fruitful time in its history. Sterndale Bennett had a high opinion of Edward Bache's gifts for composition, and after his demise, at the early age of twenty-four, greatly deplored his taking off. Carl Czerny once wrote of him: "If only his bodily health be re-established he will then assuredly give much pleasure to the world of music." But it was not to be.

His brother was born in 1842, and studied in Leipsic about the same time as Arthur Sullivan and Franklin Taylor. Later he went to Liszt, and from that time became one of the most zealous devotees of the Hungarian master's music. A work of Von Bülow's being suggested for performance at a Bache concert, he wrote:

I perfectly agree with every word in your last letter about Bülow, but nevertheless can't carry out your wishes which are also mine. My next concert must be a cheap one with one rehearsal; so nothing new will be done. * * * In 1879, if I have the money, it must be the "Faust" Symphony. Liszt is the most ill used genius the world ever saw. All are ungrateful to him. No Wagner, Bülow Joachim or Klindworth would be here but for Liszt Liszt's music has marked a step in non-theatrical music Bülow's will have no after influence. So it must and shall be Liszt's first (after Bayreuth) with me. * * * That a magnificent performance of Liszt's "Faust" Symphony under Bülow's, Klindworth's or Richter's direction can be given without a certain loss of £200 is "demnition hard."

With all his longing to come up to his own high ideal as a pianist, he wrote:

I must economize every farthing * * * next year I want to give my concert in St. James' Hall. * * * I must prepare for a loss of £200, so you see I have to think of it now * * * of course the quantity of teaching that must be done if I am to continue the Liszt propaganda which I will by Jove! is very unfavorable to self-improvement.

Liszt thoroughly appreciated the sacrifices of the young Englishman. Among other things he wrote:

You in your London annual concerts have for twelve years worked greater miracles than I was able to compose in the miracle of roses of St. Elizabeth.

Walter Bache died in 1888. He was an excellent pianist.

MAKE A BONFIRE OF THE HYMN TUNES.

IN season and out of season THE MUSICAL COURIER has condemned the silly, yes, and vicious hymn tunes heard in the churches of the so-called dissenters. The ear of the refined musician is often offended even at the services of the established musical sects—the Roman Catholics, the Episcopalians, the Lutherans and the Hebrews—but that only when the post of organist and choirmaster is filled by a vulgar and commonplace man. Pope Leo has put himself on record in this matter of churchly music for the church service, and why any other but the best music (when there is so much of it) should be played and sang is a problem which does not seem difficult to solve.

In the past few weeks the dailies of the country have been discussing this subject with more or less glee, and in the councils of the conventions of music teachers, too, courageous professors have denounced the jig-like hymn tunes and the harmony of imbeciles in language that left very little unsaid.

Oliver Willard Pierce, president of the Indiana Music Teachers' Association, dealt the awful twaddle a blow in these words: "I hope all the rot of the Moody and Sankey style of music may be destroyed in the Protestant churches. Protestant churches must bow in humility to the music of the Church of Rome."

In his zeal Mr. Pierce went a little too far, for the Protestant Church includes many composers of noble music. Begin at the very beginning with Bach, as an example. When it comes to the matter of hymn tunes purely, leaving anthems and chants aside, several hundred beautiful tunes now classics might be recorded by any consistent and regular attendant of the established church, say the Episcopal Church of England or the Lutheran Church of Germany. While many of these churchly gems can be traced to Romish and even Jewish origin, many, many more were composed by men Protestants to the core.

The vulgar, inane and trashy Moody and Sankey drivel was first introduced in this country at the revival meetings of the Methodists and Baptists about thirty years ago. As hash of the most idiotic sort, it is a thousand times more injurious to the intellect than the contortions and crooning of the African slave. How apparently intelligent people can tolerate and go on singing the drivel passes the comprehension of those who cannot, for there is truly no need for singing one trashy hymn tune when there are so many beautiful ones to select from. The hereditary churchman may be a worldly person, but when his better nature asserts itself he will disclose his respect for religion and spiritual refinement by naming his favorite hymns, and the choir invariably sing these over his bier. Last week at the funeral of Pierre Lorillard at Grace P. E. Church three beautiful hymns were sung, all said to be favorites of the deceased millionaire. All Episcopalians know these hymns and love them as much for the sublimity of the sacred poetry as for the lofty music. The hymns sung were "Lead, Kindly Light," "Jerusalem the Golden," and "A Few More Years May Come."

United action will be needed to weed out the miserable stuff from the choir loft and prayer meeting pew. In the meantime let the most determined Christians begin in their own homes and make bonfires of all the offensive religious musical literature. Burn it all, good people.

THE reproductive of any given epoch as a rule reflect its characteristics. A sensitive art, such as piano playing, could not escape taking on the hue of its intellectual and emotional surroundings. The greatest pianists have always been affected by the poetical and political drift of their time. In his youth we find Liszt passionately addicted to the doctrines of Saint-Simon, and emerging from the polemical mysticism of the Abbé Lamennais only to be absorbed by the artistic theories of Richard Wagner. In the earlier years of the last century, when the scarlet vest of Théophile Gautier—he has since declared the color pink—was a flashing signal for the romanticists, Liszt wrote terrific fantasies for his instrument, fantasies full of ferocious difficulties, full of the mouthing, declamatory phrases born of Hugo's sonorous music. It was all magnificent, but was it music?

CERTAIN TENDENCIES.

The immense technical stride taken since Clementi does not account altogether for certain tendencies in keyboard music to-day. Modern piano music is born of the romantic movement, the poor, dead movement, dead and decayed while the halo of youth and victory still encircled its brow. The classical tradition—a huge platitude—was replaced by the romantic—now a huger, duller platitude. Heinrich Heine, with irony on his chiseled lips and tears in his eloquent eyes, sang its requiem as it lay in its cradle. Yet what a colossal infant, what prodigies it performed!

Liszt—the father of latter day pianists—was wholly absorbed by a movement that embraced such names as Hugo, Heine, Gautier, Delacroix, George Sand, Balzac—the romantic side of his many colored genius—Berlioz, Schumann, Chopin and many others. And Liszt fairly reveled in the extravagances of those stirring years. Generously bestowing every fibre of his great brain, of his great, noble soul, he became the forerunner of Richard Wagner. Liszt's was the voice of the wilderness crying aloud that the true redeemer of dramatic music was about to appear; despite his knowledge of his own genius, he never demurred to the superiority of his son-in-law in the field of the music drama. The Liszt-Wagner letters prove that fact.

All this artistic hurly-burly, all these mad enthusiasms, were mirrored in the Liszt piano school—for a school he founded. Extravagance, noise, poetry, fantasy, brilliancy, morbidity, technical sensationalism there were; but the excellences outweighed the defects, and the piano became a rival to the orchestra. The most daring things were attempted. The overture to "Tannhäuser" was transcribed and played upon the keyboard, while the friends of Mendelssohn and the Leipsic tradition shed academic tears in solitude.

But Germany was to have her revenge. Liszt, a Magyar; Carl Tausig, a Slav; Rubinstein, another, had swept all before them, and the piano ruled the land. The still, small voice of Brahms had not been heard, though Schumann had foreseen the tendency of his music. It seemed as if piano playing must expire from sheer excess. Brilliancy and empty sonority had been pushed to the verge of the ludicrous, yet a reaction in the Gallic direction were an impossible thing. There were frozen classicism, empty display; above all, an absence of tone color.

The romantic movement at least gave the piano all the colors of the palette; Liszt dowered it with an orchestral voice, and Chopin bestowed upon it a soul. Mere surfaces, however, could not be tolerated forever, and now Brahms has shown that an ample polyphony and a passionate lyricism are not mutually exclusive qualities. On him has fallen the mantle of Beethoven, yet he is at heart a romantic. Brahms is a lineal descendant of Bach, notwithstanding the fact that in his veins also pulsates the virtuoso blood of Liszt. Witness his transcendental Paganini studies. He has led the piano back to its proper sphere. His music is Klaviermässig, not a note of it being sacrificed to the demon of mere display. His technical forms are derived from Bach, from Beethoven, from Schumann and from Chopin. He has absorbed all that is great and good in Liszt, while his idiom has remained distinctly his own.

German piano playing slighted for a half century is avenged in Brahms. His is a legitimate school of playing, and to-day it has lost its old-time formalism, academic stiffness and interpretative pedantry. The German has utilized the discoveries of Liszt, and the once cold, passionless play of the Teuton is infused by Slavic warmth. To a profound intellectuality is united a poetic glow, and Germany may yet give birth to a second Henselt—one of the greatest and most underrated pianists of his day. Times have indeed changed in the world of piano playing since the iron rule of the coldly monotonous, though intellectual, Von Bülow.

A CABLEGRAM from London states that Victor Herbert's "Fortune Teller" made a most lamentable failure at the Shaftesbury Theatre and that it is doubtful whether American plays would hereafter be given that theatre. Our standards of taste are based upon European decisions and we are compelled to bow meekly to this conclusion regarding this comic opera; but it is necessary to say that this paper—THE MUSICAL COURIER as it is known—long since declared not only that the "Fortune Teller" had no merit whatever, but that all of Victor Herbert's "written to order" comic operas were pure and simple plagiarisms. There is not one single aria, waltz movement, polka, gallop or march in those operas that has touched the public ear, and the street pianos and organs have ignored them—the best evidence that the people do not find them palatable. The whole Sousa repertory is alive and pulsating; the whole Herbert repertory is stone dead, and London merely acted on rhythmic impulse when it rejected this agglomeration of puerile piracies and refused to countenance them.

THE PITTSBURG TROUBLES.

But what has all this to do with Pittsburg? We refer our readers to an article on another page giving some curious conditions revolving about the orchestra and Victor Herbert.

From the very outset it could not be understood by equipoised minds how a writer of comic operas (and American comic operas at that), and a conductor of brass bands accustomed to parade at the head of militia and processions, could possibly be the director of a symphony orchestra. The greatest of the composers of classic comic operas—Offenbach, Lecocq and Von Suppe—could not have been suggested by the wildest fancy as directors of symphony concerts for the simple reason that the genre is not only distinct but separate, and that the artistic impulse that drives a man to write "La Grande "Duchesse" or "La Fille de Mme. Angot" drives him out of the atmosphere of classical music.

Everything written by Herbert is copied; there is not one original strain in anything he has done, and all his copies are from sources that are comic or serio-comic. He became popular suddenly by attaining command of a brass band and joining a rollicking club of actors and Bohemians known as the Lambs, who, removed entirely from any musical comprehension, accepted the good natured band leader as their musical dictator, and American fashion immediately paralleled him with serious minded composers. It was never a serious matter in itself.

How Pittsburg intelligence could ever select this clever bandmaster as its symphony director passes comprehension, unless indeed the people there never really appreciated the true significance of the artistic movement a permanent symphony orchestra represents. Geo. H. Wilson could never have had any real sympathy for the Herbert craze, for he is too deeply versed in the theory of the symphony and its application as a means of public culture to have sincerely adhered to the claim that Herbert could possibly be a permanent success as such a director. Possibly Mr. Wilson's candor finally erupted, and as a result the change is announced to which the article we reprint elsewhere refers.

Custom is the forerunner of law, and in the particular field of symphony custom has placed at its interpretative head such musicians only as are closely identified with the pursuit of classical music. The Leipsic Gewandhaus had Reinecke recently, who was succeeded by Nikisch; the successor to the Berlin Philharmonic to Bülow was Nikisch. Seidl succeeded Thomas here, and Paur, of the Boston Symphony, succeeded Seidl. The great symphony conductors are not drafted from the ranks of the composers of the shoddy American farce operas, alias leg shows, nor are they taken from the leaders of the parading military bands who are specialists, and who develop in that direction solely. If Mr. Herbert were a symphony conductor he could not write the music for these American farce operas. It would be impossible; his mind would rebel, and his musical constitution would protest, but as he is not per se a symphony conductor, he amiably drops into the condition best fitted for his mind and his æsthetics, and hence he writes "Fortune Tellers," "Wizards of the Nile," "The Idol's Eyes," &c., and this is the reason why he and Geo. H. Wilson could not very well remain permanently adjusted. The dislocation was bound to come.

SALZBURG, the birthplace of Mozart, will be the scene of a festival on August 6, 7 and 8. Three concerts will be given in the Aula Academica, two of them orchestral, as well as two performances of "Don Juan" at the City Theatre. The concert program comprises Mozart's Overture to "The Magic Flute," Adagio and Fugue for string orchestra, "Jupiter" Symphony, wind quintet, Violin Concerto in A major (A. Petschnikow), Air of Sextus, from "Titus" (Edith Walker); concert air (Erika Wedekind); Beethoven, Eighth Symphony; Piano Concerto in E flat Major (E. Sauer), and Wagner's "Tannhäuser" Overture.

THE TEMPERAMENT OF ISOLDE.

(Concluded.)

MRS. FRIDOLIN and her party went to Sammett's for dinner that evening. This garden, once Angermann's, and made famous by Wagner, is still a magnet. The Americans listened calmly to furious disputes in a half dozen tongues over the performance; to the crashing of dishes and the huddling of glasses always full, always empty. Arthmann ordered the entire menu, knowing well that it would reach them after much delay in the inevitable guise of veal and potatoes. The women were in no hurry, but the sculptor was. He drummed on the table, he made angry faces at his neighbors—contented looking Germans who whistled themes from "Rhinegold"—and when Herr Sammett saluted his guests with a crazy trombone and crazier perversion of the Donner motive, Arthmann jumped up and excused himself. The two hours and a half in the theatre had made him nervous, restless, and he went away saying that he would be back presently. Mrs. Fridolin was annoyed. It did not seem proper for three ladies to remain unaccompanied in a public garden, even if that garden were in Bayreuth. Suppose some of her New York friends should happen by! * * * "I wonder where he has gone? I don't admire your new friend, Margaret. He seems very careless," she grumbled.

"Wenceslaus!"—Mrs. Fridolin looked narrowly at her daughter—"Mr. Arthmann, then, will be back soon. Like all sculptors he hates to be cooped up long." "I guess he's gone to get a drink at the bar," suggested the practical Miss Bredd. "How did you like my Fricka—oh! here's Mr. Dennett—Caspar, Caspar, come over here, here!" The big girl stood up in elephantine eagerness, and a jaunty, handsome young man, with a shaven face and an important chin, slowly made his way through the press of people to the Fridolin table. It was Caspar Dennett, the conductor. Miss Bredd almost put him out of countenance with her shrewd eyes, those poetic eyes that a Western admirer in a moment of pique had compared to rare poached eggs. After a formal presentation to the tall, thin Mrs. Fridolin, the young American musician settled himself for a talk, and began by asking how they liked his conducting. He had been praised by the Prince Imperial himself, praise sufficient for any self-doubting soul. Thank heaven, he had no doubt of his vocation! It was Miss Bredd who answered him:

"I enjoyed your conducting immensely, Mr. Dennett, simply because I couldn't see you work those long arms of yours. * * * I wrote lots about you when you visited the West with your band. I never cared for your Wagner readings." He stared at her reproachfully and she stared in return. Then he murmured, "I'm really very sorry I didn't please you, Miss Bredd. I didn't know that you were a newspaper woman——" "Journalist, if you please!" "I beg your pardon, journalist. I'm so sorry that Mrs. Dennett is visiting relations in England. She would have been delighted to call on you"—Miss Bredd's expression became disagreeable—"and now Mrs. Fridolin, what do you think of your daughter, your daughter Fricka Fridolina, as we call her? Won't she be a superb Isolde some day?" "I hope not, Mr. Dennett," austerely replied the mother. Margaret grasped his hands gratefully, crying aloud: "You dear! Isn't he a dear, mamma? Only think of your daughter as Isolde. Ah! there comes the deserter. You thoughtless man!"

The sculptor bowed stiffly when presented, and the two men sat on either side of Miss Fridolin far away from each other.

"Mr. Arthmann," fluted the singer—she was all dignity now—"Mr. Dennett thinks I'm quite ready for Isolde." "You said that to me this afternoon," he answered in a rude manner. The conductor glanced at him and then at Margaret. She was blushing. "What I meant," said Dennett, quickly turning the stream his way, "what I meant was that Miss Fridolina knows the score and being temperamentally suited to the role——" "Temperamentally," sneered Arthmann. "Yes, that's what I said," snapped the other man, who had become surprisingly pugnacious—Fridolina was pressing his foot with unbearably heavy approval—"temperamentally." "You know, Caspar"—the brows of the mother and sculptor were thunderous—"you know that Mr. Arthmann is a very clever sculptor—no, I won't touch beer; it's too fattening; just a little Moselle and seltzer, please—and is a great reader of faces and character. Now he says what do you think?—that I have no dramatic talent, no temperament, and ought to——" "Get married," boomed in Arthmann with his most Norwegian accent. The bomb exploded. "I'd rather see her"——"In her grave, Mrs. Fridolin?"——"Oh, you wicked, sarcastic Louie Bredd. No, not in her grave, but even as Isolde. Yes, I admit that I am converted to Wagnerism. Wagner's music is better for some singers than marriage. Prima donnas have no business to be married. If their husbands are not wholly worthless—and there are few exceptions—they are apt to be ninnies and spongers on their wives' salaries." Then she related the story of Wilski, who was a Miss Willies from Rochester. She married a novelist, a young man with the brightest possible prospects imaginable. What happened? He never wrote a story after his marriage in which he didn't make his wife the heroine, so much so that all the magazine editors and publishers refused his stuff, sending it back with the polite comment, "Too much Wilski!"

"That's nothing," interrupted Miss Louie. "She ought to have been happy with such a worshipping husband. I know of a great singer, the greatest singer alive—Frutto"—they all groaned—"the greatest I say. Well, she married a lazy French count. Not once but a hundred times she has returned home after a concert only to find her husband playing cards with her maid. She raised a row, but what was the use? She told me that she'd rather have him at home with the servant playing poker than in a gambling den. I've written the thing for my paper and I mean to turn it into a short story some day." Everyone had tales to relate of the meanness, rapacity, dissipation and extravagance of the prima donna's husband from Adelina Patti to Mitwindt, the German singer who regularly committed her husband to jail at the beginning of her season, only releasing him when September came, for then her money was earned, saved and banked.

"But what has this to do with me?" peevishly asked Fridolina, who was tired and sleepy. "If ever I marry it must be a man who will let me sing Isolde. Most foreign husbands hide their wives away like a dog a bone"—she beamed on Wenceslaus. "Then you will never marry a foreign husband," returned the sculptor, irritably.

IV.

"You must know, Mr. Arthmann, that my girl is a spoilt child, as innocent as a baby, and has everything to learn about the ways of the world. Remember, too, that I first posed her voice, taught her all she knew of her art before she went to Parchesi. What you ask—taking into consideration that we, that I, hardly know you—is rather premature, is it not?" They were walking in the cool morning down the green alleys of the Hofgarten, where the sculptor had asked Mrs. Fridolin for her daughter. He was mortified as he pushed his crisp beard from side to side. He felt that he had been far from proposing marriage to this large young woman's mother; something must have driven him to such a crazy action. Was it Caspar Dennett and his classic profile that had angered him into the confession? Nonsense! The conductor was a married man with a family. Despite her easy, unaffected manner Margaret Fridolin was no fool; she ever observed the ultimate proprieties, and being dangerously unromantic would be the last woman in the world to throw herself away. But this foolish mania about Isolde. What of that? It was absurd to consider such a thing. * * * Her mother would never tolerate the attempt—— * * *

"Don't you think my judgment in this matter is just, Mr. Arthmann?" Mrs. Fridolin was blandly observing him. He asked her pardon for his inattention; he had been dreaming of a possible happiness! She was very amiable. "And you know, of course, that Margaret has prospects"—he did not, and was all ears—"if she will only leave the operatic stage. Her career will be a brilliant one despite her figure, Mr. Arthmann; but there is a more brilliant social career awaiting her if she follows her uncle's advice and marries. My brother is a rich man, and my daughter may be his heiress. Never as a singer—Job is prejudiced against the stage—and never if she marries a foreigner." "But I shall become a citizen of the United States, Madame." "Where were you born?" "Bergen; my mother was from Warsaw," he moodily replied. "It might as well be Asia Minor. We are a stubborn family, sir, from the hills of New Hampshire. We never give in. Come, let us go back to the Hotel Sonne, and do you forget this foolish dream. Margaret may never leave the stage; but I'm certain that she will never marry you." She smiled at him, the thousand little wrinkles in her face making a sort of reticulated map from which stared two large, blue eyes—Margaret's eyes, grown wiser and colder. * * *

Now after that news I'll marry her if I have to run away with her, resolved the sculptor when he reached his bleak claustral atelier and studied the model of her head. And how to keep that man Dennett from spoiling the broth, he wondered. * * *

In the afternoon Arthmann wrote Margaret a letter. "Margaret, my darling Margaret, what is the matter? Have I offended you by asking your mother for you? Why did you not see me this morning? The atelier is wintry without you—the cold clay, corpse-like, is waiting to revive in your presence. O! how lovely is the garden, how sad my soul. I sit and think of Verlaine's 'It rains in my heart as it rains in the town.' Why won't you see me? You are mine—you swore it. My sweet girl, whose heart is as fragrant as new mown hay"—the artist pondered well this comparison before he put it on paper; it evoked visions of hay bales. "Darling, you must see me to-morrow. To the studio you must come. You know that we have planned to go to America in October. Only think, sweetheart, what joy then! The sky is aflame with love. We walk slowly under the few soft, autumn, prairie stars; your hand is in mine, we are married! You see I am a poet for your sake. I beg for a reply hot from your heart. WENCESLAUS." * * *

He despatched this declaration, containing several minor inaccuracies. It was late when he received a reply. "All right, Wenceslaus. But have I now the temperament to sing Isolde?" It was unsigned.

Arthmann cursed in a tongue that sounded singularly like pure English.

V.

That night, much against his desire, he dressed and went to a reception at the Villa Wahnfried. As this worker in silent clay disliked musical people, the buzz and fuss made him miserable. He did not meet Fridolina, although he saw Miss Bredd arm in arm with Cosima, Queen Regent of Bayreuth. The American girl was eloquently exposing her theories of how Wagner should be sung, and Arthmann, disgusted at not finding what he went forth to seek, moved away. He only remembered Caspar Dennett when in the street. That gentleman was not present either; and as the unhappy lover walked down the moonlit Lisztstrasse he fancied he recognized the couple he sought. Could it be! He rushed after the pair, to be mocked by the slamming of a gate, he knew not on what lonely street. * * *

The next afternoon the duel began. Fridolina did not return for a sitting as he had hoped; instead came an invitation for a drive to the Hermitage. It was Mrs. Fridolin who sent it. Strange! Arthmann was surprised at this renewal of friendly ties after his gentle dismissal in the Hofgarten. But he dressed in his most effective clothes and, shining with hope, reached the Hotel Sonne; two open carriages stood before its arched doorway. Presently the others came downstairs and the day became gray for the sculptor. Caspar Dennett, looking like a trim Antinous with a fashionable tailor, smiled upon all, especially upon Miss Bredd. Mrs. Fridolin, alone, did not seem at ease. She was very friendly with Arthmann, but would not allow him in her carriage. "No," she protested, "you two men must keep Margaret company. I'll ride with my bright little Louie and listen to her anti-Wagner blasphemies." She spoke as if she had fought under the Wagner banner from the beginning.

Margaret sat alone on the back seat. Although she grimaced at her mother's suggestion, she was in high spirits, exploding over every trivial incident of the journey. Arthmann as he faced her told himself that he had never seen her so giggling and commonplace, so unlike an artist, so bourgeois, so fat. He noticed, too, that her lovely eyes expanded with the same expression, whether art or eating were mentioned. He hardly uttered a word, for the others discussed "Tristan and Isolde" until he hated Wagner's name. She was through with her work at Bayreuth, and Frau Cosima had promised her Isolde—positively. She meant to undergo a severe Kur at Marienbad and then return to the United States. Mr. Grau had also promised her Isolde; while Jean de Reszké—dear, wonderful Jean vowed that he would sing Tristan to no other Isolde during his American tournée! So it was settled. All she needed was her mother's consent—and that would not be a difficult matter to compass. Had she not always wheedled the mater into her schemes, even when Uncle Job opposed her? She would never marry, never—anyhow not until she had sung Isolde—and then only a Wagner-loving husband.

"And the temperament, the missing link—how about that?" asked Arthmann sourly; he imagined that Dennett was exchanging secret signals with her. She bubbled over with wrath. "Temperament! I have temperament enough despite my size. If I haven't any I know where to find it. There is no sacrifice I'd not make to get it. Art for art is my theory. First art and then—the other things." She shrugged her massive shoulders in high bad humor. Arthmann gloomily reflected that Dennett's phrases at the Sammett Garden were being echoed. Mrs. Fridolin continually urged her driver to keep his carriage abreast with the other. It made the party more sociable, she declared, although to the sculptor it seemed as if she wished to watch Margaret closely. She had never seemed so suspicious. They reached the Hermitage.

Going home a fine rain set in; the hoods of the carriage were raised, and the excursion ended flatly. At the hotel Arthmann did not attempt to go in. Mrs. Fridolin said she had a headache, Miss Bredd must write articles about Villa Wahnfried, while Dennett disappeared with Margaret. The drizzle turned into a downpour, and the artist, savage with the world and himself, sought a neighboring café and drank till dawn. * * *

He called at the hotel the following afternoon. The ladies had gone away. How gone away! The portier could not tell. Enraged as he saw his rich dream vanishing, Arthmann moved about the streets with lagging, desperate steps. He returned to the hotel several times during the afternoon—at no time was he very far from it—but the window blinds were always drawn in the Fridolin apartment and he began to despair. It was near sunset when his Haustrau—the disappearing chaperon—ran to him red faced. A letter for Herr Arthmann! It was from her. "I've gone in search of that temperament. Auf Wiedersehen. ISOLDE." Nothing more. In puzzled fury, he went back to the hotel. Yes, Madame Fridolin and the young lady were now at home. He went to the second landing and without knocking pushed open the door. It was a house storm riven. Trunks bulged, though only half packed, their contents straggling over the sides. The beds were not made, and a strong odor of valerian and camphor flooded the air. On a couch lay Mrs. Fridolin, her face covered with a handkerchief, while near hovered Miss Bredd in her most brilliant and oracular attitude. She was speaking too loudly as he entered: "There is no use of worrying yourself sick about Meg, Mrs. Fridolin. She's gone for a time—that's all. When she finds out what an idiotically useless sacrifice she has made for art and is a failure as Isolde—she can no more sing the part than a sick cat—she will run home to her mammy quick enough."

"Oh, this terrible artistic temperament!" groaned the mother, apologetically. The girl made a cautious movement and waved him out of the room. Into the hall she followed soft footed, but resolute. He was gaunt with chagrin. "Where is she?" he began, but was sternly checked:

"If you'd only flattered her more and had sense enough to marry her before her mother arrived this thing wouldn't have happened." "What thing?" he thundered.

"There! don't be an ox and make a stupid noise," she admonished. "Why, Meg—she is so dead set on getting that artistic temperament, that artistic thrill you raved about, that she has eloped." "Eloped!" he feebly repeated, and sat down on a trunk in the hallway. To her keen, unbiased vision Arthmann seemed more shocked than sorrowful. Then, returning to Isolde's mother, she was not surprised to find her up and in capital humor, studying the railway guide.

"He believes it—just as the other one did!" she exclaimed, triumphantly; and for the first time that day Mrs. Fridolin smiled.

Miss Henriette Weber, the pianist, teacher and "coach," is spending the month of July at Narragansett Pier.

EUROPEAN NOTES.

Anton Bruckner's "Ninth Symphony," dedicated to "Dear God," will be performed in the coming winter at Munich In place of the final movement, which is wanting, his "Te Deum" in C will be given.

At the celebration of the fifty years' jubilee of the Stern Conservatory, Berlin, the first distribution of the Gustav Hollaender medals took place to the best pupils. Among the recipients were Stella Newmark, in the piano class, and Max Donner, of the violin class, both of New York.

The Perosi Society, formed in Milan for the purpose of producing the works of Abbé Perosi, seems not to be a success. The original capital of the society was 250,000 lire ($50,000), but at the last meeting of the subscribers the balance sheet showed: Receipts, 28,621.18 lire; expenses, 57,428.24 lire; loss, 28,807.16 lire.

The Théâtre de la Monnaie of Brussels has built a bridge of gold for Alice Verlet from the Opéra Comique of Paris to the Belgian metropolis. The lady is a Belgian by birth, young, beautiful, with the soul of a musician who is not content to be a mere vehicle for trills and vocalises, but passionately loves the art in which she will secure a still higher place than that she already has gained.

The Countess Wolkenstein, who as Countess Schleinitz was one of the most energetic supporters of Wagner's views, lately organized a concert in Paris the receipts of which were devoted to enabling young French artists to visit the Bayreuth Festival. The committee comprised a number of ladies of the highest aristocratic circles. The hall, with 300 sittings, at 50 francs each, was sold out. Widor conducted. The program was a Concerto by Bach, for organ and orchestra; Wagner's "Siegfried's Idyl," an Overture by Beethoven and the first act of Gluck's "Alceste."

A late Berlin performance of "Tristan und Isolde" is described by Otto Lessmann as wretched. The orchestra, under R. Strauss, comes in for some praise, but the Tristan of Herr Gruning was simply impossible. His hard, expressionless voice, his ignoble pronunciation of both vowels and consonants, and his utter lack of poetical conception left nothing of Wagner's Tristan. Frl. Reml as Isolde took a deal of praise, but neither vocally nor dramatically was she equal to the part. As for the staging it is needless to write about it. Whatever could be done by bad taste and in contradistinction of all prescription was achieved.

Pears'

Do you know the most luxurious bath in the world?

Have you used Pears' Soap?

Sold all over the world.

Sarah Bernhardt says: "It is simply perfect."

The National Conservatory of Music of America,

128 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

JEANNETTE M. THURBER, PRESIDENT.

Artistic Faculty, consisting of { RAFAEL JOSEFFY, ADELE MARGULIES, LEOPOLD LICHTENBERG, LEO SCHULZ, HENRY T. FINCK, MAX SPICKER, CHARLES HEINROTH AND OTHERS.

SUMMER TERM BEGINS IN MAY.

ADMISSION DAILY. . . . . .

HOW SHALL MUSICAL CLUBS PROMOTE GOOD MUSIC IN AMERICA?

[Paper read by Louise B. Dorr, at the recent convention of musical clubs.]

(Continued.)

We grant that this sort of work requires larger patience and skill than the giving of recitals or the arranging of the ordinary club program, but it is far more worth while.

Another important branch of work for the clubs, I had almost said the most important, is the arousing of interest in the study of music in our public schools. Undoubtedly the musical future of America depends very largely upon the sort of work done in our public schools. A few clubs have already appointed standing committees to thoroughly investigate this subject with a view to the betterment of existing conditions in their vicinity. It is beginning to be understood by the most advanced educators that the proper study of music and the kindred arts makes for good citizenship, and that it pays even in a commercial sense to furnish culture and refinement for the masses. Hence we find an attempt made to teach music in nearly all of our public schools, but how blundering, how unscientific are the methods employed in the majority of schools! Even when a good supervisor of music is appointed, as has fortunately happened us in St. Paul, he or she is expected to make good readers and singers of several thousand children in forty or fifty widely separated schools which said supervisor visits for only half an hour once a week at best!

True each teacher in every school is supposed to be subordinate to the supervisor in carrying out daily his instructions; but the grade teacher, as a rule, knows little or nothing of music. Until music shall be taught thoroughly in our normal schools, and as rigid an examination required of all would-be teachers in this branch as in others. Until supervisors are appointed for known fitness, and until politics and publishing houses have ceased to influence appointing boards, we can hope for little progress in music study in our schools. Let me urge upon clubs the study of this important subject. There are many supervisors and teachers who will be glad of your assistance if you are earnest, honest and intelligent in your desire to help. I recommend to your attention the paper of Sterrie A. Weaver, entitled "Does School Music Pay? If Not, Why Not?" in the Concert Goer of March 2, 1901.

"How can we interest the men of our country in good music and arouse them to a sense of its dignity and importance?" is partly answered when we are told to see to it that they are taught properly when boys in the public schools. But can we not also in our clubs and homes do something helpful along this line for the men and boys who belong to us? Are we earnest in tactfully but strongly combating the still too prevalent notion that music is feminine rather than masculine; that its study is apt to rob boys of their sturdiness and strength of character, and that music should be an accomplishment for our daughters rather than our sons? Mothers, if you cannot afford to give opportunities for music-study to both girls and boys, choose rather the boys, who in this commercial age need most the refining and liberalizing influences of art study. One who believes emphatically in the uplifting and spiritualizing influence of good music upon the character is unspeakably sad when he sees how little interest is shown by men in this subject? Look over the audiences at our best concerts, and even at the opera in the great cities, and you will see ten women to every man. In this as it should be, and are we women not to blame somewhere? I have a doubt as to whether we have sufficiently dignified music in our own minds; whether we do not value it rather for the sensuous pleasure it gives us than because of its moral and spiritual possibilities. True, it speaks to us first through the emotions, but "it is through emotion that the mind or will is prompted, nay, forced into action," says one. Form the heart aright, open the eyes and ears of our senses to the perception of God in all form of beauty and in every work of art, and then shall we reach out to bless others, and our children shall indeed rise up and call us blessed.

I have touched upon only a few of the many ways in which the clubs can further the interests of musical art. Some clubs have found it most desirable to appoint a committee to arrange for providing suitable music at stated intervals at the hospitals and various charitable institutions and organizations of their community. Again clubs have formed and might profitably form everywhere home study circles, or arrange studio talks on many subjects pertaining to music and its advancement. As has already been suggested here clubs might do much to aid young artists and advanced students in obtaining recognition and an intelligent hearing at home and abroad. Then there is the subject of church and Sunday school music and its betterment to be practically considered by the clubs even of our smaller towns. Also the establishment of people's choral classes somewhat after the manner adopted by Frank Damrosch in New York.

Perhaps in the discussion which shall follow this and other papers we shall learn of much good work that has already been done along these and other lines, and we shall gain from the experience of others.

John Church Company's Publications.

THE following are some of the recent dates showing when compositions published by the John Church Company were performed:

O Mistress Mine.....De Koven
Mr. Choveaux (30th).....Kensington
Mme. Marian McKenzie (3d).....Victoria Hall

My Love Nell.....Fox
Edwin Wolseley (3d).....Green Park Club
Gabriel Thorp (4th).....Steinway Hall
Gabriel Thorp (14th).....Steinway Hall
Gabriel Thorp (16th).....Ladbroke Hall
Gabriel Thorp (23d).....Ladbroke Hall
Wallis Wallis (29th).....Acton
Gabriel Thorp (18th).....Lewisham

Tears, Idle Tears.....Sullivan
Charles Phillips (7th).....Reading
Madame Esty (19th).....Brighton
Miss Grainger Kerr (27th).....Bayswater

Swallow, Swallow.....Sullivan
Charles Phillips (7th).....Reading
Madame Esty (19th).....Brighton

April Time.....Cowen
Miss F. Taylor (7th).....Portland Place

Molly's Eyes.....C. B. Hawley
Wilson Bamber (9th).....Bloomsbury Hall
Avon Saxon (10th).....Adelaide Town Hall
Avon Saxon (11th).....Adelaide Town Hall
Avon Saxon (13th).....Adelaide Town Hall
Avon Saxon (14th)..Adelaide Town Hall
Avon Saxon (15th).....Adelaide Town Hall
Avon Saxon (16th).....Adelaide Town Hall
Avon Saxon (17th).....Adelaide Town Hall
Avon Saxon (18th).....Adelaide Town Hall
Avon Saxon (20th).....Adelaide Town Hall
Avon Saxon (21st).....Adelaide Town Hall
Miss A. Burnand (23d).....Regent's Park

El Capitan.....Sousa
The Japs (10th).....Gloucester Gate
The Japs (13th).....Bayswater
The Japs (21st).....City
The Japs (22d).....Ranelagh Club
The Japs (26th).....Kensington
The Japs (29th).....Berkeley Square

In Memoriam.....Lehmann
Whitney Tew (10th).....Steinway Hall

All For You.....D'Hardelot
Miss F. Daly (11th).....Scarborough
Miss P. Allen (23d).....Hampstead Conservatoire
Templar Saxe (30th).....Salle Erard

Love Is a Sickness.....H. Parker
Miss F. Taylor (14th).....Guildford
Miss Monica Stowe (14th).....Wimbledon

Where the Bee Sucks.....De Koven
Madame Esty (19th).....Brighton

My Redeemer.....Dudley Buck
Miss M. Stowe (23d).....Wandsworth

Rainy Day.....Blumenthal
Madame McKenzie (21st).....Harley Street

Hands Across the Sea.....Sousa
Combined orchestra of Queen's Hall Strolling Players and Band of Grenadier Guards in aid of Soldiers' and Sailors' Association (21st).

I Only Can Love..... ——
Miss Ada Burnand (23d).....Regent's Park

Zeldenrust.

EACH foreign artist who comes to America for the first time, must naturally be judged by the Old World reports that precede him, until the New World has opportunity to form its own estimate after his arrival. It is well known that the critics of the important European musical centres are both able and severe; their acumen is large, open and their judgment sane. When, therefore, they are unanimous and enthusiastic in their praise of an artist it is reasonably safe to conclude he is worthy. Such are the reports that are arriving about Eduard Zeldenrust, the celebrated Dutch pianist. Here is a sample:

"Zeldenrust played with authority; the beauty and power of his tone, the variety of his touch and the deep and profound sentiment so clearly expressed stamped him to be not only a marvelous pianist, but an artist in the true sense of the word. He made a tremendous impression, and his success was most conspicuous."—Brussels Correspondence of the Paris Figaro, April, 1901.

MUSIC

Our stock includes the musical publications of all publishers. The latest popular hit, imported novelties, opera and orchestra scores. Music for every occasion and music for all instruments. Our own publications sent for examination. A Catalogs free. Send for MUSIC by MAIL circular, giving special mail order prices on music.

Oliver Ditson Company, Boston
C. H. Ditson & Co. New York
J. E. Ditson & Co. Philadelphia

A249

The "KINDER" Adjustable Foot Rest,

attached to a Piano Stool, rests the child's feet, braces the body, strengthens the arms, gives firmness to the touch. All first class piano houses, or

W. MARKS,
568 Jefferson Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

WITHOUT. WITH.

JOS. S. BAERNSTEIN
BASSO

51 EAST 64TH STREET,
NEW YORK CITY.

BAILEY

THIS IS TO { MUSICAL CLUBS / MUSICAL SOCIETIES / MUSICAL MANAGERS } and Speculators in Musical Attractions.

If you want to please your people, fill your houses and make money, then engage ARTISTS THAT DRAW—artists that the public REALLY want to hear.

Young WM. WORTH BAILEY,

the Blind Violinist, is TRULY a GREAT artist.

ELIZABETH NORTHROP, Soprano
EDWIN M. SHONERT, Pianist } Assisting Artists.

A Season of 50 Concerts is being arranged by

R. E. JOHNSTON,

SUMMER ADDRESS, 257 West 92d Street, New York City,

Whom you should write for particulars. NOTE—Send for Booklet and Souvenir.

EVERETT PIANO USED EXCLUSIVELY.

GERARDY IN AUSTRALIA.

ON Thursday evening, May 30, Jean Gerardy, the celebrated 'cellist, made his first appearance in Australia at Melbourne, and was most enthusiastically greeted by the critics, as well as by a big audience in the Town Hall. His success was so pronounced that his first appearance was immediately followed by six recitals, which were given on the afternoons of June 1, 12 and 15 and on the evenings of June 4, 6 and 8. In a letter just received he says: "My first concert was a great success, in the face of unusually unfavorable conditions. The city has been surfeited with musical attractions, yet we are doing an excellent business. From here we shall go to Adelaide for five concerts; thence to Sydney for six concerts. After our concerts in Sydney I am booked to play in New Zealand, sailing from there about the middle of August, and going direct to Honolulu, where I am sold for three concerts, and shall thence proceed to San Francisco."

The following are excerpts from his Australian criticisms:

The last tone of the song of a very great charmer has no sooner died away when we fall under the spell of another great artist of the very first rank, Jean Gerardy, who completely fascinated a very large audience in the Town Hall last evening. He not only showed himself the absolute master of his instrument, but impressed at once his hearers with the extreme refinement of his musicianship. The most delicate sensitiveness pervades his playing, and his tone is always pure, noble and flawless. Melbourne Herald.

Before M. Gerardy had been playing a minute to the large audience which welcomed him in the Town Hall last night it was evident to everyone that a supreme artist was being heard. Anything nearer perfection in instrumental music can hardly be met with anywhere. M. Gerardy is not only a peerless executant on the 'cello, he is also a musician gifted with the keenest poetic insight and the faultless taste which is a constant element in the quality of genius. To enlarge on M. Gerardy's technical command of bow and finger, double-stopping, harmonics and so on, would be merely to catalogue every device of which the 'cello is capable, and declaring emphatically that this player can do them all with a masterful ease and unfailing dexterity. The quality of tone produced is truly nothing less than marvelous. On the C string, for instance, the volume of sound is often as rich and sonorous as the bourdon on an organ, while, with an almost incredibly long drawn bow, a delicate film, the merest thread of sound is prolonged with an unsurpassable delicacy and purity of effect. Melbourne Argus.

Gerardy can truly claim that he has taken Melbourne by storm. He has come, has played, has conquered. A tone full, rich and resonant, an intonation faultless almost to a hair's breadth, a broad and dignified phrasing and an execution that laughs at difficulties; these are the qualifications that have raised Jean Gerardy to the top of the artistic tree at the age of twenty-three. With such an exponent of the 'cello available, there is no need to inquire on whose shoulders the mantle of Piatti may worthily fall.—Melbourne Age.

THE MAGIC FLUTE'S LIBRETTIST.

THE author of the text of Mozart's "The Magic Flute" is not a person to be remembered with affection by operagoers, who have struggled in vain to discover what his opera meant, and what its all mysterious characters were supposed to be doing from the time the snake chases the tenor until the two lovers come with success through their trials by fire and water. The text to this opera has been studied patiently by German pedants and casual hearers of the work and the sum of knowledge has not in either case been materially increased.

Emanuel Schikaneder's memory survives alone through this puzzling monument, and when the third half centenary of his birth was celebrated the other day in Vienna the event recalled many interesting incidents in his life. By a singular coincidence the historic Theatre an der Wien met bankruptcy just at the time of Schikaneder's anniversary. He built the theatre from the fortune made out of the Mozart work in 1801, and he died twelve years later in Vienna. His name might have fallen into oblivion but for his association with the great composer, although he was at one time a figure greatly regarded in the life of Vienna opera.

He was born at Regensburg and became an actor early in life. When he became the director of the theatre at Salzburg he made the acquaintance of Mozart, and at that time he was able to get a number of compositions from the young musician, probably with as little profit to Mozart as their later collaboration produced.

Among these was a comic opera, "Der Zaide," which Mozart wrote for Schikaneder's own troupe. Both were Freemasons belonging to the same lodge in Vienna, and the manager was on the verge of bankruptcy when he came to the composer begging that he write the music for a fairy "singspiel" that Schikaneder had written. The composer consented, making only the condition that he should have the profit from the sale of the score and text and disclaiming any responsibility for the failure of the book on the ground that he had never composed a fairy opera. Schikaneder in his eagerness promised everything that Mozart asked without keeping his word in anything. He enjoyed all the profits that came from the great success of the work.

To hurry its completion as much as possible, he fitted up a pavilion in his garden that the two might work together, and the merry life they led at that time has always been thought to have had its effect in causing the death of the composer. He fainted first while completing the score, and he died sixty-six days after the first performance, which he conducted. The librettist was the Papageno. The first act was not received with favor at the initial hearing, and Schikaneder had to encorage the already disheartened Mozart. But the success of the work increased steadily during the second act.

It was on March 7, 1791, that the actor went to his brother Mason for the music to a fairy opera. He was anxious for this work to save him from bankruptcy, because a year before he had been prosperous with a fairy opera called "Oberon, the King of the Elfs," drawn by Ludwig Giesecke from a work of Wieland's and set to music by Wranitzky. It is this circumstance that has led to the charge recently made in Germany that Schikaneder did not prepare the text to Mozart's opera, such as it is. Another impresario had the impertinence to produce a fairy opera also drawn from Wieland's same poem, using parts that Giesecke had neglected.

This was called "Kasper the Flutist, or the Magic Zither." Schikaneder could not permit this, and it is charged that he had Giesecke, who had shown his skill in the previous work for the actor, prepare a second fairy opera for him which was called "The Magic Flute." He introduced the characters of Papageno and Papagena, and used some other verse in parts of the work; but the allegation is that in its entirety the opera was given to Mozart just as Giesecke had handed it to the actor and manager.

The two characters mentioned might from their disconnected share in the action of the work have been introduced in just this way. Giesecke was the translator of a work on Egyptian monuments, and may have been inspired to his opera by that labor. He never put forward his claim to the authorship of the Mozart libretto, his friends say, because he feared the persecutions of the Freemasons. He is said to have left Vienna because of this fear, although it seems more probable that he may have been ashamed to let it be known that he wrote the text and left his home because he was fearful that it would become known in the community. This is not the view taken in Germany, however. It is contended that Mozart could never have been inspired to the music he composed by the text of the work, if it had been no more than a spectacle to delight the galleries, and that he saw in the text an opportunity to keep before the eyes of the people the mysteries and beauties of Freemasonry, which was at that time under a ban in Austria. Else, ask some of the commentators, how could Goethe have been inspired to say that he would love to write a poem that continued the story? Would he have been inspired by a meaningless and childish series of scenes set to music? It is the scenes between Papageno and Papagena that are a deference to the public taste of that time. But to the initiated all the beauty and symbolism of an antique mystery is in the scenes so meaningless to the eyes of the faithless.

Schikaneder was for ten years director of the Theatre an der Wien, and left behind him a record for industry and enterprise. He wrote one fairy opera in four acts and had the music for every act composed by a different musician. He mounted these works frequently, but always with scenic beauty and elegance remarkable for the time. He published his dramatic writings in two volumes in 1792 and added much to them before he died. When his theatre, which for a century had held its own in Vienna, and had housed all the productions of Strauss, Milloecker and Suppe, was compelled to close, it was said that more impresarios like Schikaneder to-day would prevent the decay of such famous theatres. But that sort of thing is aways said about the old fellows, and about none so frequently as about the people of the theatre. And it must not be forgotten that the young men can nearly live long enough to say it wisely themselves.—New York Sun.

Slivinski Coming.

ARRANGEMENTS have been completed to bring to this country Slivinski, the Polish pianist, for a season of fifty concerts, beginning the middle of November.

Slivinski stands among the world's great pianists. Although comparatively a young man, he is conceded by eminent European critics to be a brilliant interpreter of Rubinstein, Liszt and Schumann. Slivinski possesses that style and finesse that are always greatly admired by the American public. The tour is under the management of R. E. Johnston.

William Worth Bailey.

WM. WORTH BAILEY, the blind violinist, who is to tour this country during the coming season, is now receiving the finishing touches in Brussels. He will return to his native country early in November, beginning his tour on arrival. Much interest is taken in the career of this young genius, who, although totally blind, plays the violin like one of the greatest masters.

Young Bailey will be supported by Elizabeth Northrop, soprano, and Edwin M. Shonert, pianist. The tour is under the management of R. E. Johnston.

PARIS SYMPHONY CONCERTS.—The five grand concerts symphoniques, which were given in Paris this spring at the Vaudeville Theatre, met with so much success that the scheme is to be renewed next season. They will be given, however, at the Opéra Comique, the contract having been signed June 27 between Carré, director of the Opéra Comique, and Schiller. These concerts will be given as before, on Thursday afternoons, and each one with a different conductor.

American School of Opera

Berkeley Lyceum
23 West 44th Street

WM. G. STEWART, Director.
LAIRD EASTON, Secretary and Treasurer.

For prospectus and all information apply to Secretary.

MR. WILLIAM G. STEWART, Director American School of Opera, Berkeley Lyceum, New York City: NEW YORK, June 4, 1901.

My Dear Mr. Stewart:—We take this opportunity of complimenting you on the splendid practical results accomplished by your School of Opera during the first year of its existence and gladly bear testimony to its advantages as a training school for those desirous of following a professional career in opera.

We are more than pleased with the graduates of your institution who have become members of the Bostonians and will gladly avail ourselves in the future of the opportunity for engaging singers who have pursued a course of study under your direction. With best wishes always, Yours very sincerely.

W. H. MacDonald

MR. WHITNEY TEW

In America

November and December, 1901

The London Press says of Mr. Tew's singing:

Times—"Mr. Tew displayed a magnificent voice and great dignity of style."

Telegraph—"Mr. Tew possesses a fine voice of cultured style; he is a singer of high quality and a musician of broad sympathies and wide research."

Express—"Revealed the possession of a prodigious memory, a sonorous voice and a wealth of vigor."

Daily News—"Manifestly an experienced vocalist, endowed with a powerful voice of agreeable quality. He is a linguist and his artistic taste and judgment demonstrated by his excellent choice of a program."

Musical Courier (London)—"A hearty, straightforward delivery, which was all the more charming because of his admirable diction and pure intonation."

Lady—"His songs were admirably chosen, and the beautiful quality of his voice and his good method were best shown in Brahms' Liebeslieder."

Sunday Times—"Displayed a resonant low baritone voice and a refined method."

Musical Standard—"Eminently successful as an interpretive artist, for he sang with much feeling and intuition into the dramatic and poetic meaning of his text. His voice is a fine organ."

Musical News—"Mr. Tew has a good bass voice which he uses always with finished art and discretion. That he possesses an extensive repertory culled from the best music written for the bass voice was evidenced."

Morning Post—"Mr. Tew's deep bass voice was well suited to the music of the Landgraf." (National Grand Opera Co., in Tannhauser.)

The Stage—"Mr. Tew gave a strong and impressive embodiment of the Cardinal."

The Era—"Mr. Whitney Tew, the author, gave a strikingly characteristic reading of Richelieu, his acting in the downfall scene being especially impressive and touching."

Field—"That fine bass singer, Mr. Whitney Tew, gave the first of his recitals last week. He possesses a powerful voice of beautiful quality which can stand work. He has both voice and brains."

Anglo-American—"Mr. Tew's fine voice was in the best of form. He is to be commended for his persistent fidelity to a really superior class of music."

Sole Representative:

Henry Wolfsohn

131 East 17th Street
NEW YORK

MEDDLING WITH BEETHOVEN.

ERNEST NEWMAN has contributed an interesting article to the current number of the Contemporary Review, in the course of which he says: "Think, for example, what a modern could do with the slow movement of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony—how he could brighten up many bald patches," &c. This aroused the wrath of the Manchester Guardian, which devoted a leading article to the subject, which we here quote:

In the current Contemporary Review the following astounding words occur in the course of an article purporting to be serious musical criticism: "Think, for example, what a modern could do with the slow movement of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony—how he could brighten up the many bald patches," &c. We have here a perfectly typical example of those things which make our notions of things musical a byword among the nations. The sentence has all the air of having been invented by a satirist to suggest the depths to which musical opinion may descend. Why else was Beethoven chosen among all possible composers? And why one of the Nine Symphonies, and why the Seventh in particular, and why the slow movement of the Seventh? Everyone knows that Beethoven was the greatest of composers, and that his nine symphonies are the greatest, most perfect, and most imperishable part of his legacy to mankind. No. 7 of the nine is by common consent the most exquisite in symmetry, and also the most brilliant and animated, of all the composer's works, though not the most profound in poetic import. Again, by common consent, the Allegretto of that No. 7 is the most wonderful of all slow movements, the unearthly beauty of it appealing to everyone who is at all musical (and thus to thousands who cannot appreciate the typical Beethoven Adagio, owing to the absence of rhythmical interest), while the simplicity of its orchestral technic affords the best possible reminder of the fact that great music never depends for its eloquence on tricky instrumentation. One feels in such a case that the British musical world really has something of a grievance. Why does one of the best of reviews publish such a piece of ineptitude on a musical subject? It certainly would not on any other. Let someone write an article suggesting that Bernard Shaw should brighten up Shakespeare's "As You Like It," Gabriele d'Annunzio rewrite the "Divine Comedy," or a young man from the Birmingham School of Art rearrange the color scheme in Velasquez's portrait of Innocent X.—let some paradox monger try that on the Contemporary Review. It would be less absurd—a less unheard of rushing in where angels fear to tread—than this proposal about Beethoven's Seventh Symphony. Yet it certainly would not be offered to readers as serious criticism. It is time for British editors to learn in regard to musical affairs some better principle than that old which has too long characterized us.

> Strange that such difference should be
> 'Twixt Tweedledum and Tweedledee,

The remark about the Allegretto of the great Symphony in A major is supposed to be made in the interests of Tschaikowsky, the rich coloring of whose orchestration is contrasted with the "bald patches" of Beethoven. It is therefore instructive to place the distinguished Russian master's own opinion of the movement in question side by side with the reviewer's. Between the years 1872 and 1876 Tschaikowsky acted as occasional music critic for two Moscow journals. Some of his articles are reproduced in Mrs. Newmarch's book, "Tschaikowsky's Life and Works," whence we take the following passages:

"There exist some rare compositions which possess the power of pleasing alike the educated and uneducated public. Their beauty is immutable; the oftener we hear them the more we love them. Their power and originality are such that it is impossible to analyze them. To this class of music belongs the Allegretto of the Seventh Symphony, which for over sixty years has been a fertile source of delight to the whole civilized world. The first and last movements of this wonderful work, which shine with the same radiance as when they astonished all Europe in 1812, are not inferior to the Allegretto; but the latter, I repeat, has the privilege of popularity, thanks partly to its fascinating melody and partly to material beauty of sound—its admirable instrumentation."

Of the same movement Tschaikowsky elsewhere writes: "If we, after all these years, are still astonished by the novelty and freshness, the power shown both in the design and execution of this marvelous work, what must our forefathers have felt when Beethoven, by the magic power of his genius, first raised the curtain which hid this ideal world of eternal beauty and harmony from human eyes?"

To this Mr. Newman replied: Sir, will you be kind enough to allow me a little space in which to reply to the critic who in your to-day's issue waxes indignant over a passage from an article of mine on Tschaikowsky in this month's Contemporary? The Guardian leaders are usually such models of fairness and sanity that I confess it is a staggerer to come across one like this. Your critic quotes the following passage from my article: "Think, for example, what a modern could do with the slow movement of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony—how he could brighten up the many bald patches," &c.; and he proceeds to denounce me for what he thinks my poor opinion of Beethoven. He tells us that all the world agrees that Beethoven is the greatest of all composers, that his symphonies are his greatest works, and that the Seventh is one of the greatest of the symphonies. I have no complaint to make against your critic for holding these opinions. What I do complain about is his attempt to make your readers think that my own opinion of Beethoven is a poor one. As a matter of fact, he knows nothing whatever of my views on this matter. But if his anger is aroused at anyone daring to suggest that Beethoven's orchestration might be improved, I would venture to remind him that more than one modern critic has thrown out such suggestions. What of the reviewer himself, however? He speaks of "thousands who cannot appreciate the typical Beethoven Adagio, owing to the absence of rhythmical interest." Well, if one man finds Beethoven's rhythm a trifle primitive here and there, surely it is not such a great crime to suggest that his orchestration also at times may not satisfy a modern ear. But this is not the cream of the joke. In view of all your critic's indignation over the proposal that some modern composer should brighten up the bald patches in the color of the Seventh Symphony, it seems unkind of me to point out that my Contemporary article does not contain a word about the orchestration of that work! I have not mentioned Beethoven's instrumentation in comparison with Tschaikowsky's. I was not discussing scoring, but the power of varying a theme; and I tried to show how superior the modern music is to the ancient in this respect. This is apparent from the sentence following that quoted by your critic: "If Tschaikowsky, say, or Richard Strauss, had had the varying of that theme, what would they not have done with it! For * * * the modern musician has immensely extended the range of music through his ability to vary a simple phrase," &c. There was thus no question at all of depreciating Beethoven's orchestration; and the frenzied onslaught of your critic, his moral indignation, and his crushing quotation from Tschaikowsky himself are all in vain (?). Yet this is the gentleman who strives to fasten on me a charge of ineptitude, and recommends the editor of the Contemporary to be careful in his choice of musical writers!

[It is useful for Mr. Newman now to say—"He (the writer of the article in our Wednesday's issue) knows nothing whatever of my views on this matter" (that is, on Beethoven). We did not profess to know any more of Mr. Newman's opinion than we quoted from the Contemporary Review. It is too late for Mr. Newman, just after expressing a very peculiar opinion, to say that we know nothing of his opinion. Whether when making his suggestion about the "brightening up" of Beethoven's "bald patches" he was thinking of instrumentation or of thematic variation makes no difference whatever to the vandalism of the suggestion. He now tells us that he was not thinking of instrumentation at all when he wrote that particular passage. We accept that statement, and now point out that we were misled by the style of his expression "bald patches," which looks as if a reference to instrumentation were intended, and also by a sentence occurring earlier in the Contemporary article: "We may leave it to the academics, who still speak of the scoring of Mozart and Beethoven as models for the student, to hold up their hands in pious horror at the full rich wine of Tschaikowsky's orchestration." There can scarcely be any question as to the meaning of those words. Mr. Newman expresses the view that the scoring of Beethoven is not worth the study of the modern student, and in the same sentence he speaks of the "full rich wine of Tschaikowsky's orchestration." A little later in the same article he sneers at the "bald patches" in Beethoven's famous Allegretto and suggests a "brightening up" by some modern composer. Such tampering with the scores of the great masters has occurred before now. Hence our protest, to which we adhere, whatever particular kind of tampering may have been intended. Mr. Newman now attributes to us a disparaging remark about Beethoven. "If one finds Beethoven's rhythm a trifle primitive here and there," he says, in reference to our remark about the "absence of rhythmical interest" in the typical Beethoven Adagio. We do not, however, find Beethoven's rhythm primitive here or there. On the contrary, we are firmly convinced that Beethoven was by far the greatest master of rhythm that ever existed, as demonstrated in particular by his Seventh Symphony. The absence or reduction to a minimum of rhythmical interest in the Beethoven Adagio belongs essentially to the character of such movements. It is not a defect. Wagner was so much struck by the partial or total elimination of rhythm in such cases that he called rhythm an intruder in the domain of absolute music.]

There was a rejoinder from Mr. Newman and a reply by the Manchester Guardian, but neither letters advanced things. The M. G. writer is amusingly serious in his protest. Evidently all that Mr. Newman meant was to point out the superiority of modern symphonic technic.—Musical Standard.

Wants to Know.

W. SPENCER JONES, of Brockville, Ontario, desires to know the addresses of the secretaries of the following associations:

Handel and Haydn Society, Boston.
Philharmonic Society, Brooklyn.
Festival Committee, Worcester.
Musical Festival Committee, Cincinnati.

Also the leading musical clubs of Cleveland, Detroit, Buffalo, Albany, Baltimore and Philadelphia.

The Philharmonic Society, of Brooklyn, is merged in the Brooklyn Institute, and it can simply be addressed there. The other addresses are: Mr. Bent, in Worcester, and the secretaries of the various committees. The Handel and Haydn Society can be reached care of Symphony Hall, Boston.

SOUSA AND HIS BAND

Office: Astor Court Building, New York.

Eighteenth Semi-Annual and Fifth Transcontinental Tour.

Sunday, July 7, to Monday, September 2, INCLUSIVE,

MANHATTAN BEACH, NEW YORK CITY.

Kindergarten Music Building.

The Original and Standard System of Kindergarten Music.

Kina K. Darlington

1069 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.

Mme. OGDEN CRANE.

The Art of Singing.

Special attention given to tone production. Founded on the pure Italian method. Sole teacher of Hattie Diamond Nathan, Edith Hutchins, Lillian Le Roy, Lillian Spitz and many others.

SUMMER SCHOOL:

Post Office Building, Asbury Park, N. J., From June 24 to September 14.

In New York Studio Thursdays,

3 East 14th Street, Cor. Fifth Avenue, NEW YORK.

HERBERT WITHERSPOON

Opera, Oratorio, Concert, Recitals.

BASS.

For Terms, Dates, &c., address

Residence Studio: 202 West 78th St., New York.

REBECCA MACKENZIE

SOPRANO.

Available for Concert, Oratorio and Song Recitals.

Address FRED O. RENARD, Manager, 444 Central Park West, NEW YORK CITY.

ALICE E. JOSEPH,

Late Private Secretary to Sir Augustus Harris.

THE OPERA AND CONCERT AGENCY,

7a Hanover Street, Regent Street, LONDON, England.

Authorized to represent all the Best Artists in the World!

ADVICE GRATIS.

Elizabeth Hazard

SOPRANO

Drawing Room Concerts
Song Recitals

Direction Emile Levy 141 Fifth Ave.

CHROMATICISM IN HARMONY.

AT the meeting of the Musical Association held in London on June 11 a paper entitled "Chromaticism in Harmony" was read by Herbert Westerby, Mus. B., London, F. R. C. O., L. Mus., T. C. L.

The view put forward by the lecturer was in favor of the systematization of the relations between the chromatic and diatonic elements, and this, he contended, could be conveniently accomplished by taking the principle of chromaticism as a basis. This principle he described as the "temporary inclusion of any foreign element within the prevailing tonality," which element could consist of either detached chords or complete passages—the latter designated as examples of chromatic tonality or chromatic keys—and those most in use were situated on the minor and major sixth, third and second of the key—forming, as it were, two triads of chromatic tonality; others in similar use were the more nearly related keys. The contents of these keys provided, from a composer's point of view, the chromatic chords available and in use at the present day—those from the tonic minor or major were considered as modally related, and the lecturer thought that for purposes of key relationship the two modes should be considered as forming "duality of key or mode."

As to the point where a chromatic chord merged into a foreign tonality, the view taken coincided with that of Riemann, viz., "The accented beats are the bearers of the harmony," and it was suggested that, in order to avoid a change of tonality, the progression should proceed by step and occupy positions of weak rhythmical nature. Confirmation of this was furnished by Professor Niecks, who stated that in a given example "tonal satisfaction" was not obtained till the last chord. By reversing the accents, Mr. Westerby showed how a change of tonality was brought about.

For the above scheme the twelve note so-called chromatic scale was shown to be insufficient, and though the seventeen note scale would temporarily suffice, the complete scale of twenty-one harmonic intervals was advocated for harmonic purposes, while the tempered chromatic scale was for Europeans pre-eminently the melodic formula. The relationship of keys was based, not on mathematical ratio of the tonics, as in the Day system, but on the lesser effect of key disturbance, in which the relative minor of the tonic and the subdominant stood first; the close connection between the respective scales of the same by means of initiative leading notes was also shown. The duality of mode, as represented in the chords of mixed origin, as in the chord of the major ninth and minor thirteenth, provided a simple harmonic explanation of the chords of the augmented sixth, which thus appeared, not, as in most English text books, on the minor sixth of the key, but on the minor sixth of the relative minor (a connection noted before), and coinciding with the ground note as given in Jadassohn, viz., on the subdominant of the major. The augmented sixth then is not evolved from a dual root, but from dual tonality or mode. Some objection might be taken to the upward resolution of the minor thirteenth (compound sixth) as representing the augmented sixth, but examples were given from Jadassohn and elsewhere which justified the assertion that where there was no cadential position the direction of resolution of discordant notes was a matter of indifference so long as it was carried out by step. Where the cadence came in (or the simulation of one) its superior power compelled the orthodox resolution of one of the discordant notes by step, but the other was equally free to leap, especially if it occurred in the bass, and the law thus evolved accounted for the irregular resolution of chords of "indefinite dominant aspect," such as the "added sixth," secondary chords of the seventh, and some chords of the augmented sixth.

In order to counteract the tendencies of false notation and the preconceived idea that flattened discords should not rise (one of the fallacies of the restricted chromatic scale), it was necessary to distinguish the tonality of prototypes, which could be done by simulation of cadential effect, and avert the tendency to modulate.

Finally, the lecturer advocated chromatic analysis, not according to root or ground note, nor fictitious assumption of chromatic alteration of notes which could not be altered, but according to the tonality of the intruding element.

In the discussion which followed Mr. Thelwall advocated the theoretic recognition of the equal temperament system. Mr. Westerby, while sympathizing with the idea, remarked that from a practical point of view the theoretic reduction of all music to equal temperament notation must be considered as utopian.—London Musical News.

PHRENO-PHYSIOGNOMIC SKETCH.

Georg Liebling.

(By Richard Dimsdale Stocker, author of "The Human Face as Expressive of Character and Disposition," "Physiognomy, Ancient and Modern," "The Language of Handwriting," &c.)

ENDOWED with a large, creative brain and a physical constitution qualified to manifest the faculties of its several organs, Herr Liebling has attained a prominent place as a musician, both as executant, composer and professor.

His special combination of mental faculties enables him to display a high degree of imagination, constructive skill and original talent. He is exceedingly open to the influence of all that appeals to the idealistic powers; is a lover of taste, perfection and "finish"; also of all that is grand and magnificent. Of orchestral music he should be particularly fond.

GEORG LIEBLING.

His sense of rhythm and of harmony is keen. His capacity for criticism acute. He can detect a wrong note almost before he hears it.

Possessed of a somewhat philosophic turn of mind, he is able to trace cause and effect, and likes to have a reason for everything. He can do his own thinking, and will not be satisfied with the superficial explanations of those who are content to take everything "for granted," without understanding the "why" and the "wherefore"; is fond of discovery, and adapted to grasp the fundamental principles which enter into the nature of things.

His language renders him well able to give vent to his ideas in speech. As a teacher he would be well able to select the appropriate words in order to convey his meaning. This organ, too, aids him in the acquirement of foreign tongues; his sense of accent is good, and he is able to speak with considerable fluency and ease.

His perception of motives is such as to render him alive to the dispositions of those whom he may meet; his wit constituting him mirthful, and inclined to indulge in "banter" and "chaff," and to make fun of whatever strikes him as out of keeping with its environment.

He has large veneration; is therefore respectful and deferential; polite (with his approbativeness), and appreciative of devotional or sacred things. He will not treat with levity that which is deserving of adoration and reverence.

He likes to "make sure" in whatever line of action he proposes to embark, and will show both tenacity and concentration in the pursuit of his aims.

His executive qualifications, as well as his acquisitive capacity, will enable him to further his projects, and he will always have plans "on hand."

In short, Herr Liebling's power lies in his comprehensive mind; his ability to master theory and excel in practice; his sense of perfection, openness to elevated state of consciousness; his retentive memory and his foresight

Mme. Maigille and Her Pupils.

MISS SABERY D'ORSELLE, a pupil of Mme. Helene Maigille, sang at the St. Nicholas Garden with the Kaltenborn Orchestra on Monday evening, July 8, and her singing scored a triumph for the young artist as well as for her teacher. With the orchestra she sang the Waltz Song from Gounod's "Romeo and Juliet"; Dell' Acqua's "Villanelle" and Tosti's "Mattinata." After several recalls the audience compelled the singer to repeat the Tosti song. Miss D'Orselle's brilliant voice has been carefully trained, and, like all Maigille pupils, grace and taste mark her singing.

Madame Maigille sang recently at a concert at Newton, N. J., and her pupil, William J. Johnson, appeared on the same program with her. Mr. Johnson's voice, a noble basso, was heard to big advantage in "The Stein Song," by Bullard, and "The Mighty Deep," by Jude. Madame Maigille's numbers were "Demain," by Maude Valerie White, and "I Wait for Thee," by Hawley. The audience in the pretty New Jersey village gave Madame Maigille an ovation. Naturally such singing is not often heard in out of the way places. The Sunday morning after the concert Madame Maigille sang at the morning and evening service at the Presbyterian church at Newton, at which her pupil, Mr. Johnson, is the musical director. Both congregations greatly enjoyed the special music at the services, and many flattering comments were made about "voice and method," all of which is grateful to an earnest and thoroughly educated voice teacher.

TENOR JOHN YOUNG.—John Young, tenor, was the soloist at the closing concert of the New York State M. T. A. convention Thursday, June 27, when Handel's "The Messiah" was given. Mr. Russell, the president, telegraphed Mr. Young, asking him to sing the part, he having recently sung "The Messiah" with the Schubert Club of Newark, N. J., of which Mr. Russell is director, and remembering how well he had sung this work, considered himself most fortunate in being able to secure him. "The Messiah," as well as "The Elijah," are especially suited for Mr. Young's voice.

Mr. Young has been very busy of late. Following are some of his most recent engagements: May 21, Harlem Y. M. C. A.; May 22, Rahway, N. J.; May 26, special musical service St. Paul's P. E. Church, Englewood, N. J.; June 14, "Last Judgment," Nyack, N. Y.; June 17, "Crusaders," White Plains, N. Y.; June 22, Caldwell, N. J.; July 18, Sound Beach, Conn.; July 22, Warren, R. I. Mr. Young will spend the summer on the shores of Narragansett Bay, a few miles below Providence, returning to New York early in September.

THIS SPACE IS TO BE DEVOTED TO THE INSERTION OF

PORTRAITS OF SUCCESSFUL

BOWMAN

Mr. BOWMAN is assigning LESSON HOURS for next season. Early application is suggested. He may be addressed until SEPT. 5th at HIS SUMMER HOME, Grand View Cottage, SQUIRREL ISLAND, COAST OF MAINE

PUPILS

E. M. BOWMAN. Piano and Theory Studio; Steinway Hall, New York.

Organist and Conductor Baptist Temple Choir, Brooklyn.

THE ONLY

"LESCHETIZKY" SCHOOL OF PIANO PLAYING IN AMERICA.

Named after PROF. THEO. LESCHETIZKY, of Vienna, by his special permission.

Mme. DE WIENZKOWSKA, DIRECTRESS AND FOUNDER.

PROF. LESCHETIZKY'S Sole Principal Assistant in this country, formerly in Vienna; also Concert Pianiste.

CARNEGIE HALL. Address Communications: 147 W. Eighty-second St., NEW YORK CITY.

LESCHETIZKY—"Mme. Wienzkowska's success as a piano virtuosa and teacher is eminent."
PADEREWSKI—"Mme. Wienzkowska is a finished pianiste and possesses an extraordinary ability of communicating to others a complete knowledge of her art."
HANS RICHTER—"I consider you an artist of finest esprit and taste, and a representative of a most solid school."

The Carlisle-Carr Concert Bureau and Greater Britain Musical Agency

(The Foreign and Colonial Bureau),

108 New Bond Street, LONDON, W., ENGLAND.

Opera, Oratorio, Concerts, At Homes, Garden Parties, Children Parties

Sole control of the "Artists' Popular Concerts."

Telegraphic Address: "PANDECT," London.

A NIGHT AT A FRENCH OPERA.

MARSEILLES,

THE wildest Republicans and the most fiery orators of the Revolution were those of the Bouches-du-Rhône. Their exhortations caused the revolutionists to commit the most terrible excesses. The mere mouthings of Marseillais butchers and carters led to crimes unheard of before, and I have just seen that the material which made the Revolution possible still exists in every form in the minds and actions of the descendants of those terrible Provençals and Languedocs who came down here to Marseilles to wallow in the blood of their enemies.

The exposition of Southern ferocity which I am going to describe was ludicrous in the extreme and bloodless; but if the cause was tame the force for evil was just as strong as if it had been a matter affecting the rights and liberties of a people.

Instead of a revolt against their rulers the Marseillais have rebelled against their local opera company. No one knew there was to be a revolt. Nobody expected it, and it burst forth into a wild and fierce flame like a prairie fire, uncontrollable, unimpeded and carrying everything before it. The management of the Municipal Theatre, which is subsidized by the authorities, as well as supported by subscriptions, had announced for last Tuesday evening the performance of "Sigurd." On the preliminary bills there appeared the name of a visiting tenor from Paris and a new basso. A new baritone and prima donna had also been announced. The house was crowded and the people apparently good natured, as French audiences usually are.

The curtain rose on a sylvan scene made up of parts of interiors and weird backgrounds patched together in that happy-go-lucky manner which is the heritage of Continental stage managers. The chorus was grouped picturesquely around pillars of Carrara marble, and against a silvery river flowing perpendicularly from the flies. This chorus was composed of stout middle agen men and elderly ladies of dejected mien. The conductor raised his baton and the chorus sang three or four bars. Suddenly from one corner of the stalls there arose a chorus of guffaws. The aged ladies of the chorus stumbled in their song. The guffaws from the stalls grew into a loud roar of derisive laughter, interlarded with cries of "A bas l'ensemble! A bas l'ensemble!" The balcony and galleries took up the cries, and in two minutes the vast house was in a state of indescribable uproar. The baritone of whom Marseilles is tired, a man of gigantic stature and indomitable courage, stalked to the footlights and sang. He was hissed to a standstill. Then came the hated and unreplaced basso with lungs of leather, and he actually sang down the house until it was perfectly quiet.

The contralto, a lady of years and weight, started her song, but Marseilles would not listen to her and jeered at her, so that the poor thing turned aside and wept bitterly. The act was actually fought out and the curtain bumped its heavy way to the stage.

Then came a scene worth going miles to see. Marseilles jumped on its opera seats and howled. The men, with eyes popping out of their heads, their hands clutching the air and their bodies swaying to and fro, the women looking gleefully on and hissing with the best of them, presented a picture that one sees over the title "The Fall of the Bastille," or "The Vendée Massacres." A wild eyed, gray haired man of fifty sprang on the rail dividing the stalls from the pit and held up his hands praying for silence. It came, and he shrieked out, "I am a Marseillais, I am a Marseillais!" This confession created a turmoil. After another outburst he howled:

"Let us have the Regisseur. A bas! à bas! à bas!"

The tornado now became a veritable cyclone of cries for the poor stage manager. But this wretched man was away borrowing a dress suit and a pair of gloves in which to appear before his judges.

The curtain rose again on the chorus. Sometimes it was heard, but generally it was "à bas l'ensemble." "Look at the old farceurs." "To the knackers with them." French chivalry spent itself in rage on the elderly ladies, who were casting defiant glances at their tormentors. The prima donna, a lady whose voice was stifled by the stays that tortured her ample figure, was treated with a little respect, and the visiting tenor was listened to, but not so the others. The second act went down in a torrent of excited protests.

Again came the cries for the stage manager. Suddenly the curtain went up and he appeared, a poor, shrunken, frightened, white faced gentleman in a fat man's evening dress and a pair of painfully generous white gloves. His hand was on his heart and he bowed. He bowed again, and the audience shrieked itself into a paroxysm of frenzy at the sight of its victim. Two men in the stalls struggled to the rail and fought for the mastery of the "floor." The audience continued to howl "à bas" until one of the orators gained a hearing by shouting "Remember you are Frenchmen," which they did by shrieking louder than ever.

The stage manager, still with his hand on his heart, continued to bow. The orator then addressed him:

"Monsieur le Regisseur! ('A bas! A bas!') We, the people of Marseilles, protest against this disgraceful company. (Uproar. Stage manager bows.) You promised us a new prima donna. (Howls.) You promised us a new baritone. (Two minutes of turmoil, during which the police carried out a man. Stage manager still bowing.) You promised us a new basso. Where is he? You advertised him for to-night, and instead of him you present this ancient person with the bull voice. (Indescribable yells of delight.) These people could not secure an engagement at the wax works show across the street. The chorus is a disgrace to Marseilles. What have you to say, Monsieur le Regisseur?"

The Regisseur replied that he had engaged the new basso, but that he was ill and would appear in a week; to which the orator replied:

"That is not true, for we learn that he has been engaged in another town."

Then followed the wildest scene of all, and the aisles filled with policemen, who, to our amazement, seemed to side with the people. The unfortunate stage manager, unable to make himself heard, ordered down the curtain and bowed himself out, and the next act proceeded as before. The performance was finally concluded in confusion, amid cries of "Vive la France!"

The next day's Petit Marseillais, in its musical notes, stated that "The performance was interrupted by a well-known opera-goer, who protested against the action of the management." From which it is to be inferred that these things are not of much importance, and not unusual in the South of France.

The singers were really very good, and I learn that the cost to the subscribers for their seats averages about 1 franc per night.—R. D. B., in Sun.

Miss Lillie d'Angelo Bergh, the director of the D'Angelo Bergh School of Singing, has returned from the Pan-American Exposition, and has arranged to be at her studio for consultation on Tuesdays and Wednesdays during the summer.

Eugenia Mantelli.

THE Gil Blas, of Lisbon, of recent date, devotes two columns to Eugenia Mantelli, and after reminding its readers of her triumphs in Berlin, Rome and New York proceeds to consider her Carmen: "In 'Carmen' she realizes a creation. Her rare artistic intuition enables her to comprehend in all its fullness the work of Merimée, while the exceptional resources of her voice enable her to give a true musical interpretation of the divine score of Bizet. With these gifts she is the best interpreter of this immortal opera that we have seen. In our opinion, she is actress and singer incomparable, and her triumphs are well deserved."

Rive-Ring.

HERE are some more press notices of this well-known pianist:

A program leaning in the direction of virtuosity was offered for the appreciation of the public. Madame Rive-King is something better than a virtuoso, she is a sterling musician and a talented player. A fine crisp touch marked the playing of the Bach Fugue.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

In the presence of such a peerless artist as Julie Rive-King, the first of America's greatest pianists, the thought comes home how absorbing are the vanities of this world! The small, select audience which gathered in the assembly rooms at the Bates House last evening to listen to this brilliant artist contained such a small percentage of local musicians that they were literally conspicuous for their absence. The very walls seemed to show a silent protest that they, instead of human ears, should be privileged at so grand a feast. And there is no other name for it. Music in its grandest form was made to breathe and sing under Madame Rive-King's subtle touch.—Indianapolis Journal.

Madame Rive-King's playing is marked by a reserve of power remarkable in a woman. She has her limitations, sex being the main one, of course, but the mere question of physical execution cut little figure with the program. For crisp evenness of execution and true poetic execution she is unsurpassed.—Louisville Dispatch.

The program presented by Mrs. Rive-King at the Chamber of Commerce was well calculated to display to the fullest extent her versatility of pianism. And it must be confessed that whether interpreting the mysticism of Schumann, the polyphony of Bach, the romanticism of Chopin, the intellectuality of Brahms or the virtuosity of Liszt, the pianist was fully adequate to the task she assigned herself.—Cleveland (Ohio) Leader.

NORDICA.—A cablegram announces that Mme. Lillian Nordica has been engaged to open the New Wagner Theatre and the season at Munich in September, when she will sing Isolde in Wagner's music drama, "Tristan und Isolde." Madame Nordica studied the role of Isolde at Lucerne in the summer of 1895 under Madame Wagner's direction. She was so indefatigable in her work that she was requested to leave three hotels in succession on complaint of unmusical guests. Finally she succeeded in renting a room to practice. It was above a hairdresser's establishment, and there was room for but two chairs aside from the piano. There for five hours every day Madame Nordica. Madame Wagner and Herr Kneise, the Bayreuth director, studied Isolde, the two ladies alternating in the luxury of the chair not occupied by the accompanist.

Since then Nordica has scored many brilliant successes with the role on both sides of the water, and the engagement for which she has just signed shows the German appreciation of her fitness to the role for the première of the new theatre that is named after the great composer.

During the Munich engagement Madame Nordica will also sing Elsa in "Lohengrin." This part the great soprano also studied under the personal direction of Madame Wagner, having been selected by her from every other prima donna on the operatic stage to create the role when "Lohengrin" was first performed at the Bayreuth Festpielhaus, in the summer of 1894.

Paris.

SCHOOL FOR ACTING.
EMIL BERTIN,
1er Régisseur de la Scène de l'Opéra Comique.
Stage Practice. In Cast.
41 rue des Martyrs, Paris.

PROFESSOR OF FRENCH,
Special Method for Foreigners.
MLLE. MARIE FOURNAISE,
American reference. 29 Boulevard de Batignolles.

Mme. FLORENZA d'ARONA,
VOCAL PROFESSEUR,
5 rue Bassano, Paris.
Special sessions during the summer in REPERTOIRE AND INTERPRETATION.

LA VILLA VIOLETTE
TROCADERO,
22 rue Raynouard. Mme. Fiessinger.
Assortment of rooms. Excellent table. Gardens. All facilities of 'bus and tram.

FRENCH SCHOOL
M. DUMARTHERAY,
From Sounds to Literature, Pronunciation, Accent, Conversation.
(Opera.) 14 rue Taitbout.

THE FRENCH LANGUAGE
Rapidly, easily and correctly acquired by KIMON'S PRACTICAL SYSTEM,
(3 francs, post free.)
Private lessons by M. D. Kimon,
10 rue Cambon, Paris.

MLLE. GRACE LEE HESS SCHOOL.
Supplementary Education.
French Language Obligatory.
145 Avenue Victor Hugo, Paris.

BALDELLI,
Italian baritone.
Théâtre Royal, Madrid. Professeur de Chant.
(Champs Elysées). 6 rue Euler, Paris.

Mme. ROGER-MICLOS,
PIANO—PARIS.
Elementary and Superior Class and Private Public Pupils' Concerts.
(l'Etoile.) 27 Avenue MacMahon.

Mme. ROSINE LABORDE,
PROF. DE CHANT,
62 rue de Ponthieu, Paris.

MISS JULIA KLUMPKÉ,
VIOLINISTE.
Pupil of MM. Eugene Ysaye and G. Rémy.
Concerts, Musicales, Lessons Violin and Accompaniment. 10 rue Froidevaux, Paris.

DELLE SEDIE, Paris.
Pure Italian Method. Complete course. Stage practice. Voice, lyric, declamation, languages, solfège, ensemble music, mise-en-scène.
Class and single lessons.
Regular course, three years. Terms moderate.
30 rue St. Petersbourg.

MLLE. MARTINI,
Artiste Opéra, Opéra Comique, Théâtre Lyrique, Professor of "Mime."
Silent Interpretation, Stage Business, Gesture, Pantomime, &c.
87 rue St. Lazare, Paris.

MLLE. NILANDE,
Authorized Teacher of the Yersin Phono-Rhythmic Method. French Diction. French Language.
(Av. Marceau). 37 rue de Chaillot.

MME. J. VIEUXTEMPS,
Vocal Professor.
Classes and Private Lessons. Placing and Mending of Tones. 28 rue de Tocqueville (Monceau).

MLLE. KIKINA,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT,
Ancienne Elève de MARCHESI,
100 Avenue de Villiers, Paris.

INSTITUT MOZART.
Language. Complete Musical Education. Singing, Diction by best professors. Board and residence for pupils' comfort; quiet, convenient.
Apply to manager, Miss HEGEMANN,
7 rue du Commandant Riviere.

MME. ROBINSON DUFF,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
4 rue de la Renaissance l'Alma, Paris.

MME. MARIE ROZE,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT,
37 rue Joubert,
Chaussée d'Antin. Paris.
Mise-en-scène. Ensemble practice in cast on stage.

MME. IDA LURIG,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
French—Italian—German.
Specialty of German Songs and Oratorio.
(Trocadero) 5 rue Petrarque, Paris.

SARAH KING PECK,
SOPRANO,
CONCERTS AND ORATORIO.
55 West 85th Street, New York.

GEORGE ENSWORTH,
Baritone,
Address, 311 West 71st St., NEW YORK.

LIBRARY
OF THE
UNIVERSITY of ILLINOIS.

MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK · LONDON · PARIS · BERLIN · CHICAGO · BOSTON

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JULY 24, 1901.

EDUARD ZELDENRUST

VOL. XLIII.—No. 4—Whole No. 1113.

New York.

MRS. RATCLIFFE CAPERTON,

Representative and assistant of LAMPERTI.
New York, 138 Fifth Avenue; Philadelphia, 408 South 18th Street. Summer residence, Dresden, Germany.
"Mrs. Ratcliffe Caperton is my only representative, and I advise all pupils desiring to study with me to be prepared by her."
Dresden, Sedanstrasse 17. G. B. LAMPERTI.

ALBERTO LAURENCE,

155 East 18th Street, New York.
The voice formed and developed; the art of singing taught; method after the purest Italian schools; a bad voice made good, true and beautiful.

HENRY T. FLECK,

Conductor Haarlem Philharmonic Society of the City of New York.
Address: Normal College, New York.

MISS NORA MAYNARD GREEN,

VOCAL TEACHER.
Studio: 303 Fifth Avenue, New York.

MAX KNITEL-TREUMANN,

BARITONE.
Voice Culture—Art of Singing.
Carnegie Hall, Room 837.
Mail address: 15 Washington Terrace, New York.

GEORGE M. GREENE,

Voice Culture and Artistic Singing.
Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.
Studio: 489 Fifth Ave., Mondays and Thursdays.
Residence and address:
424 West 23d Street, New York.

CARL M. ROEDER,

PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
Residence and Studio:
330 Alexander Avenue, New York.

MR. C. WHITNEY COOMBS,

(Church of the Holy Communion). Organ lessons and practice given on one of Roosevelt's finest instruments. Special advantages for the study of church music and the training of boys' voices.
Address: 49 West 20th Street, New York.

TOM KARL,

Concerts, Recitals and Vocal Instruction.
Studio: Carnegie Hall.
Residence: 18 West 75th Street, New York.

MISS MARY FIDÉLIA BURT.

Author of Original Methods in Sight Singing, Ear Training, Musical Stenography. All materials copyrighted. No authorized teachers in Greater New York.
Address: 48 Lefferts Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.

E. H. LOCKHART, Bass-Baritone.

Studios: 121 East Twenty-third street, New York. Voices quickly placed and developed. Special work given for breath control. The Art of Singing taught by method used in the old Italian schools. Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.

DUDLEY BUCK, JR.,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Song Lecture Recitals.
810 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

HOWARD BROCKWAY,

COMPOSER-PIANIST.
Pupils received in Composition, Harmony, Piano and Song Interpretation.
Studio: 817-818 Carnegie Hall, New York.

WALTER HENRY HALL,

Conductor Oratorio Society, Brooklyn, N. Y. Organist and Choirmaster St. James' Church, New York.
For terms for conducting, address St. James' Church, Madison Ave. and 71st St., New York.

MME. LOUISE FINKEL,

SCHOOL OF VOCAL MUSIC.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.

EUGENE A. BERNSTEIN,

PIANIST.
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Studio: 160 East 70th Street, New York.

LUCILLE SMITH MORRIS,

PIANIST. INSTRUCTION, Concerts, Recitals.
Pupil of Wm. Sherwood and Mrs. A. K. Virgil.
Certified teacher of Virgil Clavier Method.
Studio: 201 West 81st Street, New York.

RICHARD ARNOLD,

Concertmaster Philharmonic Society.
INSTRUCTION.
208 East 61st Street, New York.

MR. FRANCIS STUART,

TEACHER OF SINGING.
First season in New York. Ten years in San Francisco. Pupil of Lamperti, the elder.
Being in full possession of my method of singing, he has the ability to form great artists.—FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
Reception hours, Mondays and Thursdays, 2 to 3.
Studio: 86 Madison Ave., near Twenty-eighth St.

LILLIE D'ANGELO BERGH

SCHOOL OF SINGING.
Operatic course. Teachers' special course, all departments. Famous specialists. Prospectus. The Albany Broadway and 52d Street, New York.

ROSETTA WIENER,

PIANO, SIGHT READING and New York School of Accompanying.
Carnegie Hall, 301-2.

MR. CHARLES LEE TRACY,

PIANOFORTE INSTRUCTION.
Certificated Teacher of the LESCHETIZKY METHOD.
Studio: Carnegie Hall, New York City.

MAX BENDHEIM,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
332 West 56th Street, New York City.

PAUL TIDDEN,

PIANIST.
314 East 15th Street, New York.
Will accept a limited number of pupils.

HERBERT HEMINGWAY JOY,

Voice Culture and Singing.
Italian School.
Studio: 116 Carnegie Hall, New York.

GUSTAV L. BECKER,

CONCERT PIANIST and TEACHER of PIANO and COMPOSITION.
Address: 1 West 104th Street, New York.

SIGNOR FILOTEO GRECO,

THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio: 51 West 35th Street, New York.

M. THEODOR BJORKSTEN AND MME. TORPADIE BJORKSTEN,

INSTRUCTORS IN SINGING.
New Studios: Carnegie Hall, New York.

PERRY AVERILL—BARITONE,

OPERA—ORATORIO—CONCERT AND VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
220 Central Park South, New York.

J. ARMOUR GALLOWAY,

Voice Culture and the Art of Singing,
Studio: Rooms 43 and 44 Y. M. C. A. Building, 318 West 57th Street, New York.

MARIE SEYMOUR BISSELL,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Pupils prepared for Church, Concert and Oratorio.
Studio: 135 East 16th Street, New York.

MRS. MARY HISSEM DE MOSS,

SOPRANO,
106 West 90th Street,
New York City.

SAMUEL B. MOYLE,

BASSO CANTANTE.
Oratorio, Concert, Musicales, Voice Culture—Italian Method. Tone Placing and Reparation a specialty. Studio: 136 Fifth Avenue, New York.

GEORGE SWEET,

OPERA, ORATORIO, CONCERT.
304 West 72d Street, New York.

J. HARRY WHEELER,

Voice Production and the Art of Singing.
Voices educated strictly in the Italian School.
Studio: 81 Fifth Ave., corner 16th St., New York.
July and August at Chautauqua Assembly.

MR. EDMUND SEVERN,
Violin, Composition, Ensemble.
MRS. EDMUND SEVERN,
Piano and Voice.
Studio: 131 West 56th Street, New York.
"Severn Trio."

ENRICO DUZENSI,

OPERA TENOR.
Will accept pupils for Voice Culture; good voice cultivated per contract; Italian method.
145 East 83d Street, near Lexington Ave.

CARL C. MÜLLER,

Translator of "Sechter's Fundamental Harmonies."
Author of "Tables for Harmonic Exercises."
Teacher of Piano, Harmony, Counterpoint and Composition. 1291 Lexington Ave., New York.

MME. HELENE MAIGILLE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION, REPERTOIRE.
Studio and residence: 1211-15 Carnegie Hall,
Summer course. New York.

MR. EMILIO AGRAMONTE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Summer Course.

SAUL HAROLD LICHTENSTEIN,

VIOLINIST.
Pupil of Sauret and Thomson.
Concerts, At Homes, &c. Pupils accepted.
Address: 103 West 114th Street, New York.

J. WARREN ANDREWS,

CONCERT ORGANIST and TEACHER.
Send for list of Pupils holding positions.
Address: Church of the Divine Paternity,
76th St. and Eighth Ave., New York City.

THE NEW YORK INSTITUTE FOR VIOLIN PLAYING AND SCHOOL FOR PIANO AND VOCAL CULTURE.

230 East 62d Street

Complete musical education given to students from the beginning to the highest perfection.
F. & H. CARRI, Directors.

MME. LUISA CAPPIANI,

VOICE CULTURE, SKILL OF SINGING.
"The Loucila," 159 West 45th Street,
New York.

RICHARD T. PERCY,

Concert Organist and Accompanist.
Organ Lessons at Marble Collegiate Church, corner Fifth Avenue and 29th Street.
Studio: 1402 Broadway, New York.

MISS MARGARET GOETZ,

CONTRALTO (mezzo range).
Concerts, Song Recitals, Vocal Instruction.
Address: 36 Gramercy Park, New York.

THE ARENS VOCAL STUDIO

(affiliated with the American School of Opera).
Coaching a specialty.
Normal courses for Voice Teachers.
261 West Fifty-fourth Street, New York.
For circulars address Miss Lucie May Benedict, 25 West Sixty-fifth Street.
Reception hour, 2 p. m., Wednesdays excepted.
Fall term begins September 20.

HENRY HOLDEN HUSS,

Instruction in Piano and Theory of Music.
Studio for non-resident pupils: Steinway Hall.
Personal address: 318 East 150th Street, New York.

FRANCIS FISCHER POWERS,

VOICE CULTURE AND THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio (and invariable address): Carnegie Hall, New York. New York season, October 20 to May 1; Kansas City, Mo., season, Pepper Building, May 15 to August 1; Los Angeles, Cal., season, Westminster Hotel, August 10 to October 10.

MRS. HADDEN-ALEXANDER,

PIANIST.
Powers-Alexander Studios,
Carnegie Hall, New York.

HENRY SCHRADIECK'S

VIOLIN SCHOOL.
Violin, Piano, Theory and Ensemble Playing.
Residence and Studio:
535 Washington Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

WILLIAM H. BARBER,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
Studio: Steinway Hall,
New York.

F. W. RIESBERG,

ACCOMPANIST.
Instruction—Piano, Organ, Harmony.
With THE MUSICAL COURIER.
Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.
Secretary-Treasurer New York State M. T. A.
Residence Studio:
954 8th Ave., corner 56th Street, New York.

S. C. BENNETT,

Instructor in Voice Building and the Art of Singing.
Teacher of Mme. Genevra Johnstone-Bishop and many other talented vocalists.
Studio: 836 Carnegie Hall, New York.

MME. EMMA RODERICK,

Rapid Development and Complete Education of the Voice. 118 West 44th Street, New York.

MRS. GRENVILLE SNELLING,

SOPRANO.
Concerts, Recitals, Musicals, Oratorio.
Address: 111 Fifth Avenue, New York.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF MUSIC,

179 East 64th Street, New York.
WM. M. SEMNACHER, Director.
I regard Mr. Semnacher as the greatest teacher of piano in this country.
Henry T. Fleck, Director of Music,
Normal College, New York City.

MRS. HENRY SMOCK BOICE,

VOICE CULTURE.
Musical Art Department of Adelphi College.
Residence-Studio: 127 McDonough St., B'klyn, N.Y.
Pupils prepared for Church, Concert, Oratorio.
138 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Monday and Thursday Afternoons.

SERRANO VOCAL INSTITUTE,

323 East 14th Street, New York.

Conducted by EMILIA BENIE DE SERRANO and CARLOS A. DE SERRANO.

Teachers of Charlotte Maconda, Fannie Francisca.

JEANNE ARONE,

Graduate of Florenza d'Arona's celebrated method. Special Teachers' Course Diploma Vocal Instruction. Studio: 1219 Madison Ave., New York.

GUY DORÉ LATTA, OPERA TENOR

Voice Culture and Singing.
Tone production, placing and development a specialty. Guarantees to increase range and make any voice strong and beautiful. Summer rates.
372 West 120th Street, New York.

JOSEPH PIZZARELLO,

VOCAL INSTRUCTOR.
Voice Developed—Style—Opera.
43 West 34th Street, New York.

ALICE GARRIGUE MOTT,

VOCAL CULTURE.
Carnegie Hall, New York.

MR. AND MRS. THEO. J. TOEDT,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Home Studio: 151 East 62d Street, New York.

LENA DORIA DEVINE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Representative Teacher
of the methods of the famous master,
FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
136 Fifth Avenue. New York.

MISS FANNIE HIRSCH,

CONCERT AND ORATORIO.
DRAMATIC SOPRANO. Steinway Hall, or
170 East 61st St., New York.

MISS EMMA HOWSON,

PRIMA DONNA.
Royal Italian and English Opera Company.
Lamperti Method Absolutely Taught.
Tuesdays and Fridays, 96 Fifth Ave., New York.

EMMA THURSBY,

SOPRANO.
Will receive a limited number of pupils.
Residence-Studio: 34 Gramercy Park, New York.

ISIDORE LUCKSTONE,

The Accompanist and Musical Director.
STYLE, REPERTOIRE, FINISH, VOCAL CULTURE.
836 Lexington Ave., or address MUSICAL COURIER.

ARTHUR VOORHIS,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
100 Clifton Place, Jersey City, N. J.
Care MUSICAL COURIER, New York.

MME. ADELE LEWING

CONCERT PIANIST.
Authorized Teacher of the Leschetizky Method.
Special terms to out of town teachers.
Concerts. Recitals. Musicales.
Address: Care Steinway Hall, or 127 East 73d Street, New York.

MISS GENEVIEVE BISBEE,

PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Leschetizky Method. Summer courses.
1109-1110 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

KATHARINE PELTON,

Mezzo Soprano.
Sole Direction HENRY WOLFSOHN,
131 East 17th Street, New York.

CHARLOTTE A. BABCOCK,

Certificated Pupil of Dr. William Mason.
Pianoforte Instruction.
Studios: 810-14 Carnegie Hall, New York.
Summer season, Bernardsville, N. J.

SIGNOR A. CARBONE,

Member several years Metropolitan Grand Opera Company.
VOICE CULTURE. OPERA SCHOOL.
Summer Course.
Studio: 240 Fifth Ave., New York.

JOSEPH P. DONNELLY,

VOICE, ORGAN, PIANO.
Organist-Director All Saints,
Madison Avenue and 129th Street, New York.
Residence-Studio: 2033 Madison Avenue.
Brooklyn Studio: The Pouch Gallery.

MARK M. FONAROFF,

VIOLINIST—INSTRUCTION.
References: Adolf Brodsky, Henry Schradieck, Alex. Lambert, H. E. Krehbiel.
129 East 82d Street, New York.

STELLA PRINCE STOCKER,

COMPOSER-DIRECTOR.
Recital-Lectures, ARTHUR STOCKER, boy soprano, assisting. For season 1901-1902.
Address: 11 Schmiede Strasse, Hamburg, Germany, or care P. J. Kreider, 251 West 71st Street, New York.

MARIE PARCELLO,

DRAMATIC CONTRALTO.
Music Rooms: 1103-4-5 Carnegie Hall, New York.

HUGO TROETSCHEL,

Organist Schermerhorn St. Evangelical Church
Instruction: Piano—Organ—Theory.
Organ Lessons given on large three-manual Roosevelt Organ.
Residence: 384 Bainbridge St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. WALTER H. ROBINSON,

TENOR AND CONTRALTO SOLOISTS.
Oratorio, Concerts and Musicales.
Voice Production and Répertoire.
Studio: 405 Carnegie Hall, New York.

A. J. GOODRICH,

Personal or Correspondence Lessons in Harmony, Counterpoint, Composition, Orchestration and Practical Musicianship.
Author of "Analytical Harmony," "Theory of Interpretation," "Complete Music Analysis," "Synthetic Counterpoint," "Guide to a Practical Musicianship."
Glens Falls, N. Y.

MUSICAL COURIER OFFICES—FINE ARTS BUILDING.

CHICAGO, July 20, 1901.

YESTERDAY'S Chicago Tribune contains an editorial paragraph in regard to bankrupt actors and musicians: "There is something amusing to the general public," says the writer, "in the apparent ease with which actors and actresses accumulate debts amounting to $100,000 or more and then repudiate them by going through bankruptcy proceedings and scheduling assets consisting of a pair of clog shoes and a last season's shirt waist." (Yes, "amusing to the general public," but very trying for the persons who are so unfortunate as to come into commercial contact with these impecunious dramatic exponents!)

"The latest instance in point," this editorial continues, "is that of William S. Cleveland, late a 'minstrel king,' who schedules debts of more than half a million dollars and has nothing to report on the other side of the ledger. The average man who gets into trouble if his grocery bill is not promptly paid on the first of the month would like to know how soubrettes, song and dance artists, and other members of the profession get the commercial rating which entitles them to $100,000 worth of credit. Every day or two he reads how La Belle Lu, the skirt dancer, or Señora Rosa, the soprano, has gone through bankruptcy with nothing but stage clothes as assets, and he is forced to the conclusion either that a decree in bankruptcy is now considered a good professional advertisement or that actors and actresses exert an hypnotic influence on people who have things to sell on credit. At any rate [how often, in dealing with complicated matters of artistic moment, a daily paper reaches an estimable conclusion suddenly by way of a "short cut," as it were], the showing is equally discreditable to the business judgment of the creditors and to the business honor of the play folk."

But, behold! That is not the finale. To-day the same Western publication presents a two column article, with names, actually names and pictures, of "bankrupt actors," past and present—a wide-awake sequel, this, on a sleepy July Saturday. And now, what next? Insolvent musicians, beware!

This week the interesting and somewhat startling announcement is made that Colonel Fred Pabst, of Milwaukee, an authority upon ancient and modern Terpsichorean art, will issue an important pamphlet explaining that "the war dance of the American Indian is the original 'ragtime' step." What is the present "rag-time step?" The shake walk?"

Because a July holiday which was promised at Easter time has been "declared off," thirty-five choir boys at Trinity Episcopal Church, in this city, are said to be in a belligerent mood. Thus a music strike is pending!

Raymond Hitchcock, who this week succeeded William Norris in the role of King Dodo at Studebaker Hall, Fine Arts Building, has successfully introduced a new song in which a group of pretty chorus girls give acceptable assistance. Within the copious stanzas so many subjects are mentioned that it would hardly be safe to guess at the title; however, the refrain unquestionably is: "And they gave me a medal for that." Last Monday, the occasion being his "first night" appearance, Mr. Hitchcock was compelled to exhaust every conceivable resource of this novelty, including an assurance that he once rescued perishing persons from a burning building by throwing up soap and allowing them to "come down on the lather." Finally the Canadian resorted to a speech: "Ladies and gentlemen," he said, "I came out from the East armed with a great deal of valuable information which I had hoped to bestow upon Chicago. But I've abandoned the intention—and (refrain) "You'll give me a medal for that!" (Final exit. Tumultuous applause.)

William Norris, who created the part of King Dodo, has been engaged to appear as the jester, Beppo, in Otis Skinner's forthcoming Chicago revival of "Francesca da Rimini."

Whitney Mockridge, the well-known tenor, returned to Chicago last week in order to teach a large number of advanced students, who will assemble for their lessons in rooms at the Sherwood Music School, Fine Arts Building. During his recent visit to England Mr. Mockridge participated in several important musical events, including the notable charity concert given on June 26 by the Duchess of Sutherland at her London residence, Stafford House. Doubtless many teachers and soloists will take advantage of the opportunity of placing themselves under this vocal instructor's guidance throughout August and the remainder of July.

Considerable interest centres in the prospective tour of Esther Feé, who will come to America in November. Miss Feé, according to several papers in Paris, is the most brilliant as well as the most beautiful violinist in France, and photographs just received by her manager, Charles R. Baker, strongly attest to the truth of the latter statement.

"At the time of the Trilby craze," writes a Chicagoan, "a young girl in this city was discovered to resemble descriptions of the fictitious heroine, and so the living facsimile came into prominence and popularity at matinees in the 'Windy City.' Her success in violin playing had been great, and, moreover, rapid. Max Bendix heard her and found her uncommonly talented. She was given a free scholarship, and worked hard with Mr. Bendix for three years. She was tall and fair, with a brilliant complexion, and when she played she looked exactly like Trilby—and women cried. And then, to complete the illusion, someone discovered 'she had the Trilby chin.' This girl was Esther Feé."

The Hamlin Company announces the following bookings for its artists: Holmes Cowper, tenor, in a song recital at Davenport, Ia., on November 25; George Hamlin, tenor; Mrs. Sue Harrington Furbeck, contralto, and Leon Marx, violinist, in a concert at Davenport, Ia., on February 2; Charles W. Clark, baritone, with the Arion Club of Milwaukee, Wis., on April 10 and 11, the occasion being the jubilee festival in celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the club. At the last mentioned event "The Death of Minnehaha," by Coleridge Taylor, and Sullivan's "Golden Legend" will constitute the program.

Mme. Fannie Bloomfield-Zeisler is at her summer home in Elkhart, Wis. A short sojourn in Chicago serves to illustrate that not alone among local concertgoers but in the student element of the great city this famous pianist may count admirers of the most ardent nature. Thus is the magic of Madame Bloomfield-Zeisler's noble art appreciated at home, as it is abroad.

William H. Sherwood, of Chicago, was heard in the Temple of Music at the Pan-American Exposition July 16, under the auspices of the Chautauqua Assembly. Upon his performance the Buffalo Express commented as follows:

"When Mr. Sherwood came upon the stage he was received with a cordiality which must have been very gratifying. It is fitting, indeed, that so fine and representative an American artist should be heard at the Pan-American. For years he has worked vigorously to advance the cause of American music. He has introduced the compositions of previously unknown American composers, and played again and again those of standard American musicians. It would be both appropriate and gratifying if Mr. Sherwood could be engaged to give another entire recital at the Temple of Music. The pianist's solos were a Polish song, 'Mein Freude,' by Chopin Liszt, and a march in D from the suite op. 91, No. 4, by Raff. The first was played with poetic feeling and delicacy, and the second with the crispness and clearness which characterize the playing of an artist. Mr. Sherwood's work is always legitimate. He never forgets that his instrument is the piano, and he does not treat it as though it were an orchestra. So, with all adequate brilliancy and force, his tone is always beautiful, for he never exceeds the limits of the instrument."

During the summer weeks many art students take special courses in Chicago. Among such visitors here this year is Mrs. W. S. Ware, a gifted painter, from Jackson, Tenn.

Mrs. Rose Case Wells, who is teaching a large and flourishing class of young piano students at her attractive studio in the Fine Arts Building, has written a number of clever articles upon musical topics, including "Some Thoughts on Piano Playing."

Lillian Green, the singer who so creditably filled the role of Pialo in "King Dodo" is reported to be very ill with typhoid fever in New York.

The Hamlin Company's progressive manager, John Van Dusen, who returned this week from a short business trip, states that the outlook for the coming season is very satisfactory.

Under the capable direction of the Hamlin Company the first American and Canadian tour of the celebrated European violinist, Anton Witek, promises to be a success. The dates of a number of appearances which have been arranged will be announced in the near future by Mr. Witek's managers.

Appreciative estimates have been given as follows concerning the boy soprano, Lloyd Simonson, who is under the concert management of Charles R. Baker:

I consider Master Lloyd Simonson the greatest boy soprano in this country. George Hamlin.

A marvelous voice combined with marvelous talent.—Charles W. Clark.

The most beautiful boy's voice I have ever heard, with artistic temperament and talent unsurpassed. Sydney Lloyd Wrightson.

Having heard Lloyd Simonson, I am very glad to recognize his remarkable musical ability, artistic phrasing and charming quality of voice, and consider him a most desirable concert attraction.—Emil Liebling.

This afternoon at the Chicago Auditorium Conservatory a farce-comedy, "The Second Floor Spoopendyke," will be presented by the School of Acting, under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Dickson.

And now it is probable that "King Dodo" will reign at the Studebaker Hall in that beautiful palace of art, the Fine Arts Building, until October 5.

Scholarships at the Chicago Musical College.

THE following announcement which the Chicago Musical College makes will be read with interest by thousands of music students:

The plan of free and partial scholarships has been in operation in the Chicago Musical College for more than thirty years. During that time a great number of pupils have received free musical education, and subsequently obtained responsible positions in the musical departments of educational institutions, in the church choir, the orchestra, in concert and opera, or have made their way as private teachers.

For the season commencing September 9, 1901, the college will award 187 of these scholarships, thirty-seven free, entitling the holder to instruction free of charge for one school year, and 150 partial, being a liberal reduction from the regular rates.

This idea is entirely philanthropical, and no one who is able to pay a small amount for instruction should apply for a free scholarship. In that case application should be made for partial scholarship.

Free scholarships are issued in the piano, violin, vocal, theory of music, composition, dramatic and elocution departments only.

Application must be made on the regular college blank before August 10, 1901.

There is no charge to the applicant for examinations or anything connected with the distribution of these scholarships by the college.

Application must be accompanied by a letter of recommendation from the pastor of a church, principal of a school or other reliable person. This recommendation must certify that the applicant is unable to pay the tuition, and in every way is deserving of the benefits conferred by the college.

All scholarships are awarded by examination, which is conducted at the Chicago Musical College. Examinations extend from August 1 to September 2, 1901. All candidates will be notified when to appear at the college.

Free and partial scholarships are issued only at the opening of each school year.

The following free scholarships will be awarded for the season commencing September 9, 1901:

PIANO DEPARTMENT.

	Value.
Hans von Schiller, two lessons per week	$240
Rudolph Ganz, two lessons per week	240
Walter R. Knupfer, two lessons per week	160
Maurice Rosenfeld, two lessons per week	160
Hermann Klum, two lessons per week	160
Karl Reckzeh, two lessons per week	120
Lillian M. Reid, two lessons per week	100
Elizabeth G. Saviers, two lessons per week	80
Alma W. Anderson, two lessons per week	60
Maud Jones, two lessons per week	60
M. Eleanor Turner, two lessons per week	60

(Continued on page 6.)

(Continued from page 5.)

Gena Branscombe, two lessons per week	$60
Viola E. MacLean, two lessons per week	60
Maybelle Lewis, two lessons per week	60
VOCAL DEPARTMENT.
William Castle, two lessons per week	240
Charles Gauthier, two lessons per week	240
Herman Devries, two lessons per week	240
Mrs. O. L. Fox, two lessons per week	240
John R. Ortengren, two lessons per week	200
Vernon d'Arnalle, two lessons per week	160
Mary Forrest Ganz, two lessons per week	160
Mabel F. Shorey, two lessons per week	120
Beatrix Mizer, two lessons per week	80
VIOLIN DEPARTMENT.
Bernhard Listemann, two lessons per week	240
S. E. Jacobsohn, two lessons per week	240
Joseph T. Ohlheiser, two lessons per week	160
William Konrad, two lessons per week	80
HARMONY.
Dr. Louis Falk, one class lesson per week	40
Adolf Brune, one class lesson per week	30
Louis Campbell-Tipton, one class lesson per week	30
Bessie E. Ayres, one private lesson per week	40
COMPOSITION.
Felix Borowski, one private lesson per week	60
Felix Borowski, one class lesson per week ..... Each,	20
ELOCUTION.
Lillian Woodward Gunckel, five class lessons per week	160
SCHOOL OF ACTING.
Hart Conway, full course ..... Each,	300

In addition to the above 150 partial scholarships will be issued.

On August 1 Dr. F. Ziegfeld, president of the Chicago Musical College, will return from Europe.

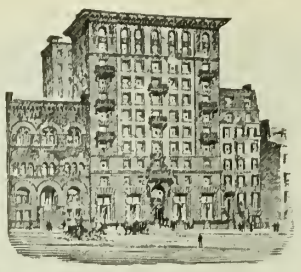
Julie Wyman's Cleveland Recital.

THE musical and social success of a song recital given by Mrs. Julie Wyman at 468 Giddings avenue, Cleveland, on July 3, resulted in three engagements for the singer in Cleveland during the month of November next. From the reports Mrs. Wyman was in good voice, and her art as ever convincing and delightful. The interesting program, which is appended, contains a number of songs which Mrs. Wyman sings beautifully:

L'Idéal	Chaminade
Sombréro	Chaminade
The Love Song of Har Dyal	Mrs. George Batten
L'Oiseleur	Liza Lehmann
The Rose	Noël Johnson
The River and the Sea	Noël Johnson
Romance de la Dame de Pique	Tschaikowsky
Song Cycle, Fair Jessie	Von Fielitz
Song from Omar Khayyam	Harris
Forever and a Day	Harris
Trois Jours de Vendanges	Hahn
Mai	Hahn
Infidelité	Hahn
Rêverie	Hahn
D'une Prison	Hahn
A Hero Song	Nevin
Sleep, Little Tulip	Nevin
A Little Song	Nevin
A Une Fiancée	Gabriella Ferrari

Miss Prentiss played Mrs. Wyman's piano accompaniments.

Boston Music Notes.



BOSTON, July 20, 1901.

That music is a serious study with some people at least is proved by the large number of young men and women who are taking lessons in this city during the summer. At least a dozen of the most prominent teachers of the city come into town from the different summer resorts where they are spending the hot weather once or twice a week to give lessons. Many of the students are doing special work, while a number of teachers from the South and West are taking advantage of their own holiday time to "coach" with well-known city teachers.

Homer A. Norris is at his studio once or twice a week until August 1, after which time he will devote himself to amusement until about September 1. Already Mr. Norris has more than half his teaching time engaged for next season, his pupils coming from various parts of the country. Many of his former pupils are already known in the world of music by their compositions, Mr. Norris' example of doing serious, thoughtful work having impressed itself upon those he has taught.

Arthur Whiting, whose long residence in Boston makes that city lay claim to him, although he is now a resident of New York, is at his summer home in New Hampshire, where he has been busy finishing up a number of compositions, and is now working upon the music for the quatrains of "Omar Khayyam," which are promised to the public in the near future. Mr. Whiting's studio is ideally located for quiet, uninterrupted work. During the summer Mr. Whiting usually gives two or three musicals for the benefit and pleasure of his neighbors and friends.

Mrs. Louise Homer, contralto, formerly of Boston, who is now engaged with the Grau Opera Company, having sung with them last winter, is also summering with her family in the mountains of New Hampshire. Mrs. Homer's long residence in Paris has made her to a certain extent a stranger in this city, but her hosts of friends are always interested in her successes.

Stephen Townsend was in the city the greater part of the week. He sings every Sunday at the Christian Science Church, and often remains over a few days to take care of special pupils.

Frederic Martin, who is engaged for the New Hampshire Music Teachers' Association Festival at The Weirs, at the end of the month, will after the conclusion of the festival visit William Winch at Windsor, Vt., where Mr. Winch has a summer residence. Mrs. Frederic Martin has also been engaged at The Weirs for solo work in some of the programs.

Mrs. Flora Arnold sailed for Europe on Wednesday morning in the steamer New England with her little daughter. They will go for a short trip through Holland and down the Rhine before settling in Constanz for the remainder of the summer, where Mrs. Arnold will put herself at once under the care of Graziani, the teacher with whom she studied in Berlin a year or two since. In September teacher and pupils will return to Berlin for the winter season.

Work is to be commenced on the new New England Conservatory of Music by August 1, unless all plans fail. Meetings are being held frequently with this end in view.

Music as a means of paying their college and other expenses for the coming year is the idea successfully being carried on by five clever Radcliffe College girls. Last winter they organized an orchestra, and when their studies and lectures would permit, spent their time in practicing on their chosen instruments for the object they had in view. Miss Gertrude Shaw, as pianist, was elected leader, and since the closing of Radcliffe the five young ladies have been meeting with great success among the summer hotels along the coast, giving evening concerts of classical and popular music. More recently, however, on account of the great popularity the fair musicians achieved one of the hotels at Oguinquit, Me., secured their exclusive services. This orchestra assisted in the productions of the "Court of Hearts" during June, the music of which was written by a young Boston girl.

WAS IT ROBERT BUCHANAN?—The following true story with a moral was related lately: Long ago a certain poet and critic attacked a poet. The attack was violent and pseudonymous, and the result on the unfortunate subject was that his health distinctly deteriorated, his spirits sank, and his life, according to credible evidence, was shortened. The poet-critic was sorry afterward for what he had done, and made apology, but he abated nothing in the severity of his criticisms of authors. Occasionally he got as good as he gave. One day he read an attack made upon him by a certain critic, and was so violently excited that he was struck by an illness from which he never recovered. Thus the weapons of criticism may be deadly weapons, and the slayer may himself be slain.—Evening Post.

SHERWOOD,
Greatest American Pianist.
ESTHER FEE,
Violinist.
(Paris—In America Nov. 1.)
BRUNO STEINDEL,
The Noted 'Cellist.
CLARA MURRAY,
Harpist.
LEONE LANGDON KEY,
Organist.

CHARLES R. BAKER,
MANAGER OF
High Class and Distinguished MUSICAL ARTISTS,
Fine Arts Building,
CHICAGO.

ELECTA GIFFORD,
Soprano.
(Late of Royal Opera, Amsterdam.)
MABELLE CRAWFORD,
Contralto.
GLENN HALL,
Tenor.
SYDNEY LLOYD WRIGHTSON,
The English Baritone.
MASTER LLOYD SIMONSON,
The Famous Boy Soprano.

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

MARY WOOD CHASE, PIANO VIRTUOSA.
For Terms, Dates, &c., address HANNAH & HAMLIN, Managers.
Personal address: 3031 Prairie Avenue. 514 Kimball Hall, CHICAGO.

FRANK T. BAIRD,
THE ART OF SINGING.
34 Monroe St., Chicago, Ill.

Mr. & Mrs. BICKNELL YOUNG,
67 Kimball Hall,
CHICAGO, ILL.

EDWARD MEEK,
BARITONE.
Pupils accepted.
924 Fine Arts Building, Chicago.

NINETEENTH YEAR.
1899-1900.
MRS. REGINA WATSON'S SCHOOL
for the
HIGHER ART OF PIANO PLAYING.
297 Indiana Street, Chicago, Ill.

CLARA G. TRIMBLE, SOPRANO.
Address 619 Fine Arts Building, Chicago.

THE SPIERING QUARTET,
708 Fine Arts Building, Michigan Boulevard, CHICAGO.

MAURICE ARONSON PIANIST. Auditorium Building, (Tower, 1406.) Chicago.
Concerts, Recitals, Musicales, Lectures.
For the past four years chief assistant to Leopold Godowsky. Four Competent Assistants. Write for circular

W. C. E. SEEBOECK, PIANIST,
Just returned from Europe, where he made very successful appearances.
Studio 727 FINE ARTS BUILDING, CHICAGO, ILL.

HELEN BUCKLEY, SOPRANO.
Vocal Instruction. ORATORIO, CONCERTS, RECITALS.
5316 MADISON AVENUE, CHICAGO.

Mrs. GEORGE A. COE,
(BARTH and MOSZKOWSKI)
Pianist and Lecturer. 640 University Place, EVANSTON, ILL.

CANADIAN MUSIC.

A chorus of more than 1,000 voices and an orchestra numbering about 100 persons will take part in a musical festival to be given in Toronto during October, in honor of the visit of the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York. The legislation and reception committee of the city council has voted in favor of donating $1,500 toward the promotion of the festival, and rehearsals will begin at once, F. H. Torrington having been appointed musical director.

Two talented daughters of the Governor-General and Countess of Minto, Lady Ruby and Lady Violet Elliott, were successful in passing the recent examinations at the Toronto College of Music.

A Queen Victoria memorial with which Toronto is to be graced will probably assume the form of an art museum.

The list of Canadian organists engaged to play at the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo is as follows: W. E. Fairclough, organist of All Saints' Church, Toronto; W. H. Hewlett, of Dundas Centre Methodist Church, London; Edmund Phillips, of St. George's Church, Toronto; Percival Garratt, of Central Presbyterian Church, Hamilton; J. D. Dussault, of Notre Dame Church, Montreal; J. A. Bernier, of the Basilica, Quebec; William Reed, of Chalmers' Church, Quebec, and Albert Jordan, of Brant Avenue Methodist Church, Brantford.

Ottawa's citizens frequently have the privilege of attending band concerts. By permission of Lieutenant-Colonel Sherwood and other officers, the band of the Forty-third Rifles played the following selections last Thursday evening at "Britannia-on-the-Bay": March, "Battleship Oregon," Losey; overture, "William Tell," Rossini; waltz, "Le Volvi a Ver," Estrada; selection, "Garrett O'Magh," Olcott; "Japanese Lantern Dance," Bratton; selection of Scotch airs, Cavallini; Oriental march, "The Caravan Crossing the Desert," Asche; march, "The Thistle," Laurendeau, and "God Save the King."

In the Canadian capital the Governor General's Foot Guards' band likewise contributed a brilliant program on July 18, the scene chosen being one which natural surroundings and historical records favor—Parliament Hill. Strains of military music are not needed to make this place a centre of attraction, but the marches, overtures and waltzes were none the less welcome on this account.

A second performance of the cantata, "Belshazzar," was recently given in London, Ont., Mr. Gilmour directing.

Last week Miss Anna Millar, of New York, visited Toronto in the interests of the Paur Symphony Orchestra.

J. W. Hinchcliffe, of Carleton Place, has been appointed leader of the Western Methodist Church Choir, Ottawa.

In the course of her recent professional tour through Eastern Canada, Amy Murray, the Scottish singer, made so many friends that her return engagements will be numerous.

Miss Sara E. Dallas, Mus. Bac., F. T. C. M., of the Toronto Conservatory of Music's staff, will next season direct the musical departments of a new school for young ladies, which is being established in Toronto. Miss Dallas is admirably fitted for this excellent appointment with which she has been honored.

MADAME VON KLENNER'S BUSY SUMMER.

LAKEWOOD, Chautauqua Lake, July 18, 1901.

MADAME VON KLENNER gave a reception and lecture in the parlors of the Waldmere in honor of the eightieth birthday of her celebrated teacher, Mme. Pauline Viardot-Garcia. The career of this celebrated woman in the world of music is well known to the readers of THE MUSICAL COURIER.

Madame Von Klenner was not only a favorite pupil of Madame Viardot, but is to-day one of her dearest friends. Letters pass frequently between the two women, the elder one taking a keen interest in the progress of her famous pupil in the United States. Although she has now passed her four score years, Madame Viardot is in the enjoyment of her faculties, and her interest in all that goes on about her amazes her friends. She is indeed the "grand old woman in music." Her wonderful vocal method and her general education prove that the modern woman had many prototypes in the women of forty and fifty years ago.

A fashionable audience from Jamestown, Salamanca, Buffalo and the Chautauqua Assembly attended the Von Klenner lecture and reception. The hotel guests, doubtless glad to escape the ennui of "nothing to do," also turned out to greet Madame Von Klenner and to applaud her instructive remarks. The Jamestown papers published reports of the affair.

As THE MUSICAL COURIER has previously announced, the Von Klenner summer school at the Waldmere is open, and after the Viardot Garcia function a number of new pupils were enrolled. Madame Von Klenner is an authority eminently fitted to discuss methods, as she is the authorized representative of the Garcia method in the United States. Among the most interested listeners at the lecture were the pupils of Madame Von Klenner's summer school. The list of students now taking three lessons a week is a formidable one. The names and their States are as follows:

Miss Lulu Potter, Pennsylvania.
Miss Mabel Hughes, Pennsylvania.
Miss Maude Lafferty, Pennsylvania.
Mrs. Rowland, New York.
Mrs. Pauline Gurganus, Alabama.
Miss Heilman, Pennsylvania.
Mrs. Minnie Stein, New York.
Miss Edna M. Banker, New York.
Mrs. O. Knowlton, New York.
Miss Willy Du Pre, Alabama.
Miss G. Byrne, Georgia.
Miss Hull, New York.
Mrs. Fern P. Stevens, New York.
Miss Susie Graham, Indiana.
Mrs. Pardee, New York.
Mrs. M. Sherman, New York.
Miss Mabel Carmichael, Louisiana.
Miss Lottie Harrison, Louisiana.
Miss Selma Burrows, Georgia.
Miss Carrie M. Blackman, Colorado.
Charles Pierson, Pennsylvania.
Frank Hartwell, Pennsylvania.
George W. Hand, New York.
M. G. Sparling, New York.
Carol S. Meade, Canada.
Miss Frances Beardsley, Kentucky.
Miss Elizabeth Davis, Maryland.
Miss Johnson, New York.
Miss Carahan, New York.
Miss Belle Harrington, New York.
Miss Maggie Lynch, Wisconsin.
Miss E. A. Lane, Ohio.
Mrs. W. G. Armstrong, Idaho.
Miss Harriet Mason, Texas.
Miss Julia Braubach, New York.
Miss Etta Jackson, Georgia.
Miss Frances Garland, South Carolina.
Miss Graves, North Carolina.

William Worth Bailey.

WILLIAM WORTH BAILEY, the blind violinist, who will make an extended tour through the United States next season, under the direction of Robert E. Johnston, is a phenomenon. The average violinist is staggered by the repertory of young Bailey and marvels at his achievement in mastering nearly 100 of the standard works for the violin. How this blind boy could memorize all these compositions is a mystery. His memory is so retentive that lapses never occur. Young Bailey's versatility is surprising. He plays equally well works in every form, and never fails to impress his audience.

Manager Johnston is having no difficulty in securing dates for young Bailey. The bookings already made guarantee the success of the tour.

ESTABLISHED 1867.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, President.

The Largest and Most Complete Institution of Musical Learning in America.

COLLEGE BUILDING, 202 MICHIGAN BLVD.

The finest structure in existence devoted exclusively to a Musical College.

SCHOOL OF ACTING, MUSIC ELOCUTION, ORATORY, LANGUAGES.

BOARD OF MUSICAL DIRECTORS.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, DR. LOUIS FALK,
HANS VON SCHILLER, WILLIAM CASTLE,
BERNARD LISTEMANN, S. E. JACOBSOHN,
RUDOLPH GANZ, CHARLES GAUTHIER.
HERMAN DEVRIES,
HART CONWAY, Director School of Acting.
Catalogue Mailed Free.

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

MISS ESTHER FEE, VIOLINISTE.

(PARIS—IN AMERICA NOVEMBER 1st)

Exclusive Management CHARLES R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

HARRISON M. WILD CONCERT ORGANIST.

Studio 6, 241 Wabash Ave., CHICAGO.

Piano and Organ Instruction.

D. A. CLIPPINGER,
THE ART OF SINGING.
Conductor.
410 Kimball Hall, Chicago, Ill.

CARL R. DRAKE,
VIOLIN VIRTUOSO.
Teacher.
Studio: Kimball Hall, Chicago.

VICTOR GARWOOD,
Kimball Hall, Chicago.

William A. WILLETT, BARITONE.
Care Musical Courier, Chicago, or leading agents.

ALLEN SPENCER,
PIANIST. Concerts, Recitals.
Address: KIMBALL HALL, CHICAGO.

KARLETON HACKETT,
Teacher of Singing,
Kimball Hall, Chicago.

MARY PECK THOMSON,
SOPRANO,
620 Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

CAROLYN LOUISE WILLARD,
CONCERT PIANIST. Instruction.
Pupil of Ernst Jedliczka, Bloomfield-Zeisler.
For terms and dates address
4164 Lake Avenue, Chicago.

FREDERICK WARREN,
BARITONE,
Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.

MUSICAL KINDERGARTEN FOR THE PIANOFORTE.
BY FANNIE CHURCH PARSONS.
For full information concerning normal instruction or children's class work, address . . .
MRS. PARSONS' NORMAL TRAINING SCHOOL,
Handel Hall, CHICAGO, ILL.

Mrs. THEODORE WORCESTER, Pianist.
(GODOWSKY.)
Concerts, Recitals and Salon Musicales. Recitals from Russian Composers.
ADDRESS: 1402 Auditorium Tower, CHICAGO.

R. CAPOUL CUTTRISS WARDE,
SINGING MASTER.
The teacher of many prominent artists now before the public. Send for list.
STUDIO: No. 911 Cable Building, Cor. Jackson and Wabash, CHICAGO.

MINNIE CRUDUP VESEY, MEZZO CONTRALTO
CONCERTS, RECITALS, VOCAL TEACHER, COACHING.
Address HANNNH & HAMLIN, 514 Kimball Hall, CHICAGO.

Chicago Auditorium Conservatory
AUDITORIUM BUILDING, CHICAGO.
Send for Summer Catalogue.
FREDERIC GRANT GLEASON, Director.
ROY ARTHUR HUNT, Manager.

ROWDON Basso-Cantante,
623 Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO, ILL.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY,
JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, Director, Kimball Building, 243 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO.
ALL BRANCHES OF MUSIC. DRAMATIC ART. TEACHERS' TRAINING DEPARTMENT.
JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, VICTOR GARWOOD, ALLEN H. SPENCER, GERTRUDE MURDOUGH, GLENN DILLARD GUNN, HOWARD WELLS, Piano; KARLETON HACKETT, NOYES B. MINER, HOLMES COWPER, GLENN HALL, RAGNA LINNE, MABEL GOODWIN, LOUISE BLISH, Singing; WILHELM MIDDELSCHULTE, Organ; JAN VAN OORDT, Violin; ADOLPH WEIDIG, Composition; JAN KALAS, Violoncello, and thirty other superior instructors.
Catalogue mailed free. 243 Wabash Avenue, care of American Conservatory

Gottschalk Lyric School. Musical and Dramatic.
CATALOGUE MAILED ON APPLICATION.
L. G. GOTTSCHALK, Director. KIMBALL HALL, 243-253 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO.

RECOLLECTIONS OF FAMOUS MUSICIANS.

By S. G. Pratt.

THEODORE KULLAK, THE ELDER, FRANZ BENDEL, RAFAEL JOSEFFY, CARL TAUSIG AND JOSEF JOACHIM.

IN 1868 I went to Berlin to study with Theodore Kullak, he being recognized as one of the greatest piano teachers at that time. My teachers in Chicago, Louis Staab and Paul Becker, were both Germans, and had instilled a proper respect in my mind for the works of the great masters of the Fatherland. Becker frequently impressed upon me the fact that in Germany I should hear only the best music. He said: "You have so much trash here in America. Now, in Germany you will hear only good music; here everybody plays the 'Maiden's Prayer.' Oh, it is intolerable, especially when they play it like this." He then sat down at the piano and imitated an amateur's dreadful effort. A few months later I was ascending the stairway of Kullak's Neu Akademie der Ton Künst, in Friederichstrasse in Berlin, to arrange for lessons, when my ears were assailed by a very familiar strain. I paused and listened in astonishment, for the unmistakable "tinkeley, tinkeley, tinkeley, tink" of the "Maiden's Prayer" were issuing forth from this school of classic music, to reach which I had journeyed 5,000 miles and suffered the tortures of two weeks' seasickness. I stifled an exclamation and thought, "One touch of nature makes the whole world kin"; there must be some "trash" in Germany as well as in America.

My first interview with Theodore Kullak impressed me most pleasantly. He was slight, of medium height, wore spectacles and a high black stock about his neck, which gave him quite a pedagogic appearance. But if he had an eye to business he had also a heart for justice, which later on I had occasion to test—a pleasant voice, a willing smile and a gentlemanly manner made one forget the rather homely and somewhat pinched looking face. After hearing me play and complimenting my work he said:

"I must let you go to Franz Bendel. He is a very distinguished pianist, and has recently played with much success in Paris, and (seeing my look of protest), besides," he continued, "he can the English speak." Our conversation had been carried on in German, and, on my part, with no little embarrassment, for my vocabulary was quite limited at that time, and I therefore assented to the arrangement, which otherwise I should not have done. My first lesson with Bendel was somewhat amusing, the introduction being anything but impressive. As I entered the teaching room a gentleman, with a large round head with generous hirsute adornment, arose from a seat behind a little desk and, shaking hands, said, with evident effort:

"How-do you-do?"

"Very well, I thank you," I answered.

Then, placing his thumbs under the arms of his vest, he said with much deliberation:

"I am vone pupeel of Liszt; I am vone gr-r-reat pianist."

He then stopped, apparently having exhausted his stock of English. Noting his embarrassment I said: "Ich kann etwas deutsch sprechen," and from that time on he spoke German, now and then bringing in a word of English.

The pompous style of his introduction, no doubt largely due to his limited English, had already prejudiced me against him; thus it soon came about that before my first term was concluded I informed Kullak that he himself must give me lessons or I should feel obliged to go over to Carl Taussig's school, where Joseffy and others were studying. He said, however, I should conclude my term with Bendel, and meanwhile he would give me one lesson a week. Bendel naturally soon learned of this and angrily left the school. After that I took two private lessons, and one lesson in class weekly from Kullak, studying harmony and composition in private and also in class under Richard Wuerst. Wuerst had been a pupil of Mendelssohn. He was short and slight, with a small, partial hunchback, had a piercing gray eye under a large overhanging brow, and his disposition seemed curdled by disappointment as a composer. A spirit of vindictiveness appeared to possess him, and as a critic he was inclined to be more caustic than just. He was a character which put into a story by a Dickens would have given an immortal individuality to envy. Later on, when the Wagner propaganda began, owing to his very bitter opposition, he was dubbed "der kleine Richard." I remember on one occasion he was bitterly complaining of the unmusical tendency of Liszt and Wagner, and exclaimed: "Oh, if Mendelssohn were still alive, what a difference it would make." In the class I attended once a week at Kullak's I met Xaver Scharwenka, who had already won favor in public appearances and was regarded as the coming great pianist, and Herr Lebegott, besides another whose name I do not now remember. In teaching, Kullak would sometimes get up and walk about the room, calling out a false note, or making some criticism; again, if a pupil was "well up" in his piece, the master would seat himself at a second piano near by and play the music in unison with him, thus setting the pace for speed in the rhythmical movement. During the season they had two or three Prüfungen (trials), with a small orchestra—pupils' concerts we should call them—the rehearsals for which were held at the school under Wuerst's direction; Scharwenka was always to the fore on these occasions and carried off the honors with flying colors to so speak.

An instance showing Kullak's sense of delicacy and justice occurred shortly after my entering the school. I had written some short piano pieces (Salon stücken) before going to Berlin. Several had been published in Chicago, but two or three were still in manuscript, and my teacher took a very kindly interest in them. Indeed, he put vitality into his commendation by writing to a publisher who issued them upon his recommendation. When they finally appeared my heart swelled with pride, as I thought, "Now I will show the others in the class something they cannot do."

Thus puffed up with my self-sufficiency I took the pieces with me to Kullak, and presented them with my compliments. He said: "We will hear these at the next lesson, Herr Pratt."

The next was to be in the class, and I lived for two days in an ecstasy of expectant triumph.

At the next lesson I saw my teacher in his private room before going into the class.

He took up the music, saying: "Perhaps you would prefer to play them to me first in the private lesson?" and, noticing my look of disappointment, he continued, "there may be some corrections and criticisms to make, and don't you think we had best postpone going over them to our private lesson?" Little understanding the kindly opportunity he had thus offered me, I answered with all the confidence of inexperience: "I came here to learn, and I expect you to correct my mistakes, of course." Then with a polite wave of the hand, which I remembered afterward as being like the Roman emperor's decision of "thumbs down" for the finishing of an unfortunate victim of a gladiatorial contest, he said: "Wie Sie wollen, Herr Pratt." Immediately thereafter we entered the classroom, and he announced to the class somewhat loudly, I thought:

"Herr Pratt will now play for us two original compositions; one, his farewell to Chicago, called 'Gute Bye,' and a valse 'Rêve d'Esprit.'"

With that I sat down and began the first number, which was a weak dilution of Gottschalk's "Last Hope." I had played but a measure when Kullak, looking over my shoulder, exclaimed:

"That is wrong; that is, it is wrongly written; that should be a sharp, not a flat," and with his pencil he indicated the correction. I started again and got to the third measure when the same thing occurred. By this time my pride had melted, but he allowed me to finish the introduction, when he said: "The whole thing is falsely written. The idea is not bad, but you have not studied composition. You must take private lessons of Herr Wuerst, Mr. Pratt." Meantime the fellows behind me snickered, and I felt a peculiar longing for a crack in the floor or some small hole into which I could creep out of sight and die. Fortunately the little valse, being less involved in harmony, was not condemned, but praised as a promising work. I tried to explain to Kullak that I had never had a teacher in harmony or composition; that I had studied from books only. He answered: "You must therefore have private lessons, and also because you do not understand German enough for the class." I was completely crushed, however, for the time being. Evidently gloating over my failure, Herr Lebegott, with long, straight hair, and long, sharp face, arose and asked: "Herr Professor, dare I also beg one of my compositions to the class to bring?"

"Certainly," answered Kullak, "one week from to-day I will hear your work, Herr Lebegott."

The next week when Kullak came into the classroom he said:

"Well, Herr Lebegott, did you bring your piece?" Receiving an affirmative reply, the master motioned him to the piano, and, taking his MS., said, "Aha, it is a Mazurka de Concert. Very nicely written, too."

With that the young man, swelling with pride (including, I thought, that which had oozed out of me the preceding week), proceeded with brilliant arpeggio passages on the common chords written in the time of a mazurka.

Kullak meanwhile walked up and down the room, never saying a word, but grunting once in awhile at the end of some passage. Finally, Herr Lebegott finished with a great flourish and the meister, still standing away, said:

"Yes, Herr Lebegott, very beautifully and correctly written, but without an idea from beginning to end. Write not, I beg you, unless you have an idea," and, then, glancing to where I sat, he added:

"It is better to have a good idea, even if it is not correctly written out, than not to have any at all and write it correctly. Writing notes according to rule is not composing."

Thus his sense of justice served out a balm to my wounded heart, and punished Herr Lebegott for his presumption.

Carl Tausig and His Prodigy, Rafael Joseffy.

About this time, Carl Tausig was attracting much attention and arousing wonderment and enthusiasm. His performances in public were written of as phenomenal for perfection of technic, virility and power, and certainly the one I attended, in the Saal der Singakademie, justified all I had read and heard.

There was, however, a certain hardness of tone in melodic passages which was not agreeable, and showed a lack of emotional tenderness which characterized Rubinstein and Liszt; at the same time there was such flawless perfection in difficult passages that it was almost painful; it seemed superhuman. One of Tausig's favorite pupils at that time was Rafael Joseffy, who was considered a marvelous prodigy. I remember one evening Albert R. Parsons, who was also studying with Tausig, went with me to call on Joseffy, who lived in Potsdammer strasse. He was but a boy, full of life and vivacity. He was about to give a concert in the Saal Armin in Unter den Linden, and our conversation chiefly concerned that event. Joseffy was also enthusiastic regarding his teacher, and as we sat in the shadowy room, lighted only with a student lamp, he related the marvelous things Tausig had done before his class.

Among other things, he said Tausig had transposed at sight some of the "Gradus ad Parnassum" of Clementi, and played them equally well in various keys, and that he did the same marvelous trick with a Bach fugue Joseffy was studying with him.

Thus Tausig grew into the proportions of a wizard in my mind, but I had no thought of leaving Kullak, whose value as a teacher I had learned to appreciate.

Shortly after this I attended Joseffy's concert and was astonished at the virtuosity of so young a person.

I remember among the pieces played the Bach Fantaisie and Fugue, which was given with great precision, clearness and perfect mastery.

Before the end of my first year, owing to injudicious practice in preparing to play at Kullak's annual concert, I lost the use of my left hand and was compelled to give up lessons entirely. During the second year Kullak, being aware that I could not continue at the piano, at my request gave me a letter to Baron von Hulsen, the intendant of the Royal Opera, who gave me permission to attend the rehearsals at the Grand Opera House. The study of composition and orchestration was also continued with Wuerst, and the scores of the Beethoven and other symphonies were read and studied; often at Bilse's concerts.

During the winter it was my good fortune to meet the great violinist Joachim at our Ambassador Bancroft's house.

Joachim was then at the zenith of his glory, his public appearances in Berlin being rare events of importance, and his performances in London, no less than throughout Germany, always arousing enthusiasm.

The great violinist seemed a thorough gentleman, with a courteous and genial manner. His public performances had always inspired in me a feeling of admiration and something akin to reverence, for he was more dignified than passionate.

Toward the close of the season a little song, dedicated to his wife, Amelia Joachim, brought us into more friendly relations.

I remember speaking of writing an opera in English and complained of the prejudice in the United States

ST. LOUIS ADVERTISEMENTS.

HOMER MOORE, BARITONE.
The Odeon, St. Louis, Mo.

MRS. STELLA KELLOGG HAINES,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION:
101, 102, 103 Vista Building, Cor. Grand and Franklin, ST. LOUIS, MO.

ALEXANDER HENNEMAN,
VOCAL CULTURE.
Opera. Coaching. Oratorio.
Henneman Hall, 2723 Olive St., ST. LOUIS.

against my native tongue in music. "Why," Joachim exclaimed, "I cannot understand that!"

I said: "Do you consider English as well adapted to music as German?"

"By all means," he replied. "In fact, in many respects it is superior to our language." And then, continuing, he said: "When I return from my visit to London, where I hear the oratorios of Haydn and Händel sung in English, and hear them produced here in German I receive a shock; it sounds so coarse by comparison."

"I am very glad to hear you speak thus," I replied, "for it gives me much encouragement."

"Why," said he, "the Germans have succeeded in making a magnificent school of opera, in spite of gutturals which your English does not possess at all."

All this was said in perfect English, showing no trace of dialect whatever, and evidencing that the speaker was a scholar as well as a thinker of no mean order.

(To be continued.)

BUFFALO MUSIC.

Buffalo, July 17, 1901.

JULY 16 was Chautauqua Day at the Pan-American Exposition. The day began with a concert given by members of the faculty of the Chautauqua School of Music, under the direction of Dr. H. R. Palmer. The following program was given:

Organ solo, Sounds from the Alps.....Flagler
I. V. Flagler.
Quartet, Bridal Chorus, from Rose Maiden.....Cowen
Mrs. Ada M. Sheffield, soprano; Miss Grace L. Carter, contralto; Edward Strong, tenor; J. Lawrence Knowles, basso.
Violin soli
Preislied, from Die Meistersinger.....Wagner-Wilhelmj
Scenas de la Csarda, No. 1.....Hubay
Sol Marcosson.
Duet, Oh, that We Two Were Maying.....Smith
Mrs. Sheffield, Mr. Strong.
Piano soli—
Meine Freude (Polish song).....Chopin-Liszt
March in D, from Suite, op. 91, No. 4.....Raff
William H. Sherwood.
Henry B. Vincent, accompanist.

Much against the usual rule the audience remained throughout the concert. Mr. Flagler's selection, "Sounds from the Alps," a composition of his own, was highly appreciated, and the applause he received gave evidence that the audience was delighted with his performance. Mr. Flagler is in constant demand at dedications of organs all over the country, and no instrument, however intricate, ever troubles his serenity.

Mr. Sherwood's personality is that of a man of musical temperament, and his reading of his two selections, "Meine Freude" (Polish song), Chopin-Liszt; March in D (from suite), op. 91, Raff, was admirable. From all sides I hear a desire expressed that Mr. Sherwood be asked to give an entire recital at the Temple of Music.

The quartet, "Bridal Chorus," from the "Rose Maiden," was fine, the pure, sympathetic voice of the tenor showing to especial advantage. Mr. Marcosson's violin solos were enjoyable numbers, Mr. Sherwood being the accompanist. Wilhelmj's arrangement of Wagner's "Preislied" and "Scenas de la Csarda," by Hubay, were given with a smoothness of tone and finish rarely equaled.

Mrs. K. Riesberg.

The Philharmonic Society of Johnstown, Pa., has elected the following officers, who will look after the interests of the organization during the coming season: Thomas E. Reynolds, president; Alvin D. Davis and G. W. Hamilton, vice-presidents; Joseph Reese, secretary and treasurer; T. E. Morgan, conductor; J. T. Reese, assistant conductor; Miss Rose Sloan, accompanist; W. J. Endsley, M. C. Kohler, Charles Replogle, Moses Owens and Harry Hesselbein, executive committee; W. J. Endsley, Joseph T. Reese and E. B. Entwisle, music committee; Moses Owens, librarian.

CINCINNATI.

Cincinnati, July 20, 1901.

ROMEO FRICK, baritone, of the Conservatory of Music, who is at present in London, England, has written several letters to his friends. He is enthusiastic about the reception which he received. He sang for several artists of fame, who gave him much praise and encouragement. First among these were Alberto Randegger, whose favorable comment was given in no uncertain tone.

Mr. Frick enjoyed the rare privilege of being present at every rehearsal of the Covent Garden operas.

Signor Mancinelli, one of the conductors of the season, said to Mr. Tirindelli: "I like Mr. Frick's voice very much indeed, and it is excellently schooled. There is no reason why he should not be successful in opera."

A number of singers were enthusiastic, and spoke of Mr. Frick's singing as a clear demonstration that a voice can be perfectly trained in America. This is certainly a very high compliment paid to Miss Clara Baur, to whom Mr. Frick owes his vocal training altogether.

Mr. Frick has entered into an engagement to give a number of concerts in different American cities, and will soon depart for home.

The Conservatory of Music is enjoying a very prosperous summer school. There are students from the city and students from many States. The faculty of teachers is a strong one, and the normal class numbers many teachers.

The first recital of the summer season, which was given in Recital Hall on Thursday evening, July 18, was an exceptionally interesting one, presenting the following program:

Songs—
Because She Kissed It.....Gaynor
The Wind Went Wooing the Rose.....Smith
Slumber Song.....Smith
Piano Solos—
Two Preludes.....Chopin
Two Etudes.....Chopin
Mazurka.....Chopin
Violin Solo, Variations Sericuses.....Corelli-Leonard
Recitation, E Strano.....
Cavatina, Ah! fors è lui (La Traviata).....Verdi
Recitation, Pauline Pavlovna.....Aldrich
Piano Solos—
Liebestraum.....Liszt
Valse, Le Bal.....Rubinstein
Bird Song.....Taubert

Participants were: Mrs. Bessie Belle Andrews, soprano; Miss Helen May Curtis, reader; Louis Schwebel, pianist; Leroy McMakin, violinist; Miss Frances Moses and Hugo Sederberg, accompanists.

Mrs. Andrews some years ago was Bessie Bell at the Conservatory of Music, and then developed a light coloratura voice of much sweetness and elasticity. Year after year she returns to the Alma Mater during the summer months from the South, and attending the normal class renews acquaintances with her teacher, Miss Clara Baur. Her voice is held under good control, and particularly satisfactory was her singing of the brilliant recitative and cavatina from "La Traviata."

The pianist was Louis Schwebel, who by his playing proved himself a serious artist, with unqualified endowments of musicianship. Mr. Schwebel studied several years under De Pachmann and profited much by his teaching. He has acquired much of the De Pachmann velvetiness of touch and delicacy in the delivery. But Mr. Schwebel is not one sided. He gave a very scholarly reading to the "Liebestraum" of Liszt and Rubinstein's valse "Le Bal."

Leroy McMakin is to be congratulated upon his playing of the violin. There is an earnestness in his style that compels attention. He played the "Variations Serieuses," Corelli-Leonard, with a discrimination in the points of interpretation and a technical clearness that deserves much praise and naturally enough invited the encore which it received.

Miss Curtis is a reader of force and intelligence. Her recitation of "Pauline Pavlovna" was thoroughly enjoyable. As an encore she gave a little humorous sketch in the negro dialect.

A series of lectures is being conducted at the Conservatory of Music by Arthur H. Barbour, whose first subject given on Wednesday of last week was "The Organ in Church: Its Use and Abuse." His subject on last Wednesday was "Great Masters of the Organ." Mr. Barbour is entertaining and piquant as a lecturer. His personal reminiscences of the great organists of the present day are especially interesting. He illustrates his lectures as he goes along with numbers on the conservatory organ. These lectures, while specifically intended for students, are attended with profit by the general public, for Mr. Barbour never becomes technical or involved in obscurity.

Miss Nora K. Schormer, the talented daughter of Dr. Schormer, of this city, is making considerable progress in her violin studies under Arno Hilf, in Leipsic, by dint of hard work. She recently played in public the Vieuxtemps "Appassionata," which was well received by the critical audience. Her teacher predicts a future for her. Miss Schormer will remain abroad for another year's study.

J. A. Homan.

Music on the New Bridge.—Another man used the tower of the new East River Bridge last Saturday as a means of gaining some notoriety. He was Carl Lanser, a musician, of 11 Ten Eyck street, Williamsburg. While a large crowd of workmen looked on he played a number of patriotic selections on the violin at the top of the steel structure.

On the Fourth of July Lanser tried to go to the top of the tower, but the bridge officials would not permit him. Yesterday afternoon he got the necessary permit, and with six companions climbed to the centre of the river span at the foot of South Fifth street, Williamsburg. Immediately upon reaching the lofty position, Lanser played the "Star Spangled Banner." Passengers on ferryboats leaving the foot of Broadway could hear the music and some of the women waved their handkerchiefs when the strains reached their ears.—The Sun.

A Bennett Pupil in Opera.—Miss Ruth Peebles, one of S. C. Bennett's pupils, has made herself popular with the audiences at the performances of the American Opera Company at Providence, R. I. The following is taken from the Providence Telegram of recent date: "Dainty, captivating Ruth Peebles again scored an unmistakable hit at the Providence Opera House yesterday. She appeared as Arline in the 'Bohemian Girl,' and sang that role with excellent appreciation of its musical possibilities. No one has appeared in this city in recent years who has so thoroughly fitted the part as does Miss Peebles, excepting Alice Nielsen."

OLIVE MEAD, VIOLINIST.

Appearing during the coming season of 1901-2 with the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA in Boston for the third time. During July and August, please address MISS MEAD personally, 560 Park Avenue, New York.

Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

MRS.

Carl Alves

Has Resumed Vocal Instruction at her Home Studio:
1146 Park Ave. near 91st Street, New York.

LOUIS V. SAAR

PIANO and COMPOSITION.
REPERTOIRE and SONG INTERPRETATION.
Will resume teaching on September 16
Early application for instruction is suggested.
[illegible] East 83d Street, - - NEW YORK CITY.

JULIAN

PASCAL

Pianist. Concert, Recitals, Musicales.
For Terms and Dates address care of
MUSICAL COURIER, 1135 Broadway, New York.

HENRI G. SCOTT,

BASSO.
ORATORIO, CONCERT, RECITALS.
ADDRESS: 14 E. 42d Street, NEW YORK.
2117 N. 20th Street, PHILADELPHIA.

MISS

MONTEFIORE

VOICE.
Private Studio and Address:
THE ORMONDE,
2030 Broadway, corner 70th St., New York.

ETHEL L. ROBINSON,

(LONDON CONCERT DIRECTION)
Telegrams: "Musikchor, London."
122 Beaufort St., S. W., LONDON, ENGLAND.

Musical . . People.

The pupils of Miss Laura Wick's junior class gave a successful musicale at her residence on July 2 at Greenwich, Conn.

Isadore Troostwyck, a violin instructor in Max Dessaur's School of Music, New Haven, has been appointed assistant professor at Yale.

Miss Florence Stevens, of East Orange, N. J., and solo soprano of Trinity Protestant Episcopal Church at Newark, N. J., is spending the summer abroad studying.

Hans Schneider gave an interesting lecture, with piano illustrations, on July 19, before the Mt. Pleasant Working Girls' Club, of Providence, R. I. "How to Listen to Music" was his subject.

Harry Eugene Dibble, the young Louisville (Ky.) pianist, who played with such success at a recent concert, referred to in THE MUSICAL COURIER a fortnight ago, is going to Vienna to study with Leschetizky.

Miss Lucy I. Marsh, the soprano of the Park Presbyterian Church quartet, Syracuse, has been engaged as teacher in vocal music in the College of Fine Arts of Syracuse University. She will assist Prof. Richard G. Calthrop.

J. W. Mather, the director of the Yankton Choral Union, at South Dakota, is one of the busy musicians in the Northwest. The performance of Gounod's "Redemption," which the union presented at the annual musical festival, was in every way a credit to the director and people of Yankton. Mr. Mather is the director of the Yankton College Conservatory of Music.

The first concert by the Oratorio Society organized by Miss Helen M. Tupper, was given at the Eighmey Opera House at Sayre, Pa., on June 28. Miss Tupper is a contralto singer, and a successful vocal teacher with pupils in the neighboring towns. She was a soloist at the concert. Mrs. Pomeris, of New York, soprano, and Frederick A. Carr, basso, the other soloists. The Oratorio Society is composed of 100 voices.

Rose Johnson, Beulah Marshall and Josephine Augusta Davis graduated from the piano department of the Denver (Col.) Conservatory of Music June 28. Clara Bessie King graduated from the vocal department, and teachers' certificates in piano were awarded to Alice Mary Kopplin and Florence Bell Searcy. August 1 the Denver Conservatory of Music will remove to the building lately purchased for the school on Broadway, between Fourth and Fifth avenues. This building is of gray stone with a frontage of 100 feet on Broadway, three stories in height, and having been designed as a fine family hotel is admirably adapted for the needs of the conservatory, having apartments for 100 boarding students, with all modern appliances. The directors are Mr. and Mrs. Oliver B. Howells.

The following will appear during the season at the Saturday evening concerts in the Green Acre Inn: Miss May Belle Grace Dadmun, of Boston, soprano in choir of Dr. Miner's church; Miss Ella Marie Clark, of Boston, mezzo soprano; Mrs. Jennie King Morrison, of New York, contralto, member of quartet the Church of the Divine Paternity; Miss Martha F. B. Hawes, of Portland, contralto soloist, choir High Street Congregational Church; Willard F. Bowdoin, basso, soloist choir State Street Congregational Church, Portland; Miss Bertha Webb, of Portland, violinist, soloist Women's Fadette Orchestra of Boston; Miss Ethel Hawes Aldrich, of Boston, violinist; Miss May Fuller, of Haverhill, violinist; Miss Edith V. Trowbridge, of Boston, violinist, pupil of Kruse of the Hoch Schule, Berlin; Miss Gail Willis, of Eliot, Me., 'cellist; Paul H. Kelsey, of Boston, 'cellist; Miss Lena L. Dube, of Berwick, Me., piano.

The "Verdandi," Rhode Island's first Swedish singing society, which participated at the Swedish Saengerfest held this week at Jamestown, N. Y., is composed of the following members: Oscar Ekeberg, director; first tenors, Axel H. Oden, John S. Osterberg, Joseph Anderson, Edmond Moberg, Axel Svenson; second tenors, Alfred Forsberg, J. David Dalstrom, Fred Carlsten, Per Johanson; first bass, Frithiof Bloomkvist, Gustave E. Dahlstrom, Robert Vinberg, Charles Anderson, Ole B. Owren; second bass, A. Hj. Goranson, Alfred Fryxell, C. O. Carlsten, William Sundberg, Fred Leon, Gustave F. Kallberg, Emil Olsen, Olof Ahlborg. Passive members—Hjalmar Norberg, C. L. Pedersen, B. M. Soderstrom, Aug. Pearson, Bengt Gyllenhammar, W. P. Bostrom, Peter Malm, Aug. Lundstedt, John Holm, Oswaldt Klindt, Henry Crandall, Edward Benson, Anton Christensen, Olof Wallster, A. Blomstrom, S. Svenson, Milton Johnson, J. A. Gustafson, J. A. Johnson, Otto Williamson, Carl Sandberg and Alfred Swenson.

The officers of the society are as follows: President, Oscar Carlsten; vice-president, Gustave F. Kallberg; secretary, Frithiof Blomkvist; financial secretary, J. D. Dahlstrom; treasurer, Edmond Moberg; sergeant-at-arms, Gustave Dahlstrom.

Several weeks ago THE MUSICAL COURIER referred to the concert by the Norfolk Conservatory Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Borjes. The orchestra is doing excellent work for the advancement of music at the Southern seaport city. The program for the June concert, given at the Norfolk Academy of Music, included Beethoven's Fifth Symphony and the "Egmont" Overture. The pianist of the concert, Anton F. Koerner, played the Chopin F minor Concerto. James Iredell Jenkins, baritone, sang the sacred air from Mozart's "Magic Flute" and "The Palms," by Faure. The personnel of the orchestra, composed of a number of young society people, as well as professional musicians, is as follows: Violins, Miss Florence Lesesne Tait, Mrs. E. H. Hartsell, Miss Judith Clements, Miss Florence Durham, M. P. Krueger, Jacob Hecht, Miss Grace Rhodes, Miss Lelia B. Scott, Miss Nellie Underwood, Miss Willie Cherry Nottingham, John Butcher, Stearns Dodson, Ralph Brescia; violas, Mrs. W. P. Harrell, F. G. Hjorth, M. Pruefer; 'cellos, George H. Dawes, H. Wiegand, L. Sorensen; contrabasses, D. C. Armistead, J. Spindler, Otto Escher; flutes, N. Brescia, John F. Wilts; oboes, Carl Lambin, W. P. Harrell; clarinets, S. Locascio, J. Huntington; bassoons, E. H. Hartsell, A. Facenda; horns, P. Barucci, T. J. Massey; trumpets, J. B. Gordon, C. Sherwood; trombones, G. Manzioni, E. Borjes; tympani, William C. Marshall.

Dr. Medina-Ferrer, the celebrated voice specialist, now spends the latter half of the week at Port Jervis, N. Y., where he has over forty pupils. His knowledge of the anatomy of the throat, combined with his common sense method of tone production, is the important factor in his successful work. Dr. Ferrer's New York studios are at 110 West Forty-fifth street.

MUSICIAN ENGAGED TO MARRY NEWSPAPER MAN.—The engagement of Mrs. Ziska Jennings, a San Francisco musician, to Milton Snyder, manager of the Paris edition of the New York Herald, has been announced. Mrs. Jennings has been studying abroad.

Clavier Piano School.

THE second week of the summer session at the Clavier Piano School was opened most successfully on Monday evening, July 15, with a piano recital by S. M. Fabian, artist teacher.

The heat was intense, but Mr. Fabian was equal to the occasion, and played the following program superbly:

Fugue	Rheinberger
Variations, C minor	Beethoven
Etudes	Chopin
Nocturne	Chopin
Mazurka	Chopin
Ecossais, D major	Chopin
Scherzo	Chopin
Polonaise	Chopin
Walzer aus op. 54	Raff
Moments Musicals	Schubert
Rondo	Field
Erlkoenig	Schubert-Liszt
Valse, op. 6, No. 1	Rubinstein

On Wednesday evening Frank Norris Jones, of Washington, gave the first students' recital, showing in his reading of the following program a mental poise and musical insight that foretell a successful future:

Praeludium et Fuga, C minor	Bach
Zwei Sonaten	Scarlatti-Tausig
Pastorale. Capriccio.
Rondo, G major	Beethoven
Preludes, op. 28, Nos. 21, 22, 23	Chopin
Nocturne, op. 37, No. 2	Chopin
Valse, op. 64, No. 2	Chopin
Mazurka, op. 7, No. 2	Chopin
Etudes, op. 25, No. 2; op. 10, No. 12	Chopin
Warum? op. 12, No. 3	Schumann
Vogel als Prophet, op. 82, No. 7	Schumann
Schlummerlied, op. 124, No. 16	Schumann
Impromptu, op. 90, No. 2	Schubert
Scherzetto, op. 31, No. 4	Moszkowski
Valse, op. 34, No. 1	Moszkowski

Miss Harriette Brower in her recital on Friday evening scored quite a success:

Fantaisie, C minor	Mozart
Gavotte	Gluck-Brahms
Theme and Variations	Rameau
Papillons	Schumann
Preludes	Chopin
Etude	Chopin
Nocturne	Chopin
Valse	Chopin
Humoresque	Dvorák
Tarantelle, Venice and Naples	Liszt

Despite the heat, lectures and classes during the week have been well and enthusiastically attended. Special interest is felt in the teachers' training class, conducted by Mr. Virgil.

On Friday afternoon W. A. White, of Raleigh, N. C., gave an interesting talk on "Positive Pitch," and how to acquire it. Mr. White has for some years been connected with the musical department of the Agricultural and Mechanical College and the Institute for the Blind, of North Carolina, and has thought out a system of training by which he believes it possible for everyone to acquire positive pitch. Mr. White, who is taking the course under Mr. Virgil, made such an impression that he has been asked to form a class for regular study during the rest of the term.

Recitals for this week are as follows: Miss Hoberg, Monday evening, July 22; Miss Helen B. Lawrence, of Chicago, Wednesday evening.

Instead of the Friday evening recital Frank Rebarer, one of the most successful teachers of the voice in Savannah, Ga., will at the close of the harmony lesson, 6 p. m., give an informal talk on the subject of the "Proper Way of Breathing," and will illustrate his talk by several vocal selections.

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.—A prominent vocal teacher of New York, remaining at home this summer, will have vacancy for a few good voices. Terms reduced. Address VOICE, care of MUSICAL COURIER.

E. PRESSON MILLER,
VOICE CULTURE.
METROPOLITAN COLLEGE OF MUSIC, 212 West 59th St., New York.

Carlos N. Sanchez
OPERATIC TENOR, TEACHER OF SINGING.
Voice Building a Specialty. Repertory: Church, Oratorio and Opera.
Studios: 138 Fifth Ave, New York.
Monday, Wednesday, Thursday and Saturday.
RESIDENCE: 758 WEST END AVENUE,
Corner 97th Street.

JOSEPHINE S. JACOBY,
CONTRALTO.
Address: 104 West 58th Street, NEW YORK.

1901 ANNUAL TOUR OF 1902
PAUR SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,
EMIL PAUR, Conductor.
Conductor New York Philharmonic.
Formerly Conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra.
WISSNER PIANO USED.
Miss ANNA MILLAR, Manager, 540 Fulton St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

A PLAY FOR PIANISTS.

THE new play of Björnstjern Björnson, the Norwegian poet, novelist and playwright, is called "Laboremus," and the English translation reveals to us that, despite his robust mental health, Björnson is beginning to show traces of mysticism; in a word he is come under the subtle influence of Maurice Maeterlinck, the Belgian Bee-Keeper and mystic. The Academy puts it this way:

"When a creative talent has fulfilled the hour of absolute maturity, its imaginative processes usually undergo an excessive refinement; they are oversubtilized, and there is, of course, no corresponding increase of force to give the subtlety and the refinement that almost physical support which they need. Consequently the work of a venerable artist, while it breathes a fragile charm, often fails in conviction. Such is the case with Ibsen, and such is the case with his great compeer, Björnson."

But there is a pianist, a woman pianist in the play, and this may make it of interest to musicians. The part she plays is a curious one and one hardly credible. Here are a few extracts:

BORGNY—I wanted to tell you something that happened in my own family. A lady, one of the noblest that ever lived, fell very ill. She sat in an easy chair or lay in bed, and was no longer able to do anything. She could not even play, which she liked best of all; nor was it possible for her to have her daughter with her.

LONGFRID—Why could she not have her daughter with her?

BORGNY—The disease was contagious. * * * This longing for music and for her daughter rendered her condition worse. The doctors came to the conclusion that she ought, at least, to hear some music. The family lived in the country, but was very rich. So they advertised through a musical agency for an accomplished lady pianist.

LONGFRID—But the disease was contagious!

BORGNY—That was why it was so long before anyone could be found. At last, however, there was one who ventured.

LONGFRID—A skillful one?

BORGNY—An extraordinary one. A renowned one, even.

LONGFRID—This interests me! Music as a cure! * * * And what was the result!

BORGNY—Excellent. She enchanted every one. There was something in her person and in her music, something that hypnotized.

The patient revived; her appetite increased; sleep came; her vital power quickened, so that the doctors began to have fresh hopes. Far and wide, people spoke of it. The music had really worked wonders.

But there was a "shy man sitting in a corner," the husband. The pianist fell in love with him, and changed her tactics. The patient understood everything:

LONGFRID—And said nothing?

BORGNY—I should not have done so either; and soon she was no longer able to say anything.

LONGFRID—How so?

BORGNY—The other one took away her strength, inch by inch, with her wishes, with her eyes, with her music. She even turned the music against her.

LONGFRID (Rising)—Such a thing I never * * *

The plot is richly embroidered with the inventions of an opulent fancy—a fancy which seems always inclined toward the "precious"—as, for instance, in the love scene between the Undine pianist and her second victim:

LYDIA—I thank you for wanting to come to me. You shall not be disappointed. I will create a deep, vast silence around you, as if you were living in a forest, a large forest.

LONGFRID—How?

LYDIA—In art the essential thing is to be alone, far away from all surroundings.

LONGFRID—Naturally.

LYDIA—Last time this was not possible. All the time was lost in trying to find out how to be alone. That caused the unrest. Don't you understand?

LONGFRID—Perhaps * * * Yes, do you know * * *

LYDIA—Let us go away, Longfrid. There is no other means. You and I—I and you, and stillness, stillness. No one and nothing else besides. Then you shall see.

LYDIA— * * * What I understood was her longing. Her pain in the life she led. Her craving for what she could not reach. Her aspiration after a higher form of life. Her belief that she could reach it by winning the soul of a man, and then by having a share in life through him * * * A crime? I see no crime in the Undine. The story of the Undine is the great Nature yearning; the great love for what is above her, for that which delivers, whatever be the obstacles.

We wonder if Lydia is a study from life, and also we greatly wonder what make of piano she employed to hypnotize her victims!

AN INTERVIEW WITH LEONCAVALLO.

THE Allgemeine Musik Zeitung of June 21 has the following paragraph: "Mascagni has sent a communication to the Italian papers stating that he, with a competent capitalist and a number of composers, will establish a 'free operatic publishing house,' to compete with the firms of Ricordi and Sonzogno. Probably the new house will buy out Sonzogno."

In connection with this report the Cronache Musicali publishes an interview with Leoncavallo. The composer of "I Pagliacci" states that on the day of the first funeral ceremonies for Verdi, Mascagni invited Franchetti Giordano and him to breakfast, and that he then in the course of conversation mentioned a discussion which he had at Palermo with the Baron Ignazio Florio about the unsatisfactory condition of modern composers, during which the idea of a co-operative society for the protection of modern works was suggested. Soon after the breakfast with Mascagni Leoncavallo received a letter from Jacobson, of the Boersen Courier, of Berlin, asking for information, to which he sent the reply that the idea was worthy of consideration, but that he did not believe that it could be carried out in practice. The article in the Berlin journal appeared at the end of February, but was never mentioned in Italy till lately. Leoncavallo went on to say that legislation was necessary to put down the publishing "camorre," and that as soon as he had finished the work ordered by Kaiser William, "Roland of Berlin," he would devote his energies to promoting such legislation, but that Mascagni's idea did not present to him a practical appearance.

The opera will of course be produced first in Berlin, and then perhaps at Turin; but certainly not in Milan, because Milan is impossible. "The capital of Lombardy is the den of a camorre, and neither Mascagni, Puccini nor I will choose it as the place for a first performance," are Leoncavallo's words, and he adds, "Remember, that in the Milan theatres this class of persons occupy three-quarters of the seats, partisans of the rival publisher, political enemies of your own publisher, impresarii raging at being neglected, singers livid for the same reason, anæmic composers who are jealous, and critics who have failed as librettists. The public is impotent, and the critics of the journals are members of a disgraceful camorre."

The paper from which we are quoting augurs great success for Mascagni's idea, in spite of the countless obstacles which it will encounter. But earnest efforts will be made to effect some improvement in the state of musical composers, and the Roman "Authors' Society" will lend its aid, and has gained the support of a young and energetic member of the House of Deputies.

With reference to his Mass, which it has been announced cannot be produced at the Pantheon, Leoncavallo affirms that he will not abandon the use of female voices, and adds that sacred music has great attractions for him, but that the art of Palestrina is not the limit. "If that great polyphonist had had an orchestra like that of Bayreuth he would not have confined himself to the simple forms which we are now asked to imitate. It is necessary to give a religious impression, and I find a thousand times more of that in the 'Good Friday' in 'Parsifal' than in a thousand pieces of so-called religious modern music. Critics of Wagner make me smile. He is a colossus that needs no commentator. But it is a great mistake to imitate him in a servile spirit."

Duffy and Vogler at the Ocean House.

E. S. DUFFY, conductor of Duffy's Military Band, who directed the patriotic concert at Fort Greene Park on the Fourth of July, is associated with other musicians in the music at the Ocean House, Long Branch. Among the artists is Louis Vogler, the pianist. The music at the Ocean House this season is a feature especially appreciated by men and women of refinement spending the summer as guests at the famous hotel.

ALL RECORDS BROKEN THIS SEASON
By "THE POPULAR MUSIC KING"
BROOKE AND HIS FAMOUS
Chicago Marine Band.
THOMAS PRESTON BROOKE, Conductor.

During his recent eight weeks' engagement Brooke drew the greatest crowds for any one day, one week or one month in the 21 years' history of West End, New Orleans. Now playing at Zoological Gardens, Cincinnati, and breaking all records at this popular resort. All engagements cancelled to remain till Sept. 8th, Sept. 9th, Buffalo Exposition, for special concert engagement of four weeks, to be followed by twelve weeks' concert tour, playing 118 concerts in 109 cities. Sold solid till Christmas. The Greatest Popular Music Band in the World.

Office: 200 WABASH AVENUE, CHICAGO.

ST. NICHOLAS GARDEN, 66th Street, near Columbus Avenue.
KALTENBORN ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS.
Every Evening at 8:15. Admission, 50 cents.
VARIED PROGRAM NIGHTLY. AUTOMATICALLY COOLED. NO DRAFT.

EVAN WILLIAMS, Oratorio and Concert. TENOR.
For Terms, Dates, &c, address
WOLFSOHN'S MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th Street, City.

GRACE G. GARDNER, Concert and Oratorio SOPRANO.
Pupil of Blasco, Milan; Schmidt, Berlin; Henschel, London.
Studio: 36 West 25th St., New York.

ARTHUR BERESFORD, BASSO-BARITONE.
STEINERT HALL, BOSTON, MASS.

J. FRED WOLLE, ORGANIST.
Address: THE WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., New York.

BROAD STREET CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC,
GILBERT RAYNOLDS COMBS, Director.
1331 South Broad Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE FREE.

Sara Anderson, Soprano,
For terms and particulars address
51 East 64th St.,
NEW YORK CITY.

2046 Leavenworth Street,
San Francisco, July 15, 1901.

THE "City on a Hill" is once more a scene of activity, stir and bustle, for this week opens the great Epworth League conference, and it was estimated last night that fully 7,000 delegates had arrived, and by to-morrow night it is thought that there will be no less than 30,000 strangers in the city. Market street is hung with streamers of the League colors, red and yellow, and flags and banners and what not present the town in a most gala day dress. To-morrow, Tuesday, evening is the time set for the grand opening concert, in which a mammoth chorus of carefully selected voices is to take part, and the new memorial pipe organ, presented by Mrs. Jane Stanford, widow of the late ex-Governor Leland Stanford, to Stanford University, will be heard for the first time in this city. It has been lent for this occasion and temporarily set up in the ladies' pavilion, where the concerts are to be held.

The chorus, made up of 15,000 voices from different parts of the United States, will give at Tuesday's concert the following program: "The Heavens Are Telling," Mozart's "Gloria" from the Twelfth Mass, "Thanks Be To God," "Be Not Afraid," "By Babylon's Wave," "Worthy Is the Lamb," and in conclusion the "Hallelujah Chorus." The organ will be handled alternately by W. F. Skeele, of Los Angeles, Cal., and William B. King, of Oakland, Cal.

The organ itself is a fine instrument. It is a three manual instrument, and has forty-six stops, with all modern attachments. At the close of the chorus work on Tuesday night Mr. Skeele will present the following solos on the organ: March, "Le Grand Chœur," in D, Guilmant; "Barcarolle," Lemaire; "The Storm," Lemmens; "Variations on a Scotch Air," Buck; "Toccata," from the Fifth Symphony of Widor.

Miss Marie Georgianni, the organist of old St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church, leaves to-day for a three months' vacation, during which she will visit the Buffalo Exposition. Professor Martinez will fill her position till her return.

On Tuesday evening last at a concert given in the parlor of the Hotel Capitola at Capitola, during the reading by Leo Cooper, of San Francisco, presenting Dr. C. W. Doyle's new play, "Cherries Are Ripe," Miss Bud Friedlander, of this city, a rising vocalist with a very promising voice, rendered the music, receiving at the close of the program much flattering commendation from her friends and others in the audience. Miss Friedlander is studying, it is said, with a professional career in view. She was accompanied by Miss Sternheim, of San Francisco.

Sigmund Beel, a favorite 'Frisco violinist, now in London town, gave a concert to our British cousins on June 10 in New Bechstein Hall, with a fine program, in which he was assisted by Miss Ada Wright at the piano, with Henry Bird acting as accompanist. Mr. Beel has many friends in 'Frisco, who are glad to hear of his success anywhere and at any time.

Mrs. Mary Carpaneto Mead, Miss Isobel Kerr, Miss Xena Roberts and Miss Isella Van Pelt, four of Mrs. Marriner-Campbell's pupils, who have been singing together in quartet, have been giving the music at the Chautauqua Assembly in Shasta Retreat this summer, and with such satisfaction to all that they have been re-engaged for the entire circuit next year. They also sung for the same society in Placerville.

Dr. and Mrs. Campbell have returned from their outing in the Siskiyou Mountains much refreshed and ready for the season's work. Mrs. Campbell, however, expects to visit several friends in the country before opening her vocal classes in August.

I have received from Mrs. Albert I. Elkus, the president of the Saturday Club, Sacramento, the prospectus for the coming year, which opens in October. The outlook is more promising than that of any preceding year. The membership is greatly augmented, and the interest more keen than ever before. The review shows an almost exhaustive list of the works of classic and modern composers already performed before the club, and the programs laid out for the coming year's work embrace much of interest. I note that for April 12 Madame Bloomfield-Zeisler is booked for a piano recital. On her last appearance on this coast a few years ago Madame Zeisler was made the honored guest of the Saturday Club, and was tendered a reception in the lovely parlors of Mrs. Harris Weinstock, in which all the members of the club gained a knowledge of her womanly personality that will long be remembered.

Among other settings for the "artists' days" are a song and 'cello recital by Mrs. Clarence Wetmore, contralto, and Louis von der Mehden, Jr., 'cellist, for October 26; the Minetti Sextet, for December 7; piano and violin recital, by Miss Elsa Von Mauderscheid, pianist, and John Lewis, violinist, for March 1; January 18, Liza Lehmann's "Daisy Chain" and "Persian Garden" will be the centre of interest.

The active membership for the coming year is as follows: Class A—Misses Lulu Yoerk, Evelyn P. Griffiths, Maud Blue, Florine Wenzel, Rosina Rosin, Eda Quire, Lottie Shepstone, Emma Schieling; Mesdames Emil Steinmann, L. C. Farrar, Ethan A. Gilbert, Thea Sanderini, N. Wilson; director, Mrs. W. E. Briggs. Class B—Misses Maye Carroll, Helen Dunn, Josephine Franks, Elizabeth Flemming, Gertrude Gerrish, Sue Pierson, Laura Dierssen, Minnie E. Rowley; Mesdames J. H. Coppersmith, Frank Bellhouse, W. J. Murcell, F. M. Jones, W. R. Stone; director, Miss Henrietta Andriot. Class C—Mesdames C. K. Lipman, E. G. Adams, Frances Moeller, Inez Hood; Misses Adelaide Dierssen, Elizabeth Taylor, Frances Connelly, Ruby Cooper, Mamie Barrett, Helen Howe, Sophie Price, Kate Winn, Rae Breuning; director, Miss Josephine Blanch. Class D—Mesdames Albert Elkus, C. G. Stever, E. B. Willis, J. A. Moynahan, R. H. Hawley, Egbert Brown; Misses Florence Williams, Clara Dippel, Elizabeth Lonne, Frances Nourse, May Omerod, Fanny Campbell; director, Mrs. Frank Miller. The accompanists are Mrs. Emil Stimman and Miss Florence Williams. Officers for the ensuing year: Mrs. Albert Elkus, president; Mrs. Frank Miller, first vice-president; Mrs. Frances Moeller, second vice-president; Mrs. Louise McC. Gavigan, secretary; Miss Aurelia M. Waite, treasurer; executive committee, Mrs. W. E. Briggs, Mrs. J. A. Moynahan, Miss Evelyn P. Griffitts, Miss Josephine Blanch, Miss Maud Blue; secretary, Mrs. Louise McC. Gavigan.

The student members of the Saturday Club are: Gladys Buchanan, Edna Curtis, Vera Crouch, Irene Gifford, Stella Ginsberg, Leslie Genung, Eva Grazel, Alma Grady, Alma Heitman, Edith Heilbron, Edith Hunt, Avis Hall, Fay Jackson, Pearl Jost, Elita King, Phoebe Litzberg, Verna McKim, Edith Miller, Flora Miester, Clara McCurdy, Clara McGuirk, Olga Nathan, Miley Pope, Nellie Rumage, Aimee Stuart, Aileen Sparks, Ollie Sheehan, Mabel Siller, Ethel Schneider, Anna Thorpe and Edith Trainor.

Roscoe Warren Lucy, the pianist, is said to be having much success in his concert tour through the State with the Knickerbocker Quartet, of this city. It is a happy combination and one that should find favor even with the most exacting audiences.

Signor Fachutar, the mandolinist and guitarist, is also touring the State during his vacation.

Frank Coffin, the tenor, formerly of Grace Church choir, this city, and later doing the Orpheum Circuit in vaudeville, has located in Chicago, where he now holds two good church positions. He is also secretary of the Bohemian Club, in that city.

From Oakland.

The chorus choir of the First Congregational Church, which has been off on its vacation, resumed services yesterday.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter E. Nicholsen, of the First Congregational choir, left to-day for Lake Tahoe. They will be gone several weeks.

MRS. A. WEDMORE JONES.

UNITED SINGERS AT RIDGEWOOD.—The United Singers of Brooklyn gave their annual festival last Sunday at Ridgewood Park. In the absence of Arthur Claassen, in Europe, the concert was given under the direction of Karl G. Schneider.

Elsa Marshall,
. . Soprano.
222 HOSEA AVENUE,
CLIFTON,
CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Madame
CLARA NOVELLO DAVIES
Professor of Voice Production.
Conductor of the Royal Welsh Ladies' Choir.
(Under Royal patronage.)
Madame Davies has a vacancy for two resident lady pupils
For Prospectus and Terms apply to
121 Victoria St., Westminster, LONDON, S. W.

GLENN HALL
TENOR.
Address CHAS. R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building,
or Kimball Hall, Chicago,

The Guilmant Organ School.
(COPYRIGHT.)
PRESIDENT: ALEXANDRE GUILMANT. DIRECTOR: WILLIAM C. CARL.
Reopens October 14.

SCHEDULE OF WORK:

FIRST YEAR.
The Organ—Private lessons, one each week.
Harmony—Class lessons, one each week.
Musical Form—MUSICAL DICTATION and MUSICAL KNOWLEDGE—Class lessons.
Service Playing—CHANTS, HYMN TUNES, ANTHEMS, ETC.—Class lessons.

SECOND YEAR.
The Organ—Private lessons, one each week.
Harmony and Counterpoint—Class lessons, one each week.
Musical Analysis—MUSICAL HISTORY, ORGAN TUNING—Class lessons.
Service Playing—CHANTS, HYMN TUNES, ANTHEMS, ETC.—Class lessons.

STUDENTS' RECITALS OCCUR EACH MONTH.

ADDRESS: THE GUILMANT ORGAN SCHOOL, 34 West 12th St., New York.

MUSIC IN ITALY.

ROME, June 27, 1901.

J. LEWIS BROWNE, organist and pianist, of Atlanta, yesterday gave a most interesting organ concert on Sunday. I send the program:

Sonata, No. 4, in la min., op. 98.....Rheinberger
Lied .....Dethier
Preludio, op. 78.....Chaminade
Benedizione nuziale.....Sgambati
Fuga in do magg.....Buxtehude
Andante (Andante molto-trascrizione), op. 5.....Brahms
Scherzo .....Browne
Venezia (trascrizione), op. 25.....Nevin
Improvvisazione su tema dato estemporaneamente.

Santa Cecilia's pretty concert hall was well filled, and would have been crowded had it not been so far advanced in the season. Mr. Browne took the audience by storm. His playing was brilliant, powerful, full of sentiment, and he displayed a versatility given but to few. One of his best numbers was certainly the opening number, the Rheinberger Sonata, the intermezzo of which was given with a delicacy of touch and expression seldom to be heard from an organist. Too bad that the organ has such reedy, unmusical tones. Organs in general in Europe are not very good. I am told that the best organ in Italy is now in Pompeii (?) Sara! Mr. Browne's own Scherzo is a sympathetic composition on the impromptu de Chopin style and was a test of virtuosity. All the numbers were beautifully executed, but where he made a decided sensation was in the improvisation on a theme that Sgambati gave him; really this was a "tour de force," and after the feat all artists present went to congratulate Mr. Browne on his profound knowledge, not alone of the instrument, but of his profound musicianship. It is to be hoped that Mr. Browne will come back to Santa Cecilia, but in a better season, so many important people are already absent.

The theatres are doing a pretty good business, notwithstanding the heat; but the truth is that Rome, no matter how hot the day, has always a delightful breeze blowing over her, and after sunset it is almost always necessary to carry something to cover one's shoulders; hence the theatres are supportable. At the Adriano, "Gioconda," "Faust," "Africana," have alternated with a new opera called "Friedman Bach," by Maestro Fazzi. The opera had a very good success and was to be repeated for the third or fourth time, when the "impresa" failed and had to close the theatre. I regret very much not having been able to be present at the first performance, but illness kept me indoors. All the papers are unanimous in saying that the opera is from the pen of a genial composer, and that there are many beauties, even of a new color, in the "Partitura."

At the Nazionale, "Cavalleria," "Pagliacci," "Manon" (Massenet's), and a new opera, "Marianita," by Simeoni, have drawn good houses. The new opera, though, is just exactly as they all are nowadays—a lot of notes, lot of noise; not a melody, and when there is a touch, it is trivial and commonplace. The public was very kind to the composer, though, and called him out several times. Of the execution, all but the tenor are not worth mentioning. Schiarazzi has a good voice and tries to sing well, but he ought to study some more. Here I wish to mention a school of singing, under the direction of Maestra Isabella Coccia, which is very prosperous and deservedly so. She has a way of placing the voice so that after a few months' study, one has acquired just double the voice. One sings with a facility that is extraordinary; no forcing is admitted; it all comes of itself, so to speak, under her marvelous guidance. She has several pupils that promise to make big careers. I have heard some voices come to her absolutely out of place; so much so that they seemed refined. After a few months no one could recognize those voices, which were of such difficult emission and now so easy, so smooth, so velvety. Pupils who will come to Italy to study ought to take advantage of the occasion. Besides Madame Coccia's being an exquisite teacher, she is a most congenial person, full of sympathy and intelligence. The climate of Rome also is an inducement, it never being very cold and never damp. What a difference from Milan, where one is invariably hoarse; artists sometimes have to give up their engagements at the Scala or Lirico on account of not being able to stand the damp climate.

Madame Coccia's school now counts about fifty pupils, tenors, baritones, basses, sopranos, mezzo sopranos and contraltos. She often gives musicales, and the papers, such as the Tribuna, Popolo Romano, L'Italia, La Voce della Verita, Il Gran Mondo and many others, have the most flattering notices. This winter will see several of her pupils on the stage. In due time I shall inform you. R.

THE KALTENBORN CONCERTS.

THE Kaltenborn Orchestra at the St. Nicholas Garden is now in its eighth week, and the nightly concerts will be continued until September 1. Leopold Winkler made his third appearance at the Garden last Tuesday (July 16), playing with the orchestra Chaminade's "Concertstücke." Winkler is a serious artist, but as the program for Tuesday was light he was obliged to play something in keeping with the rest of the music. Although a clever and daring composer, Chaminade's compositions are never remarkable, and if she has written any more trivial than her "Concertstücke" it has not been our privilege to have heard it. Winkler's thoroughly musical playing, however, atoned for the lack of ideas and poor construction. As an encore number Winkler played Joseffy's graceful little piece, "At the Spring." Mr. Kaltenborn, the other soloist last Tuesday night, played De Beriot's "Scene de Ballet," and as an extra solo "The Prize Song" from "Die Meistersinger." J. F. Thompson, a baritone, was the soloist last Wednesday night.

Miss Mary Mansfield, the soprano of the quartet at the Temple Emanu-El, sang at the Wagner concert on Thursday night, and with her brilliant voice and convincing musical style scored a big success. Her Wagner solo was "Dich Theure Halle," from "Tannhäuser." Before the intermission Miss Mansfield sang to orchestral accompaniment Van der Stucken's beautiful song, "O, Kommt Mit Mir in die Frühlingsnacht." The audience compelled her to repeat this song, and she sang even better the second time.

Miss Minnie Fischer, a young soprano, was the soloist at the popular concert on Saturday night. Her voice is light, pleasing and well trained. The Kaltenborn Quartet played at the concert last Sunday night. Master Miner Walden Gallup, the talented boy pianist, and pupil of Frederic Mariner, was the soloist last Monday evening.

Last night (Tuesday) the Symphony programs were resumed. The orchestra, with Miss Jessie Shay as the soloist, played the following program:

March, Tannhäuser.....Wagner
Overture, Sakuntala.....Goldmark
Aubade Prientaniere (Morning Serenade).....Charles Becker
Under the Balcony (Evening Serenade).....Charles Becker
Piano Concerto, F minor, op. 16.....Henselt
Miss Jessie Shay.
Waltz, On the Beautiful Rhine.....Keler-Bela
(By request.)
Symphony, No. 5.....Beethoven
Conjuration and Benediction, The Huguenots.....Meyerbeer
Slavic March.....Tschaikowsky

Reviews of the Monday and Tuesday night concerts will mainder of this week and Sunday next:

Following are five interesting programs for the remainder of this week and Sunday next.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 24.

Coronation March.....Svendsen
Rhapsodie No. 2.....Liszt
(By request.)
Quartet, Kaiser Variations.....Haydn
The Kaltenborn String Quartet.
Selection, La Traviata.....Verdi
Songs—
I Wait for Thee.....Hawley
The Swallows.....Cowen
Miss Neva Boutwell.
Waltz, Wine, Women and Song.....Strauss
Polka, Tik Tak.....Strauss
Overture, Triumphale.....Rubinstein
String Orchestra—
Serenade.....Klugescheid
Gavotte.....Klugescheid
Violin solo, Danse Macabre.....Saint Saens
Joseph Kovarik.
Huldigungs March.....Wagner

THURSDAY, JULY 25.

Overture, Manfred.....Schumann
Spanish Rhapsodie.....Chabrier
Piano Concerto.....Saint-Saëns
Miss Gussie Zuckerman.
Waltz, Fruet Euch Des Lebens.....Strauss
Overture, Die Meistersinger.....Wagner
Trombone Solo, Song, To the Evening Star (Tannhäuser).....Wagner
Franz Eim.
Morning Dawn and Siegfried's Rhine Journey (Die Götterdammerung).....Wagner
Violin Solo, Paraphrase, Parsifal.....Wagner
(By request.)
Franz Kaltenborn.
Prelude and Bridal Procession, Lohengrin.....Wagner
Kaiser March.....Wagner

FRIDAY, JULY 26.

Eine Faust Overture.....Wagner
Selection, Romeo and Juliet.....Gounod
Aria, Stride la Vampa (Il Trovatore).....Verdi
Miss Belle Newport.
Prologue, Pagliacci.....Leoncavallo
'Cello solos—
Elegie.....Massenet
Gavotte.....Popper
Louis Heine.
Selection, The Trumpeter of Sakkingen.....Nessler
Trumpet solo, Oscar Saul.
Waltz, Du und Du (The Bat).....Strauss
Virginian March.....Teichman
Selection, The Huguenots.....Meyerbeer
Songs—
Caro mio ben (1744).....Giordani
Time's Garden.....Thomas
Miss Belle Newport.
'Cello Obligato, Louis Heine.
Ballet Music, Sylvia.....Delibes
March, Tannhäuser.....Wagner

SATURDAY, JULY 27.

Triumphal March.....Edward Mollenhauer
Overture, Orpheus.....Offenbach
Violin solo, Joseph Kovarick.
String Orchestra—
Genius Loci.....Thern
Love's Dream After the Ball.....Czibulka
Violin Duet, Concertant in A major.....Mollenhauer
Edward Mollenhauer and William Mollenhauer.
Irish Fantaisie, Innisfallen.....Kopitz
Harp Solo.....Selected
Charles Schuetze.
Waltzes—
Blue Danube.....Strauss
Senegamhian Patrol.....Rosey
Overture, Mignon.....Thomas
Selection, The Strollers.....Erlanger
Galop, Thunder and Lightning.....Strauss

SUNDAY, JULY 28.

Festival Overture.....Lassen
Peer Gynt Suite, No. 1.....Grieg
Symphonic Poem, Les Preludes.....Liszt
Solo for four horns, Concertstuck.....Hubler
Mr. Schulze, Mr. Schutz, Mr. Dutschke and Mr. Riese.
Waltzes—
One Thousand and One Nights.....Strauss
Rondo d'Amour.....Van Westerhout
Prelude, Parsifal.....Wagner
Septet .....Beethoven
F. Kaltenborn, Mr. Bach, Mr. Heine, Mr. Manoly, Mr. Wissler, Mr. Schulze and Mr. Pieschel.
Kammenoi Ostrow (Cloister Bells).....Rubinstein
Second Polonaise.....Liszt

ACCOMPANIST.
F. W. RIESBERG.
INSTRUCTION.
Piano, Organ, Harmony.
With THE MUSICAL COURIER.
Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.
Secretary-Treasurer New York State M. T. A.
Residence-Studio: 954 Eighth Ave., cor. 56th St., NEW YORK.
TELEPHONE: 452 COLUMBUS.

OSCAR SAENGER,
Vocal Instruction,
WILL RESUME TEACHING ON SEPTEMBER 16.
Teacher of Josephine S. Jacoby, Contralto; Elizabeth D. Leonard, Contralto; Madame de Pasquali, Soprano; Sara Anderson, Soprano; Hildegard Hoffmann, Soprano; E. Léon Rains, Basso; Joseph S. Baernstein, Basso; John I. Young, Tenor, and other prominent singers now before the public.
STUDIO: 51 East 64th Street, NEW YORK.

Mme. VON KLENNER, Garcia Representative,
HAS OPENED A
Special Summer School at Lake Chautauqua, N. Y.
PARIS EXPOSITION, 1900.
Only Honorable Mention or Distinction of Any Vocal Instructor.
FOR PARTICULARS
Address THE WALDMERE, LAKEWOOD, LAKE CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y.
or 40 STUYVESANT STREET, NEW YORK, Second Avenue and 10th Street.
AFTER OCT. 1, 230 WEST 52d STREET.

VAN YORX Tenor,
6 E. 17 St., NEW YORK.
Under Management of WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., NEW YORK CITY.

HE MAKES THE DEAF HEAR.

WHEN the young inventor announced a year or two ago that he could make the deaf hear people were interested, but skeptical. That man who made this somewhat startling announcement was only a little over twenty and was almost unknown. If Edison or Tesla had made the same assertion it would have been believed at once, but when it was put forward merely by "some young fellow named Hutchison" it was received with as many grains of salt as if it had been a piece of yellow journalism.

But the "young fellow named Hutchison" really did make the deaf hear. That was a surprise, but it did not go far with the skeptical. People had an idea that the instrument had no practical value; that it would be of use simply in making interesting experiments, such as enabling a deaf person to hear, or rather to feel, some explosive noise, but not to distinguish ordinary sounds.

People who thought these things should see a series of photographs in Mr. Hutchinson's possession representing Plançon, Scotti, Suzanne Adams and other singers entertaining some of the deaf mutes from the New York Institution for the Deaf. Among these unfortunate boys and girls is Orris Benson, who is deaf, dumb and blind. Other pictures show older deaf mutes from outside having their first taste of music.

The expression on their faces is plain enough proof that they are actually hearing. One stout man in particular presents a series of facial expressions which tell better than words what he thought about it all. The amazement, almost fright, which his round eyes and wide open mouth express would be funny if they were not somehow pathetic. In another picture, where Suzanne Adams is apparently trying to sing her level best, the stout man gives an unconscious tribute by sitting with his hands rapturously clasped and pressed tight to his breast.

"It's wonderfully interesting to see the way they take it," said Mr. Hutchison. "Some of them are simply thunderstruck at first. Others cry. Oh, yes! Cry the way you have seen people cry with joy. Others are like this man here; simply in a rapture of delight. Others faint. I studied medicine for a year so as to get a good working knowledge of the ear, and I bring the fainters around all right."

Mr. Hutchison's instruments are in use in the New York Institution for the Deaf and in other institutions throughout the country. There are actually seventeen different kinds of these instruments, ranging from one which can be used by one person at a dinner party to those for the simultaneous use of a teacher and half a dozen pupils. The instruments have gone to various foreign countries, while there is scarcely a country in the world, certainly not a civilized one, from which letters of inquiry have not been received. A million dollar company has been organized to manufacture the instruments, but as yet cannot make them fast enough.

Of course, when a person who has been deaf from birth or from early infancy first hears spoken words, the sounds mean nothing to him. He has to begin at the very beginning and learn each individual sound. The instruments for class teaching are arranged so that the pupil can hear the teacher and also hear himself. In this way he can compare his own speech with that of the instructor and so correct his faults.

The deaf person has a receiver of varying form according to his deafness. One style looks a good deal like the receivers worn by telephone girls. Let a person with normal ears put on these receivers and sounds are intensified so much that the louder ones are at first almost unbearable. An ordinary guitar, for instance, sounds almost like a pipe organ. Music is not spoiled by the instrument. If, however, a person of normal hearing is sitting with the receivers, or earpieces, over his ears, and a metal object be dropped on the table near the sound collector, he is likely to jump as if a pistol had been fired.

Mr. Hutchison says that this does not injure even a normal ear. He has been working with these instruments for six or seven years, and says he would have no ear left if they were injurious. On the contrary, he thinks that his hearing is more normally acute, and he proves his point by tests.

What is more important than improving the healthy ear, the instrument has a decided effect in increasing the ability of the deaf to hear. This semi-curative power was a surprise to the inventor. He had not counted on it and he does not guarantee it. But he says that in most cases people who use the instruments improve in their hearing power. In one case a girl with whom they were experimenting left the room after they had been talking to her through the instrument. In a few minutes she came back and could hear her name when spoken in a loud tone across the width of the room, although no instrument whatever was used.

One of the most interesting forms of the invention is what is called by the manufacturers an opera. With one of these it is said that a deaf person can go to the opera and have as much pleasure out of it as anybody. The instrument consists of three sections. First, there is a dry storage battery, which is also Mr. Hutchison's invention. It is only about an inch thick and perhaps six inches square. A man can slip it into his pocket or put it inside his waistcoat. Women solve the problem of disposing of it by wearing it as a bustle. It fits into a little bag with a strap which fastens around the waist. It is just the right size for a bustle and is highly recommended by those who have tried it.

The second section of the opera is formed of two sound collectors which can rest on the lap, or, if one sits in the front row, on the railing. These consist of two small funnels of peculiar shape attached to two disks; they are all fastened together and take up very little space. The third section is in various forms. It may be like the telephone earpiece referred to, or with one ear piece, the size of a man's watch, on the end of a polished handle of convenient length. There is nothing that projects more than an inch from the ear.

For any one at a dinner party or other meal where both hands are in use, the two earpieces clasp over the head and the sound collector lies right on the table beside the plate. The battery will run for about six hours, which is outside of the limit even for dinner parties or the opera. An extra battery can be carried in case of emergency.

The oldest deaf person whose hearing has been tested with the instrument is an old lady over eighty. She has been deaf since he was five years old. She could hear the experimenters when they talked through the instrument, but of course she did not recognize words. The only sounds she remembered were the crowing of a rooster and the barking of a dog. When Mr. Hutchison, who is a versatile genius, imitated these sounds the old lady almost had a fit. She was pretty nearly tickled to death.

There is still another set of instruments for use in deafness. They are for massaging the ear. One of these consists of a battery, which causes tremendous vibration of plates, somewhat like the annoying vibration of a telephone receiver. It may be a comfort to persons who have to do so much telephoning to think that that vibration may give their internal aural mechanism exercise.

The ear has a series of delicate transmitters of its own. First the tympanum, then a string of three small bones, then a tiny column of liquid, about a drop altogether, in which is suspended an infinitesimal sac containing the nerve terminals. In many cases the three little bones, whose duty it is to be joggled by the shock against the tympanum and in turn to joggle the little column of water which affects the nerve terminals, get stiff in their joints. Instead of moving separately, they become like a single bone and the hearing is impaired.

The massage instrument works on these bones because the vibrations are so exceedingly rapid that one does not have a chance to pass through the length of the three little bones before the next one overtakes it. This shakes the bones apart, or tries to. Physicians use these instruments in cases of partial deafness, often with very good results.

As is often the case, one of the most showy uses made of the wonderful transmitter in these instruments is of comparative insignificance in real value. People living between Broadway and Second avenue and Seventeenth and Twenty-third streets all know, but do not all love, "the man who makes the deaf hear." If they do not know about him they must have an idea that he is an elusive and ghostly brass band in that neighborhood. The sound of it is often heard, but when the curious listener goes to the window to try to see the procession go by, behold! there is neither procession nor band.

All of this ghostly music comes from Mr. Hutchison's laboratory. He makes it, not for his own amusement, but to show inquirers what an innocent looking little aluminum

MUSIC

Our stock includes the musical publications of all publishers. The latest popular hit, imported novelties, opera and orchestra scores. Music for every occasion and music for all instruments. Our own publications sent for examination. Catalogs free. Send for MUSIC by MAIL circular, giving special mail order prices on music.

Oliver Ditson Company, Boston
C. H. Ditson & Co. New York
J. E. Ditson & Co. Philadelphia

A249

Mme. SCHUMANN-HEINK, Mr. BISPHAM, Sig. CAMPANARI,
And other Members of the MAURICE GRAU OPERA CO.,
Are open for Concerts, Oratorios, Recitals and Musical Festivals during the Season 1901–2.
FOR TERMS AND DATES ADDRESS
ERNEST GOERLITZ, Sole and Exclusive Agent, Metropolitan Opera House, New York City.

Miss ADELE MARGULIES,
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Studios: Nos. 705-6 Carnegie Hall, New York.

M. I.
SCHERHEY,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Combined Italian-French-German Method.
CHURCH, CONCERT, ORATORIO, OPERA.
Studio: 780 PARK AVENUE, Cor. 73d St., NEW YORK.
Telephone: Seventy-ninth, 1152.

Mrs. HELEN TRUST
SOPRANO.
Vocal Recitals in English, French, Italian.
33 Grove End Road,
St. John's Wood, London, England.

THIRD AMERICAN TOUR
SEASON 1901-2.
161 Concerts
Last Season.
LEONORA JACKSON
ASSISTED BY Harry J. Fellows,
Tenor.
William Bauer, Pianist.
Direction ERNEST H. JACKSON and A. L. WAKEFIELD.
Address: NEW YORK, 31 Union Square West. CHICAGO, 71 Monroe Street.

disk as big as a pretty thick watch can do. With this disk between an ordinary phonograph and a brass megaphone the record of a trombone or a horn solo can be heard for blocks.

"Watch the people in the street," said Mr. Hutchison the other day, as he hitched on a megaphone and twisted it around the open seventh story window.

Immediately everybody in sight became a temporary member of the amalgamated society of rubber neckers. They stopped short, turned around and searched the heavens, apparently with some sort of an idea that the angelic choir must be giving a concert. Passengers on the street cars stuck their heads out and twisted their necks to catch the shower of melody. Men three blocks away stopped and turned around.

"Yesterday afternoon," laughed Mr. Hutchison, "a man living in a hotel several blocks from here sent word that he was very nervous and wouldn't we please stop our music. At the same time a woman living almost four blocks away telephoned to us that she had a headache and couldn't stand the noise. People near here get tired of it, although we don't give concerts for our own amusement, or for theirs, either. We do it only by way of demonstrating the power of the transmitter."

Of course, these instruments are being constantly improved upon. There are about forty patents on them now, showing that it has been a progressive piece of work. The latest improvement is a sound collector, which Mr. Hutchison thinks is a wonder, although it is very simple. It consists of a set of concentric funnels, one within another and a little over a quarter of an inch apart at their outer circumferences. In this way sounds coming from different directions are received separately, each in the funnel of its own angle. This prevents the obscuring or commingling of sounds inevitable in using a single funnel.

As an instance of the applications that are received every day a party from the West Indies and one from South America appeared on the same morning last week. The South Americans wanted one instrument for a lady thirty-eight years old, who lost her hearing after she grew up. For her an opera was recommended because she already knew sounds. The West Indians wanted an instrument for a boy who lost his hearing through fright when he was only three years old. For him the more elaborate instrument for the use of a teacher and pupil would be necessary, as he must be taught from the foundation.—The Sun, Sunday, July 21.

The "Marseillaise."

SOME dozen years ago a revision of the "Marseillaise" was executed by some composers under the direction of Ambroise Thomas, and the new orchestration inspired by that of Berlioz was proclaimed the official version to be played by all military bands. Another edition has just been tried by the band of the Municipal Guard of Paris. The principal innovation is a formidable increase in the drums and the addition of forty-five clarions. The Minister of War pronounced the result highly satisfactory, but one of his neighbors was heard to whisper, "Horrible travesty!" M. Jean Tissot, who heard the new version at the Hoche Festival at the Trocadero, writes that he was not shocked by the addition of the drums in the refrain (there are never too many drums in the "Marseillaise"), while the clarion seems invented expressly to accentuate the cry, "Aux armes, citoyens!" He regrets, however, that the virile song is left to whining clarinets, in place of being sent out flying by the trombones with their triumphant voices.

SHE'S A PIANO TUNER.

THE young woman with the tweezers gave the piano strings a vigorous twist.

"It's a shame," she said, "the way people jump on a girl who tries to earn her living in a novel way."

"Has anybody been jumping on you?" asked the caller.

"Anybody?" echoed the young woman. "Everybody. With both feet, too. The tribulations of those girls who are fighting labor unions single handed are not a circumstance to mine."

"What is the trouble?" asked the caller. "Why do people object to you."

"Principally because they think I am not well enough equipped either mentally or physically to tune pianos. Of course, that objection is sheer nonsense, for I know as much about the art of tuning as any man in the business, and as for strength—look here."

The young woman pushed up her loose shirt-waist sleeve and straightened out a white, well developed arm, which bore out the impression of strength conveyed by her long, firm fingers. The caller nodded approvingly.

"What did you do to prepare yourself for piano tuning?" was asked.

The young woman made another jab at the refractory string.

"To start with," she said, "I went to live in Boston. Incidentally I took a course of instruction at the New England Conservatory of Music. There they have a special department where piano tuning is taught the same as any other branch of music. I stayed there a year, studying and practicing, and then came back here and began to look for a situation. About that time my troubles began.

"Employers were fully as bad as the employed. For weeks I visited house after house, and everywhere was the same reply given me—they had no room for me. No woman had ever been known to do such a thing as tune pianos in this city, said one man, and, thank Heaven! she would never get a chance to do it—at least, so far as his firm was concerned. At another large establishment an old chap wearing eyeglasses and the air of a foreign musician took me in hand.

"'Eet ees absurd,' he said. 'A woman's nervous seestem ces not put up that vay. She could not stand eet.'

"With that he dismissed me. At a third place the well meaning head tuner solemnly assured me that it was my duty, not only to myself, but to my sex in general, to abandon the idea of taking up an occupation that was so trying that even the nerves of a strong man were racked and torn beyond repair. Women, he said, were like unto a flock of sheep. Where one went all would want to go. What one did all would want to do, and if I set the example by beginning to tune, the entire female population of New York would make a break for the business.

"All this ought to have been disheartening, I suppose, but somehow the more I was ridiculed and discouraged the more determined I became. Finally my importunate spirit won a victory and I found a manager who was willing to give me a trial. That was four years ago and I have not been out of work since. The prejudice against women piano tuners is still bitter, however, and I have frequent tussles with my male competitors, who have fought me every inch of the way.

"In private houses the distrust of a woman tuner is even more pronounced than in the salesrooms, and very seldom am I delegated to doctor a piano in need of home treatment. The manager used to try to introduce me into families, but the plan didn't work. Somehow the people could never be induced to look upon me in any other light than a museum freak, and no matter how cleverly I might transform their piano, they would stick to it that they had been imposed upon and insist upon the company's sending a man around to do my work over again."—Sun.

ADELE MARGULIES ENJOYING HER VACATION.—Miss Adele Margulies, the pianist and teacher, is enjoying her well earned vacation in Europe. She has been abroad since May, and does not expect to return until the first week in September. In Vienna, her former home, as well as in New York, her adopted city, Miss Margulies has earned the good will and esteem of the leading musicians. Few women are more serious in their art, and, for that matter, few men can boast of higher equipment in the work of teaching. As THE MUSICAL COURIER has previously stated, Miss Margulies was a "star" pupil of Anton Door, of Vienna, and before leaving the Austrian capital had won several first prizes at the Vienna Conservatory. When Miss Margulies comes back to New York she will resume her classes at the National Conservatory of Music and also at her studio in Carnegie Hall. The Margulies pupils play with the musical quality which can only be acquired under a teacher possessing temperament herself and the gift to infuse the young with her own enthusiasm and love for the best masters.

Prof. Louis B. Phillips, a member of the Syracuse University College of Fine Arts, will direct the Watertown (N. Y.) Women's Musical Society next season. The organization, which numbers 150 active members, is arranging to give "The Elijah" and two miscellaneous concerts.

AUGUSTA COTTLOW,
THE DISTINGUISHED YOUNG AMERICAN PIANISTE.
Management: HENRY WOLFSOHN, 131 East 17th St., New York, and
THE HAMLIN CO., Kimball Building, Chicago, Ill.

HAROLD BAUER,
AMERICAN TOUR, 1902.
Commencing in January with BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
DATES NOW BOOKING.
For all particulars apply to GEO. W. STEWART, 120 Tremont Street, BOSTON, MASS.
General Representative for Europe: ROBERT STRAKOSCH, 59 Rue La Bruyère, PARIS.

MINNE HUMPHRYES
Soprano. Concert and Oratorio.
FOR TERMS, DATES, ETC., ADDRESS
Care MUSICAL COURIER, 1135 Broadway, or 407 First Street, Brooklyn, New York.

RUBY CUTTER,
SOPRANO,
Dramatic and Coloratura.
CONCERT and ORATORIO.
REPERTOIRE.
Under the direction of HENRY WOLFSOHN.
Boston Address: 159 Tremont Street.

RAFAEL JOSEFFY.
Address: Letter Box 38, NORTH TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

EDUARD ZELDENRUST.

A Piano Star of the First Magnitude..

EDUARD ZELDENRUST, the famous Dutch piano virtuoso, will make a tour of the United States, beginning next November. He will be in the experienced care of Manager Loudon G. Charlton. Herr Zeldenrust is at present summering at the well-known Dutch watering place Scheveningen, where he is preparing his programs for his forthcoming American tour. He will appear at a concert of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra at Scheveningen.

If ever a pianist deserves the title of versatile Eduard Zeldenrust is the one. Winning his first triumphs as a Bach player, a title unique as it is difficult of attainment, Zeldenrust's fame spread from Holland to Germany, thence to France and England. In London he is known as "the emotional pianist," and one critical authority has pronounced his Bach playing "dramatic." But it is not alone in Bach that Zeldenrust excels; he plays Beethoven, Schumann, Chopin and Liszt equally as well.

Born in Amsterdam less than thirty-five years ago, Zeldenrust was an earnest, conscientious and brilliant student at the Cologne Conservatory and at the Hoch Conservatory, Frankfort. For many years a resident of Paris, he is there regarded as "one of the three or four great pianists of the world," and his press notices show that he is credited, by the most authoritative critics in continental musical centres, with a tone exceptional in its range and variety. He possesses abundant warmth, color, and a temperament, both scholarly and emotional. His technic is nothing short of the prodigious.

Zeldenrust gives recitals each year in Paris, and makes annual appearances in England, Holland and the principal cities of Europe, alone or else in joint recital with such artists as Joachim and others. He plays with the Berlin Philharmonic and many other famous Old World orchestras.

Recently in one of the renowned Deligentia concerts at The Hague, before the Queen, Zeldenrust scored a sensational success, and at the close of his regular May concert this year in Paris he was recalled ten times.

His sympathetic mastery of many schools is acknowledged to be rare. It is certainly appreciated, for wherever he appears the compelling magnetism of a magnetic personality evokes storms of applause. As a man, Eduard Zeldenrust is greatly admired and beloved by friends in many cities. He is sincere, unassuming and broadly cultured. Speaking German, French and English fluently, his reading in the literatures of these countries is wide and varied. This keen, intellectual power dominates his music and acts on his overwhelming virtuosity as a brake. Thus it is that the mellowness, the reverence and high finish of his work are constantly praised by the critics. He has both beauty and power; and he never abuses the one by forcing the tone of his instrument, or the other by degenerating into mere sentimentality. We are all anxious to hear his marvelous Bach readings. "He makes the 'Well Tempered Clavichord' as interesting as Wagner's 'Ring of the Nibelungs,'" said an admirer. And with Bach so is it with Beethoven and Chopin. He mixes well together brains and poetry in his interpretations.

In America Zeldenrust is to play with all the leading orchestras and musical organizations. His visit may be considered the prime event of the season. Here are a few of his press notices:

Zeldenrust's extraordinary mastery of the piano has long won him a position second to none. His technical dexterity and style are faultless, his interpretation of the chief composers is masterly. The large audience listened with delight, and he was more than once recalled.—London Times, March 5.

The name of Zeldenrust is one to be remembered. Few pianists are as well endowed as he. He has an imposing artistic nature, and his program was executed without a single weakness, and with a power of expression, of technical facility and sincere enthusiasm which gained for him a very great success.—Echo Mondain, Brussels, April 7.

He charms by his great technic and thoroughly thought out play. He had an important success.—Neue Zeitschrift fuer Musik, Leipsic, January 23.

At once very original and strong, his beautiful talent was ravishing. He showed himself entirely a master of his instrument.—Temps, Paris, May 3.

Zeldenrust scored a great success. He quite surpassed himself, and at the end of the concert he was recalled many times and was obliged to give an encore.—Paris Edition New York Herald, May 4.

Eduard Zeldenrust, the eminent Holland pianist, so favorably known in Paris, played a recital a few days ago in Brussels before a very large audience, which gave a very enthusiastic reception to the brilliant virtuoso. The program comprised selections by Bach, Beethoven, Chopin, Schubert and Wagner-Liszt, which the great pianist executed in a magnificent manner. He played with authority; the beauty and power of his tone, the variety of his touch and the deep and profound sentiment so clearly expressed stamped him to be not only a marvelous pianist but an artist in the true sense of the word.—Paris Figaro.

Herr Zeldenrust, at the popular concert at the St. James Hall, gave a powerful rendering of Liszt's fine arrangement of the Bach Organ Fantaisie and Fugue in G minor.—London Morning Post, October 2.

The celebrated Dutch pianist's program was executed with incomparable mastery, which aroused such enthusiasm that he received numerous recalls.—Figaro, Paris, May 2, 1901.

Miss Henrietta Weber, the pianist, is meeting with great success at the concerts at Narragansett Pier, R. I. Miss Weber will remain at Narragansett until August 1, when she will go West, playing at a number of concerts during the month of August.

MYRTA FRENCH MARRIED.—EAU CLAIRE, Wis., Sunday—Miss Myrta French, of Eau Claire, an opera singer, and Jean Paul Kuersteiner, of Philadelphia, were married this morning at the home of the bride's parents, Dr. and Mrs. E. C. French. The wedding was very quiet, there being no guests.

FROM A FOREIGN ENTHUSIAST.

AT SEA, July 18, 1901.

Editors The Musical Courier:

WHAT chances do American artists have? This question has principally of late been ventilated so often and so capably, especially by THE MUSICAL COURIER, that another word on the subject must necessarily seem monotonous and tiresome. Still the matter is of such vital importance that it can absolutely not be exhausted and should be kept constantly before the public attention. The inhumane, uncivilized treatment one of our young singers, Mrs. Powell, has lately received at the hands of the Berlin Opera House singers, where she has actually been frozen out by petty jealousy of those who felt their inferiority and feared the decided supremacy of their American rival, from a position which the young singer has fully earned through her capability and energy, has brought the question to an issue, and the American music loving people ought at last be aroused out of their lethargy and take earnest steps to protect their home talent and give them every encouragement. The farmer would most decidedly rebel if the products of his labor were boycotted in foreign lands, but the more refined and cultured class look on with complete languor and full apathy while the rights of their gifted country men and women are trampled upon abroad.

Of course the European artists are well aware of the sad fact that no domestic talent, no matter how superior to foreign artists, is sought after in this country; they laugh at the so-called American democratic spirit, which bows humbly before the foreign idols, while the American musician of any kind gets no encouragement at home. They know well the American is forced to make a reputation abroad before he can find recognition here, and of course they use all their efforts and their intrigues not to permit our gifted countrymen to gain that reputation, so as to usurp the rich field of harvest here for themselves. Year after year the same artists, with the same passé voices, are offered by the management to our operagoers without any care on the former's part whether the voice is still capable to fill the demand. The composers would turn in their graves in some instances if they could hear their cherished works so hackneyed by these singers, who would stand no chance of an engagement with the Hansa Theatre, in Hamburg; the Winter Garten, in Berlin, and similar variety theatres abroad. Still, Lilli Lehmann is idolized when she dares to present herself on our stage; still, Sembrich and others get thousands for one night, while, should we treat them honestly, we would advise them to enjoy their well deserved retirement and to rest on their past laurels.

The question naturally presents itself: Is the American actually void of every musical feeling? Is he still the savage, which he is considered by the foreign artists after they reach home with their well filled pockets? If not, why do we pay those abnormally high prices without receiving an equivalent? The solution is very simple, or at least apparently so.

Our plutocratic American operagoers are desirous to

Mme. Charlotte MACONDA

Most Versatile and Brilliant American Soprano.

Re-engaged for New England Festivals

(THIRD CONSECUTIVE SEASON).

Scored a Succession of Sensational Triumphs last Season in New York, Boston, Washington, St. Louis, and other leading cities.

Oratorio, Festival, Concert, and Recital Engagements now Booking.

Sole Management, LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, NEW YORK.

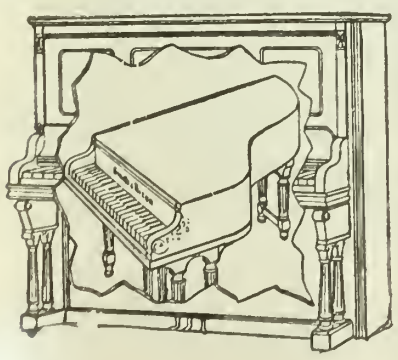
LAMPERTI SCHOOL OF MUSIC,

TO BE OPENED NOVEMBER 1, 1901.

Quartier Parc Monceau,
Paris.

Temporary Address, 3 rue Gounod.



A Grand Piano IN AN UPRIGHT CASE.

SMITH & NIXON,

Cincinnati, Ohio,

Manufacture this instrument for MUSICIANS.

HASLAM,

Professeur de Chant.

POSE, TECHNIQUE, STYLE, RÉPERTOIRE, OPERA, CONCERT.

☞ Direct Communication with European Managers.

54 rue Faubourg St. Honoré, PARIS.

London Organ School

AND INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

22 Princes Street, Cavendish Sq., W., London, Eng.

Established 1865. Principal: T. H. Yorke Trotter, M. A., Mus. Doc. Oxon.

At this college Private Lessons are given and classes held in all branches of Music, and in Elocution and Modern Languages.

There is a competent staff of Professors for Piano, Singing, Organ, Violin, Viola, Violoncello, Double Bass, Harp, Guitar and all Wood and Brass Wind Instruments.

A special feature is made of the training of Church and Concert Organists. The school has three 3-manual practice organs and a new grand concert organ, which has been recently completed by the Positive Organ Company on the Casson system.

The full Orchestra meets on Tuesday Evenings. The String Orchestra on Friday Afternoons.

For prospectus and full particulars apply to the office of this paper or to FRANCIS BURGESS, Secretary.

ERICSSON

BUSHNELL.

For Dates, Terms, &c., address

177 Duane Street, NEW YORK.

The American Institute of Applied Music.

(Incorporated 1900.)
EDGAR O. SILVER, President,
212 West 59th Street, New York City.

Departments:
The Metropolitan College of Music.
The Metropolitan Conservatory of Music,
The Synthetic Piano School
The American Institute of Normal Methods.

The Faculty and Examiners: DUDLEY BUCK, A.C.M.; ALBERT ROSS PARSONS, A.C.M.; E. PRESSON MILLER; HARRY ROWE SHELLEY, A.C.M.; PAUL AMBROSE, WILLIAM F. SHERMAN, KATE S. CHITTENDEN, LILLIAN LITTLEHALES and others.

The residence department furnishes a refined and quiet home.
The advantages are unequaled in America.
For information address KATE S. CHITTENDEN, Dean.

make the opera an exclusive salon, where they can display their costly dresses and diamonds. They know that the American artist would be too honest to demand such exorbitant prices for the offering of their art. It is just the poorer, i. e., the middle class, which is badly in need of the civilizing and elevating effect of the opera. This class is entirely precluded from its enjoyment by the present existing conditions.

A step was lately taken toward a betterment of this demoralizing idolatry of imported artists, by creating the American School of Opera, conducted by very capable teachers, where young American artists will get all the required instructions toward the completion of their art, thus doing away with the necessity of going for study abroad, where they are looked upon as intruders. Let us hope that this school, now in its embryo, will find all the encouragement with the true music loving American people, and the time may not be distant when we shall have a genuine American musical era, known for its youthful vigor and excellence. Let us also hope that this effort to elevate our musical standard will not rest there but extend over all branches, so that we shall eventually force all nations to recognize our quality in music as they have been compelled to see in us their equals in the field of industrial competition.

The writer of this knows of a young American violinist, who for his capability should occupy a position among the first of his class, but who was forced to go into variety for a livelihood, as here he was not permitted to compete with the imported talent, while abroad, though acknowledged in his own concerts as a first-class artist, was barred from competition. Sad, but true.

A Foreign Enthusiast for America.

Hattie Scholder.—Hattie Scholder, the phenomenal girl pianist of New York, last Wednesday played before an immense audience at Willow Grove, near Philadelphia. With the orchestra she played Liszt's "Hungarian Fantasie," and later gave as solos Mendelssohn's "Spinning Song" and Chopin's A flat waltz. The audience demanded several encores, and the young pianist responded. Little Miss Scholder's playing proved a revelation to the audience. The members of the orchestra and the conductor joined in the applause. She had not rehearsed with the orchestra, and it was feared that there would be some hitch. Not so. She played the difficult and bizarre conceit of Liszt like a seasoned veteran of the keyboard, being self-contained throughout. The performance evoked the warm plaudits of the conductor and the unrestrained applause of the large audience.

As is well known, this remarkable young pianist is a pupil of Samuel P. Eppinger, who is guiding her in the way she should go.

MARY MÜNCHHOFF.

THE wonderful success Mary Münchhoff has achieved in Germany has not been confined to any one locality. Everywhere she has aroused the same enthusiasm. Special attention is called to the criticism by Dr. Fuchs, of Dantzig, given below. He is one of the most dreaded critics in Europe on account of his severity.

It means a great deal to enthuse him to this eloquent outburst: "Her voice enraptured us to such a degree that the roof over us seemed transformed into heaven's pure, clear, light."

Every one left the elegant rooms of the Casino on Monday beaming with gladness and inner satisfaction. Mary Münchhoff had sung and joyful faces proved how she had sung. Since Wagner and Brahms, those two giants of modern musical art, so dissimilar and still so closely related, since these two introduced the broad dramatic style into vocal art, one hears the remark that the knell has sounded for bel canto. How brilliantly Mary Münchhoff disproved this statement! How well she showed that with diligent study and genuine rational production of tone bel canto can develop and flourish in the most perfect manner!

Mary Münchhoff possesses, to be sure, timbre found only in a divinely gifted singer. Since the last appearance of Marcella Sembrich, whose voice resembles greatly that of Miss Munchhoff, the writer of these lines has never heard such a magnificently cultivated voice as Mary Münchhoff's. One felt like exulting with the singer in her glorious trills and grand colorature. One must not only hear Mary Münchhoff sing, but see her sing also, so charming is her appearance and fascinating her ways. Every change of feeling, whether it be merry, sad or mysterious, finds expression in her features. Passages like the tender and sweet "Gut' Nacht" are indelibly impressed on my memory. What magic lay in the enrapturing piano of Schumann's "Mondnacht!" That was, indeed, the fervent good-night kiss of heaven imprinted on the dreaming earth. That was revelling in genuine Schumann romanticism. The success which Mary Münchhoff attained was magnificent.—Altpreussische Zeitung, Elbing, November 28, 1900.

Since Mary Münchhoff's appearance in our musical circles last year, the art of this renowned singer has gained in depth and spirituality of expression, so that her listeners are thrilled with that fine enjoyment which only songs stamped with von zur Mühlen's vocal art can produce. In technic the artist has naturally not stood still, although colorature, with its manifold difficulties that seem to baffle all skill, has remained her element, she has acquired a beautiful legato which in lyric passages is perfection itself. The high tones of her voice have retained the sweet flute-like timbre, her trill is virtuosity itself in all registers, and her staccato like pearls. The great applause which greeted her rare, artistic rendering of several songs induced her to give two encores. She offered her audience enjoyment, which was satisfying and artistic in the highest degree.—Danziger Neueste Nachrichten, November 29, 1900.

Our musical circles can hardly recollect ever enjoying such charming singing as the unexcelled virtuosity, ensouled with the most refined feeling and purest quality, which Mary Münchhoff offered us yesterday in the short space of time devoted to a concert. Her efforts were a wonderful test of womanly will power, lying hidden behind all her grace. Only the most assiduous diligence and unwavering love for her art could cultivate even the greatest natural talent to such a degree as Mary Münchhoff, the American artist, offered us. She appeared here a year ago, but great as her accomplishments were then, they are now matured to an extraordinary degree, and her colorature has progressed until it has attained the highest rank possible. It is not enough to say that Mary Munchhoff's voice can vie with the most beautiful instrument, as not even the violin is equal in effect to the human voice when beautiful in quality and highly cultivated. To what shall we compare the effect of her voice? In the most highly cultivated kind of colorature, when the voice dwells for minutes on a group of tones without words, as, for instance, in Mozart's aria, "Il re Pastore," in the florid "piece de bravure" (if this expression is allowed), by Gounod, "Il a Perdu Ma Trace"; in "Solveig's Song," by Grieg; in Taubert's "Slumber Song" and Alabieff's "Nightingale," the natural beauty and artistic flexibility of her voice enraptured us to such a degree that the roof over us seemed transformed into heaven's pure, clear light, and the air filled with tones that belonged to another sphere than the earth.—Dr. C. Fuchs, in Danziger Zeitung, November 29, 1900.

Miss Dora Gottlieb, pupil of Miss Montefiore, has been selected as soprano soloist for a Brooklyn synagogue, Rev. J. Schuman cantor.

1901

STATEMENT OF

THE TRAVELERS

INSURANCE COMPANY of Hartford, Conn.

Chartered 1863. (Stock.) Life, Accident and Employees Liability Insurance.

JAMES G. BATTERSON, President,

PAID-UP CAPITAL, $1,000,000.00

JANUARY 1, 1901.

Total Assets, (Accident premiums in the hands of Agents not included.)	$30,861,030.06
TOTAL LIABILITIES (Including Reserves),	26,317,903.25
EXCESS SECURITY to Policy-holders,	$4,543,126.81
SURPLUS	3,543,126.81
Paid to Policy-holders since 1864,	$42,643,384.92
Paid to Policy-holders in 1900,	2,908,464.03
Loaned to Policy-holders on Policies (Life),	1,586,652.20
Life Insurance in Force,	109,019,851.00

GAINS FOR THE YEAR 1900:

IN ASSETS,	$3,167,819.96
IN INSURANCE IN FORCE (Life Department Only),	8,685,297.06
INCREASE IN RESERVES (Both Departments), (3½ per cent. basis),	2,484,392.52
PREMIUMS COLLECTED,	6,890,888.55

SYLVESTER C. DUNHAM, Vice-President.
JOHN E. MORRIS Secretary,
J. B. LEWIS, M. D., Medical Director and Adjuster.
EDWARD V. PRESTON, Superintendent of Agencies.
HIRAM J. MESSENGER, Actuary.

Mr. Loudon G. Charlton, Carnegie Hall, New York,

HAS THE HONOR TO ANNOUNCE

THE CELEBRATED DUTCH PIANIST:

Herr Eduard ZELDENRUST

First American Tour, 1901-1902, Begins November 15.

"One of the three or four great pianists of the world."—LONDON TIMES.

Already Booked with Leading Orchestras. Recitals in Principal Cities. Entire Tour Now Booking. BALDWIN PIANO USED.

Published by

G. SCHIRMER, NEW YORK.

Collection of Standard Operas.

COMPLETE VOCAL SCORES.

Edition de Luxe, in cloth. $1.00 extra.

Aida. Verdi. (Italian and English),	$2.00
Amico Fritz. Mascagni. (Italian and English),	2.00
Barber of Seville. Rossini. (Italian and English),	1.50
Cavalleria Rusticana. Mascagni. (Italian and English),	1.50
Carmen. Bizet. (French and English),	2.00
Faust. Gounod. (Italian and English),	1.50
Flying Dutchman. Wagner. (German and English),	1.50
Lohengrin. Wagner. (German and English),	1.50
Lucia di Lammermoor. Donizetti. (Italian and English),	1.00
Mignon. Thomas. (French and English)	2.00
Romeo and Juliet. Gounod. (French and English),	2.00
Samson and Delilah. Saint-Saëns. (English),	2.50
Tannhäuser. Wagner. (German and English),	1.50
La Traviata. Verdi. (Italian and English),	1.00
Il Trovatore. Verdi. (Italian and English),	1.00

☞ Others in preparation.

Send for Catalogue of SCHIRMER'S LIBRARY EDITION of Musical Classics.

JEANNETTE DURNO

CONCERT PIANIST,

3629 Vincennes Avenue, CHICAGO.

Mme. Matja von Niessen-Stone

MEZZO SOPRANO.

VOCAL RECITALS in English, French, German, Italian and Russian.

For terms and dates address

ALICE E. JOSEPH, 7a Hanover St., London, W., England.

CONCERT DIRECTION

ROBERT STRAKOSCH

59 Rue La Bruyere, PARIS.

Mrs. Laurence Weakley,

CONTRALTO.

ADDRESS:
610 N. 8TH STREET.
ST. JOSEPH, MO.

RARE OLD VIOLINS

Remarkable values in fine old instruments from $50 to $10,000. Largest and finest collection in the world. Send for a copy of our Catalog, just issued, containing Biographies, Fac-simile Labels, Etc. Easy Terms.

LYON & HEALY, 133 Adams Street, CHICAGO

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY

—BY THE—

MUSICAL COURIER COMPANY.

(Incorporated under the laws of the State of New York.)

St. James Building, Broadway and 26th St., New York.

TELEPHONE: 1720 Madison Square.

Cable Address: "Pegujar," New York.

ESTABLISHED JANUARY, 1880.

No. 1113.

MARC A. BLUMENBERG - - EDITOR-IN-CHIEF.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JULY 24, 1901.

LONDON, ENGLAND—
Hotel Cecil, Mr. Montague Chester, General European Representative.

BERLIN, GERMANY (Branch Office)—
Linkstrasse, 17 W., is in charge of Mr. Otto Floersheim.
Single copies for sale at the music store of Ed. Bote & G. Bock, Leipzigerstrasse 39, W.

DRESDEN—
Anna Ingman, Franklustrasse 20.

LEIPSIC—
Hotel Hentschel, Mr. Alvin Kranich in charge.

PARIS, FRANCE—
Conducted from London Office.
Single copies for sale at Brentano's, 37 Avenue de l'Opera; 37 Rue Marbeuf; Galignani Library, 224 Rue de Rivoli; Shakespeare Library, 75 Avenue des Champs Elysées, Boulevard Kiosks.

VIENNA—
Edwin Stewart, correspondent.

ITALY—
5 Via Rondinelli, Florence, Italy, Mr. Joseph Smith in charge.

CHICAGO OFFICE—
Fine Arts Building, Michigan Boulevard, C. A. Daniell in charge.

CANADIAN OFFICE—
In charge of Miss May Hamilton. Address Main Office, New York City.

SAN FRANCISCO—
Mrs. A. Wedmore Jones, 2046 Leaveuworth Street.

LOS ANGELES—
F. W. Blanchard, Blanchard Hall.

ST. LOUIS—
Nellie Allen-Hessenbruch, correspondent.

MILWAUKEE—
Controlled by Chicago Office.

INDIANAPOLIS—
Controlled by Chicago Office.

CINCINNATI OFFICE—
J. A. Homan in charge.

BOSTON OFFICE—
17 Beacon Street.

BROOKLYN OFFICE—
Hotel St. George, Clark, corner Henry Street.

BUFFALO OFFICE—
Mrs. Nellie M. Gould, 428 Ashland Avenue.

WASHINGTON OFFICE—
616 Twelfth Street, N. W., Berenice Thompson in charge.

SUBSCRIPTIONS:

Invariably in advance, including postage.
Single copies, Ten Cents.

United States, ...	$5.00
Great Britain, . .	£1 5s.	Austria, . . .	15 fl.
France, . . .	31.25 fr.	Italy, . . .	31.25 fr.
Germany, . . .	25 m.	Russia, . . .	12 r.

SPENCER T. DRIGGS - - BUSINESS MANAGER

Rates for Advertising.

PER INCH ON ADVERTISING PAGES.

Three Months.....	$25.00	Nine months.....	$75.00
Six Months.....	50.00	Twelve Months.....	100.00

ON READING PAGES.

One inch, 3 months.....	$75.00
One inch, 6 months.....	125.00
One inch, 1 year.....	200.00
Special rates for preferred positions.
One page, one insertion.....	$300.00
One-half page, one insertion.....	175.00
One Column.....	100.00

All remittances for subscriptions or advertising must be made by check, draft or money order, payable to THE MUSICAL COURIER Company.

Advertisements for the current week must be handed in by 2 P. M. on Monday.

All changes in advertisements must reach this office by Friday 5 P. M. preceding the issue in which changes are to take effect.

American News Company, New York, General Distributing Agents.
Western News Company, Chicago, Western Distributing Agents.

THE MUSICAL COURIER EXTRA.

Published Every Saturday During the Year.

GREATEST ADVERTISING MEDIUM FOR ALL MUSIC PUBLISHERS AND MANUFACTURERS and IMPORTERS OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS OR PARTS THEREOF. ALSO SPECIALLY DEVOTED TO POPULAR MUSIC and VAUDEVILLE.

For Particulars apply to "Saturday Extra Department."

THE Bernhardt-Coquelin engagement is a failure. Business has been depressingly poor, poorer than it was here.

SIEGFRIED WAGNER published a card last week in the Berlin papers denying the statement which has appeared in many German papers that a comic opera, entitled "Falschmuenzer," by Richard Wagner, thus far unpublished, had been sold for production in the United States. He asserts that no such opera is in existence.

THE Evening Post, commenting upon the recent suicide of the Yeoland sisters, two young actresses who failed to secure an engagement, remarks that the tragedy "has forcibly brought to public notice the fact that there are to-day a number of tolerably good actresses in London who are destitute or next door to it.

"Among these are many Americans. A pitiful case came up this week when an American girl, who had done very well at home, appealed to the United States Embassy to send a cable to her uncle for funds. She had been almost starving for three weeks. Even when employment is found salaries are very small."

For "actresses" read "singers." There is a multitude of American girls on the Continent who are in absolute want. They are studying music, for the most part, with incompetent men and women, and without the ghost of a show for success. If they have money they can always get an appearance. If they have not, alas! other things may do instead!

THE sculptor Johannes Benk will make the memorial that the Society of Friends of Music proposes to erect in Vienna to honor the composer Johann Strauss. It will be placed in that corner of the cemetery where Beethoven, Schubert and Brahms lie, and exactly between the last two. Benk has designed the gravestone as a mighty block of marble somewhat pyramidal in shape, round which a bronze laurel sends its branches. The rough upper part of the marble boulder has a circular portrait relief in bronze and the laurel branches droop above the composer's head. Cupids just below the medalion play on musical instruments and two of them are revolving in a valse. They are in half relief and of marble. Against the projecting lower part of the boulder is a full length female figure in bronze, draped, leaning her elbow on a vase whence water flows. With her right hand she touches a harp lying against the rock. She represents the "beautiful blue" Danube, and at the same time is a personification of Music. Her harp has a dolphin's head, being copied from a mediæval harp in the museum, and the lines of her figure suggest the soft and yielding character of the dance music. In order to allude to "Die Fledermaus," the sculptor has carved a bat on the top of the boulder.

HERE'S a how to do! The Sun last Thursday printed the following exciting information: "WASHINGTON, July 17.—Complaint has been made to the District Commissioners by George F. Ormsby, a lawyer, of an alleged nuisance in the vicinity of his residence on K street, Northwest. The nuisance, he says, consists of an excess of piano playing in the house of a family of the name of Williams. Commenting on the subject of the complaint Mr. Ormsby submits that there can be a legitimate use for pianos, 'just as there can be for fire crackers, slaughter houses and cesspools.' He proposes that piano playing within the city limits be restricted to certain hours."

The bracketing of "fire crackers, slaughter houses and cesspools" will doubtless please all sensitive lovers of the noble art of piano playing! Piano playing is restricted to certain hours in this city, as any student will testify. After midnight your neighbors will quickly let you know, if you continue music making, whether it is agreeable or not. It seems to us that the "Williams family" might employ a Virgil clavier with great success. A toneless piano and the piano Trust solve the problem.

THERE are several reasons why Luigi Mancinelli, one of the greatest of contemporary operatic conductors, will not return here next season. The first is that he is at work on his new opera, "Paola and Francesca," the libretto by Boïto. The second—well, the second is an open secret. It will keep for the present. Certainly it is no exaggeration to say that all the three conductors engaged for the forthcoming Grau season, Seppelli, Damrosch and Flon, are not worth Mancinelli's little finger as musician and conductor.

IT is strange that a writer of the high repute of Herr Karl Blind should have devoted space in the Nineteenth Century to revive the fiction of the German derivation of "La Marseillaise," says Mr. Betts in the London Daily News. The story of the "strange origin" of the song was demolished by M. A. de Lisle in 1865, and Herr Blind will find further facts in the treatise published by Loquin in 1879, and in the masterly article contributed by the eminent musical historian M. Gustave Chouquet, keeper of the museum of the Paris Conservatoire, to Grove's Dictionary, in 1880. The Navoigille story, put forward by Castil Blaze in 1852, and repeated in 1863 by Fétis (whence G. A. Sala borrowed it), is there conclusively disproved; while the alternative myth, that the tune of the hymn is part of the Credo of a MS. Mass by one Holtzmann, supposed to be preserved in the church at Meersburg, is sufficiently contradicted by the fact that M. Chouquet, in August, 1879, made inquiries on the spot, and was told by the clerical authorities at Meersburg that they had no such Mass. It is, of course, quite possible that the germs of the melody may be found elsewhere (somebody a few years ago discovered "Tommy, Make Room for Your Uncle" in Händel's "Susanna"), but that "La Marseillaise" was primarily the work of Rouget de Lisle, and was afterward orchestrated by Grétry and others, there cannot now be much doubt.

Of course, the "Marseillaise" myth has caused leisured correspondents of the evening papers to revive the sillier story of the supposed French origin of "God Save the King," which, according to the "Souvenirs de la Marquise de Créquy" (which were supposed to be written in 1686), was composed by Lully for the visit of Louis XIV. and Madame de Maintenon to the Convent of St. Cyr. The story has long ago been proved to be a wild invention, and the "Souvenirs" were a clumsy forgery, written by one Cousen de St. Malo, and not published in Paris till 1834.

MR. HUNEKER GOES ABROAD.

JAMES HUNEKER, of THE MUSICAL COURIER'S staff, goes to Europe this week for the purpose of attending the Bayreuth Festival. After remaining several weeks in Bayreuth he will go to Munich to be present at the inauguration of the new Prince Regent's Opera House August 21, where he also expects to hear Madame Nordica sing Isolde. During his stay abroad he will make a special study of musical life and conditions in Bayreuth, Munich, Vienna, Prague, Budapest, Berlin, Geneva, Paris, Brussels and London, and will relate the results of these studies to the readers of THE MUSICAL COURIER. Mr. Huneker will return to New York in time for the opening of the regular concert season.

SUMMER ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS.

LIKE the inevitable heat and humidity, orchestral music in the summer is a problem open for the discussion of New Yorkers. The total amounts that have been lost by individuals and associations in their attempts to give orchestral concerts in New York in the summer months would paralyze a lightning calculator and astonish the more placid and saner class of music lovers. The courageous and beautiful plan originated by Theodore Thomas at the old Central Park Garden 'way back in the seventies is fondly recalled by older residents. In the advancement of music these early Thomas concerts were brilliantly successful, but financially they were given at a loss—how great no one but Mr. Thomas knows. In those good old days Coney Island was a respectable place and the tendency of New Yorkers to go down there reduced the size of the audiences at the Thomas concerts. Years passed and in the course of time the beaches known as Manhattan and Brighton both competed for the better element of health and amusement seekers. Manhattan secured the unique and only Patrick Sarsfield Gilmore. The Brighton Beach Railroad Company, of which Gen. James Jourdan was president, had a formidable rival in the Long Island Railroad Company; but in the determination to attract people to Brighton the directors of the Brighton Beach Railroad were persuaded to engage Anton Seidl and a big orchestra for the Brighton Beach Music Hall as a counter attraction for the only Gilmore at Manhattan.

The first concert by Anton Seidl and his orchestra in the hall at Brighton Beach was given on Saturday afternoon, June 30, 1888. Edward H. Colell, then manager of Chickering Hall, manipulated the business for the Seidl end of the enterprise. Mr. Colell is now manager of Wissner Hall, Brooklyn, and as he is still in possession of the contract between Seidl and the Brighton Beach Railroad Company the figures we quote are authentic. There has been in the past a great deal of unnecessary lying and foolish guessing about the sums paid and the losses in the furnishing of summer music. But the financial facts about Seidl's first season at Brighton are these:

Every Friday evening General Jourdan presented Manager Colell with a check for $3,500. This check Mr. Colell turned over to Seidl, the conductor retaining $1,000 as his weekly salary and the remainder, $2,500, was paid to the orchestra, composed of sixty-seven men. The contract made at these figures stipulated a season of ten weeks, two concerts daily, including Sunday, or a total of 140 concerts for the season. Brighton Beach never had such a big orchestra after the first summer. The experiment made by the Brighton Beach Railroad Company was not repeated. A struggling railroad, which later passed into the hands of a receiver, could not stand the extravagance of summer music to the tune of $35,000. Had it not been for the interest of a clever woman Seidl would never have wielded the baton at Brighton a second summer. During his first season the Wagnerian conductor won the admiration of a number of bright Brooklyn women. One of them proved to be Mrs. Laura C. Holloway, well known for her literary and newspaper work and her love for music. When Mrs. Holloway heard that the Brighton Beach Railroad would not again undertake to be the "angel" for the return of Seidl and his orchestra she organized the Seidl Society.

Inspired by her enthusiasm, she induced several hundred women to join her, and the society was formed, a strong body at the start, including as it did women of wealth and social influence in Brooklyn. Thus in 1889, when Seidl and his orchestra returned to play at Brighton Beach, it was under the auspices of the Seidl Society. Then came the "tug of war." The dream of the kind ladies was very pretty, but the never ending struggle to raise the money to pay Seidl and his men in his orchestra proved a terrible strain. While the Brighton Beach Railroad directors refused to "back" Seidl a second summer, Mrs. Holloway did finally persuade them to contribute something to the fund for summer music. A little romance, too, crept into the negotiations, for Mrs. Holloway, who was a young widow, succeeded in capturing the heart of Colonel Edward Langford, the secretary and treasurer of the Brighton Beach Railroad. Colonel Langford was a bachelor, and the friendship between him and Mrs. Holloway resulted in their marriage. The bride resigned from practical newspaper work and threw her heart and soul into the cause of the Seidl Society. Colonel Langford, sympathizing with the noble aims of his wife, aided her in every way to advance the work of the concerts at the beach and in the winter in Brooklyn. But each summer the re-engagement of Seidl for the Brighton Beach music hall brought with it financial difficulties. The orchestra and Seidl, however, were always promptly paid, and only a few intelligent and appreciative people realized the heroic efforts made by Mrs. Langford to make ends meet. As organizer and president of the Seidl Society the responsibility of raising the money devolved upon her. For several years she did manage to secure donations and generous prices for program advertising, but the number of philanthropists musically inclined did not increase.

In those latter days at Brighton Beach the prompt payment of salaries to Seidl and his musicians was often too plainly at variance with the small attendance. A few rainy and chilly nights played havoc at the box office, and then the people wondered where the next money was coming from. Even the thrifty Sigismund Bernstein, tympani player extraordinary to Anton Seidl, and musicians' "middleman," while sitting on the beach in the twilight, before the concert, gazing sadly into the wild waves, would turn around and demurely ask the first acquaintance who came along:

"And vill you tell me how they do it?"

"Sam," as the musicians more familiarly address Bernstein, is reputed to be the richest orchestral player on the face of the earth. His economies down at the seashore became a topic of discussion to all. "Sam" alone could see no joke in his ability to save nine-tenths of his salary. The money was his, and he had the right to save it, to be sure. Besides tympani player and musicians' "middleman," Bernstein filled the place of personal manager to Seidl during the last years of the conductor's life. Many people not blessed with Mr. Bernstein's faculty for accumulating did, however, join him in asking whose fortune was consumed in keeping Seidl at Brighton Beach. It was stated that Seidl did not in the last summers receive a salary of $1,000 a week, but it was declared that he never received less than $700. His contract also allowed a suite of rooms and board free at the Brighton Beach Hotel for himself and Mrs. Seidl. This same arrangement, by the way, was also adhered to in the original contract made with the Brighton Beach Railroad Company.

The music with Seidl and his orchestra at Brighton Beach came to an end the summer of 1896. By the time the last season closed there had been a reduction in membership of the Seidl Society. Mrs. Langford herself kept bravely on with the work and gave a series of winter concerts in Brooklyn, as usual.

In the summer of 1897 Seidl went abroad to conduct opera. The winter before the men who had played under him organized the Metropolitan Permanent Orchestra. Fifty went into the organization, each man contributing the sum of $100. With this capital of $5,000 and a generous guarantee from the Weber-Wheelock Piano Company the Metropolitan Permanent Orchestra, with Adolf Neuendorff as conductor, arranged with the Madison Square Garden Company for a series of summer night concerts on the Madison Square Roof Garden. Disaster followed disaster in this latest orchestral venture. Neuendorff was in failing health when he assumed the conductorship. After several weeks he collapsed and was forced to resign. The directors of the orchestra, who were also players in the orchestra, elected one of their own number, Henry P. Schmitt, to succeed Neuendorff. The summer of 1897 was remarkable for the number of rainy and chilly nights, and after ten weeks the orchestra had not only exhausted the guarantee of the piano company, but a considerable portion of its own bank account. The next thing the directors of the orchestra voted was to quit paying salaries to themselves and their colleagues, and at the conference decided to run the concerts three weeks longer on shares. The share for each man amounted to about $11 per week. At the conclusion of the three weeks the men were glad to end the season and prepare for the regular work of the winter.

Mr. Schmitt had gained some experience as conductor while assisting Seidl, and with the additional knowledge acquired in filling out Neuendorff's term he resolved to come before the public as a conductor the following summer. The young violinist was encouraged by friends, and three "angels" came to the rescue for that second summer of the Metropolitan Permanent Orchestra on the Madison Square Roof Garden—Mr. Daniels, the dry goods merchant; Mr. Lüchow, the well-known Fourteenth street host, and the third the father-in-law of Mr. Schmitt. This was in the summer of 1898, and the financial tussle of the previous summer was experienced. The guarantees were rapidly "played up," as the musicians put it, and again the members of the orchestra were compelled to draw upon their own bank account. On pay day the musicians smiled grimly as they paid themselves out of their own money. Two seasons proved enough for the Metropolitan Permanent Orchestra.

Franz Kaltenborn was the next man destined to wield the baton over a summer orchestra in New York. The young musician, who had played first violin under Seidl for years, was the man selected by the Seidl Society, of Brooklyn, to conduct the Seidl memorial concert at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. From that auspicious beginning Mr. Kaltenborn advanced himself up to his present important place in the public eye. Conflicting reports have been circulated regarding the losses of the Kaltenborn concerts at the St. Nicholas Garden. As we happen to be in a position to know the facts we can state that the losses were comparatively small. The first season (1899) not over $5,000 or $6,000 was paid out over the actual receipts, and when the amount of advertising Kaltenborn got out of the summer concerts in support of his winter work is considered no good business man would say that the money was lost. The second season, that was last summer, the receipts were 30 per cent. higher than the first, and had the management been judicious there would have been no deficit to speak of. This, the third season, as is now well known, the management of the concerts is in the control of the St. Nicholas Skating and Ice Company, the owners of the building. With receipts of the second season 30 per cent. greater than the first, the directors of the company doubtless concluded that the scheme was worth a third trial. The season this year was opened June 1, and while it has about six weeks longer to run, it is safe to predict that there will be no deficit this year. The object mainly of giving the concerts this year was to keep the garden open in the summer. In the winter a prosperous business is done there, it being the only fashionable skating rink in town. The directors of the St. Nicholas Skating and Ice Company are well aware that no money can be made out of orchestral concerts, but if they emerge from the experiment without a loss they will be the first men who ever accomplished the feat of giving orchestral concerts and coming out even. Simple arithmetic shows that it would really require only 1,000 persons at an admission of 50 cents each for seven nights in the week to make orchestral concerts pay and besides yield a small profit. It would seem that in a city of over 3,000,000 inhabitants the thing could be done. That it has never yet been done is something of a reflection on the taste of New Yorkers. The horde of amusement seekers here prefer comic operas, musical comedies and stupid theatrical performances to the orchestra. An orchestral concert to the great mass of people is a stupid affair, and when we study this attitude we may as well realize that in the matter of orchestral music little progress has been made in New York. The class of people who support the Philharmonic concerts and the serious musical functions in the regular musical season are absent from the city in summer, but as there are several millions of us left, besides the strangers in town, it would seem that from the great army of stay-at-homes enough people could be attracted to support a season of summer concerts. Traveling to and from the seashore is attended with much fatigue, and once a fortnight is about as often as the level-headed person cares to make the trip.

The Summer Night Orchestral Association formed some years ago got no further than to secure a small subscription list. Although many names of rich New Yorkers appeared on the books, the sums set against their signatures were ridiculously small. To the credit of the association, each subscriber received back his or her subscription when the plan of giving a series of concerts was abandoned. Such a series as the ladies of the association desired to undertake could not have been arranged without a guarantee fund of at least $10,000. Not half of that amount was pledged. To state that an orchestra is an expensive form of entertainment or education is equal to telling our readers that black is black. Every musician knows it, every manager knows it, and every intelligent music lover knows it, too.

As we have already stated, all that is needed to secure an orchestra of fifty men and a conductor at a fair salary, and pay all other expenses, would require 1,000 people nightly, or an average of $7,000 for the week, at 50 cents each. To the visionary man or woman this might seem as easy as rolling off a log, but thus far no manager or conductor in New York has been found who could do this. The audiences attracted to the St. Nicholas Garden are the largest ever assembled at serial summer concerts in New York, but the crowds come only on certain nights in the week, and that is the way it was in the days of Thomas and Seidl. It is evident that we cannot yet boast of a permanent public willing to support orchestral concerts seven nights in the week.

ALFREDO PIATTI DEAD.

CARLO ALFREDO PIATTI, one of the greatest violoncello virtuosos of the middle of the nineteenth century, died at Bergamo last Friday. He was born in Bergamo, Italy, January 8, 1822, being the son of the violinist Antonio Piatti. He was pupil in the beginning of Zanetti, and from 1832-37 of Merighi at the Milan Conservatory, making his début in concert at Milan in 1834. In 1838 Piatti, whose reputation began to spread, went on a series of tours, playing with Liszt at Munich in 1843 and the next year in Paris. His first public appearance in England was at a Philharmonic concert in 1844, and in 1849 he became first 'cello at the Italian opera, and since 1859 had been a prominent figure in the Monday and Saturday Popular Concerts of chamber music. Piatti was associated for many years in quartet with Joseph Joachim, and was personally beloved in London. After many seasons of strenuous labor the veteran 'cellist retired some years ago to his birthplace, Bergamo. He leaves a widow and an adopted son of hers. The senior editor of THE MUSICAL COURIER met this adopted son and Mrs. Piatti last year at Lenno. He is a young priest, whose musical and mechanical gifts are so great that he invented and built an electrical orchestra, which played successfully at the electrical exhibition in Como.

Piatti was a prolific composer. Among other things he published two 'cello concertos, a concertino for 'cello and orchestra, vocal music with 'cello obbligato, fantasias, capriccios and other original pieces for 'cello solo. He also edited six string sonatas by Boccherini and Locatelli, a sonata, op. 2, by Marcello, and he wrote an excellent method for his instrument.

THEY ARE ALL ALIKE.

THE following story is quite to the point: Ernesto Tamagno, the distinguished tenor, went from London to Paris to take part in the performance at the Opéra given in honor of the retirement of Mme. Laurent, an actress of melodrama, who has been for several years at the head of the orphanage for the children of French actors, and has been decorated by the Government for her efforts in this field with the cross of the Legion of Honor. All the noted French actors and singers were delighted to take part. Even Madame Patti, who was in Paris when the plan was proposed, was willing to sing. Tamagno decided that as it would be out of the question to expect payment in money on such an occasion, he would suggest the Legion of Honor as the appropriate reward for his services. The suggestion was of course rejected by the officials, and President Loubet was so disgusted by the affair that he refused to attend the performance. The tenor also declined to take part, as his suggestion that he would like the decoration was received with so little courtesy. The result of the matter was that he left Paris vowing that he would never return. The feeling over the affair is such that he will in all probability never be asked to sing at the Opéra under any circumstances.

The behavior of Tamagno is, all things considered, not at all surprising. He is an Italian, a tenor, therefore "out for all" the money he can get. If he can't get money he will take Legion of Honor decorations, and if the committee had but offered the big man his expenses and railway tickets he might have agreed to sing. Tamagno is not different from any of his Continental brethren. They all grab what they can get—and are they to be censured for this? Europe is miserably poor, and pays miserably for its luxuries. Singers and instrumentalists make as much in a season there as they get for a week's services in America. And as they must live they accept meagre salaries, the salaries of our policemen and firemen—sometimes not as much—and when they secure an American engagement they are in clover, for they usually save up enough by pinching economy to retire on after a few years. But America gets little of their money. They spend little, and invest their earnings abroad. Tamagno when he was here last did his own washing. A thrifty set!

PATTI TO MAKE A TOUR OF ENGLAND—LONDON, July 20.—It is announced that Madame Patti will make a tour of England during the coming autumn. William Lavin, the American singer, will accompany her.

"SISTER TERESA."

"Brainstuff is not lean stuff; the brainstuff of fiction is internal history, and to suppose it dull is the profoundest of errors." GEORGE MEREDITH.

GEORGE MOORE is an Irishman of genius. The conjunction is not without precedent. But what makes his case so peculiarly his own is his unlikeness to our preconceived notion of an Irishman. No man of genius resembles his countrymen; so we find Burke, Swift, George Moore with few of the characteristics ascribed to Irishmen and wits. They were and are not jolly, world-loving, rollicking sports of the sort Lever loved to paint. Tom Moore and his rose-water poetry, Richard Brinsley Sheridan and his glossy smartness, about hit the popular notion of what an Irish poet, playwright and a man of letters should be.

Now George Moore is far from being an Irishman in this sense—this prose poet who is at once mystical and gross. Yet he is a Celt, and lately he has developed a restless spirit, a desire to flee the Anglo-Saxon and his haunts. It is the "homing" instinct of the Celt—after forty years of age men of talent return to their tribe. And Mr. Moore is fast becoming an Irishman among Irishmen. Here is the newest incarnation of this feminine soul—perverse and feminine, he admits he is—that, wax-like, takes and retains the most subtle and powerful impressions. The readers of his early books knew him as a Shelley worshipper, then a digger among the romantic literature of 1830, finally a follower of Zola. So after "Flowers of Passion" (1877) we got "Pagan Poems" (1881), and with "A Modern Lover" (1883) began his prose trilogy devoted to the young man. This was followed in 1884 by "A Mummer's Wife," "Literature at Nurse" (1885), "A Drama in Muslin" (1886), "Parnell and His Island" (1887), "A Mere Accident" (1887), "Confessions of a Young Man" (1888), "Spring Days" (1888), "Mike Fletcher" (1889), "Impressions and Opinions" (1890), "Vain Fortune" (1890), "Modern Painting" (1893), "The Strike at Arlingford," a play (1893); "Esther Waters" (1894), "Celibates" (1895), "Evelyn Innes" (1898), "The Bending of the Bough," a play (1900). He also collaborated in 1894 with Mrs. Craigie in a little comedy called "Journeys End in Lovers' Meeting," which was written for Ellen Terry.

Mr. Moore was born in 1857, the son of the late George Henry Moore, M. P., of Moore Hall, County Mayo, Ireland. He was educated at Oscott College, near Birmingham, and studied art in Paris, so his expatriation was practical and complete. He hated his native land and hated his religion. He could write in "Confessions of a Young Man": "Dear, sweet, Protestant England * * * Protestantism is strong, clean and Westernly; Catholicism is eunuch-like, dirty and Oriental." * * * Yet I know of few writers whose books, whose mind, are so obsessed by Catholicism. He may insult the Church in "A Drama in Muslin"—one of the most veracious documents of Irish social history in the eighties—and through the month of Alice Barton. But, like the moth and the flame, he ever circles about the Roman Catholic religion. "The world has lived through Christianity," he makes his novelist Harding say, "as it has through a score of other things, and Bethlehem, Nazareth and the Dove have already been bequeathed to the vaudevillists of the future." It would be unfair to hold a man responsible for the utterances of his characters, nevertheless there is a peculiarly personal cadence in all that Mr. Moore writes which makes his problem, like that of Huysmans', a fascinating one.

William Archer, the dramatic critic, recently interviewed Mr. Moore in his Victoria street chambers for the Pall Mall Magazine. We discover that Mr. Moore is about to leave London for Dublin—that Dublin he so mercilessly treated in "A Drama in Muslin"—for he believes in the Celtic renaissance, believes in the study of the Erse tongue—in a word, has gone over to his people, he a self-accused absentee landlord, gone to a primitive people, to an atmosphere "in which tenderness and pity for humanity, and the cultivation of ideas, count for more than so-called material advantages." Ah, the idealist! He is going to Dublin, where, with W. B. Yeats, Dr. Douglas Hyde and a group of sympathetic poets, he will write plays and be happy. It is the ten superior persons of the universe that Huysmans writes of, and even in this interview Mr. Moore acknowledges that "it is only by writing for the few that you write, in the end, for many nations." Ah, the idealist!

Further on he says, without knowing that he is quoting Dr. Antonin Dvorák:

"The Americans wonder what to do with the negro population. The negro in America is the seed of future literature, for when the journalists have killed the language, when it becomes incapable even of journalese, the negro will be inventing the new idiom. Singing at their work, the Hungarian peasants invent musical phrases, the gipsy develops them on his fiddle. Many musical phrases, and some of the most beautiful, have arisen in this way. The negro will invent the new language; the man of letters will apply it to literary purposes."

No wonder Mr. Archer exclaims after this: "Ah, you Irishmen!" And how characteristic is the novelist's Ruskin-like complaint: "This empire of yours is capable of nothing but the fiction of Kipling, the painting of Sargent, the drama of Pinero." * * * "Why, my dear friend, it is impossible—but absolutely impossible!—to produce anything beautiful in this England of yours. Look at that coffee cup you have just put down; it isn't anything much—only a piece of Swansea china—but you could not for a thousand pounds get such a cup made to-day. Look at that clock—the simplest thing in the world—a quite ordinary piece of Louis Quinze workmanship; if you offered £10,000 to-day for a design of equal simplicity and beauty, there isn't a man who could produce it. Look at that piano. It was made in 1810 or 1820, and it would be as impossible to produce as delicate a piece of marquetry to-day as it would be to build the Parthenon. All England to-day is incapable of producing so much as a beautiful chair."

I print these extracts to show you that the George Moore of "Mike Fletcher" and the George Moore of "Sister Teresa" are very different men. Mike Fletcher, for me the first virile, naked man in English fiction since "Tom Jones," may please some critics more than Evelyn Innes turned nun, for of Mike you could not say in Meredith's words: "Men may have rounded Seraglio Point; they have not yet doubled Cape Turk." Mike never rounded Seraglio Point; while of Evelyn, you dimly feel that she is always "fiddling harmonics on the strings of sensualism." Yes, George Moore is returning to the tribe; he is Irish; he is almost Roman Catholic —and the man is often more interesting than his books. Not to know them all is to miss the history of artistic London during the last quarter of a century.

II.

In the preface of the English edition of "Sister Teresa" Mr. Moore writes: "I found I had completed a great pile of MS., and one day it occurred to me to consider the length of this MS. To my surprise I found I had written about 150,000 words, and had only finished the first half of my story. I explained my difficulties to my publisher, suggesting that I should end the chapter I was then writing on what musicians would call 'a full close,' and that half the story should be published under the title of 'Evelyn Innes' and half under the title of 'Sister Teresa.' My publisher consented, frightened at the thought of a novel of a thousand pages—300,000 words." J. B. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia, are the American publishers of the new novel, which, as will be seen, is not a sequel of "Evelyn Innes," but in reality its latter half. A sixpenny edition of the latter, much revised, and ninety pages shorter than the original, has appeared. It is published by Fisher Unwin, London. "The story," says Mr. Moore in the preface, "has not been altered, but the text is almost entirely new. No one, perhaps, has rewritten a book so completely. I am aware that the alteration of a published text is deprecated in the press, but it is difficult to understand why, for have not Shakespeare and Balzac and Goethe and Wagner and FitzGerald rewritten their works? Among my contemporaries, George Meredith and W. B. Yeats have followed the example of their illustrious predecessors."

George Moore.
From a drawing by Will H. Rothenstein.

Do you remember Evelyn Innes, the English Wagner singer, who left her father, the old harpsichord maker of Dulwich, for the love of art and Sir Owen Asher? Three years ago I wrote of the book and its author: "He has caught the right atmosphere; he is still master of moods, and he has attempted and nearly succeeded in spilling out the soul of a singer for our inspection; the soul of the selfish, ambitious prima donna; there is no denying that Evelyn, despite her tender conscience, was a selfish and a fascinating creature, mastered by every passing whim, and a woman utterly incapable of developing mentally without masculine assistance." And Harry Thurston Peck found her "that vilest of all combinations, superficial passion and fundamental hardness." While I don't think that Evelyn is as wonderful a piece of character drawing as "Mildred Lawson"—one of the best stories in the English language—nor as unselfishly attractive as Alice Barton, yet there is no denying her completeness and charm. A weak woman, and at heart a cold woman, she received the impact of three masculine natures upon her soul—Owen Asher, Ulick Dean and Monsignor Mostyn; and the strongest man won the battle—for God. I don't mean to say that Evelyn was merely a pious girl, a sensually pious girl, but I believe if a stronger man than the priest had appeared she would have been haled to him as is the iron to the magnet. This clinging, this limpet-like nature, Mr. Moore indicates from the outset. And how cleverly he has shown the correlation of religion and sex! To use his own words—in regard to character development—"In the novel the characters are the voice, the deeds are the orchestra."

The last half of the book is by no means so brilliant, or even so convincing as the first. But then its psychology is much finer and infinitely harder to handle. Evelyn was bound to taste convent life. Morbid, fatigued by Wagner singing, triumphs, social and operatic, by her two lovers, her stomach deranged by dyspepsia, her nerves worn to an irritable thread by insomnia—is it any wonder the golden haired girl, with the freckled face, regarded convent life as a green-blooming oasis in a wilderness of lust, vanity and artificial wordliness! You can see that her mother's spirit grows stronger in her every day, that mother with the cold eyes and thin lips who lost her voice so early in a great career. "The portrait of our father or our mother is a sort of crystal ball, into which we look in the hope of discovering our destiny." Evelyn was tired of love, above all of animal love which dragged her soul from God. Ulick, for that reason, was more grateful to her. He was a mystic, with the dog-cold nose of mystics, and he soothed Evelyn when Sir Owen had ruffled her with his importunities, with his materialism. But these two men soon fade after the first hundred pages of the new story; indeed they are lightly etched-in at the best. "We have only to change our ideas to change our friends. Our friends are only a more or less imperfect embodiment of our ideas," says Mr. Moore. The feigned friendship of the two is a truly Flaubertian note. It recalls a trait of Charles Bovary. The convent of the Passionist Sisters at Wimbledon, however, is the glowing core of this remarkable tale. For nuns, for convents and monasteries, the life contemplative, this Irish novelist has always had a deep liking. There is John Norton in "Celibates," and there is Lily Young, who left a convent for Mike Fletcher, and then we have Agnes Lahens, whose only happiness was in a conventual life. At one time I believe that this writer would have indorsed Nietzsche's idea of a monastery for Free Thinkers. Didn't H. G. Wells suggest a retreat for a Huysmans' sect? Evelyn Innes, like John Norton, dilly-dallied with her innermost convictions. It was long before she realized that faith is a gift, is a special talent, which must be cultivated to a perfect flowering. And when she left her lovers, when she left the stage, after her father died in Rome—here "the long arm of coincidence" is rather unpleasantly visible—when she had professed, taken the veil, and became Sister Teresa, her former life fell away from her like water, and she was happy, a happy bride of Christ—until the honeymoon was over; for divine nuptials have their honeymoons, their chilly repulsions, their hours and days of indifference and despair. And this brings us to M. Huysmans.

III.

Mr. Peck, in his admirable estimate of George Moore—to be found in "The Personal Equation"—writes that he is frankly a decadent, frankly a sensualist of the type of Huysmans, whom he intensely admires. "A page of Huysmans," exclaims Moore, "is as a dose of opium, a glass of some exquisite and powerful liqueur. * * * Huysmans goes to my soul like a gold ornament of Byzantine workmanship. There is in his style the yearning charm of arches, a sense of ritual, the passion of the mural, of the window." And Mr. Pecks adds: "Mr. Moore's affinity with Huysmans does not go further than a certain sensuous sympathy. He could never follow him." * * * But he has followed him, followed "En Route"; Huysmans has not only gone to his soul, but to his pen. He once wittily though unfairly wrote: "Henry James went to France and read Turgenev. W. D. Howells stayed at home and read Henry James." This might be paraphrased thus: Joris Karl Huysmans, that unique disciple of Baudelaire, went to La Trappe and studied Jesus. George Moore, that most plastic souled Irishman, stayed at home and studied Huysmans. This is the precise statement of a truth. Mr. Moore owes as much to Huysmans for his "Sister Teresa" as he did to Zola and "L'Assomoir" for "A Mummer's Wife"; to the De Goncourts and "Germinie Lacerteux" for "Esther Waters"; to Guy de Maupassant and "Bel Ami" for "Mike Fletcher"; to Maurice Barrés and his Culte de Moi for "Confessions of a Young Man"; but to nobody he owes "Mildred Lawson." She is as much George Moore's as "L'Education Sentimentale" is truly Flaubert's. I do not know of her counterpart in fiction; like Frédèric Moreau, that unheroic hero, she is a heroine who failed from sheer lack of temperament.

But with Sister Teresa the case is different. She is Huysmans-ized. As far back as August, 1898, I predicted in these columns that we must "prepare for Huysmans-like descriptions of Gregorian chants and the sinfulness of modern music," when the sequel to "Evelyn Innes" appeared. Yet Mr. Moore has only used Huysmans as a spring-board —to employ a favorite expression of the French writer—for his narration of Sister Teresa's doings in conventional seclusion. He knew, of course, that he could never hope to rival Huysmans' matchless, if somewhat florid and machicolated style, and it may be confessed at once that "Sister Teresa" is not as intense or so sincere a book as "En Route." Nowhere, despite the exquisite resignation and Mozartean sweetness of Mr. Moore's thirty-eighth chapter, is there anything that approaches the power of the wonderful first chapter in "En Route," with its thundering symphonic description of the singing of the "De Profundis." Nor are Teresa's raptures and agonies to be compared to Durtal's in that awful first night at La Trappe, though the Irish writer follows the French one closely enough. But Moore is tenderer, more poetic, more human than Huysmans. He has so highly individualized, so completely transposed his character, that to him must only praise be awarded. As Russell Jacobus says in "The Blessedness of Egoism," the secret of Goethe's self-culture: The faculty of drawing from everything—experience, books and art—just the element required at that stage of one's growth, and the faculty of obtaining, by a clairvoyant instinct, the experience, the book, the work of art which contains that needed element." This Mr. Moore has always done—he confesses to it, to the "echo auguries" of his young manhood. The color of his mind is ever changing. It often displays the reverberating tints of a flying fish in full flight.

And his art has benefited by his defection from Zola. It has grown purer, more intense. As Huysmans says himself in "La Bas": "We must, in short, follow the great highway so deeply dug out by Zola, but it is also necessary to trace a parallel path in the air, another road by which we may reach the Beyond and the Afterward, to achieve thus, in one word, a spiritualistic naturalism." He believes Dostoïevsky comes nearest to this achievement—as Havelock Ellis remarks—Dostoïevsky, who was once described by Mr. Moore as a Gaboriau with psychological sauce. But, then, he had not read "The Idiot," "The Gambler," or perhaps "L'Adolescence." I find traces of the Russian novelists and their flawless art throughout "Sister Teresa," just as the externals of the book—of "Evelyn Innes" also—recall Flaubert in "L'Education Sentimentale." There are many half cadences, chapters closing on unresolved harmonies, many ellipses, and all bathed in a penetrating yet hazy atmosphere. His style is clear and rhythmic. Mr. Moore tells of subtle things in a simple manner—the reverse of Henry James' method. The character drawing is no longer so contrapuntal as in "Evelyn Innes." But the convent sisters are delightful—the Prioress, Mother Hilda and Sister Mary Saint John. It would not be George Moore, however, to miss a tiny suggestion of the morbid—though I confess he has treated the episode discreetly. But here again has Huysmans anticipated him, and also anticipated him in Durtal's revolt against the faith, with his almost uncontrollable desire to utter blasphemies in the presence of the Blessed Sacrament. With a master hand—but always the hand of a master miniaturist —does Mr. Moore paint cloistered life, its futile gossiping, little failings, heroic sacrifices and humming air of sanctity. There are pages in the book that I could almost swear were written by a nun—or Mrs. Craigie—so real, so intimate, so saturated are they with the religious atmosphere. And the garden, that nuns' garden! Whosoever has walked in the garden of a sequestered convent can never quite lose the faint sense of sweetness, goodness, spirituality and a certain soft communion with nature which modulates into the very speech and bodily rhythms of the sisters. All this atmosphere Mr. Moore, whose receptivity is most feminine, brings into his perfumed pages. After the fleshly passion, the unrest of "Evelyn Innes," this new book has a consoling music of its own. It can never be popular. I fancy Roman Catholics will not care for it; while the account of Teresa's harassed soul may shock the prurient by reason of its forthright plainness.

It was after the convent doors closed that the real struggles of the singer began. Some of them have considerable vraisemblance, some of them are very trivial. The letters sent to Monsignor Mostyn, for example, are not credible; nor are Teresa's revolt and subsequent spiritual rebirth made quite clear. Perhaps Mr. Moore is not yet so strong a believer as Huysmans. His words do not carry the intense conviction of the Fleming-Frenchman, who from his present retreat in a Benedictine monastery has just given the world a vivid and edifying account of St. Lydwine de Schiedam, that blessed Dutch saint he speaks of in "En Route," first attacked at the time of the plague in Holland. "Two boils formed, one under her arm, the other above the heart. 'Two boils, it is well,' she said to the Lord, 'but three would be better in honor of the Holy Trinity,' and immediately a third pustule broke out on her face." This extraordinary mystic considered herself as an expiatory victim for all the sins of the earth. Her sufferings were finally rewarded. Like John Bunyan, she died a "comfortable and triumphant death." A writer of Huysmans' magnificent artistry, who can thus transform himself into an humble hagiographer, must indeed have repented, foresworn his evil ways and become impregnated by the faith of Christ. Perhaps his conversion is so complete that he may never publish the further story of "The Oblate." If he does not, then shall I believe him to be a sincere man.

Mr. Moore does not succeed in arousing any such poignant and unpleasant impressions. Notwithstanding his array of mystical learning, his familiarity with the writings of Rüysbroeck, John of the Cross, Saint Teresa, Catharine Emmerich, Saint Angela, and the rest, one cannot escape the conviction that it is not all deeply felt. As Count S. C. de Soissons says:

"He who praises the lasciviousness of Alcibiades does not enjoy the pleasure that he had; neither do they experience the mystic ecstasies of the anchorites of the Thebaid who try to parody their saintly lives."

Even the striking account of the Carmelite's profession in "Sister Teresa" is paralleled in "En Route." * * *

There is not so much music talk as in "Evelyn Innes," for she leaves its world of vain and empty sonorities. This much I found in an early chapter. "In Händel there are beautiful proportions; it is beautiful like eighteenth century architecture, but here I can discover neither proportion nor design." She referred to a Brahms score, which is manifestly absurd. Whatever else there may be in Brahms, we are sure to discover proportion, design. Again, "She remembered that César Franck's music affected her in much the same way." Shrugging her shoulders she said: "When I listen I always hear something beautiful, only I don't listen." I fear Mr. Moore has succumbed again to the blandishing voice of Ulick Dean!

And how does it all end, the psychic adventures of this Wagner singer turned nun, this woman who "discovered two instincts in herself—an inveterate sensuality and a sincere aspiration for a spiritual life"? She loses her voice, like her mother, and after relinquishing all idea of escaping from the convent—not a well developed motive—she settles down to teaching voice and piano. Sir Owen Asher no longer troubles her, Ulick Dean has evaporated, or perhaps crumbled to dust, like an unheeding Bram if he had touched the earthly shores of real life. No one from the outside world visits her but Louise, Mlle. Helbrun, the Brangaene of her "Tristan and Isolde" days. To the evanescent bell booming of their distant past goes the conversation of the friends. It is not so depressingly real, not so moving, as the last words of Frédèric Moreau and Deslauriers in the coda to "L'Education Sentimentale"—that most perfect of fictions—but is melancholy enough. "Our fate is more like ourselves than we are aware," and in the last analysis Evelyn's fate suits her. As a singer she talked too much like a music critic; as Sister Teresa too much like a Bossuet in a nun's habit. She was from the start a female theologian —an odious thing. Her conscience was more to her than her lovers. She was never quite in earnest, always a little inhuman, and I for one can contemplate with equanimity her immurement until her final "packing up" for death and its dusty hypnotisms. After reading the story I am tempted to repeat Renan's remarks on Amiel—quoted by Ernest Newman in his "Wagner"—"He speaks of sin, of salvation, of redemption, and conversion, as if these things were realities." I wonder if Mr. Moore did not feel that way sometimes!

But the book is full of brainstuff. It is also a book with a soul. In it George Moore's art is come to a spiritual and consummate blossoming. After read-

The National Conservatory of Music of America, 128 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

JEANNETTE M. THURBER, PRESIDENT.

Artistic Faculty, consisting of { RAFAEL JOSEFFY, ADELE MARGULIES, LEOPOLD LICHTENBERG, LEO SCHULZ, HENRY T. FINCK, MAX SPICKER, CHARLES HEINROTH, AND OTHERS.

SUMMER TERM BEGINS IN MAY.
ADMISSION DAILY. . . . . .

ing such a passage of sustained music as the following I am almost inclined to make an expiatory pilgrimage to the drab city on the Liffey, to make of Dublin a critic's Canossa; and in the heated, mean streets, and in sable habiliments of sorrow, beat my breast without Mr. Moore's abode, crying aloud: "Peccavi." But would I be forgiven for all that I have said about the noble, morbid, disquieting and fascinating art of George Moore, the Irish Huysmans? Here is a passage executed with incomparable bravura. Ulick Dean speaks:

"To keep her soul he said she must fly from the city where men lose their souls in the rituals of materialism. He must go with her to the pure country, to the woods and to the places where the invisible ones whom the Druids knew ceaselessly ascend and descend from earth to heaven, and from heaven to earth, in flame-colored spirals. He told her he knew of a house by a lake shore, and there they might live in communion with nature, and in the fading lights, and in the quiet hollows of the woods she would learn more of God than she could in the convent. In that house they would live, and their child, if the Gods gave them one, would unfold among the influences of music and love and long traditions."

It was writing like this in "Mildred Lawson" that evoked from Harry Thurston Peck the judgment: "George Moore is the greatest literary artist who has struck the chords of music since the death of Thackeray."

George Moore always had the voice. He has now both voice and vision. JAMES HUNEKER.

July 15.

ARTHUR FRIEDHEIM, the remarkable pianist—most remarkable should be said—is engaged to play at the Worcester Festival. Emma Eames is also one of the soloists.

MRS. FANNIE BLOOMFIELD-ZEISLER, the celebrated pianist, has already arranged for a large number of engagements for next season. She has never experienced such early bookings since she has been before the public—a sure sign that she is one of the artists that are in demand. It will be remembered that this lady came to this city and introduced last season the principle that the deadhead system should not apply to her recitals. She refused to issue deadhead tickets, and the result was that she made a financial success, as well as an artistic one. Every one should remember that Fannie Bloomfield-Zeisler's principle is the proper one in giving concerts and recitals. Abandon the deadhead plan!

AS announced some weeks ago in this paper Daniel Frohman, the manager of important theatrical enterprises, has engaged the young violinist Kubelik for an American tour next season, guaranteeing him $100,000 as his (Kubelik's) share of the profits. This would signify an average of about $3,500 receipts per concert in order to ensure financial certainty, but Mr. Frohman is known to be a careful man of affairs, and no doubt sees the perspective clearly. Let us hope that his first musical venture will prove successful.

FRANK SANGER and Charles Frohman are the joint owners of the Empire Theatre. Mr. Sanger is also interested with Mr. Maurice Grau in the Metropolitan Opera Scheme. If Mr. Grau should retire from the management of the opera Mr. Charles Frohman would probably succeed him; at least there is reason to say that such a contingency is not improbable. It has been discussed. But Mr. Grau's retirement is by no means certain.

WE recommend to our readers for careful perusal a strong and interesting article in the June number of the Contemporary Review. It is entitled "The Essential Tschaikowsky," and is by Ernest Newman, whose "Study of Wagner" is already a classic in Wagnerian polemical literature. Mr. Newman is contemplating a definitive study of Tschaikowsky's life and works, which will no doubt form a fitting companion to his "Wagner." It is understood that the English writer is also preparing a volume of essays for publication next fall. Strangely enough, this distinguished critic and essayist is now hard at work on a profound study of "Banking and Credit," which will see the light in a year or so. Here's versatility for you!

Ella Russell (Madame Righini), who left New York last week for Europe, having come from Australia, where she had been singing in opera, gave birth to a child on the voyage just completed.

Mr. Grau has engaged Sibyl Sanderson for a season here, her first appearance to be at San Francisco, her former home. She will probably sing in opera, too, although this looks like a concert engagement. She leaves Europe September 29.

THE WAGNER MONUMENT.

AN extraordinarily large number of designs were sent in for the Wagner monument, to be erected in the Thiergarten, Berlin. Wagner's figure, which is not very well adapted for monumental representation, is in most cases designed as standing. There are some designs that represent him sitting, and a few artists have contented themselves with the Hermes form. Here and there a desk is added to support the figure.

The designs were passed upon by an international jury of twenty-three persons, who selected as the ten best designs those by Hidding, Berlin; Dammann, Charlottenburg; Hosäus, Berlin; Beyrer and F. Rank, Munich; F. Metzner, Wilmersdorf; Freese, Herter, Hundrieser, Wenk and Eberlein, all of Berlin. These artists are now invited to a second competition, and will receive a compensation of 1,500 marks apiece.

It will be interesting to know how many of the jury had known or seen the master. That the sculptors had to work from existing portraits in representing the personality of the master, and from his creations in indicating his artistic importance, must be granted; but the question whether they are successful or not can be decided only by people who knew Wagner, not only as to his external appearance, but in his inmost nature. The decision of the jury in announcing its choice of ten designs from the sixty-one sent in thinks it necessary to state that the members of the jury have strictly confined themselves to the task of selection, without saying that they would be glad to see them executed, or that their execution seems feasible, or that there is no objection to them, confining themselves simply to the duty of selecting the best of the sixty-one which seemed to them deserving of being admitted to a second competition, leaving to the artists complete freedom.

To two points the jury calls the attention of the artists who take part in the second competition: First, that scarcely one of the competitors has taken into consideration that the monument stands free on all sides, and can be viewed from the sides and behind, and that therefore it must present good silhouettes; secondly, that the monument must be not only plastically effective, but must express the special nature of Wagner's art, and the enormous energy of the man, and this, first and foremost, in the reproduction of the master himself.

The only competitor who is known to fame is Ernest Herter, and the press of Berlin declares that not one of the sixty-one models deserves to be executed and placed in the Thiergarten. The international jury made a favorable impression, and at a dinner given to the foreign members M. Antonin Mercié proposed a toast to "Art" in an interesting speech. Another speaker, the author, Julien Stinde, related his impressions of Wagner, whom he met at Hamburg. Wagner said: "A work of art is a book sealed with seven seals; it is like the bouquet which my wife carries; no one knows how it is composed except the gardener and some friends who have examined it. As regards the flowers themselves, they remain an eternal mystery."

The father of Signora Carita Morena, a young Baltimore singer, who is at her home on a visit from Italy, died at Baltimore last Sunday.

Mr. Gregory Hast

Famous English Tenor.

Of the St. James Hall Popular, London Ballad, Queen's Hall Oratorio, Crystal Palace Saturday and Royal Albert Hall Concerts.

In America only November and December, 1901.

SOLE DIRECTION:
LOUDON G. CHARLTON,
CARNEGIE HALL, NEW YORK.

JOS. S. BAERNSTEIN
BASSO

51 EAST 64TH STREET,
NEW YORK CITY.

The Brilliant Pianiste Season 1901-1902.

JESSIE SHAY.

Exclusive Management:
LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, New York.

BAILEY

THIS IS TO { MUSICAL CLUBS / MUSICAL SOCIETIES / MUSICAL MANAGERS } and Speculators in Musical Attractions.

If you want to please your people, fill your houses and make money, then engage ARTISTS THAT DRAW—artists that the public REALLY want to hear.

Young WM. WORTH BAILEY,
the Blind Violinist, is TRULY a GREAT artist.

ELIZABETH NORTHROP, Soprano
EDWIN M. SHONERT, Pianist } Assisting Artists.

A Season of 50 Concerts is being arranged by

R. E. JOHNSTON,
SUMMER ADDRESS, 257 West 92d Street, New York City,

Whom you should write for particulars. NOTE—Send for Booklet and Souvenir.

EVERETT PIANO USED EXCLUSIVELY.

EUROPEAN NOTES.

A DISPATCH from Moscow announces the sudden death of the baritone Devoyod in the last week of June, from paralysis of the heart. On rising in the morning he said to his wife: "I have had a strange dream. I dreamt that a radical change was about to take place in my existence." He felt very well, however, and, although it was a very hot day, he took his usual long walk in the city. He seemed in equally good health in the evening, and while dressing at the theatre he played and laughed with one of his children, a boy of nine years. At the second act, when he had just finished the duo with Gilda, in "Rigoletto," and was advancing toward the footlights to thank the audience for their applause, he was seen to totter and fall on the stage, murmuring the words, "My dream!"

The curtain was at once lowered and the unfortunate man was carried to his dressing room, where his costume of buffoon was removed. When his wife took off his wig and the bandage with which the ravishers of Gilda had bound him, his eyes were already glazed. The doctors declared that he died of the rupture of an aneurism. The management of the theatre wished to continue the performance with an understudy, but the audience refused to hear the rest.

Devoyod was born at Lyons in 1836, and studied at the Paris Conservatory under Vauthrot, Levasseur and Condere. He left it in 1866 with the second prize for singing, and the first prizes for opera and for opera comique. He made his début the next year as Nelusko in "L'Africaine," and afterward as Valentin in "Faust." He did not remain long at the Opera House, but went abroad and embraced the Italian career. He had great success, and for the last fifteen years was attached to the theatres at Moscow and St. Petersburg. He visited Paris three or four years ago and appeared in "La Vie pour le Czar." He was the nephew of Mlle. Devoyod, of the Odéon and Comédic Française. Devoyod married a Russian, and leaves a widow and six children in difficult circumstances.

A statue to Lortzing was lately inaugurated at Pyrmont, his native town, and a totally forgotten opera of his, "Casanova," was played.

The Adriano Theatre, of Rome, lately produced a serious opera in four acts entitled "Friedmann Bach," music by a Neapolitan pianist, Luigi Gustavo, the libretto based on a drama by the Duke of Maddaloni, and written by two authors, Scaliger and Conforti, who sign it by the pseudonym Alma Solinas. The libretto has the great merit of being absolutely contradictory to the truth. To those who have never heard of Friedmann Bach be it known that he was the eldest of the twenty children of the great Sebastian. He died aged seventy-four, poor and miserable. The librettists represent him as young and in love, and about to produce an opera. The lady Esther, whom Friedmann loved, and who loved him, had another admirer, a wicked young man, who bribed the performers to alter the score so that it was beyond recognition. The performance was a wretched failure. Friedmann, who was present, became mad with shame and grief and lost his reason. Esther found means to restore the score to its original form, and have it produced at Berlin, where it had a brilliant success, at which Friedmann was present. The joy at such a triumph restored his wits, but the emotion was too much for him, and he fell dead murmuring a last word of love to the faithful Esther. The new work at the Adriano had a great success, thanks to the music and the excellent interpretation.

The dates of the official competitions at the Paris Conservatory are:

July 16—Contra basso, alto, 'cello.
July 17—Singing (men).
July 18—Singing (women).
July 19—Harp (men).
July 20.—Violin.
July 22—Opera comique.
July 23.—Piano (women).
July 24—Tragedy and comedy.
July 25—Opera.
July 26—Wind instruments (wood).
July 27—Wind instruments (brass).

The official report of the receipts at the Opéra, Opéra Comique and Odéon are given as follows:

	1899-1900 Francs.	1900-1901 Francs.	Difference Francs.
Opéra	2,873,916	4,090,014	1,216,098
Comédie-Française	1,884,240	1,992,810	108,570
Opéra-Comique	1,979.681	2,440,766	461,085
Odéon	692.595	710,991	18,396

From this table it seems that the visitors to the Exposition patronized music more than the drama.

A solicitor in the Rue Saint Honoré, Paris, named Lot objected to the piano playing in M. Boutet de Monvel's boarding school upstairs because it interfered with the exercise of his profession, and asked the courts to expel the defendant and allow damages. The Tribunal on Wednesday decided that piano playing had become a social institution and the young ladies were more respectable than many of the solicitor's clients. Hence M. Lot lost his case.—Herald.

Emil Hofmann, the baritone who made notable successes in America last season in oratorio and recital work, is now resting in the Black Forest.

After sailing for Europe last April, Mr. Hofmann filled a number of important engagements in England, Scotland and on the Continent. At the end of a month's recreation in Germany, Mr. Hofmann will go to Bayreuth for the Wagner music dramas, then to Munich for the opening of the Prince Regent Theatre.

Before returning to America in October for the coming season, when he will be under the sole direction of Loudon G. Charlton, Mr. Hofmann will make a concert tour of Germany and Austria with Alvin Kranich, the pianist.

Piatti, violoncellist and composer, died on the same day as Mrs. Liddell, who, as Emily Shimmer, was one of the best known pupils of Piatti's famous contemporary, Joachim. Miss Shimmer's ability as a violinist was not known much out of England.

Another musician just deceased is John Farmer, for many years music master at Harrow, and lately organist at Balliol College, Oxford. His best known compositions were the settings of hymns and cantatas and lesser oratorios. He was much esteemed by small singing societies. —Times.

Francesco Grazini, who will be remembered by the oldest of New York's opera goers as a baritone here years ago and famous throughout the civilized world, has just died in Italy. Max Maretzek brought him here first in 1853, and he returned several times to appear here and in New Orleans in opera. He was a member of a musical family, and for his brother, Ludovico, a tenor, Verdi wrote the role of Edgardo in "La Traviata," and he sang the part in the original performance of the opera. Francesco was born on April 16, 1829, at Falmo, where he died a few days ago. He began to sing at Pisa, and in 1854 appeared first at the Théâtre des Italiens in Paris. After that his fame as one of the greatest of Italian singers was made, and he sang chiefly in Paris, Madrid and St. Petersburg. He retired from the stage during the late '60s, as his voice did not hold out. He sang all the

SOUSA AND HIS BAND

Office: Astor Court Building, New York.

Eighteenth Semi-Annual and Fifth Transcontinental Tour.

Sunday, July 7, to Monday, September 2,
INCLUSIVE,
MANHATTAN BEACH,
NEW YORK CITY.

THIS SPACE IS TO BE DEVOTED TO THE INSERTION OF PORTRAITS OF SUCCESSFUL
BOWMAN PUPILS

Mr. BOWMAN is assigning LESSON HOURS for next season. Early application is suggested. He may be addressed until SEPT. 5th at HIS SUMMER HOME, Grand View Cottage, SQUIRREL ISLAND, COAST OF MAINE

E. M. BOWMAN. Piano and Theory Studio: Steinway Hall, New York.
Organist and Conductor Baptist Temple Choir,

THE ONLY "LESCHETIZKY" SCHOOL OF PIANO PLAYING IN AMERICA.
Named after PROF. THEO. LESCHETIZKY, of Vienna, by his special permission.
Mme. DE WIENZKOWSKA, DIRECTRESS AND FOUNDER.
PROF. LESCHETIZKY'S Sole Principal Assistant in this country, formerly in Vienna; also Concert Pianiste.
CARNEGIE HALL. Address Communications: 147 W. Eighty-second St., NEW YORK CITY.
LESCHETIZKY—"Mme. Wienzkowska's success as a piano virtuosa and teacher is eminent."
PADEREWSKI—"Mme. Wienzkowska is a finished pianiste and possesses an extraordinary ability of communicating to others a complete knowledge of her art."
HANS RICHTER—"I consider you an artist of finest esprit and taste, and a representative of a most solid school."

The Carlisle-Carr Concert Bureau and Greater Britain Musical Agency
(The Foreign and Colonial Bureau),
108 New Bond Street, LONDON, W., ENGLAND.
Opera, Oratorio, Concerts, At Homes, Garden Parties, Children Parties.
Sole control of the "Artists' Popular Concerts."
Telegraphic Address: "PANDECT," London.

MR. WHITNEY TEW

The London Press says of Mr. Tew's singing:

Times—"Mr. Tew displayed a magnificent voice and great dignity of style."
Telegraph—"Mr. Tew possesses a fine voice of cultured style; he is a singer of high quality and a musician of broad sympathies and wide research."
Express—"Revealed the possession of a prodigious memory, a sonorous voice and a wealth of vigor."
Daily News—"Manifestly an experienced vocalist, endowed with a powerful voice of agreeable quality. He is a linguist and his artistic taste and judgment demonstrated by his excellent choice of a program."
Musical Courier (London)—"A hearty, straightforward delivery, which was all the more charming because of his admirable diction and pure intonation."
Lady—"His songs were admirably chosen, and the beautiful quality of his voice and his good method were best shown in Brahms' Liebeslieder."
Sunday Times—"Displayed a resonant low baritone voice and a refined method."
Musical Standard—"Eminently successful as an interpretive artist, for he sang with much feeling and intuition into the dramatic and poetic meaning of his text. His voice is a fine organ."
Musical News—"Mr. Tew has a good bass voice which he uses always with finished art and discretion. That he possesses an extensive repertory culled from the best music written for the bass voice was evidenced."
Morning Post—"Mr. Tew's deep bass voice was well suited to the music of the Landgraf." (National Grand Opera Co., in Tannhauser.)
The Stage—"Mr. Tew gave a strong and impressive embodiment of the Cardinal."
The Era—"Mr. Whitney Tew, the author, gave a strikingly characteristic reading of Richelieu, his acting in the downfall scene being especially impressive and touching."
Field—"That fine bass singer, Mr. Whitney Tew, gave the first of his recitals last week. He possesses a powerful voice of beautiful quality which can stand work. He has both voice and brains."
Anglo American—"Mr. Tew's fine voice was in the best of form. He is to be commended for his persistent fidelity to a really superior class of music."

In America
November and December, 1901

Sole Representative:
Henry Wolfsohn
131 East 17th Street
NEW YORK

A REMARKABLE LETTER

FROM THE

BISHOP OF ARKANSAS.

DIOCESE OF ARKANSAS.
RESIDENCE OF
THE BISHOP,
1609 ARCH STREET. LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

Little Rock, Ark. July 14, 1901

Mr R.E.Johnston, Mgr.,

Wm. Worth Bailey

Dear Sir:-

I am glad to learn that you have undertaken to introduce our gifted friend and marvelous Violinist, "Wm. Worth Bailey", to the public.

I am sure you will never regret the undertaking, as he is an artist of the very highest order, and consequently as soon as he becomes known, he will prove to be a great "Drawing Card."

I have seldom, in fact I can say never, been more thrilled and uplifted, than I was by his indescribable violin performances. It seems almost incredible, that one deprived of his sense of seeing, could have so mastered the intricate compositions of the great Masters.

He is surely a Violinist, who is bound to win international fame, and I predict he will become a popular idol.

Unfortunate as he is in his great affliction, yet God has been good in endowing him, with such remarkable musical talent. I wish him the greatest possible success, and am sure he will impress all hearers as he did me.

Very cordially yours,

Wm M. Brown

BISHOP OF ARKANSAS.

Address R. E. JOHNSTON, 154 Fifth Avenue, New York.

noted baritone roles in the French and Italian repertory, and was accounted during the days of his prime the best in his field.

There is a revival of tales about Ole Bull and his violin. The widow of the artist has presented it to the Museum of Bergen. It is said to have been made in 1532, by Gasparo da Salo, and the ornaments are attributed to Benvennto Cellini. Cardinal Aldobrandini bought it for 300 ducats and gave it to the museum at Innsbruck, whence it was looted by a French soldier during the occupation of the Tyrol by Napoleon. The soldier sold it to a Vienna banker, Rehaczek, a collector, who possessed 200 violins. In 1830 Ole Bull saw it and offered all that he was worth for it. The banker refused all offers, but some years later Ole received at Leipsic, in the presence of Liszt and Mendelssohn, a letter from the banker's son, announcing that his father had bequeathed the instrument to the virtuoso. Henceforth the famous fiddle will pass into innocuous desuetude in the seclusion that a museum grants.

The Russian composer Ianovski has completed an opera in three acts entitled "Wij." The text is based on a novel by Gogol.

SOME PRECEDENTS OF ORCHESTRAL SQUABBLES.

THE writer is old enough to remember a mild orchestral scandal somewhat similar to the one at the Queen's Hall, referred to in our first "leader" last week (June 1). At a rehearsal of the old Philharmonic Society in the Hanover Square Rooms, some sixty years ago at least, Mendelssohn was conducting the band, possibly when he produced his "Scotch" Symphony in June, 1842. Mendelssohn arrived rather late, and a "principal" member of the orchestra testily exclaimed: "Mr. Mendelssohn, you have kept the band waiting." The maestro was indignant; whether the rehearsal went on or not the writer forgets; no doubt it did; but Mendelssohn at once appealed to the directors of the society and vowed that he would not conduct on the ensuing Monday "unless that man was dismissed." "That man," however, happened to be not only a valuable artist but the owner of an ample fortune, and the power of the purse in England is known to be considerable! At all events, Mendelssohn was obliged to "knock under"; some apology may have been extorted, but the bandsman remained at his post. The writer received this information from Henry Westrop, for many years "second fiddle" at the Philharmonic concerts and the opera houses.

Another awkward contretemps may be mentioned. In 1849 Sir W. Sterndale Bennett's overture "Parisina" (soon to be heard at Leeds) was performed at a Philharmonic concert.. At the rehearsal Costa, the conductor, was offended at some verbal message sent to him by the composer respecting the tempo, or it may have been the general treatment of the work. On the following Monday night, when "Parisina," in Part II., "came on," Costa suddenly bolted from the platform! Qu'est ce que faire? Let us explain. Mr. Lucas, a member of the band, boldly stepped from the ranks and conducted the overture. Costa then reappeared and resumed his baton.

Mendelssohn also figured in another orchestral "scene," but this time nothing unpleasant occurred. He was conducting one of his overtures at a Philharmonic concert and it was encored. Before the repetition the composer ran up the steps of the orchestra and all the artists were nervously anxious. Poor Chipp, the thumper of the tympani, was the one in fault, and he blushed incontinently. He had not produced some intended effect. Mendelssohn whispered a few words, ran down to his desk, winked at Chipp as if to ask if it was all right, and raised his baton. Dr. Doran, a "romancer" and prone to invention, wrongly stated that Mendelssohn stopped the band during the performance.

Hector Berlioz was so particular about his own drum effects that he once had the drumsticks covered with some soft stuff, in order to muffle them. This reminds one that when Terrey, then organist of old Hackney Church, complained of the coldness of the keyboard in winter, the then rector, an eccentric man, kindly offered to cover the keys with cloth!—London Musical Standard.

BAYREUTH.

A CABLEGRAM from Bayreuth on Monday says that at the quarter centennial of Wagnerian opera, celebrated yesterday at Bayreuth, the municipality presented an address to Frau Cosima Wagner. In reply to the remarks of the Burgomaster, Frau Wagner assured him that Bayreuth would remain the permanent home of herself and her descendants.

The municipality also conferred the freedom of the city upon Herr Von Gross, chairman of the opera committee.

Otto Floersheim, of THE MUSICAL COURIER, was present. So were Madame Patti, Arthur Nikisch, Ed. Colonne and others. Felix Mottl conducted the "Flying Dutchman," the opening opera.

American School of Opera

Berkeley Lyceum
23 West 44th Street

WM. G. STEWART, Director. LAIRD EASTON, Secretary and Treasurer.

For prospectus and all information apply to Secretary.

MR. WILLIAM G. STEWART, Director American School of Opera, Berkeley Lyceum, New York City: NEW YORK, June 4, 1901.

My Dear Mr. Stewart—We take this opportunity of complimenting you on the splendid practical results accomplished by your School of Opera during the first year of its existence and gladly bear testimony to its advantages as a training school for those desirous of following a professional career in opera.

We are more than pleased with the graduates of your institution who have become members of the Bostonians and will gladly avail ourselves in the future of the opportunity for engaging singers who have pursued a course of study under your direction. With best wishes always, Yours very sincerely.

W. H. MacDonald

Kindergarten Music Building.
The Original and Standard System of Kindergarten Music.
Kina K. Darlington
1069 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.

Mme. OGDEN CRANE.
The Art of Singing.
Special attention given to tone production. Founded on the pure Italian method. Sole teacher of Hattie Diamond Nathan, Edith Hutchins, Lillian Le Roy, Lillian Spitz and many others.
SUMMER SCHOOL:
Post Office Building, Asbury Park, N. J., From June 24 to September 14.
In New York Studio Thursdays,
3 East 14th Street,
Cor. Fifth Avenue, NEW YORK.

HERBERT WITHERSPOON
Opera, Oratorio, Concert, Recitals.
BASS.
For Terms, Dates, &c., address
Residence Studio: 202 West 78th St., New York.

REBECCA MACKENZIE
SOPRANO.
Available for Concert, Oratorio and Song Recitals.
Address FRED O. RENARD, Manager,
444 Central Park West, NEW YORK CITY

ALICE E. JOSEPH,
Late Private Secretary to Sir Augustus Harris.
THE OPERA AND CONCERT AGENCY,
7a Hanover Street, Regent Street, LONDON, England,
Authorized to represent all the Best Artists in the World!
ADVICE GRATIS.

Elizabeth Hazard
SOPRANO
Drawing Room Concerts
Song Recitals
Direction Emile Levy
141 Fifth Ave.

Paris.

SCHOOL FOR ACTING.
EMIL BERTIN,
1er Régisseur de la Scène de l'Opera Comique.
Stage Practice. In Cast.
41 rue des Martyrs, Paris.

PROFESSOR OF FRENCH,
Special Method for Foreigners.
MLLE. MARIE FOURNAISE,
American reference. 29 Boulevard de Batignolles.

Mme. FLORENZA d'ARONA,
VOCAL PROFESSEUR,
5 rue Bassano, Paris.
Special sessions during the summer in REPERTOIRE AND INTERPRETATION.

LA VILLA VIOLETTE
TROCADERO,
22 Rue Raynouard. Mme. Fiessinger.
Assortment of rooms. Excellent table. Gardens. All facilities of 'bus and tram.

FRENCH SCHOOL
M. DUMARTHERAY,
From Sounds to Literature, Pronunciation, Accent, Conversation.
(Opera.) 14 rue Taitbout.

MME. J. VIEUXTEMPS,
VOCAL PROFESSOR.
Classes and Private Lessons. Placing and Mending of Tones. 25 rue de Tocqueville (Monceau).

THE FRENCH LANGUAGE
Rapidly, easily and correctly acquired by KIMON'S PRACTICAL SYSTEM.
(3 francs, post free.)
Private lessons by M. D. Kimon,
10 rue Cambon, Paris.

MLLE. GRACE LEE HESS SCHOOL.
Supplementary Education.
French Language Obligatory.
145 Avenue Victor Hugo, Paris.

BALDELLI,
ITALIAN BARITONE.
Théâtre Royal, Madrid. Professeur de Chant.
(Champs Elysées). 6 rue Euler, Paris.

Mme. ROGER-MICLOS,
PIANO—PARIS.
Elementary and Superior Class and Private Public Pupils' Concerts.
(l'Etoile.) 27 Avenue MacMahon.

Mme. ROSINE LABORDE,
PROF. DE CHANT.
62 rue de Ponthieu, Paris.

MISS JULIA KLUMPKE,
VIOLINISTE.
Pupil of MM. Eugene Ysayc and G. Rémy.
Concerts, Musicales, Lessons, Violin and Accompaniment. 10 rue Froidevaux, Paris.

MLLE. KIKINA,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
Ancienne Elève de MARCHESI.
100 Avenue de Villiers, Paris.

DELLE SEDIE, Paris.
Pure Italian Method. Complete course. Stage practice. Voice, lyric, declamation, languages, solfège, ensemble music, mise-en-scène.
Class and single lessons.
Regular course, three years. Terms moderate.
30 rue St. Petersbourg.

MLLE. MARTINI,
Artiste Opéra, Opéra Comique, Théâtre Lyrique, Professor of "Mime."
Silent Interpretation, Stage Business, Gesture, Pantomime, &c.
87 rue St. Lazare, Paris.

MLLE. NILANDE,
Authorized Teacher of the Yersin Phono-Rhythmic Method. French Diction. French Language. (Av. Marceau). 37 rue de Chaillot.

INSTITUT MOZART.
Language. Complete Musical Education. Singing, Diction by best professors. Board and residence for pupils' comfort; quiet, convenient.
Apply to manager, MISS HEGEMANN,
7 rue du Commandant Riviere.

MME. ROBINSON DUFF,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
4 rue de la Renaissance l'Alma, Paris.

MME. MARIE ROZE,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT,
37 rue Joubert.
Chaussée d'Antin, Paris.
Mise-en-scène. Ensemble practice in cast. on stage.

MME. IDA LURIG,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
French—Italian—German.
Specialty of German Songs and Oratorio.
(Trocadero) 5 rue Petrarque, Paris.

HOLMES COWPER
TENOR.
ADDRESS Kimball Hall OR
The Hamlin Co., CHICAGO.

GENEVA (Switzerland) CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC.
Established 1835. 1,200 Students. 60 Professors.
FERDINAND HELD, DIRECTOR.
The Conservatory embraces: Instrumental (comprising all solo and all instrumental instruments), Vocal, Theory of Music, Harmony and Composition, Declamation Schools.
PRINCIPAL TEACHERS: Harmony, Composition, Theory, History of Music—MM. Otto Barblan, Jaques Dalcroze, Joseph Lauber, Kling, Combe, &c. PIANO—MM. Willy Rehberg, Schulz, Fricker, Eckert; Mlles. Janiszevska, Fontannaz, Bovet, Lagier, Marcinhes, &c. VIOLIN—MM. Henri Marteau (Virtuosity Class for professionals (diplomas), Quatuor, Orchestra; Pahnke, Reymond, &c. SINGING—MM. Leopold Ketten, Alfonzo Dami, Mme. Brambilla-Ponchielli, &c. ORGAN—Mr. Barblan. 'CELLO—MM. Holzmann, Ad. Rehberg. FLUTE—Gessert, Krantz. OBOE—Rouge. TRUMPET—Renard. HARP—Tramonti. SOLFÈGE—Kling, Mmes. Chassevant, Terroux, Fuchs, Kunz. Winter Term begin September 2. Entrance Examination end of August. Inscriptions at any time from August 19. For full details and prospectus apply to the direction.

Y2.5
M5

LIBRARY
OF THE
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS

MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK - LONDON - PARIS - BERLIN - CHICAGO - BOSTON

VOL. XLIII.—No. 5—Whole No. 1114.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JULY 31, 1901.

Photo by Window & Grove, London.

HELEN NIEBUHR

TWENTY-SECOND YEAR.

Price 10 Cents. Subscription, $5.00. Foreign $6.00.—Annually.

New York.

MRS. RATCLIFFE CAPERTON,

Representative and assistant of LAMPERTI.
New York, 138 Fifth Avenue; Philadelphia, 408 South 18th Street. Summer residence, Dresden, Germany.
"Mrs. Ratcliffe Caperton is my only representative, and I advise all pupils desiring to study with me to be prepared by her."
Dresden, Sedanstrasse 17. G. B. LAMPERTI.

ALBERTO LAURENCE,

155 East 18th Street, New York.
The voice formed and developed; the art of singing taught; method after the purest Italian schools; a bad voice made good, true and beautiful.

HENRY T. FLECK,

Conductor Haarlem Philharmonic Society of the City of New York.
Address: Normal College, New York.

MISS NORA MAYNARD GREEN,

VOCAL TEACHER.
Studio: 303 Fifth Avenue, New York.

MAX KNITEL-TREUMANN,

BARITONE.
Voice Culture—Art of Singing.
Carnegie Hall, Room 837.
Mail address: 15 Washington Terrace, New York.

GEORGE M. GREENE,

Voice Culture and Artistic Singing.
Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.
Studio: 489 Fifth Ave., Mondays and Thursdays.
Residence and address:
424 West 23d Street, New York.

CARL M. ROEDER,

PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
Residence and Studio:
330 Alexander Avenue, New York.

MR. C. WHITNEY COOMBS,

(Church of the Holy Communion). Organ lessons and practice given on one of Roosevelt's finest instruments. Special advantages for the study of church music and the training of boys' voices.
Address: 49 West 20th Street, New York.

TOM KARL,

Concerts, Recitals and Vocal Instruction.
Studio: Carnegie Hall.
Residence: 18 West 75th Street, New York.

MISS MARY FIDÉLIA BURT.

Author of Original Methods in Sight Singing, Ear Training, Musical Stenography. All materials copyrighted. No authorized teachers in Greater New York.
Address: 48 Lefferts Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.

E. H. LOCKHART, Bass-Baritone.

Studios: 121 East Twenty-third street, New York. Voices quickly placed and developed. Special work given for breath control. The Art of Singing taught by method used in the old Italian schools. Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.

DUDLEY BUCK, JR.,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Song Lecture Recitals.
810 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

HOWARD BROCKWAY,

COMPOSER-PIANIST.
Pupils received in Composition, Harmony, Piano and Song Interpretation.
Studio: 817-818 Carnegie Hall, New York.

WALTER HENRY HALL,

Conductor Oratorio Society, Brooklyn, N. Y.
Organist and Choirmaster St. James' Church, New York.
For terms for conducting, address St. James' Church, Madison Ave. and 71st St., New York.

MME. LOUISE FINKEL,

SCHOOL OF VOCAL MUSIC.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.

EUGENE A. BERNSTEIN,

PIANIST.
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Studio: 160 East 70th Street, New York.

LUCILLE SMITH MORRIS,

PIANIST. INSTRUCTION, Concerts, Recitals.
Pupil of Wm. Sherwood and Mrs. A. K. Virgil.
Certified teacher of Virgil Clavier Method.
Studio: 201 West 81st Street, New York.

RICHARD ARNOLD,

Concertmaster Philharmonic Society.
INSTRUCTION.
208 East 61st Street, New York.

MR. FRANCIS STUART,

TEACHER OF SINGING.
First season in New York. Ten years in San Francisco. Pupil of Lamperti, the elder.
Being in full possession of my method of singing, he has the ability to form great artists.—FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
Reception hours, Mondays and Thursdays, 2 to 3.
Studio: 86 Madison Ave., near Twenty-eighth St.

LILLIE D'ANGELO BERGH

SCHOOL OF SINGING.
Operatic course. Teachers' special course, all departments. Famous specialists. Prospectus. The Albany Broadway and 52d Street, New York.

ROSETTA WIENER,

PIANO, SIGHT READING and New York School of Accompanying.
Carnegie Hall, 301-2.

MR. CHARLES LEE TRACY,

PIANOFORTE INSTRUCTION.
Certificated Teacher of the LESCHETIZKY METHOD.
Studio: Carnegie Hall, New York City.

MAX BENDHEIM,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
332 West 56th Street. New York City.

PAUL TIDDEN,

PIANIST.
314 East 15th Street, New York.
Will accept a limited number of pupils.

HERBERT HEMINGWAY JOY,

Voice Culture and Singing.
Italian School.
Studio: 116 Carnegie Hall, New York.

GUSTAV L. BECKER,

CONCERT PIANIST and TEACHER of PIANO and COMPOSITION.
Address: 1 West 104th Street, New York.

SIGNOR FILOTEO GRECO,

THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio: 51 West 35th Street, New York.

M. THEODOR BJORKSTEN AND MME. TORPADIE BJORKSTEN,

INSTRUCTORS IN SINGING.
New Studios: Carnegie Hall, New York.

PERRY AVERILL—BARITONE,

OPERA—ORATORIO—CONCERT AND VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
220 Central Park South, New York.

J. ARMOUR GALLOWAY,

Voice Culture and the Art of Singing,
Studio: Rooms 43 and 44 Y. M. C. A. Building, 318 West 57th Street, New York.

MARIE SEYMOUR BISSELL,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Pupils prepared for Church, Concert and Oratorio.
Studio: 135 East 16th Street, New York.

MRS. MARY HISSEM DE MOSS,

SOPRANO,
106 West 90th Street,
New York City.

SAMUEL B. MOYLE,

BASSO CANTANTE.
Oratorio, Concert, Musicales, Voice Culture—Italian Method. Tone Placing and Reparation a specialty. Studio: 136 Fifth Avenue, New York.

GEORGE SWEET,

OPERA, ORATORIO, CONCERT.
304 West 72d Street, New York.

J. HARRY WHEELER,

Voice Production and the Art of Singing.
Voices educated strictly in the Italian School.
Studio: 81 Fifth Ave., corner 16th St., New York.
July and August at Chautauqua Assembly.

MR. EDMUND SEVERN,
Violin, Composition, Ensemble.
MRS. EDMUND SEVERN,
Piano and Voice.
Studio: 131 West 56th Street, New York.
"Severn Trio."

ENRICO DUZENSI,

OPERA TENOR.
Will accept pupils for Voice Culture; good voice cultivated per contract; Italian method.
145 East 83d Street, near Lexington Ave.

CARL C. MÜLLER,

Translator of "Sechter's Fundamental Harmonies."
Author of "Tables for Harmonic Exercises."
Teacher of Piano, Harmony, Counterpoint and Composition. 1291 Lexington Ave., New York.

MME. HELENE MAIGILLE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION, REPERTOIRE.
Studio and residence: 1211-15 Carnegie Hall,
Summer course. New York.

MR. EMILIO AGRAMONTE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Summer Course.

SAUL HAROLD LICHTENSTEIN,

VIOLINIST.
Pupil of Sauret and Thomson.
Concerts, At Homes, &c. Pupils accepted.
Address: 103 West 114th Street, New York.

J. WARREN ANDREWS,

CONCERT ORGANIST and TEACHER.
Send for list of Pupils holding positions.
Address: Church of the Divine Paternity,
76th St. and Eighth Ave., New York City.

THE NEW YORK INSTITUTE FOR VIOLIN PLAYING AND SCHOOL FOR PIANO AND VOCAL CULTURE.

230 East 62d Street

Complete musical education given to students from the beginning to the highest perfection.
F. & H. CARRI, Directors.

MME. LUISA CAPPIANI,

VOICE CULTURE, SKILL OF SINGING.
"The Louella," 159 West 45th Street,
New York.

RICHARD T. PERCY,

Concert Organist and Accompanist.
Organ Lessons at Marble Collegiate Church, corner Fifth Avenue and 29th Street.
Studio: 1402 Broadway, New York.

MISS MARGARET GOETZ,

CONTRALTO (mezzo range).
Concerts, Song Recitals, Vocal Instruction.
Address: 36 Gramercy Park, New York.

THE ARENS VOCAL STUDIO

(affiliated with the American School of Opera).
Coaching a specialty.
Normal courses for Voice Teachers.
261 West Fifty-fourth Street, New York.
For circulars address Miss Lucie May Benedict, 25 West Sixty-fifth Street.
Reception hour, 2 p. m., Wednesdays excepted.
Fall term begins September 20.

HENRY HOLDEN HUSS,

Instruction in Piano and Theory of Music.
Studio for non-resident pupils: Steinway Hall.
Personal address: 318 East 150th Street, New York.

FRANCIS FISCHER POWERS,

VOICE CULTURE AND THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio (and invariable address): Carnegie Hall, New York. New York season, October 20 to May 1; Kansas City, Mo., season, Pepper Building, May 15 to August 1; Los Angeles, Cal., season, Westminster Hotel, August 10 to October 10.

MRS. HADDEN-ALEXANDER,

PIANIST.
Powers-Alexander Studios,
Carnegie Hall, New York.

HENRY SCHRADIECK'S

VIOLIN SCHOOL.
Violin, Piano, Theory and Ensemble Playing.
Residence and Studio:
535 Washington Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

WILLIAM H. BARBER,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
Studio: Steinway Hall,
New York.

F. W. RIESBERG,

ACCOMPANIST.
Instruction—Piano, Organ, Harmony.
With THE MUSICAL COURIER.
Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.
Secretary-Treasurer New York State M. T. A.
Residence Studio:
954 8th Ave., corner 56th Street, New York.

S. C. BENNETT,

Instructor in Voice Building and the Art of Singing.
Teacher of Mme. Genevra Johnstone-Bishop and many other talented vocalists.
Studio: 836 Carnegie Hall, New York.

MME. EMMA RODERICK,

Rapid Development and Complete Education of the Voice. 118 West 44th Street, New York.

MRS. GRENVILLE SNELLING,

SOPRANO.
Concerts, Recitals, Musicals, Oratorio.
Address: 111 Fifth Avenue, New York.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF MUSIC,

179 East 64th Street, New York.
WM. M. SEMNACHER, Director.
I regard Mr. Semnacher as the greatest teacher of piano in this country.
Henry T. Fleck, Director of Music,
Normal College, New York City.

MRS. HENRY SMOCK BOICE,

VOICE CULTURE.
Musical Art Department of Adelphi College.
Residence-Studio: 127 McDonough St., B'klyn, N.Y.
Pupils prepared for Church, Concert, Oratorio.
138 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Monday and Thursday Afternoons.

SERRANO VOCAL INSTITUTE,

323 East 14th Street, New York.

Conducted by EMILIA BENIE DE SERRANO and CARLOS A. DE SERRANO.

Teachers of Charlotte Maconda, Fannie Francisca.

KATHERINE RUTH HEYMAN,

Concert Pianiste.
145 East 23d Street, New York.

GUY DORÉ LATTA, OPERA TENOR

Voice Culture and Singing.
Tone production, placing and development a specialty. Guarantees to increase range and make any voice strong and beautiful. Summer rates.
372 West 120th Street, New York.

JOSEPH PIZZARELLO,

VOCAL INSTRUCTOR.
Voice Developed—Style—Opera.
43 West 31th Street, New York.

ALICE GARRIGUE MOTT,

VOCAL CULTURE.
Carnegie Hall, New York.

MR. AND MRS. THEO. J. TOEDT,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Home Studio: 151 East 62d Street, New York.

LENA DORIA DEVINE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Representative Teacher of the methods of the famous master, FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
136 Fifth Avenue, New York.

MISS FANNIE HIRSCH,

CONCERT AND ORATORIO.
DRAMATIC SOPRANO. Steinway Hall, or
170 East 61st St., New York.

MISS EMMA HOWSON,

PRIMA DONNA.
Royal Italian and English Opera Company.
Lamperti Method Absolutely Taught.
Tuesdays and Fridays, 96 Fifth Ave., New York.

EMMA THURSBY,

SOPRANO.
Will receive a limited number of pupils.
Residence-Studio: 34 Gramercy Park, New York.

ISIDORE LUCKSTONE,

The Accompanist and Musical Director.
STYLE, REPERTOIRE, FINISH, VOCAL CULTURE.
836 Lexington Ave., or address MUSICAL COURIER.

ARTHUR VOORHIS,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
100 Clifton Place, Jersey City, N. J.
Care MUSICAL COURIER, New York.

MME. ADELE LEWING

CONCERT PIANIST.
Authorized Teacher of the Leschetizky Method.
Special terms to out of town teachers.
Concerts. Recitals. Musicales.
Address: Care Steinway Hall, or 127 East 73d Street, New York.

MISS GENEVIEVE BISBEE,

PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Leschetizky Method. Summer courses.
1109-1110 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

KATHARINE PELTON,

Mezzo Soprano.
Sole Direction HENRY WOLFSOHN,
131 East 17th Street, New York.

CHARLOTTE A. BABCOCK,

Certificated Pupil of Dr. William Mason.
Pianoforte Instruction.
Studios: 810-14 Carnegie Hall, New York.
Summer season, Bernardsville, N. J.

SIGNOR A. CARBONE,

Member several years Metropolitan Grand Opera Company.
VOICE CULTURE. OPERA SCHOOL.
Summer Course.
Studio: 240 Fifth Ave., New York

JOSEPH P. DONNELLY,

VOICE, ORGAN, PIANO.
Organist-Director All Saints,
Madison Avenue and 129th Street, New York.
Residence-Studio: 2033 Madison Avenue.
Brooklyn Studio: The Pouch Gallery.

MARK M. FONAROFF,

VIOLINIST—INSTRUCTION.
References: Adolf Brodsky, Henry Schradieck, Alex. Lambert, H. E. Krehbiel.
129 East 82d Street, New York.

STELLA PRINCE STOCKER.

COMPOSER-DIRECTOR.
Recital-Lectures, ARTHUR STOCKER, boy soprano, assisting. For season 1901-1902.
Address: 11 Schmiede Strasse, Hamburg, Germany, or care P. J. Kreider, 251 West 71st Street, New York.

MARIE PARCELLO,

DRAMATIC CONTRALTO.
Music Rooms: 1103-4-5 Carnegie Hall, New York.

HUGO TROETSCHEL,

Organist Schermerhorn St. Evangelical Church.
Instruction: Piano—Organ—Theory.
Organ Lessons given on large three-manual Roosevelt Organ.
Residence: 384 Bainbridge St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Mr. & Mrs. WALTER H. ROBINSON,

TENOR AND CONTRALTO SOLOISTS.
Oratorio, Concerts and Musicales.
Voice Production and Répertoire.
Studio: 405 Carnegie Hall, New York.

A. J. GOODRICH,

Personal or Correspondence Lessons in Harmony, Counterpoint, Composition, Orchestration and Practical Musicianship.
Author of "Analytical Harmony," "Theory of Interpretation," "Complete Music Analysis," "Synthetic Counterpoint," "Guide to a Practical Musicianship."
Glens Falls, N. Y.

GERMAN HEADQUARTERS OF THE MUSICAL COURIER,
BERLIN, W., LINKSTRASSE 17.

The Second Swiss Music Festival—Held At Geneva June 22 to 24.

NO saying of Richard Wagner has caused more comment and has been more variously interpreted and misinterpreted than the one which escaped him just a quarter of a century ago after the first Bayreuth "Nibelungen Ring" performance, in the first flush of triumph over the final accomplishment of his long cherished festival play plans: "If you now wish it, we have an art!" With ordinary mortals the wishing does not by a good deal accomplish also the having, and as far as music in special is concerned, there are in existence quite a number of peoples who have not so far been able to engender a national art. If I thereby think in the first place of the English, it is because I was reminded of them through the proud edifice which an Englishman—if I am not misinformed his name is Barton and he is the English Consul-General—has erected in the finely situated city of Geneva.

It contains one of the most beautiful as well as best equipped music rooms of the entire world, and the only conditions which the just as patriotic as magnanimous donor imposed on the city is to the effect that the concert building in honor of the most gracious late Queen of England be called Victoria Hall. Of course it now bears that title, and I noticed that the Geneva people took particular pains even to give to the word hall the proper English pronunciation. Now I found upon the front side of this interiorily more than exteriorly superb building, in indelible writing, because chiseled into the stone, the names of some of the world's greatest composers. That Raff's name was among the number is easily understood, first of all because he was born in Switzerland, and secondly I believe that the creator of the "Forest" and "Leonore" symphonies has a claim to such distinction, as he is about to be relegated to a premature state of obliviousness by an only too ungrateful posterity. Far less comprehensible seemed to me, however, at first beholding the presence of the name of Balfe. How did Saul come among "the prophets"? What has the composer of the once so popular "Bohemian Girl" done besides to deserve immortality and to be among the list of the names chiseled into the stone? But then I remember that he was an Englishman, and at least an Irishman, and that therefore he was in all probability selected by the patriotic Consul-General, who wanted to hand down to posterity the name of at least one countryman of his famous in music. More advisable it would have been, if Mr. Barton had had the courage of his convictions, to have chosen instead of Balfe the name of the late Arthur Sullivan, for among all of the proud musicians whom the kind Queen of England has knighted, he is the only one who represents an individuality. Not indeed through his serious music, his "Golden Legend," which the Lord may pardon him, or his "Ivanhoe," which cannot compare with Marschner's, but for the sake of his "Mikado," his "Yeomen of the Guard," "Patience" and "Pinafore," &c., down to "Cox and Box," which gave to the world and will continue to contribute to it gaiety, musical humor and "das heilige Lachen!"

These same musically so unproductive English, however, have a proverb which says that "the proof of the pudding consists in the eating thereof," and if this saying contains no less an amount of truth than do most other emanations of popular wisdom the existence of a national musical art in Switzerland ought to have become self-evident through the mere fact that the young Society of Swiss Musicians, called into life only a little more than a year or so ago, was able in this short period of its existence to hold two music festivals, one in Zurich last summer, and the second one in Geneva a few weeks ago, both with programs made up exclusively of works by Swiss composers and performed with a few exceptions almost exclusively by soloists of Swiss origin.

With a pudding, however, especially an English one, not only the proverbial eating, but still more the taste, and above everything else also the digestibility, should form the proof. And with this trite truth I come to the question whether or no the young association of Swiss musicians did not after all overload somewhat its musical stomach, or at least bite off a trifle more than they were able to chew, by the quick succession of their two big music festivals, and whether it would not have been better and more advisable after the great and justified success of the first festival at Zurich last summer, to have waited a little longer before venturing out with its successor. At any rate it seems to me undeniable and without doubt that the really big raisins were preponderating in the musical pudding of last year, while the one of this summer was larded with them only with perceptible paucity. In some instances these raisins turned out to be bees that were buzzing in the bonnets of the young composers. With these latter, however, I shall not deal in this notice, which has been somewhat delayed on account of the excessive heat and a consequent slight indisposition on my part which kept me from writing.

As regards the festival as a whole, the arrangement comprised four concerts given in the space of three days. On the first day, Saturday, June 22, two concerts took place, averaging no less than over three hours each, which in itself, but especially owing to the high temperature pervading the hall, meant fatigue for everybody concerned. All the more it is to be admired that both the executants did not fail in attention and good will from beginning to end, and the public's lively interest did not seem to flag, nor did the nothing less than sparing, nay, almost Southern enthusiasm abate all through the festival. On the contrary, it found vent in perfect avalanches of applause, which, like the hot rays of the sun, poured out their heat over everything, good, bad or indifferent, to an almost indiscriminating degree of intensity.

Two of the four concerts were entirely given over to chamber music, and I consider it a good deal in favor of the future of the young Swiss musical school that it devotes so much of its energy to the cultivation of this most noble as well as most intimate branch of the art. Among the good things upon the first chamber music menu were notably two works by Swiss composers who are no longer among the living, viz., the fresh, warmly conceived and vivacious Trio, op. 112, of Joachim Raff, which, if only the pianist from Bâle had indulged in a surer and more spirituel reading of his part, would surely have afforded artistic enjoyment to the listeners. This was the case throughout with the performance of the B flat Piano Sonata of the lamented Zurich composer, Gustav Weber, who died all too young. This op. 1 shows, just as did a piano quintet performed at the first festival, a high degree of creative talent and a fine sense of form. The Sonata found in the equally as modest a musical pianist, Robert Freund, an excellent interpreter, who, especially in the first movement of the work, which is of an almost Beethovenish grandeur of contour, touched and enthused his listeners through the breadth and nobility of the musical reproduction.

Otherwise, the first and also the three remaining programs contained only works of living authors, true to the axiom that "to the survivors belong the world." A sonata for violin and piano by W. Pahnke, a Geneva artist, who personally performed the violin part, while the piano part was well taken care of by the capable young Italian, Ernesto Consolo, interested the listener through its almost Brahms-like and, on the whole, very masterly workmanship. "Melodies," for soprano, with piano accompaniment by O. Schulz, pleased principally because they were delivered by the composer's wife with beautiful voice and great musical refinement of feeling. The chief interest, however, was concentrated on this first afternoon in the String Quartet in E major by E. Jaques-Dalcroze, who stands several heads and shoulders above all the remainder of the Geneva composers. He is also by far the most fertile among them, to which fact alone the circumstance that no less than three new works of his in larger forms were reproduced at this festival bears ample witness. You will therefore kindly bear in mind this somewhat complicated compound name, for this still young, highly gifted, originally thinking and writing composer, who is as yet entirely unknown in the United States, will make his way through the concert halls of the entire civilized world. E. Jaques-Dalcroze belongs among those rare birds the modern composers who have something really new to say, and he says it in a style of his own. In this string quartet, it is true, he often touches hard upon the border line of what seems musically beautiful, and he does not mind in the least an occasional trespassing beyond the limits of the possibilities or the nature of string quartet music; but he takes hold of you and does not relax this hold through his irresistible creative potency, through the audacity and at moments even staggering daring of his harmonic scheme and above all through the piquancy and pregnancy of his rhythm, which in the last movement of the quartet in seven-eighths time rises up to a seemingly disorderly, almost unbridled orgy, which for that very reason is all the more captivating. The immensely difficult work was performed with utmost subtlety, and at the same time with warmth and verve by a string quartet whose leader was nobody less than the young French violinist, Henri Marteau, who in the space of only a few years was able to achieve a world-wide fame as virtuoso and who has now settled at Geneva.

The first orchestral concert also reached an artistic climax with a work of Jaques-Dalcroze, viz.—his violin concerto, which would probably be destined to prove a welcome addition to the not overstocked literature of that genre, if the work were not loaded down with such an amount of almost incredible technical difficulties that only violin virtuosi of the very first rank, like Marteau and Burmester, will be able to conquer them successfully. With much more justification than Lalo did in the case of his Spanish violin concerto, might Jaques-Dalcroze designate his as a symphony. The entire structure, the building up as well as the workmanship displayed in the treatment of the three themes, which form the thematic material for all the three movements of this thoroughly original concerto, are of most intellectual, severely polyphonic facture, in which the fugued style, which the composer controls admirably, is also employed in the first movement. On the whole the form, however, is treated with the utmost freedom, and hence Jaques-Dalcroze was probably right when he refrained from following Lalo's example.

This unfettered style may possibly be explained and, if needed, excused with the composer's nationality, Jaques-Dalcroze being a scion of the Romanic portion of the Swiss Confederacy. The works of the composers of such origin are seemingly just as different from those emanating from German-Swiss musical creators as are nature, scenery and the inhabitants in general of these two sections of the country, which are in their way just as varying as are the Northern from the Southern elements in the make-up of the United States. Thus also among the less important composers of Romanic Switzerland we find similar traits as those predominating in Jaques-Dalcroze's music. Especially glowingly colored orchestration is a characteristic as well of Denériaz's fiery "Hymn of Freedom," for soprano with orchestra, as Edward Combe's and especially also P. Maurice's compositions, whose "Lullaby of a Child for Her Sick Doll" appeared to me as the most graceful and charming among the smaller things upon the program. The songs of the last-named two composers and also a highly interesting lyric scene, "The Death of Spring," words and music by Jaques-Dalcroze, were delivered by Mrs. Nina Faliero-Dalcroze with a not large, but excellently trained vocal organ and with enticing, amiable musical expression. A more engaging concert singer I have not heard for quite a while.

Among the young German-Swiss composers the doubtlessly most gifted one is the also as yet very little known

J. Lauber, whose executive abilities are adequate to his high artistic aims. He was represented upon the festival program first of all with a cleverly and flowingly written, verveful and effective piano concerto in F major, which the meritorious artistic head of the entire festival, the pianist and conductor, Willy Rehberg, played with sove reign technic. Furthermore, Lauber contributed to the program of the final day a sextet in A major for piano, two violins, two violas and 'cello, in which he walks in the wake of Brahms, and indeed with equally as pronounced gift of invention as with great technical skill and esprit in thematic workmanship. The second B minor movement, Allegretto ma tranquillo, of this work is a perfect specimen of a pearl in neo-German chamber music. The author, who himself performed the piano part, was rightly honored with specially enthusiastic applause.

Also among the names which sounded absolutely unfamiliar there were a few that deserve to be mentioned. Thus the organist of St. Pierre, Otto Barblan, whose chaconne upon the notes B, A, C, H (German notation) brought down upon his clean featured, American cut head the bon mot "Chacun à sa Chaconne"; furthermore, F. C. G. Klose, a former pupil of Anton Bruckner, whose mysteriously sounding motet "Vidi Aquam," works up to a fine climax. More important still is Gustav Doret, a pupil of the Berlin Royal High School, but who finished his studies in composition under Dubois and Massenet at Paris. His quite beautiful and in some of its episodes rather momentous oratorio, "The Seven Last Words of the Redeemer," for soli, chorus, orchestra and organ, met with an enthusiastic reception. It is an early work, one in which the influence of Gounod is still plainly noticeable in the general mood and in the matter of invention, while Wagner's colors are imitated upon the orchestral canvas. Doret, like Rehberg, is also an excellent conductor, through which fact of course the performance of his work was benefited. Some of the other composers would have done themselves and their works a good service, if, instead of essaying to conduct in person, they would have yielded the baton to the more experienced hands of the one or the other of these two gentlemen. I. Nigra was the only representative of the Italian contingent of Switzerland, and also in his orchestral scherzo, "La Folie de Pierrot," some characteristic national traits were not difficult to discover. His orchestration of the somewhat glaring Mascagni order, and his decisive, circumspect beat both betrayed the hand of an operatic chef d'orchestre of experience. The latter was also the case with Dr. A. Obrist, who up to a recent date officiated as first conductor at the Stuttgart court opera. His overture, "Lebensfreude" ("Joy of Life"), gives testimony more of thorough academic study and pronounced feeling for form and euphony than it evinces originality or power of inventive genius. A still very young, only twenty-year-old heaven stormer, born in Geneva, Ernest Bloch, has evidently gotten hold far too early of the last scores of Richard Strauss, the extravagancies of which are emulated in the youngster's symphonic poem, "Vivre-aimer" ("To Live-To Love"). "Richard II." is no food for too youthful, too ardent heads, which are in danger to be led astray by him. Bloch, however, is a real talent, from whom, his fermentation process and storm and stress period once ended, the world may yet expect to hear musical revelations.

Besides these there are still worthy of mention a symphony, the first fruit of S. Andreae, who received his evidently very careful education at the Cologne Conservatory. The work, however, is still lacking in individuality. M. Niggli's folks-tune-like and quite insinuating "melodies" for an alto voice, with mostly very Brahmsish harmonies in the accompaniment. And, lastly, a cycle of pretty vocal quartets with piano accompaniment, entitled "A Spring Journey," by the Swiss composer, Edgar Munzinger, a resident of Berlin.

Of well-known living composers of note there were Hans Huber, of Bâle, and the Zurich musical pope, Dr. F. Hegar, both represented upon the program, however, in small doses. Of Huber I heard a 'cello sonata in C sharp minor, the first elegiacal movement of which especially is very beautiful, and which was performed with tender and expressive tone by Adolf Rehberg. Huber's new "Simplicius" Overture, however, which was figured upon the program of the second orchestral concert, was withdrawn at the last moment, for it was found too difficult for the heterogeneously composed orchestra to perform without at least a few rehearsals, for which there was no time. Altogether and in contract to the first festival at Zurich with its permanent orchestra, the one gathered ad hoc for Geneva was the sole serious drawback of the otherwise on the whole quite satisfactory reproduction of the festival program. It would therefore seem desirable that so extraordinarily art loving a city, in which music predominates at every café and street corner and in the public places to an alarming and disconcerting degree, a city which in the winter season boasts of excellent subscription concerts and even a tolerable opera, should finally command also a permanent orchestra. The hope of a realization of this wish formed the apex of a speech held at the leave taking banquet in the Hotel National, by G. de Seigneux, the president of the Second Swiss Music Festival. May the promise soon be fulfilled!

I wrote a similar article to the above for the Cologne Gazette in the place of my friend Dr. Otto Neitzel, the regular critic of that important journal, he having been unable to attend the Geneva festival in person.

After reading the reports of the American newspapers about the heat I began to believe that Messrs Morgan, Harriman and Blumenberg had formed a great trust for the monopoly in sun rays, but since my return to Berlin I feel sure that this is a mistaken notion of mine.

Siegfried Wagner writes to me: "Es ist der Muehe werth sich unsern Hollaender anzuschen," which in the vernacular means: "It is worth your while to see our Dutchman," and as the Verwaltungsrath of the Buehnenfestspiele notifies me under same date that they succeeded "Durch einen Zufall," viz., "by accident," in finding a seat for me for the first, ever so long sold out performance of "The Flying Dutchman," I intend to be in Bayreuth on July 22.

Apropos of Siegfried Wagner, he denies most emphatically the authenticity of the score of an overture to a comic opera entitled "Die Falschmuem Zer" ("The Gang of False Coiners"), which Sol Bloom, of Chicago, claims as his property and which he says is an early and unknown work of Richard Wagner. In the Munich Nueste Nachrichten his son Siegfried declares that "such a work does not exist," and hence the "False Coiners" must be a forgery.

In the suicide of Bernard Breuer, at Scheveningen, a few days ago, the Philharmonic Orchestra of Berlin lost not only one of its most valuable violinists, but above all its president, and an amiable as well as highly cultured, well liked gentleman, who had not a single enemy and whom it will be hard to replace. He was especially happy in his intercourse with the press, to the members of which he vouchsafed all the necessary information with unfailing precision, and the representative duties devolving upon him he took care of with a tact that does not always distinguish executant musicians.

General Intendant von Perfall has just sent in his resignation as director of the Royal Academy of Music at Munich, because of old age. He was born seventy-eight years ago at Munich, where he first studied law and later on music under Moritz Hauptmann, at Leipsic. In 1850 he founded at Munich the Oratorio Society, which he conducted for ten years. Then he was nominated court intendant, organizing in the latter capacity both the Munich and the Wuerzburg royal conservatories. In 1872 he became royal court opera intendant, which position he filled until eight years ago. As a composer he has written operas and oratorios which betoken throughout a highly developed romantic feeling.

I had the pleasure of shaking hands with Prof. Dr. Joseph Joachim and personally to congratulate him upon his recently celebrated seventieth birthday anniversary. He looked hale and heart, and the appetite he developed on the occasion in question makes me believe that he will live and work for a long period beyond the time allotted to man by the royal psalm writer. In Professor Joachim's company was also his staunch old friend and chum Dr. Max Bruch, the great composer, who is also getting well on in age, but is after all Joachim's junior by several years.

Many were the calls I missed during my temporary absence from Berlin, among them those of several old friends

SHERWOOD,
Greatest American Pianist.
ESTHER FEE,
Violinist.
(Paris—In America Nov. 1.)
BRUNO STEINDEL,
The Noted 'Cellist.
CLARA MURRAY,
Harpist.
LEONE LANGDON KEY,
Organist.

CHARLES R. BAKER,
MANAGER OF
High Class and Distinguished MUSICAL ARTISTS,
Fine Arts Building,
CHICAGO.

ELECTA GIFFORD,
Soprano.
(Late of Royal Opera, Amsterdam.)
MABELLE CRAWFORD,
Contralto.
GLENN HALL,
Tenor.
SYDNEY LLOYD WRIGHTSON,
The English Baritone.
MASTER LLOYD SIMONSON,
The Famous Boy Soprano.

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

MARY WOOD CHASE, PIANO VIRTUOSA.
For Terms, Dates, &c., address HANNAH & HAMLIN, Managers.
Personal address: 3031 Prairie Avenue. 514 Kimball Hall, CHICAGO.

FRANK T. BAIRD,
THE ART OF SINGING.
34 Monroe St., Chicago, Ill.

Mr. & Mrs. BICKNELL YOUNG,
67 Kimball Hall,
CHICAGO, ILL.

EDWARD MEEK,
BARITONE.
Pupils accepted.
924 Fine Arts Building, Chicago.

NINETEENTH YEAR.
1899-1900.
MRS. REGINA WATSON'S SCHOOL
for the
HIGHER ART OF PIANO PLAYING.
297 Indiana Street, Chicago, Ill.

CLARA G. TRIMBLE, SOPRANO.
Address 619 Fine Arts Building, Chicago.

THE SPIERING QUARTET,
708 Fine Arts Building, Michigan Boulevard, CHICAGO.

MAURICE ARONSON PIANIST. Auditorium Building, (Tower, 1406) Chicago.
Concerts, Recitals, Musicales, Lectures.
For the past four years chief assistant to Leopold Godowsky. Four Competent Assistants. Write for circular

W. C. E. SEEBOECK, PIANIST, Just returned from Europe, where he made very successful appearances.
Studio 727 FINE ARTS BUILDING, CHICAGO, ILL.

HELEN BUCKLEY, SOPRANO. Vocal Instruction. ORATORIO CONCERTS, RECITALS
5316 MADISON AVENUE, CHICAGO.

Mrs. GEORGE A. COE,
(BARTH and MOSZKOWSKI)
Pianist and Lecturer. 640 University Place, EVANSTON, ILL.

from the other side of the big herring pond. Thus Josef Kuder, of Sohmer & Co., of New York; Henry Wolfsohn, the New York impresario; Emil Fischer, the quondam sonorous New York basso; Miss Martha Hofacker, the handsome and stylish young soprano and pupil of Anna Lankow, who has some offers for operatic engagements here for next season. Then there was my particular friend Richard Burmeister, the eminent and celebrated New York pianist and composer, and one whom I was equally sorry not to have met was my old chum, W. Edward Heimendahl, of Baltimore. Mrs. and Miss Davidson had come to say good-by before leaving for the United States, where they will spend the summer at their country residence, near Saratoga; further callers were Ernst H. Bauer, violin teacher and member of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra; Miss Minnie Tracey, the well known vocal artist; Carroll Brent Chilton, of Carengie Hall, New York; W. Safonoff, director of the conservatory at Moscow; Miss Rose Philipps, from Milwaukee, a piano pupil of Mayer-Mahr; M. Kriegsman, an American music student; D. Visanski, Leonard Liebling and Mr. Robinson, three well-known New York musicians, as well as August Guessbacher, pianist and composer, and once our valiant Leipsic correspondent.

Among the callers who dropped in since my return to the Berlin office of THE MUSICAL COURIER was Mr. and Mrs. Leopold Godowsky; Mrs. and Miss Alma Stencel, from San Francisco; Bernard Sturm, head of the violin department of the university at Ann Arbor, Mich., and Mrs. Sturm, concert singer and wife of the pianist of that name; Miss Harriet Behnne, the handsome contralto, who is still engaged at the Breslau Opera House; Louis Bauer, an operatic basso, from St. Louis, who is a member of the Zurich Opera House personnel; Miss Marguerite Melville, pianist and composer, from Brooklyn; Max Guhlka, a very talented young American violinst; my old and highly esteemed friend, Louis Michaelis, one of the best of New York's piano teachers and first of subscribers to THE MUSICAL COURIER, from which correct course of proceeding he has never deviated since; Kapellmeister Adolf Goettmann, of Berlin; Theodore Lindberg, principal of the violin department of the Bethany Conservatory at Lindsborg, Kan., and my friend and colleague, Otto Taubmann, critic and composer, who brought me the score of his recently finished choral drama, "Saengerweihe," about which I shall have something further to say when I'll find time to look through the work.

O. F.

ZELDENRUST TOUR IN THE UNITED STATES.

EDUARD ZELDENRUST, the Dutch pianist, who is to make his first American tournée this season under the direction of Loudon G. Charlton, has achieved a victory among his own countrymen, which he regards as one of the greatest in his career.

The honor that is popularly supposed to be withheld from the prophet in his own country is bestowed upon Zeldenrust lavishly and with enthusiasm. The fact remains, however, that he was celebrated throughout Great Britain and Continental Europe before the Hollanders knew or acknowledged the pre-eminence of his genius and his art. And this is how it happened.

When Zeldenrust began the serious preparation for his career he left Amsterdam and went first to Germany, where, in the Cologne Conservatory, under Dr. Von Hillern; next in Berlin with Professor Gernsheim, and then in Frankfort with Kwast, of the Hoch Conservatory, he made astonishing progress in his studies. From Germany he went to France, and in the Paris Conservatory, under Marmontel, he completed his work of preparation.

Since then Zeldenrust has made his home in Paris, and there and in London, and all the important musical centres of Germany, he has been accorded universal and cordial acknowledgment of his greatness as a virtuoso.

All this was vigorously resented by his countrymen. That he studied abroad and made his fame there was too serious a matter to be readily overlooked or forgiven. However, Zeldenrust finally decided to return to Holland and play. He did so. His first appearance was at one of the renowned Diligentia concerts, in the presence of the queens, and the result was a sensational success that ended in a tremendous ovation and complete capitulation on the part of both press and public.

Here, for instance, is an article published in the Amsterdam Telegraph, written by Henry Viotto, the eminent conductor of the great Amsterdam Wagner Verein, director in The Hague Conservatory and one of the most distinguished authorities on musical matter in Holland:

"Speaking about soloists, I herewith beg to inform that at present a great countryman pianist is stopping at Scheveningen, near The Hague. I refer to Eduard Zeldenrust, a piano virtuoso, who is better known abroad than in his own country. This happens often with artists, as we all know.

"He was good enough to play for me, and for some other musicians as well, a portion of his repertory, and so I had occasion to take note of his tremendous technic and his beautiful conception, so full of temperament. Among other things he played the Fantaisie in C, by Schumann, a work written for (and dedicated to) the fingers of a Liszt, and crowded with technical difficulties. Seldom indeed have I heard this composition played with such accuracy and at the same time such 'Schwung' (spirit).

"He also played the G minor Fugue, by Bach-Liszt, a number of etudes and ballads by Chopin, and three Hungarian rhapsodies by Liszt, in all of which he displayed very exceptional virtuosity.

"It is my conviction that Zeldenrust must be counted among the greatest pianists of modern times, and I feel sure that he will not have reason to complain about the success that will await him on the other side of the Atlantic when he visits the United States this coming season, where he has been engaged for an extended concert tour by Loudon G. Charlton, a prominent American."

The Success of Another Ogden Crane Pupil.

MISS EDITH HUTCHINS, who is with the International Opera Company at Winnipeg, is meeting with well deserved success. She was under Madame Crane's instruction for five years, and has had no other teacher. She has chosen opera as the field for her talents. She has been successful as Zerlina in "Fra Diavolo," and again with Francis Wilson's Opera Company, and now again in Canada as a prima donna. The quality of a teacher's work is shown in the success of her pupils. The following is taken from the Morning Telegram, of Winnipeg, July 12.

The work of the evening, however, was Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana," and here a real surprise was in store for the majority of the audience. From start to finish this difficult dramatic work went without a hitch, and it is not hyperbole to say that everyone—soloists, musical director, stage manager, chorus and orchestra—covered themselves with glory. Miss Hutchins was, of course, the central figure as Santuzza, and she took the "tide at the flood." She had her opportunity last evening and well did she avail herself of it. Her work throughout was characterized by intense dramatic passion. Her acting when, after Turiddu's scornful rejection of her, she brings about his death, by making known his guilt to Lola's husband Alfio, was very realistic. The public has been told what Hutchins is capable of doing, but last night they had a splendid opportunity of seeing for themselves. In this, one of the most difficult roles for a prima donna, she acquitted herself with great credit and won the plaudits of the house.

HARRY J. FELLOWS.—Harry J. Fellows, the popular tenor, directed the Chautauqua Assembly held at Urbana, Ill., from July 22 to July 30.

ESTABLISHED 1867.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, President.

The Largest and Most Complete Institution of Musical Learning in America.

COLLEGE BUILDING, 202 MICHIGAN BLVD.

The finest structure in existence devoted exclusively to a Musical College.

SCHOOL OF ACTING, MUSIC ELOCUTION, ORATORY, LANGUAGES.

BOARD OF MUSICAL DIRECTORS.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, DR. LOUIS FALK,
HANS VON SCHILLER, WILLIAM CASTLE,
BERNARD LISTEMANN, S. E. JACOBSOHN,
RUDOLPH GANZ, CHARLES GAUTHIER.
HERMAN DEVRIES,

HART CONWAY, Director School of Acting.

Catalogue Mailed Free.

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

MISS ESTHER FEE, VIOLINISTE.

(PARIS—IN AMERICA NOVEMBER 1st.)

Exclusive Management CHARLES R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

HARRISON M. WILD CONCERT ORGANIST.

Studio 6, .. 241 .. Wabash Ave., CHICAGO.

Piano and Organ Instruction.

D. A. CLIPPINGER,
THE ART OF SINGING.
Conductor.
410 Kimball Hall, Chicago, Ill.

EARL R. DRAKE,
VIOLIN VIRTUOSO.
Teacher.
Studio: Kimball Hall, Chicago.

VICTOR GARWOOD,
Kimball Hall, Chicago.

William A. WILLETT, BARITONE.
care Musical Courier, Chicago, or leading agents.

ALLEN SPENCER,
PIANIST. Concerts, Recitals.
Address: KIMBALL HALL, CHICAGO.

KARLETON HACKETT,
Teacher of Singing,
Kimball Hall, Chicago.

MARY PECK THOMSON,
SOPRANO,
620 Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

CAROLYN LOUISE WILLARD,
CONCERT PIANIST. Instruction.
Pupil of Ernst Jedliczka, Bloomfield-Zeisler.
For terms and dates address
4164 Lake Avenue, Chicago.

FREDERICK WARREN,
BARITONE,
Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.

MUSICAL KINDERGARTEN FOR THE PIANOFORTE.
BY FANNIE CHURCH PARSONS.
For full information concerning normal instruction or children's class work, address . . .
MRS. PARSONS' NORMAL TRAINING SCHOOL,
Handel Hall, CHICAGO, ILL.

Mrs. THEODORE WORCESTER, Pianist.
(GODOWSKY.)
Concerts, Recitals and Salon Musicales. Recitals from Russian Composers.
ADDRESS: 1402 Auditorium Tower, CHICAGO.

R. CAPOUL CUTTRISS WARDE,
SINGING MASTER.
The teacher of many prominent artists now before the public. Send for list.
STUDIO: No. 911 Cable Building, Cor. Jackson and Wabash, CHICAGO.

MINNIE CRUDUP VESEY, MEZZO CONTRALTO.
CONCERTS, RECITALS, VOCAL TEACHER, COACHING.
Address HANNNH & HAMLIN, 514 Kimball Hall, CHICAGO.

Chicago Auditorium Conservatory
AUDITORIUM BUILDING, CHICAGO.
Send for Summer Catalogue.
FREDERIC GRANT GLEASON, Director.
ROY ARTHUR HUNT, Manager.

ROWDON Basso-Cantante,
623 Fine Arts Building,
CHICAGO, ILL.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY,
JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, Director, Kimball Building, 243 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO.
ALL BRANCHES OF MUSIC. DRAMATIC ART. TEACHERS' TRAINING DEPARTMENT.
JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, VICTOR GARWOOD, ALLEN H. SPENCER, GERTRUDE MURDOUGH, GLENN DILLARD GUNN, HOWARD WELLS, Piano; KARLETON HACKETT, NOYES B. MINER, HOLMES COWPER, GLENN HALL, RAGNA LINNE, MABEL GOODWIN, LOUISE BLISH, Singing; WILHELM MIDDELSCHULTE, Organ; JAN VAN OORDT, Violin; ADOLPH WEIDIG, Composition; JAN KALAS, Violoncello, and thirty other superior instructors.
Catalogue mailed free. 243 Wabash Avenue, care of American Conservatory.

Gottschalk Lyric School. Musical and Dramatic.
CATALOGUE MAILED ON APPLICATION
L. G. GOTTSCHALK, Director. KIMBALL HALL, 243-253 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO.

RECOLLECTIONS OF FAMOUS MUSICIANS.

By S. G. Pratt.

(Continued from last week.)

REHEARSALS AT THE ROYAL OPERA IN BERLIN, UNDER KAPELLMEISTER ECKERT. A GAME OF LEAP FROG ON THE STAGE DURING A REHEARSAL OF THE "MEISTERSINGER," BY NIEMANN, FRICKE, SOLOMON AND OTHERS. FIRST PRODUCTION OF WAGNER'S GRAND OPERA PRODUCES A TUMULT. BILSE'S CONCERT HAUS: A COURT FUNCTION AT THE OPERA HOUSE DURING KING WILLIAM'S REIGN. A SUBSCRIPTION BALL AND MY "GRAND DUCHESS." RICHARD WAGNER IN BERLIN. A DINNER GIVEN IN HIS HONOR. HE DIRECTS A GRAND CONCERT BEFORE THE NEWLY CREATED EMPEROR. HIS "KAISER MARSCH" AND BEETHOVEN'S FIFTH SYMPHONY. GREAT TRIUMPH FOR THE COMPOSER.

Rehearsals at the Grand Opera.

When I presented my permit to attend the rehearsals at the Royal Opera, I was ushered into a great dark auditorium and found myself entirely alone.

Groping for a seat I soon discovered some light upon the stage and after a time, my eyes getting used to the environment, I could see sheets covering the boxes, galleries and railings, all of which lent a more ghostly appearance to the place.

The wide open stage yawned like an immense mouth in front, and the few jets of gas gave but deeper darkness to the space behind. Shortly after getting myself located, the orchestral players climbed into their places and continued vigorously to "tune up."

The hideous and reiterated noises were indescribable, grotesque and terrible. It seemed as though some immense monster was suffering from physical torment. The groaning of the basses and 'cellos, the lugubrious tones of the French horns, the strident sawing of the violins, and the comical staccato arpeggios of the fagotti tumbling up into the melee as a clown tumbles into the arena, with heels in the air, were extremely weird, while the oboe, with its penetrating keynote, droned away till it stuck out like the rabbit's eye in Hans Makart's masterpiece, "Abundancia." Then the shrill tones of a piccolo would scare itself away into its top notes, and the bass tuba would respond with a growl and a grunt, as if to say, "Why do you disturb my slumber."

In the chaos, here and there, a fragment of the overture could be heard, and now and then a tender tone of the flute or clarinet would assert itself, of which, however, the cornet would appear to be jealous, for it would interrupt with its pompous blare.

Thus the musical cauldron boiled and bubbled, and only the witches from "Macbeth," with their hideous incantation, seemed necessary to complete the picture.

Suddenly the cacophony ceased and Kapellmeister Eckert climbed into the conductor's chair, greeting the men with a cheery "Guten morgen, meine Herren." Eckert had been a pupil of Mendelssohn. He traveled with Jenny Lind in this country, wrote the famous "Swiss Song," and in his person formed a connecting link between the classic period and the present. He was the wizard who, with his magic wand, would bring order out of chaos, and wave the piles of musical débris, the fragments of brick and mortar, into enchanting castles of harmony, palaces of heavenly melody, and beautiful flowers of emotion whose fragrance never fades.

The "Meistersinger" of Richard Wagner was the work then in preparation for its first production, which was to occur several weeks subsequently.

Presently, Herr Niemann, the renowned tenor; Fricke, Solomon and Betz, the famous bassos; Fraülein Mallinger, then the reigning favorite prima donna, and others, came upon the stage. Things went pretty smoothly until the mastersingers commenced that famous quarrel scene in the first act; then, chaos reigned, but Eckert kept right on with the orchestra, finally stopping. He called out to the confused and somewhat disgusted artists: "Nein Kinder, haben sie richtig gesingen? Ich konnte sie nicht folgen, musste das orchestra besorgen."

In answer to many and various replies he called out: "Na, wir wollen's noch a mal probiren. Aber die's mal nimm euch in acht mein lieben kinder."

Then, with a few words to the orchestra to take pains and count time, the scene was repeated, Eckert giving, now and then to a doubting or hesitating artist, a nod or motion of the baton to begin his part at the right moment.

Thus the rehearsal proceeded until the principals had a long respite, then the fun loving qualities of Niemann began to assert themselves.

Without interrupting or apparently disturbing the singers in front, or the good natured conductor, Niemann, Fricke, Soloman and another at the rear of the stage commenced playing leapfrog; tiring of this they then tried a hand spring until, miscalculating his distance, Niemann landed against a piece of scenery with such force as to attract general attention.

Then Eckert protested: "Aber kinder, ich bitte sie, seien sie doch nicht so unartig, machen sie doch nicht solchen unsinn."

Then Niemann pretended to be very crestfallen, and, like a naughty boy at school, went and stood in a corner by himself. Niemann, especially, took every opportunity to give his mischievous inclination a free hand. I remember, on another occasion, when an Italian opera was being rehearsed during an ensemble, in which the rhythm in six-eight time, was strongly accentuated. Niemann came down the centre toward the footlights, balancing on one foot after the other, keeping time and imitating a waltz. Then, looking down at the 'cello players in the orchestra, who were vigorously sawing away at their instruments, he placed the fingers of the left hand on his vest buttons, playing up and down, as though on 'cello strings, while with his right hand he sawed across, as with a bow. This convulsed the players with laughter and brought a reprimanding look and gesture of protest from the director, which the culprit answered with a shrug of his broad shoulders, soon making amends for it by singing his part so gloriously that all were thrilled with pleasure.

I was greatly impressed at the prevailing good nature of all the singers. They seemed like so many happy children, of whom the kindly dispositioned Eckert was a generous monitor.

The fact that as long as they obeyed the rules their positions were permanent, with a pension for old age, had, no doubt, much to do with this delightful frame of mind.

Thus, entirely alone in that vast auditorium I enjoyed many performances not down on the program, and learned much of the inner workings of grand opera productions.

Some weeks later I attended the first production in Berlin of the great work, "The Meistersinger," which was then causing much speculation and criticism, and witnessed a performance of rare excellence.

The King, his entire court, distinguished ambassadors from all the various countries in gorgeous uniforms, and the leaders in society of art and letters, graced the occasion and made it a "gala" performance. The animosity of Wagner's opponents was well understood, and there were strong suspicions that some demonstration would be made against the composer. The over-anxiety and zeal of Wagner's friends, prompted, no doubt, by this exaggerated fear, caused the very thing they wished to avoid, for when the scene of Beckmesser's "Street Serenade" was reached, some zealot started to applaud in the wrong place, while a score of Wagner's devotees immediately whispered sh-sh-sh. Their good intention to hush the applauding interrupter of the scene was misunderstood by others as an intention to hiss the work, and so these other zealots, jealous for the master's success, commenced applauding more vigorously; then came more "hushing," more hand clapping, then more and louder hissing, answered by louder and longer applause, until the audience was in an uproar.

Meanwhile the scene on the stage, representing the mobbing of poor Beckmesser, was proceeding, depicting a riot in music and action.

Thus the great climax of force and disorder illustrated upon the stage found its counterpart in the hissing and applauding tumult of the audience, and both together furnished a tremendous crescendo of confusion and noise such as I never heard before or since at a musical performance. It was simply terrific, creating an excitement and furnishing a climax undreamed of, even by the great "wizard of Bayreuth."

Thinking over the incident afterward, I recalled the fact that about 100 years had passed since Frederick the Great founded this royal opera in Berlin, and brought all the singers from Italy to take part in the performances.

Attendance of all the court and military officers he made compulsory, and then, finding that proper enthusiasm was lacking, he also ordered them to applaud the performers!

How different now the situation; no lack of applause now for excellent performances, but if possible too much demonstration of approval.

Did the old hero's drastic and dictatorial methods have influence in producing this result? Bilse's Concert Haus was at this time one of the principal attractions of the capital of Prussia. There, seated at tables, families, groups of friends, students and music lovers in general, would gather and spend the evening, listening to good music well rendered by an orchestra of sixty performers, refreshments being served between the numbers.

Twice each week symphonies were given, and on these occasions students with scores might be seen following and thus studying the great masters' best works.

Of all the distinguished musicians I met while abroad Bilse was the least artistic in his appearance. He dyed his hair, short beard and whiskers.

Off the stage he seemed less an artist than a mechanic.

I met him several times and found he spoke German with a peculiar provincial accent, while his reticent manner was embarrassing, not to say stupid. But before the audience he bore himself with a brave theatric demeanor.

He generally faced his audience, beating time with his back to the players. Always precise in his beat, at times his gyrations were exceedingly funny, especially when he would swing his baton over his left shoulder to signal the drums or brass composing the left wing of his little army, or when he wanted flutes, clarinets or oboes in the right wing.

But his efforts to signal the centre ('cellos and basses) immediately behind him were the most ludicrous, for it seemed sometimes as though he was about to make a back somersault into their midst.

In spite of these peculiarities of their leader the men played very well, but with more military precision than fine art, more exactness than poetry.

I was given permission to attend rehearsals and found Bilse an exacting drill master, arbitrary, and at times abusive in his manner to the players. However, he produced all the best novelties, as well as the classics; thus the "Ride of the Valkyries" and other excerpts from Wagner's music drama, as well as Rubinstein's "Ocean Symphony," were first heard in Berlin under his industrious direction.

It was at Bilse's Concert Haus, and with his orchestra also, that, later on, some special concerts of excerpts from Wagner's Trilogy were given, with Liszt's personal co-operation, under the patronage of the Baroness Von Schleinitz and her friends, the avowed object being to arouse an interest in the public to assist in a subsequent complete production of the great works at Bayreuth.

The Royal Symphony concerts, given by the orchestra of the Grand Opera, were then under William Taubert's direction, and, while in many respects superior to Bilse's performances, there was a certain lack of enthusiasm, most distressing to a young musician. During this season, through the kindness of our ambassador, George Bancroft, the historian, I attended a subscription ball at the Royal Opera House, which was at that period one of the court functions.

I took with me a German friend, intending merely to look upon the spectacle and enjoy the music, which was very fine, comprising a männerchor of 100 voices, an orchestra and military band.

Some time prior to the entrance of the King, the Crown Prince and his spouse, Victoria, the eldest daughter of the late lamented Queen Victoria, took their places in the box near the stage.

The Princess was ablaze with diamonds, wearing a crown above her oval shaped and sweetly expressive face; about her beautiful neck was a magnificent necklace, a brooch upon her bosom and bracelets clasped about her well rounded arms.

She looked an exact picture of her queen mother, according to engravings of Queen Victoria when young, and as she sat amiably looking down at her future subjects, so quietly and unostentatiously dignified, she reminded me of a chaste and finely cut cameo, rather than a being of flesh and blood.

Presently there was a stir, and the the orchestra commenced a pompous grand march, to the strains of which King William and his suite in gala uniforms marched in, and, in a dignified, not to say majestic manner, made a tour of the ballroom, bowing to many as he passed.

Herr von Hulsen, tall, handsome and just a shade pompous, led the way, carrying a long baton, the insignia of his office as chamberlain to the king.

The king then walked about, conversing with whom he pleased, among the being a gentleman standing next to me.

How afraid I was lest he should speak to me. I after-

ST. LOUIS ADVERTISEMENTS.

HOMER MOORE, BARITONE.
The Odeon, St. Louis, Mo.

MRS. STELLA KELLOGG HAINES,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION:
101, 102, 103 Vista Building, Cor. Grand and Franklin, ST. LOUIS, MO.

ALEXANDER HENNEMAN,
VOCAL CULTURE.
Opera. Coaching. Oratorio.
Henneman Hall, 2723 Olive St., ST. LOUIS.

ward remembered to my shame. Meeting there a young lady with whom I had danced on a previous occasion, my friend urged me to dance, and the father consenting, I found myself on the floor for the first cotillion, which was led by the young Prince Albrecht, nephew of the king; opposite me was a magnificently dressed and fine appearing lady, whom I mentally measured as a grand duchess or some other personage of the most translucent and bluest blood of the kingdom.

Just before the dance began the gentleman, not so impressive, stepped forward and said something which I afterward understood to be an introduction.

After the cotillion was over, when passing my "grand duchess," she graciously recognized me, and to my German friend's inquiry I said that the lady had danced as my opposite in the cotillion.

"Aha!" he exclaimed, "you should ask her to dance."

"But," said I, "I don't know her."

"That makes no difference," rejoined my companion, 'you danced in the same cotillion with her opposite to you, and the gentleman introduced himself, didn't he?"

"Oh, yes, that must have been what he said before we began the dance," I replied. "Well," went on my companion, evidently determined I should have a "good time," 'the lady expects you to dance with her; it is the custom here, and it would be considered rude not to request her to do so," he said, clinching the argument.

"All right then," answered I; "I will offer myself to the grand duchess."

So I presented myself, with an elaborate bow, and presently was floating along on the waves of the "Blue Danube," with the beautiful "duchess" on my arm.

Thus the evening wore away, and I lived in enchanting calms of fairyland, which the magic of music and royalty had conjured up.

At the conclusion I exchanged cards with the gentleman, who gave me a warm invitation to call, which sent an extra thrill of expectations of future friendships with royal personages through my eager brain, and I floated away once, still dreaming on the greatness which had been thrust upon me, but the spell was rudely broken when I examined the card and read:

HERR KARL SCHMIDT.
MUSIK UNTERRICHT.
POTSDAMMER STRASSE.

Thus I met one of the "distinguished" musicians during my first student years in Germany, and the budding fruit of brilliant anticipations was turned to ashes.

It then occurred to me that during a waltz, as I was sailing along with my "grand duchess," the brother of the king, Prince Albrecht, standing with two or three brilliantly decorated generals, turned and tipped me a wink as if to say, "Keep on, young fellow, youth never comes back from the past," and then I thought I had misinterpreted his meaning somewhat. Afterward I ascertained that the lady was a well-known lobbyist at the Prussian parliament, which accounted for her influence "at court" and her presence at this function.

WAGNER IN BERLIN—HIS GREAT TRIUMPH AFTER THE FRANCO-PRUSSIAN WAR.

The breaking out of the Franco-Prussian war in the summer of 1870 did not seem to interfere very much with the regular course of musical art; indeed, my keen interest in the great events that were then carving out the new German Empire received frequent shocks at the apparent indifference of many of my fellow students at Kullak's, who seemed so absorbed in their own efforts as to be oblivious of the sanguinary episodes that were day by day shaking the French Empire to pieces. The departure of troops for the seat of war was almost a daily event in our life, for I lived on Askanische Platz, where the troops boarded the trains. Not infrequently I would be interrupted by the sound of a mighty chorus, and looking out of the window would see a whole regiment marching and singing the inspiring new hymn "Die Wacht am Rhein."

In the early spring, after the war was over, Richard Wagner came to Berlin and gave a grand concert in the Saal der Singakademie, at which he directed his "Faust" Overture as a special feature.

Subsequently another concert was arranged at the Royal Opera House, under the patronage of the newly created "Kaiser" Wilhelm, where the composer produced his famous "Kaiser Huldigungs Marsch," with chorus and orchestra.

Meanwhile a dinner in honor of the "Wizard of Bayreuth," as Wagner was called by many, was arranged at the Hotel du Rome, and there I caught my first glimpse of the "meister."

The dinner was somewhat remarkable for the presence of many of his critics, as well as his enthusiastic supporters, thus proving the power of food and drink as a harmonizing force. Next to me sat young William Tappert, afterward famous as a Wagnerian supporter, but the absence of Kullak, Taubert and many other leaders was noticeable.

Wagner entered the hall, when the dinner was about half over, unaccompanied. He was a short and thick set man, with a quick short step, piercing gray eyes, under a heavy overarching brow and high forehead.

Later in the evening he made the famous speech, to which at the time no one took exception, but which was afterward dissected by his enemies and vigorously condemned as blasphemous; for had he not likened himself in music to the Messiah? It was during the dinner that Tappert related the bon mot of Offenbach, the French opera bouffe writer, who said: "When I read Wagner's essays I like his music best, but when I hear his music I prefer his essays."

One of the most interesting, and in many respects important, events which occured during my student days in Berlin was the concert under Wagner's direction given at the Royal Opera House before the newly created Emperor and his court. The chief features were the "Kaiser Huldiguigs Marsch," produced with a chorus of 400 voices and an orchestra of eighty-five men.

Added interest was given the program by the performance of Beethoven's masterwork, the Fifth Symphony, of which Wagner had made a special study, and about the merits of which he had written in a most enthusiastic strain.

Wagner could have done nothing that would have gone so far to conciliate his opponents as this inspiration of diplomacy, for it changed and modified the attacks upon his compositions and challenged criticism as a director.

"At any rate," said the opposition, "the Kaiser March is not a matter to fight over. It is an old form and melodious." But to direct Beethoven's Fifth Symphony was another matter.

But here again the critics were disarmed, even before the performance, for reports of the rehearsals began to be circulated, and stories of Wagner's command of the orchestra, of his personal magnetism and care as to little details in the score, and, above all, of his evident reverence for the composer (Germany's lofty and sturdy ideal) became an open secret, and unless he should become embarrassed by the presence of the distinguished audience, success was already assured.

Expectation was indeed on tiptoe when the evening came; and when Kaiser Wilhelm entered the royal box in the uniform of a Prussian officer, probably the most brilliant and distinguished audience that had ever gathered within the historic walls of the Opera House arose to greet him; indeed, it was also an equal compliment to the composer who had with his artistic genius industriously carved out a new empire of his own which should eventually compass the globe; and in this thought there was much comfort for the musician.

Indeed, Wagner's triumph on that evening was, in a broad sense, the victory of art over war and politics, the wreath of glory crowning the brow of the German composer, as well as the ruler of the German Empire.

When Wagner came forward to conduct he did appear somewhat nervous and embarrassed by the hearty applause, in which the Kaiser joined, with which he was received, but this was soon overcome, and "Faust" Overture and "Kaiser March" went with a swing and unity, as well as with a virility and power which proved his magnetic influence over the men.

His movements were sharp and nervous, although never in any sense awkward or angular.

But there was no ostentation or display; no beating the air for effect, or silly circles made to keep the players guessing at the beat intended; every movement was direct and full of significance to the men and for their guidance.

The audience soon came into sympathy with the conductor and sat spellbound under the magic of his earnest efforts; people scarcely breathed so strained was the attention, so intense the emotion. It was as though the "meister" was the central battery focusing all the refined electrical force of a finely wrought and vast assembly in his own person, melting into one common spirit all classes of humanity, reducing all to the same common level and lifting them up to the loftiest realms of idealism. Thus the magic of music pervaded and swayed the audience, and when he concluded the "Kaiser March" the suspense vented itself in an electrical shock of applause, mingled with many shouts of "Bravo! Bravo! Bravo!"

But the real triumph came with the performance of the symphony.

Here the patient study to understand the score and the care in drilling the men in every little detail were immediately apparent, enabling the director to bring out and give prominence to many beauties that even to the musician had previously remained hidden; many as yet unseen and beautiful gems of Beethoven's spirit were thus permitted for the first time to shed their lustre for the delight of the listeners, while the rhythmical movement was given with a variety, breadth and dignity which showed the temper of true and devoted art.

To cap the climax the men played as if imbued with the conductor's spirit, and reached a degree of technical perfection which had not been known before, while Wagner put his individuality into the performance, his evident reverence for the work, and his thus subjecting himself to secondary consideration, had a very conciliating influence upon his opponents, all of whom joined in the thunders of applause that greeted the conclusion of the symphony. Indeed, Wagner's conception of it was a revelation; it was a new creation, and gave a new lease of life to what, with its pedantic performance, had already become a somewhat hackneyed work.

It set a new standard which all conductors since then have been striving to attain. For Wagner it was a great triumph, which increased the number of his friends, concentrated their efforts in his behalf, and secured for him the patronage of the emperor for the production of his "Ring des Nibelungen" some five years later at Bayreuth.

HARRIET GODDARD A BRIDE.—A cablegram from London last Friday announced the marriage of Miss Harriet Goddard, the American prima donna, to Dr. Wood, a wealthy resident of Honolulu. The bride is a New England woman. She studied singing with Arthur J. Hubbard, of Boston, and in Italy with Vincenzo Vannini. An account of her début in Italy was published in THE MUSICAL COURIER last March.

MRS. STOCKER'S OPERETTA FOR CHILDREN.—Mrs. Stella Prince Stocker, who is now in Germany, has written a new operetta for children, which she has entitled "The Magic Forest." Mrs. Stocker and her son, Master Arthur Stocker, expect to sail from Hamburg for the United States on August 4.

OLIVE MEAD, VIOLINIST.

Appearing during the coming season of 1901-2 with the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA in Boston for the third time. During July and August, please address MISS MEAD personally, West Elm Avenue, Wollaston, Mass.

Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

MRS.
Carl Alves
Has Resumed Vocal Instruction at her Home Studio:
1146 Park Ave. near 91st Street, New York.

LOUIS V. SAAR
PIANO and COMPOSITION.
REPERTOIRE and SONG INTERPRETATION.
Will resume teaching on September 16.
Early application for instruction is suggested.
2 East 83d Street, - - NEW YORK CITY.

JULIAN
PASCAL
Pianist. Concert, Recitals, Musicales.
For Terms and Dates address care of
MUSICAL COURIER, 1135 Broadway, New York.

HENRI G. SCOTT,
BASSO.
ORATORIO, CONCERT, RECITALS.
ADDRESS: { 14 E. 42d Street, NEW YORK. / 2117 N. 20th Street, PHILADELPHIA.

MISS
MONTEFIORE
VOICE.
Private Studio and Address:
THE ORMONDE,
2030 Broadway, corner 70th St., New York.

ETHEL L. ROBINSON,
(LONDON CONCERT DIRECTION)
Telegrams: "Musikchor, London."
122 Beaufort St., S. W., LONDON, ENGLAND.

Musical . . People.

Dudley Buck and the members of his family are spending the summer at Cushings Island, Me.

The pupils of Madame Locke-Valisi gave their last recital July 20, in the Professional League Rooms, St. Paul, Minn.

Miss Ellen Tegge, soprano, sang recently at one of the summer night concerts at Ontario Beach Park, Rochester, N. Y.

Elbert Newton played the piano accompaniments at the song recital recently given at Rochester, N. Y., by Miss Marion Weed.

The piano pupils of Miss Mary Haggart, of Broadalbin, N. Y., gave a recital on July 10 at the Broadalbin Masonic Hall.

Mrs. Percy Somers-Cocks, who recently returned to this country from London, has opened a vocal studio in Salt Lake City.

Pupils of Miss Harriet F. Reynolds gave a piano recital at the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Jackson, Mich., on July 11.

Henri G. Blaisdell, of Concord, N. H., will have charge of the New Hampshire Music Festival to be held during the week of August 18.

Carl Shepard Oakman, a New England violinist, is the leader of the orchestra playing this summer at the Mt. Kineo House, Bangor, Me.

Charles Yates, of Sodus, N. Y., has been engaged for the position of tenor in the choir of the First Presbyterian Church at Syracuse, N. Y.

Miss Helene Keller and her pupils gave an interesting piano recital at the Lancaster (Ohio) Auditorium on July 11. A program of nineteen numbers was presented.

A feature of the concert given on July 16 at St. Clement's Hall, Duluth, Minn., under the direction of Franz Schultz, was the singing of the united Catholic choirs of Duluth.

Miss Maud Roudez, formerly of the Grau Company, gave a concert on July 15 at the Pennsylvania College of Music at Meadville, Pa. The soprano was assisted by Miss Clara Hinckley, violinist, and Miss Susanna Porter, pianist.

Miss Mary Hogan, of Rosendale, Kan., gave the graduation recital at the Schultze School of Musical Art, at Kansas City, Mo. Miss Hogan's program was made up of compositions from the works of Loewe, Nicodé, Heraz, Reinecke and Moszkowski.

Mrs. W. Mills Edwards gave a musicale at her country home, Ellenville, N. Y., on July 8. The vocal soloists were Miss Clara Markey, Miss Jennie Mowell and the husband of the hostess. Violin solos were played by Mr. and Miss Clayton. Miss Grace Ryan was the pianist.

Miss Inez M. Ward, a graduate of the piano department of the New England Conservatory of Music, gave at recital on July 22 at Academy Hall, Shelburne Falls, Mass. The young pianist was assisted by Miss Bertha C. Chamberlain, also a graduate of the New England Conservatory.

The Choir of the Church of the Holy Redeemer, Detroit, Mich., gave a concert at the Lyceum Theatre, Detroit, on Sunday evening, July 21, under the auspices of the Columbian Catholic Summer School. The conductor was A. A. Langlois. Selections from Rossini's "Stabat Mater" and Haydn's "Creation" were sung, the soloists being Edward Collins, John Manning, Albert J. Laboissier, Mr. Galvin and Miss Moran. Violin solos were played by Miss Emma Schroeder and William Smith, and 'cello solos by Henry Andries. Miss Edna Apel was the pianist of the concert.

The choir of the Eighth Street Temple, Pittsburg, are rehearsing for the first services in the new synagogue on Saturday, August 3. The present choir consists of Mrs. M. S. McKennan, soprano; Miss Charlotte Wagner, contralto; E. G. Reed, basso, and M. A. Oestreich, tenor. Carl Ritter is the organist and choirmaster.

Arthur T. Shattuck, a young pianist who recently returned from his studies abroad with Leschetizky, assisted at a concert on July 19, given at the First Presbyterian Church, Menasha, Wis., for the benefit of the organ fund. The other artists who assisted were Mrs. Genevieve Clark Wilson, soprano, and Clarence E. Shepard, organist.

A piano recital by the pupils of Miss Jessie Van Alstine was made a social feature at the house of Mrs. W. C. Daley, of Kinderhook street, Chatham, N. Y., on July 11. Following are the names of the young pianists who participated: Ruby, Jennie and Florence Daley, Mabel Soules, Florence Martin, Helen Mellen, Geraldine Sanderson, Lena Kober, Hazel Hope, Elizabeth Pendleton, May Come, Carrie Pendleton, Almira Mead, Louise Fellows, Agnes Neville, Florence Blunt, Katherine Elliott, Louise Stockwell, Edith Ashley, Pauline Daley; Masters George Mellen, George Barrett, Alfred Swab and Lewis Wood.

CLAVIER SUMMER SCHOOL.

THE concert hall at the Clavier Piano School, 11 West Twenty-second street, has twice during the last week been filled with an audience of representative musicians to hear students' recitals. Miss Bertha Hoberg played the following program Monday evening:

Prelude and Fugue.....Bach
Sonata, op. 31, No. 3.....Beethoven
Prelude.....Chopin
Etude.....Chopin
Nocturne.....Chopin
Impromptu.....Chopin
Ballade.....Chopin
L'Alouette.....Glinka-Balakirew
Rhapsodie Hongroise No. 13.....Liszt

This program would have taxed the power of a much more experienced pianist. She is better equipped technically than many people who have played the piano for twenty years. Her early training was received from Miss Alden, of Terre Haute, Ind., and when we consider that she has studied the Clavier system but two years her work seems really phenomenal. Her phrasing is artistic and her interpretation showed the hand of that well-known artist and painstaking teacher, S. M. Fabian. Her ability showed to the best advantage in the Ballade and in the "Rhapsodie Hongroise."

On Wednesday evening Miss Helen B. Lawrence gave the following program:

Pastorale.....Scarlatti-Tausig
Gavotte in G.....Niemann
La Filuse.....Raff
Novelette in E.....Schumann
Two Songs Without Words.....Mendelssohn
Impromptu in B flat.....Schubert
Witches' Dance.....MacDowell
Magic Fire Scene, from Die Walküre.....Wagner-Brassin
Hark, Hark, the Lark.....Schubert-Liszt
Scherzo, from Concerto, op. 102.....Litolff
Orchestral parts played on second piano by Mrs. Gertrude H. Murdough.

Miss Lawrence, as a pupil, was put to a test in the more difficult numbers of this program, but the musicianly phrasing, her accuracy and intelligent interpretation held her audience throughout. The Schubert Impromptu, "Hark, Hark, the Lark!" and the Mendelssohn "Hunting Song" are deserving of especial mention. Perhaps Miss Lawrence reached her climax in the Scherzo from the Concerto by Litolff, which was played with bravura and power, and she was obliged to respond to an encore. Her playing throughout was characterized by a certain repose unusual in one so young, and proves that she possesses the qualifications that go to make a good pianist.

Miss Lawrence is a pupil of Mrs. Gertrude H. Murdough, and a member of the faculty of the American Conservatory of Music, located in Kimball Hall, Chicago. Mrs. Murdough is a representative of the Clavier method, and the thorough training in this method and the superiority of it was unmistakable and apparent in every number.

Instead of the usual Friday evening recital Frank Rebarer gave a most instructive talk on "Correct Breathing and Its Application to Piano Playing," a résumé of which will be found in another column of this paper.

AN EXCELLENT CONCERT AT SEA.

EVIDENTLY there was not so much martyrdom for "Neptune's sake" on board the steamer Barbarossa, which sailed from this port for Bremen on July 4.

Among the passengers were a number of well-known musicians and musical people, and accordingly the concert in aid of the North German Lloyd Widows' and Orphans' Fund and St. John's Guild of New York was arranged by men and women who understood the management of musical functions. The name of Arthur Claassen, conductor of the Brooklyn Arion and United Singers, of Brooklyn, headed the concert committee. Arthur P. Schmidt, the well-known music publisher, was also a member of the concert committee, as well as the treasurer and chairman of the financial committee.

The concert was given on Friday evening, July 12. The following was the program:

Piano soli—
Am Meer.....Schubert-Liszt
Frühlingsrauschen.....Sinding
Miss Effie S. Murdock.
Songs for contralto—
Spring Song, from Samson and Delilah.....Saint-Saëns
Nur wer die Sehnsucht kennt.....Tschaikowsky
Miss Florence Mulford.
Recitation, Toussaint l'Ouverture.....——
Edward J. McMahon.
Aria for soprano, Jewel Song, from Faust.....Gounod
Mrs. Marie Mattfeld.
Address, William McCarroll.
Collection.
Piano solo, Elsa's Dream, from Lohengrin.....Wagner-Liszt
Charles Everett, Jr.
Aria for mezzo-soprano, Connais-tu le pays? from Mignon...Thomas
Miss Bertha Sagnier.
Songs with zither obligato—
Nightingale Song, from Der Vogelhandler.....Zeller
Waltz Song.....Jürgens
Mrs. Marie Mattfield and Charles Mayer, Jr.
Choruses—
Die Wacht am Rhein.
The Star Spangled Banner.

Besides Messrs. Schmidt and Claassen, the following served on the committees: Concert committee, Wm. McCarroll, Wm. Mattfeld, Horatio Parker; financial committee, Miss Dieterich, Miss Dominick, Mrs. Friedenwald, Miss Kaufmann, Mrs. Hoffmann, Mrs. Parker, Miss Schlatterer, Miss Schwartje. Accompaniments for the singers were played by Messrs. Claassen, Mattfeld and Parker.

On Tuesday afternoon, July 9, an interesting children's festival was given. Besides the concert there were games and races, for which the prizes were awarded by Captain Mentz, of the Barbarossa. The committee for the children's celebration included Mrs. Horatio W. Parker, Mrs. Marie Mattfeld, Miss Stella Dieterich, Arthur P. Schmidt, William McCarroll, Arthur Claassen.

E. PRESSON
MILLER,
VOICE CULTURE.
METROPOLITAN COLLEGE OF MUSIC, 212 West 59th St., New York.

Carlos N. Sanchez
OPERATIC TENOR, TEACHER OF SINGING.
Voice Building a Specialty. Repertory: Church, Oratorio and Opera.
Studios: 138 Fifth Ave., New York.
Monday, Wednesday, Thursday and Saturday,
RESIDENCE: 758 WEST END AVENUE,
Corner 97th Street.

JOSEPHINE S.
JACOBY,
CONTRALTO.
Address: 104 West 58th Street, NEW YORK.

1901 ANNUAL TOUR OF 1902
PAUR
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,
EMIL PAUR, Conductor.
Conductor New York Philharmonic.
Formerly Conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra.
WISSNER PIANO USED.
Miss ANNA MILLAR, Manager, 540 Fulton St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

HELEN NIEBUHR.

Miss Helen Niebuhr, another American singer, who has made a brilliant record in Europe, has just returned full of enthusiasm over her success and her work, and with earnest determination to add to her laurels in her native land this coming season.

Born and bred in New York city, descended on her father's side from generations of musicians, Miss Niebuhr is gifted with an exceptionally beautiful contralto voice and much personal charm.

Her early musical training was received from Heinrich Meyn in New York, after which she went to Paris and took an extended finishing course with M. Jacques Bouhy, the great French vocal master.

A number of appearances in some of the most exclusive salons in the French as well as the American colonies in Paris followed, and she sang at a Figaro musicale on the same program with Sarasate, and at other important concerts in the French capital, at all of which she was highly successful.

In London she appeared as soloist with the Westminster and Lester orchestras, the Sunday Philharmonic; at concerts in Queen's and St. James' halls, with Maud Powell and other noted artists, both singers and instrumentalists. At Southampton, Blackheath and elsewhere in England, Miss Niebuhr filled important engagements, orchestral and otherwise, and in each and all of them, as her press notices show, she acquitted herself with marked distinction and honor.

Her voice is delightful in quality, rich, full and sympathetic, of extended compass, and her clear enunciation is not the least delightful characteristic of her fine method and art.

Miss Niebuhr's repertory ranges from a dozen of the standard oratorios to the classic German lieder, old Italian (sixteenth century) and modern songs by English, French and American composers.

Tall, graceful, with large dark eyes and an expressive face, Miss Niebuhr wins her audiences by her very attractive appearance before she has sung a note. Loudon G. Charlton, the well-known impresario, has assumed the exclusive management of her American bookings.

Here are some press notices, which speak for themselves:

The American vocalist, Miss Helen Niebuhr, has a voice of rich and resonant quality. Her articulation is particularly distinct, and she gave all possible effect to a couple of ballads sung to English words.—London Daily Telegraph.

Miss Helen Niebuhr, an American, possesses a very delightful contralto voice, and her rendering of three of Edward Elgar's "Sea Songs" indicated refinement and exceptional musical intuition.—London Morning Post.

Miss Niebuhr is gifted with a contralto voice of refined and musical timbre which has been well trained. She sang with great charm.—London Standard.

Miss Niebuhr's voice is of delightful quality, rich and full, and of extensive compass. A plaintive song, "The Quest," showed how much pathos she can impart, while Chaminade's "Trahison" gave occasion for the display of much dramatic power. "My Love Is Come" was also charmingly sung. Frequent encores for both showed how they found favor with their audience.—The Stage, London.

Miss Helen Niebuhr's beautiful sympathetic contralto was well displayed in "The Quest" and "The Danza." She threw great variety of feeling into her songs and was encored.—The Queen, London.

Among Miss Niebuhr's successes were Chaminade's "Trahison" and "The Quest," both given with genuine fervor and judicious employment of an excellent voice.—The Daily Chronicle.

Miss Niebuhr displayed a contralto voice of good quality in a group of well chosen ballads by Grieg, Marzials, Chaminade and Hadwick.—Musical News.

Miss Niebuhr, who is a pupil of Monsieur Bouhy, and who has a most beautiful contralto voice, made a great impression in a religious song, "By the Waters of Babylon," which she sang with great taste and expression.—Saison de Spa, Belgium.

"By the Waters of Babylon" was sung by Miss Helen Niebuhr. Miss Niebuhr has a fine contralto voice, which she knows how to use with great effect. She sang with great taste and feeling, and the audience were unanimous in expressions of pleasure.—Belgian Times and News, Brussels.

WILLIAM WORTH BAILEY.

MANAGER R. E. JOHNSTON, who is booking dates for William Worth Bailey, the blind violinist, and who will personally conduct his first American tour, is having no difficulty in securing engagements. Already the bookings made guarantee the success of the enterprise.

The violinist will be ably supported by Edwin Shonert, pianist, and Elizabeth Northrop, prima donna.

Young Bailey is spending the summer at Liege, Belgium, and will sail for America early in the fall. From Liege come very interesting accounts of his successes. Wherever Bailey has appeared in public he has aroused the greatest enthusiasm.

One of the most discriminating of the music critics of Paris thus extols the playing of the young American:

"Young Bailey, the blind violinist from America, is a true artist. There is nothing of the freak about him. His blindness of course adds a pathetic interest to his performance; but he is great in spite of that. His technic is trustworthy; it can be relied upon to overcome all difficulties. And his musicianship is thorough. He grasps the meaning of a composition, digests its contents and then gives a finished performance. So great is this violinist's equipment that nothing seems difficult to him. Rarely have I heard so satisfactory a performance of the Beethoven concerto. In fact, I do not exaggerate when I declare I never have heard it equaled. And, at the other extreme, Bailey's playing of the Paganini caprices was equally as surprising. He simply dazzled the audience by the splendor of his performance. I am not accustomed to rave over a violinist and seldom do I praise one extravagantly. It is impossible, however, when writing about this extraordinary young man, to repress my ardor, to stem my enthusiasm, to curb my speech. All the laudatory terms I could marshal would but inadequately express my admiration of this American violinist, this phenomenon."

A well-known violinist of New York, who has just returned from a visit to Ovide Musin at Liege, had frequent opportunities to hear Bailey. In talking about his superlative talent, this violinist said: "I had been told so many complimentary things about the Arkansas boy—for he still is a boy—that my expectations were raised very high. After hearing him play a number of the severely classic compositions of Bach and Beethoven and several of the more modern works of Wieniawski, Bruch, Brahms, Tschaikowsky and Saint-Saëns, I concluded that the half had not been told me. Young Bailey's playing was a hundred times superior to what I had expected to hear. It is my opinion that when he visits the United States next season his success will be sensational."

CINCINNATI, July 27, 1901.

THE last of a series of three lectures on the organ, by Arthur J. H. Barbour, of the Conservatory of Music faculty, was given on Wednesday evening last, July 24, in the recital hall of the conservatory. The lecture was delightfully informal and made up largely of personal reminiscences.

On Thursday, July 25, at 4 p. m., Mr. Barbour gave an organ recital in St. Francis de Sales Church (by kind permission of Rev. A. M. Quatman) to the students of the summer school of the conservatory. Program was the following:

Toccata et Fuga, D minor.....Bach
Sonata in B flat (new).....E. Bossi
Elevation, A flat.....Guilmant
Improvisation .....
Laudate Dominum Omnes Gentes.....Lemmens

Mr. Barbour proved himself a master of the organ's resources. His playing of Bach is classic and well contrasted. Much interest attached to the Bossi Sonata, which is entirely new. Bossi is one of the masters of the new Italian school. The playing of Mr. Barbour reveals not only a great deal of intelligence but much soul. He will have charge of the organ department of the conservatory again next year.

Prof. W. S. Sterling, dean of the College of Music faculty, writes that he is having a very busy and profitable time at the Winona Assembly and Summer School. He will give a choral concert on August 2, with Cincinnati soloists—Miss Kathryn Gibbons, soprano; Miss Martha Henry, alto; Wm. C. Ernest, tenor, and E. A. Jahn, bass. On August 5 Gaul's "Holy City" will be given. A number of students will be brought to the College of Music next season by means of this work. Mr. Sterling's department is double that of last year's class. The whole school of Winona is reported to be on a "boom." Max Heinrich was the soloist last week. Next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday Mr. Sterling will have the Spiering Quartet, from Chicago. Signor Romeo Gorno will play with them the Dvorák Quintet. Signor Gorno will appear in a piano recital August 9, with Miss Gibbons as the vocal soloist. Mr. Sterling returns to Cincinnati August 10, and then goes to Buffalo for a series of organ recitals at the Pan-American. J. A. HOMAN.

VICTOR HARRIS,

Vocal Training.

The Art of Singing in All Its Branches.

STUDIO: THE ALPINE, 55 West 33d Street, NEW YORK.

ST. NICHOLAS GARDEN, 66th Street, near Columbus Avenue.

KALTENBORN ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS.

Every Evening at 8:15. Admission, 50 cents.

VARIED PROGRAM NIGHTLY. AUTOMATICALLY COOLED. NO DRAFT.

VAN ——— Oratorio and Concert.

WILLIAMS,

TENOR.

For Terms, Dates, &c, address
WOLFSOHN'S MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th Street, City.

GRACE G.

GARDNER,

Concert and Oratorio

SOPRANO

Pupil of Blasco, Milan; Schmidt, Berlin; Henschel, London.
Studio: 36 West 25th St., New York.

ARTHUR

BERESFORD,

BASSO-BARITONE.

STEINERT HALL, BOSTON, MASS.

J. FRED ———

WOLLE,

ORGANIST.

Address:
THE WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., New York.

BROAD STREET CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC,

GILBERT RAYNOLDS COMBS, Director.

1331 South Broad Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE FREE.

Sara Anderson,

Soprano,

For terms and particulars address

51 East 64th St.,

NEW YORK CITY.

2046 Leavenworth Street,
San Francisco, July 22, 1901.

WE have been fairly engulfed in an atmosphere of religion this week. Not alone have the leaguers held forth in all of the available large halls and theatres, but street meetings have been the order of the day everywhere also. They are earnest in their work, these Epworth people, and to their religious programs wisely added the attraction of good music, which was given with as much earnestness and vim as all the rest of the work to which they have lent their energies. At every meeting there has been a song service by a chorus of picked voices.

Tuesday night last, according to the schedule, the big concert at the pavilion was given, and the sale of tickets so far exceeded the capacity of the big pavilion that hundreds had to be turned away from the doors, only those holding reserved seats being admitted. For the benefit of the many who were disappointed on Tuesday, the concert was repeated Saturday night to an audience of some 15,000 people. The demand for another concert was so insistent, however, that the program has been arranged for to-night with the addition of the Knickerbocker Quartet, which will fill the place on the program made vacant by the absence of the Juanita Club, of Chicago, and thereby hangs a tale. Mr. Husband, one of the directors, just previous to the time when the Juanitas were expected to make their appearance, made an announcement to the effect that the aforesaid quartet had proffered their services to the convention and had been expected for the concert on Tuesday even though they did not put in an appearance. There were so many delays in the trains, however, that the absence of the expected singers was excused. "But," said Mr. Husband, "I have expected them daily as no word has been sent to indicate that they would not be here according to promise, and, indeed, I have not ceased to look for them up to the present moment."

It was something of a disappointment, of course, but Miss Anna Parks very agreeably filled the gap with a cornet solo, and, being heartily encored, responded very feelingly with "Bonnie, Sweet Bessie." The Parks sisters, who hail from New York, have found much favor in the eyes of San Franciscans, and indeed I think I never heard music on brass instruments sound so altogether pleasing as the trio, with piano accompaniment, when they gave "Faust," as their first number. To a prolonged encore they responded with "Robin Adair" on four cornets, which was a gem. There was a noticeable absence of anything in the nature of a blare, and the instruments were so well modulated it was a delight to listen to them. This has been a decided innovation to our people, and one that will likely be imitated to advantage. For the chorus, in most part, they kept well together and did excellent work, though there was an absence of 200 voices that should have been seated in rows of empty chairs that glared conspicuously down at the audience from over the heads of the faithful ones who were present. In the original chorus there were approximately 2,000 voices and only the most intelligent training could have kept them all so well in hand.

"Thanks Be To God" was perhaps their best number, as there were noticeable fewer rough edges, and the voices kept with the instruments better, though the work all through was creditable. W. B. King, of Oakland, and W. F. Skeele, of Los Angeles, were the organ accompanists and Mrs. L. J. Murdoch presided at the piano. Mrs. Murdoch has long been familiar with chorus and oratorio work, and being a most efficient accompanist was a valuable aid to the voices. Mr. Skeele, who gave the organ solo, did some very artistic work on the fine new Stanford organ, which, as I think I mentioned last week, is a California product, and a worthy one, built by one Murray Harris, of Los Angeles. Mr. Skeele's finest number was "The Storm" (Lemmens), in which he made some exquisite effects with the fine combinations at his disposal; the only fault one could find was in the pauses occasioned by the changing of combinations and selecting of stops, which is always a grave mistake and detracts from the effect in that the tempo cannot fail to be altered in such places.

In "The Heavens Are Telling" the trio was taken by the following voices: Sopranos, Mrs. Eva Tenney, Mrs. Mollie Melvin Dewing, Miss Edna Smart, Miss Isabel Curl; tenors, Geo. Purlenskey, J. Hughes Davies, E. M. Moore, W. W. Davis; bass, C. L. Parent, Jr., William Nielsen, Chas. H. Van Orden, Walter Schneider. On the music committee were Robert Husband, chairman; J. J. Morris, vice-chairman; W. C. Stadtfeldt, secretary; I. E. Blake, I. M. Robinson, J. C. Hill, O. M. Vesper. The directors were Mr. Husband, Fred W. Bacon, I. E. Blake, J. J. Morris, W. C. Stadtteldt and J. M. Robinson. Organists, W. B. King and W. F. Skeele. Pianist, Mrs. L. J. Murdoch.

It has been a big event, and when our 20,000 visitors shall have made their exodus from within our gates we shall be very quiet by contrast, though the concert season is almost at our doors by now, and one more week brings the inauguration of the grand opera season at the Tivoli Opera House, with a finer cast, it is said, than we have heard for many a day.

A review of Albert Elkers' new song, yet in manuscript, "Home They Brought Her Warrior Dead," shows it to be replete with themes that ably interpret Tennyson's beautiful poem.

Speaking of grand opera à la Tivoli, that favorite house, which is entering on its twenty-fourth season, is not alone fortunate in securing for its musical director Paul Steindorff, who is well known as a man thoroughly equipped musically to handle this work, but the roster for the coming season names such artists as Montinari, Agostini, Dado, who was here last season with Sembrich in her one night performance, when he created a lasting impression; Madame Carusi, the harpist; Salassa, an old favorite; Collamarini, who will be received with open arms; Nicolini, Repetto, Ferrari, Castelano, Barbareschi and Politini. The new productions will be Giordano's "Fedora" and "Andrea Chenier" and Boito's "Mefistofele," besides which there is a list of old favorites, some of which have seen but one or two previous seasons.

Miss Edith Hanks, who substituted for Mrs. Wilburne, the contralto, at Saint Mary the Virgin, sang "Abide with Me," by Liddle, at Vespers at 4 p. m.; Chester W. Rosecrans, who has accepted the position of tenor in the same choir, sang an "Ave Verum" by Millard for morning offertory at yesterday's service.

Mr. and Mrs. Noah Brandt will return to their class work on August 1.

The Beringer School opens to-day. Mr. and Mrs. Walter Campbell will resume work on August 1. Mrs. Oscar Mansfeldt, who has been convalescing at Saint Helena Sanitarium for the past two weeks, will be home to-day and resume her teaching. Mrs. Arthur Franklin Bridge has returned from her sojourn in New York, where she went some weeks ago to take a course of vocal training with Dr. Holbrook Curtis, who is said to be a recognized authority in the East, and his method to have received the approval of such artists as Jean de Reszké, Melba, Plançon and Ternina.

Richard Luchesi, who has just returned from his vacation, has spent the time of his absence in profitable work in that he has composed several new things, vocal and instrumental, which he will give to the public in a concert which he is preparing to give in the near future.

Herman Genss has accepted the directorship of the music department of Irving Institute, and will enter upon his new duties at the beginning of the new session, August 1.

The greatest interest is taken in the announcement of two organ recitals to be given by Dr. Stewart on the new Stanford organ the afternoon of Saturday, July 27, and Monday evening, July 29. These recitals are probably the last public work to be done by Dr. Stewart in our city ere his departure for his new field of labor, and with him we are losing much musically, as he is certainly the greatest exponent of organ music we have every had. In his absence Dr. Franklin Palmer rises to first place and will be no mean successor to even so able a musician as Stewart.

Mrs. A. Wedmore Jones.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Burmeister leave Bremen on the Barbarossa on August 24 for this city.

Elsa Marshall,
Soprano.
222 Hosea Avenue,
Clifton,
CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Madame
CLARA NOVELLO DAVIES
Professor of Voice Production.
Conductor of the Royal Welsh Ladies' Choir.
(Under Royal patronage.)
Madame Davies has a vacancy for two resident lady pupils
For Prospectus and Terms apply to
121 Victoria St., Westminster, LONDON, S. W.

GLENN HALL
TENOR.
Address CHAS. R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building,
or Kimball Hall, Chicago,

The Guilmant Organ School.
(COPYRIGHT.)
PRESIDENT: ALEXANDRE GUILMANT. DIRECTOR: WILLIAM C. CARL.
Reopens October 14.

SCHEDULE OF WORK:

FIRST YEAR.
The Organ—Private lessons, one each week.
Harmony—Class lessons, one each week.
Musical Form—Musical Dictation and Musical Knowledge—Class lessons.
Service Playing—Chants, Hymn Tunes, Anthems, Etc.—Class lessons.

SECOND YEAR.
The Organ—Private lessons, one each week.
Harmony and Counterpoint—Class lessons, one each week.
Musical Analysis—Musical History, Organ Tuning—Class lessons.
Service Playing—Chants, Hymn Tunes, Anthems, Etc.—Class lessons.

STUDENTS' RECITALS OCCUR EACH MONTH.

Address: THE GUILMANT ORGAN SCHOOL, 34 West 12th St., New York.

Boston Music Notes.

HOTEL BELLEVUE,
17 BEACON STREET,
BOSTON, July 27, 1901.

THE lack of music in this city during the summer is always a matter of comment from strangers visiting us during that season. With the close of the Symphony Orchestra season come the popular concerts by a portion of that organization, but they only last until late in June, after which comes silence so far as concerts of any kind are concerned. To partly help over this difficulty, a small contingent of the Symphony Orchestra, with Max Zach as a leader, has played at Keith's during several summers, their numbers being among those most appreciated by the audiences. Usually there is a vocalist who gives several numbers after the symphony solos are over, part of them to their accompaniment, part to the accompaniment of the regular orchestra, and that may be said to constitute the musical provision for the months of July and August.

Last week the Music Hall put on an operetta for one of the specialties and it met with immediate favor, so much so that it is contemplated continuing a special musical feature for the present. Max Hirschfeld is musical director of this operetta, which is sung by people of experience.

Concerts are given in the public parks during the warm weather, always largely attended and the programs are usually of merit, while not too classical to be over the heads of the people. There is a regular music commission appointed by the city, who exercise some sort of functions, and the music is by the Municipal Band, under the direction of Emil Mollenhauer.

Yet all these things do not make up for an evening of music by a good band in a cool place, where visitors or residents obliged to remain in the city can spend an hour or two occasionally.

On Wednesday afternoons until September 1 there are to be concerts at the Essex Country Club. The first was last week and it proved that the clubhouse will be the rendezvous of the fashionable North Shore world on Wednesday afternoons.

One of the pieces of music recently brought out in Boston is "Chant du Soir," by Louis Christiani. Mr. Christiani is an excellent musician and pianist and possesses a good baritone voice.

Miss Alice K. Duff, soprano, is passing the summer at Orr's Island, in Portland Harbor. She will sing at concerts while there.

Arthur Whiting is one of the judges of music at the Pan-American Exposition, and has been in Buffalo during the week.

The musical work of the Melrose Highlands Woman's Club, conducted under the direction of Mrs. M. G. Orr, has been so successful that she was requested to continue in office another year, but declined. Mrs. Orr while director gave musical entertainments at the club, the chief feature being the information regarding the composer and his works contained in the program. Many vocalists and instrumentalists have assisted during the season.

THE ABSURDITY OF OPERA.

An English Writer Treats the Subject with Undue Levity.

SOMEONE in the journal called Music has been writing on this subject, and seeking to apply his remarks solely to opera in England, asserting, as is the fashion, that they do these things so much better on the Continent. Of course this is not so. The writer seems to be particularly offended by the fact that at Covent Garden singers of various nationalities go to the making up of the cast. Then he takes exception to the fact that you cannot get an experienced Juliet to sing Gounod's music of an age exactly corresponding with the years Shakespeare gave to his heroine. Just as if they have "fifteen summer" Juliets in France!

Let the writer speak for himself. He says:

"Without wishing to be ungallant, reference may also be made to the personal appearance of the lovers. Juliet is a young lady of fifteen summers. I don't know how old Romeo is supposed to be. But we have the spectacle usually of a lady of mature beauty and some thirteen stone avoirdupois being embraced by a 5-foot-6 Romeo, whose age, if one could but inspect the census papers, verges on sixty. This would not matter so much if the ardent couple were wrapped up in each other to the total eclipse of the conductor. But this is never the case. When Juliet sings 'Hist, Romeo, hist! Oh, for a falconer's voice to lure this tassel-gentle back again!' she keeps a steady eye on the conductor, as if that gentleman had been playing the deuce with the time. Then Romeo appears, and with the same distrust of the 'chef d'orchestre' in his gaze, warbles, 'It is my soul that calls upon my name,' whereas it is really the gentleman with the baton. From a spectacular point of view, the conductor is decidedly the central figure in opera. Next to him and the principals come the various members of the chorus, who represent peasants, soldiers, monks, fishermen, brigands, &c. The men have rotund figures and red noses, and the women look as if they had lived long enough to know their business. 'Ars longa, vita brevis'; we must wait till the millennium for a chorus of middle aged folk, but is it too much to expect the veterans of to-day to sing in tune?

"The absurdity of opera is pretty plain when the poetry of England's greatest bard, stultified by an alien, is shouted at an English audience in various Continental dialects, but absurdity reaches its climax when Wagner is performed. In the comic opera, 'Die Meistersinger,' we have Englishmen, Frenchmen and Americen (I have registered this name) posing as Germans of the middle ages. Of course, they can all sing, but how ridiculous they must appear to a Teuton versed in the literature of his country. In the cycle of the "Ring," rarely performed in this country, eminent baritones have to sing inside the carcass of a dragon. Ladies who can't swim are expected to float on the waters of the Rhine and chant meaningless refrains; others ride through the air and feign sympathy with the woes of an incestuous twain; birds talk, and the elements comport themselves in a manner unknown to science.

"I know very well," he has the grace to add, "that all these things can be explained by the serious operagoer, who, if he read these remarks, will have but a poor opinion of me. But I am not Hazlitt, who also, I believe, saw nothing but vanity in the opera. To that brilliant writer I refer the serious operagoer for pungent criticism on the entire subject."—London Globe.

H. Whitney Tew.

MANY inquiries are being made in regard to the forthcoming American tour of H. Whitney Tew, whose engagements in this country are under the direction of Henry Wolfsohn. The gifted basso has just concluded a very busy London season. At Lord Methuen's beautiful country residence, Corsham Court, Wiltshire, Mr. Tew participated in one of Lady Methuen's musicales, his accompaniments being played by Maude Valerie White, the composer. The programs of the London recitals given by Mr. Tew have already been recorded in THE MUSICAL COURIER.

At a notable function held last month under the auspices of the Society of American Women in the grand hall of the Hotel Cecil, London, this basso and other well-known artists took part, singing one of Liza Lehmann's song cycles "beautifully," according to an English publication.

On July 4 Mr. and Mrs. Tew held a musicale and reception at their home, 43 Lancaster road, Belsize Park, N. W., many prominent persons being among the guests. The program embraced "The Daisy Chain," Mme. Liza Lehmann accompanying, and Miss Estey, Madame McKenzie, Gregory Hast (the eminent English tenor who is to visit America next season) and the host, constituting the quartet. On July 12 Mr. Tew took part in Lord and Lady Llangattock's entertainment in memory of the late Prince Christian Victor of Schlesswig-Holstein, among those present being: Viscount Sidmouth, the Countess of Iddesleigh, Lady Rosalind Northcote, Lady Elizabeth Northcote, Sir John and Lady Llewlyn, Lady Isabel Bligh, Lady Augusta Lloyd-Mostyn, Gen. Sir H. Geary, and Lady Tryon.

In July and August this artist and Hegedüs, the Hungarian violinist, arranged to make a professional tour of the continent, visiting Paris, Berlin, Vienna, Budapest, Baden Baden, Trieste, Cairo, Monte Carlo, Nice, Rome and Milan. The vocalists next London recital will be held in October, the program having already been outlined as follows:

Songs by Bach, Händel, Paisiello, Cesti, Jomelli, Piccini, Marcello, Cavalli and Scarlatti.
Songs by Beethoven, Schumann, Schubert, Franz and Brahms.
Lenore (Liszt).
New songs by living composers.

Mrs. Frissell.

MRS. E. POTTER FRISSELL, for five years a representative of THE MUSICAL COURIER abroad, where she has been studying piano with Leschetizky and his Vorbereiters, and later with Sauer, in Dresden, and Moszkowski and Gorski, in Paris, has returned a short time since to America. She has accepted the direction of the department of music in St. Mary's College, in Dallas, Tex., where she is to give a course of lectures on the "History and Development of Music," and two piano recitals a year. This college, of which Bishop Garrett, of Texas, is the dean, is under the direction of Mrs. Mary K. Torbert, sister of the Rev. Father Torbert, of Boston, and is one of the leading schools of the South. Mrs. Frissell was offered a position in the Ehrlische Musikschule, of Dresden, where she represented this paper for two years.

RICHTER AT BAYREUTH.—There is a report from Germany that Hans Richter is to make Bayreuth his permanent residence, Madame Wagner having invited him there in the capacity of director of the festivals. This looks as if Siegfried is no longer a drawing card as a conductor. We also remark the singular lack of interest displayed everywhere by the press in the Bayreuth Festival this year.

ACCOMPANIST.
F. W. RIESBERG.
INSTRUCTION.
Piano, Organ, Harmony.
With THE MUSICAL COURIER.
Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.
Secretary-Treasurer New York State M. T. A.
Residence-Studio: 954 Eighth Ave., cor. 56th St., NEW YORK.
TELEPHONE: 452 COLUMBUS.

OSCAR SAENGER,
Vocal Instruction,
WILL RESUME TEACHING ON SEPTEMBER 16.
Teacher of Josephine S. Jacoby, Contralto; Elizabeth D. Leonard, Contralto; Madame de Pasquali, Soprano; Sara Anderson, Soprano; Hildegard Hoffmann, Soprano; E. Léon Rains, Basso; Joseph S. Baernstein, Basso; John I. Young, Tenor, and other prominent singers now before the public
STUDIO: 51 East 64th Street, NEW YORK.

Mme. VON KLENNER, Garcia Representative,
HAS OPENED A
Special Summer School at Lake Chautauqua, N. Y.
PARIS EXPOSITION, 1900.
Only Honorable Mention or Distinction of Any Vocal Instructor.
FOR PARTICULARS
Address THE WALDMERE, LAKEWOOD, LAKE CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y.
or 40 STUYVESANT STREET, NEW YORK, Second Avenue and 10th Street.
AFTER OCT. 1, 230 WEST 52d STREET.

VAN YORX Tenor,
6 E. 17 St.,
NEW YORK.
Under Management of WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., NEW YORK CITY.

EUROPEAN NOTES.

AS Boito's "Nerone" is not to be given, it is not worth while to give much account of the libretto, or, as the author-composer calls it, the tragedy. But some notices of the book makes us rejoice that the work is withdrawn. The first act opens on the Appian Road, with its border of tombs, with Nero and Simon Magus. Nero has just killed his mother, and now has employed Simon to evoke her spirit, that he may ask her pardon. But Simon's magic does not work right, for instead of the ghost of Agrippina, there appears a fury with the proper supply of snakes and torches. This is not a fury of the old mythology, but Mlle. Asteria, a serpent charmer, who wants to captivate Nero.

Then Nero runs away, and Asteria after him, and Simon hides in a tomb and waits for what will turn up. The first thing is a Rubria, publicly and professionally a vestal virgin, privately a Christian, and she is roaming about with the view of decorating some graves and meeting her lover, Fanuel, who is, like her, a Christian, and is about to run away. When she has said to him "Fanuel, quo vadis?" and wept, he determines to remain. Simon Magus offers Fanuel some money and asks him to communicate to him the gift of the Holy Ghost. As Fanuel is indignantly refusing, the army, with Nero, marches on, trumpets blowing, and the populace crying "Ave Cæsar!" as the sun rises.

In Act II. Simon Magus puts in some fine work. He gets up a little comedy, and brings Nero to worship the Goddess of Night. The emperor, being shortsighted, does not recognize in the figure on the altar the snake charmer Asteria, but says his prayers properly, in fact, so touchingly that a new edition of Pygmalion's statue is seen. Nero kisses the lady, smashes everything in the room, sends for the police, orders them to fling the girl to the snakes, and take Simon to the circus.

Act III. opens with a meeting of Christians; to them enters Asteria, who of course has escaped, to inform them that Simon, to square himself with Nero, has proposed a persecution of the Christians. But Simon is still in search of the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghost for a special reason. He has been ordered to fly about the circus, and as he has no wings, he once more appeals to Fanuel. The latter refuses once more, and is arrested by a body of soldiers.

Act IV. presents the circus, with crowds gathered to see Fanuel burned and Simon fly. The people are tired of the gladiator and clamor for roast Christians. The martyrs march in, when a vestal virgin appears and holds up her hand. The crowd shrinks back in awe; in vain does Nero order his guards to tear off her veil; no one dares lay hand on the vestal, till Simon Magus rushes up, pulls off the veil, and reveals the face of Rubria. Fanuel and Rubria fall into each other's arms. The unfortunate magician is made to stand on a high pillar and pricked with spears till he jumps off and breaks his neck amid general applause. Simon had arranged to have the circus set on fire before he attempted to fly, but his friends, although too late to save him, carried out their part of the program, and the circus is soon in flames.

In Act V. all Rome is on fire, and Nero in his private theatre recites the part of Orestes. He does the part of the murderer of his mother so powerfully that his audience runs away. Then Asteria appears, and Nero kills. The conclusion in Boïto's own words is as follows: "Trumpets sound, the populace shout, spectres everywhere. Nero bows to the statue of Athena, the earth quakes, the background of the theatre falls in, and in the distance are seen (after Siemiradzky's picture) the martyrs burning as five torches in the Palatine Gardens. Nero strikes the shield of the goddess, but the spectres do not vanish; they become more numerous, more horrible. Supernatural voices cry 'Dies Irac, dies illa.' All the terrors of the Apocalypse whirl in the heavens. It thunders; again the trumpets sound. Nero sinks down unconscious, the spectres surround him, a cry is heard, 'Maledetto in eterno!' Curtain."

And this is the result of twenty years' labor by Arrigo Boïto. Poor Nero! Qualis astifex!

Young Italy is hard at work. Franchetti has nearly completed his "Germania," which will take the place of Boïto's "Nerone" at La Scala. The action takes place in the period of the Napoleonic victories in Germany and the rise of the Tagendbund. There is a love intrigue with a faithless damsel, whose rival lovers meet in the patriot ranks at Jena, and so forth. The composer is now at work on the last act. Mascagni, leaving Vestilia aside, has made a contract with the librettist Illica for the text of a three act opera on a Russian subject. Puccini is revising his youthful work, "Edgar," and will compose the music for Illica's libretto, "Madame Farfalle." A young composer, Mario Tasenghi, will shortly produce at Bergamo a one act opera, "Marcella," which gained the prize at the Bonett competition.

The collection of musical autographs formed by Charles Malherbe at Paris has been enriched by a manuscript of Beethoven, which had long been regarded as lost, only one copy being known. The composition is inscribed with the words, "Polonaise, par Beethoven, 1810, Baden," and is written for military music.

At a late performance of Wagner's "Siegfried" at Dresden, Teresa Malten, who sang the part of Brünnhilde, received an ovation. She and Herr Anthes were called before the curtain several times, and such a storm of applause burst forth in the second and third tiers, from the English and American girls seated in that so-called "pensionsviertel," such loud and persistent calls of "Malten!" and "Bravo!" that the rest of the public was amused at the enthusiasm. Such demonstrations in Dresden are usually made by the sterner sex. But "the young daughters of Albion and Uncle Sam were perfectly justified," writes the Neueste Nachrichten, "by the magnificent style in which Fraulein Malten sang."

The Russian Government has purchased the collection of musical instruments formed by the late notary, Snöck, at Ghent. The collection contains a clavecin adorned with paintings by Rubens, some genuine harps of the old trouvères, the oldest bows of string instruments and other curiosities, including the models used by Adolphe Sax in his construction of his instruments.

A rich citizen of Moscow has left to the city a million of rubles for the erection of a large theatre, to which the entrance price will be low enough to enable the less fortunate members of the population to visit the theatre.

An opera in three acts, entitled "Marianita," by a young composer, Gordiano Simeoni, was lately given at Rome. The composer was called out eighteen times, but the critics describe the work as puerile and reminiscent.

Henri Seguin, of La Monnaie, Brussels, has been nominated professor of singing at the Conservatory of Liege. He is an artist permeated with the highest musical traditions, and all his creations on the stage have revealed admirable artistic probity.

The municipal council of Baden has refused to give to the city of Vienna any of the manuscripts bequeathed by the late Carl Millocker. The number of these scores is thirty-two.

An exhibition of guitars will take place at Munich at the beginning of September. It will include mandolins, harps and citharas, and there will be an international reunion of European guitarists.

A new monthly journal of music will appear in Hungary. It is entitled Magyar Lant, and will be published once a month at Raal.

MUSIC

Our stock includes the musical publications of all publishers. The latest popular hit, imported novelties, opera and orchestra scores. Music for every occasion and music for all instruments. Our own publications sent for examination. Catalogs free. Send for MUSIC by MAIL circular, giving special mail order prices on music.

Oliver Ditson Company, Boston
C. H. Ditson & Co. New York
J. E. Ditson & Co. Philadelphia

A249

Mme. SCHUMANN-HEINK, Mr. BISPHAM, Sig. CAMPANARI,

And other Members of the MAURICE GRAU OPERA CO.,

Are open for Concerts, Oratorios, Recitals and Musical Festivals during the Season 1901–2.

FOR TERMS AND DATES ADDRESS

ERNEST GOERLITZ, Sole and Exclusive Agent, Metropolitan Opera House, New York City.

Miss ADELE MARGULIES,

PIANO INSTRUCTION.

Studios: Nos. 705-6 Carnegie Hall, New York.

M. I.

SCHERHEY,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.

Combined Italian-French-German Method.

CHURCH, CONCERT, ORATORIO, OPERA.

Studio: 780 PARK AVENUE, Cor. 73d St., NEW YORK.

Telephone: Seventy-ninth, 1152.

Mrs. HELEN TRUST

SOPRANO.

Vocal Recitals in English, French, Italian.

33 Grove End Road,

St. John's Wood, London, England.

THIRD AMERICAN TOUR

SEASON 1901-2.

161 Concerts Last Season.

LEONORA JACKSON

ASSISTED BY Harry J. Fellows, Tenor.

William Bauer, Pianist.

Direction ERNEST H. JACKSON and A. L. WAKEFIELD.

Address: NEW YORK, 31 Union Square West. CHICAGO, 71 Monroe Street.

THE KALTENBORN CONCERTS.

A WAGNER festival for three nights next week, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, has been arranged by Mr. Kaltenborn, at the St. Nicholas Garden, and the purpose of the three concerts will be to emphasize the interest of New Yorkers in the Wagner Jubilee at Bayreuth.

As far as the facilities will allow Mr. Kaltenborn will present parts of the Wagner operas and music dramas in concert form in the order in which the works were produced. The phenomenal industry of the great Bayreuth master is shown in the following brief lines, which give the dates of the initial productions:

"Rienzi," at Dresden, October 20, 1842.

"The Flying Dutchman," at Dresden, January 2, 1843.

"Tannhäuser," at Dresden, October 19 (another authority, October 20), 1845.

"Lohengrin," at Weimar, August 28, 1850 (anniversary of Goethe's birthday).

"Tristan und Isolde," at Munich, June 10, 1865.

"Die Meistersinger," at Munich, June 21, 1868.

"Die Ring des Nibelungen," in series form at Bayreuth, August 13 to 16, 1876.

"Parsifal," at Bayreuth, July 26, 1882 (according to another authority, July 22, 1882).

Among the soloists announced for the festival at the St. Nicholas Garden are Miss Mary Mansfield, soprano; Mrs. Dora Phillips, soprano, and Mr. Kaltenborn, violinist.

Good sized audiences attended the concerts last week, and many expressed pleasure at the return to symphony programs on Tuesday nights. Beethoven's Fifth was played last Tuesday (July 23), and in keeping with the serious character of the music Miss Jessie Shay played with the orchestra the difficult Henselt F minor Concerto. Not all musicians are yet alive to the fact of this young woman's extraordinary development as a virtuosa. The Henselt F minor Concerto has been played in New York by such artists as Joseffy and Bloomfield-Zeisler, and Emil Sauer was the last one to play it here. The work, sometimes referred to as the great piano concerto of the middle of the nineteenth century, sounds anything but old fashioned to modern ears. It is a composition of beauty, as well as technical symmetry. Miss Shay's performance aroused the greatest enthusiasm, and altogether the "atmosphere" which she infused into her playing made the musicians in the audience forget that it was "only a summer concert." Indeed, Miss Shay's part in the program was worthy of any hall or musical centre in the regular musical season. Miss Shay is going to "get there," too. Nothing could be more moving than the Larghetto as she played it, and her brilliant execution in the closing movement was another effort to be remembered. After numerous recalls she added a sort of staccato study, by Moszkowski, which translated into simple English is entitled "Sparks."

Monday evening (July 22) Master Miner Walden Galup, the gifted boy pupil of Frederic Mariner, captured the audience with a highly musical performance of the first movement of the Mozart D minor Concerto. Unfortunately, the representative of THE MUSICAL COURIER was called away and so missed hearing the boy, but as his recitals and concert performances have been reported in our columns, many of our readers know what a talented boy pianist can do. His repertory is said to be remarkable.

The Kaltenborn quartet played at the concert on Wednesday evening, and Miss Neva Boutwell, soprano, was the soloist. The soloists at the concert on Friday night were Miss Belle Newport, contralto; Louis Heine, 'cello, and Oscar Saul, trumpet player. A feature of the "popular" concert on Saturday was the violin duet by Edward Mollenhauer, played by the venerable musician and his youngest son, William Mollenhauer. Mr. Mollenhauer was one of Mr. Kaltenborn's instructors, and his appearance at the concert on Saturday night was a special compliment to Mr. Kaltenborn.

At the Sunday night concert the musicians in the audience heard two compositions of unusual interest, the Beethoven Septet, played in its original form, and a new quartet for French horns by Heinrich Hübler. The horn quartet was played with care and musical quality by Messrs. Schulze, Schütz, Dutschke and Riese. In the Beethoven Septet the violin part was played by Mr. Kaltenborn himself, and the other parts were in experienced hands, as follows: Gustav Bach, viola; Louis Heine, 'cello; E. Manoly, bass; E. Wissler, clarinet; W. Schulze, horn, and P. Pieschel, bassoon. The orchestral program Sunday night was one of the best given by Kaltenborn this season.

Last evening (Tuesday) the orchestra played Tschaikowsky's Fifth Symphony. The programs for to-night, the remainder of the week and Sunday night, follow:

WEDNESDAY, JULY 31.

Overture, Oberon.....Weber
Danse Macabre.....Massenet
Violin solo, Mr. Kovarik.
Piano solo, Wanderer Fantaisie.....Liszt
Leopold Winkler.
Ballet music, Coppelia.....Delibes
Jewel Song, Faust.....Gounod
Miss Sophia Friedmann.
Waltz, Kaiser.....Strauss
March, St. Nicholas.....Kaltenborn
Overture, William Tell.....Rossini
Horn solo, Nocturne, Midsummer Night's Dream.....Mendelssohn
Wilhelm Schulze.
Romance.....O. Deis
March, The Prophet.....Meyerbeer

THURSDAY, AUGUST 1, 1901.
(294th Concert.)
Wagner Night.

Overture, Der Freischütz.....Weber
Two Fragments from the Song of Roland.....MacDowell
The Saracens.
Lovely Alda.
Peer Gynt Suite, No. 1 (by request).....Grieg
Nocturne (new).....Klugescheid
Waltz, Fesche Geister.....Strauss
Prelude, Die Meistersinger.....Wagner
Song to the Evening Star, Tannhäuser.....Wagner
Bridal Procession, Lohengrin.....Wagner
Oboe solo, Traume.....Wagner
Joseph Eller.
Entrance of the Gods Into Walhalla, Das Rheingold.....Wagner
Ride of the Valkyries, Die Walkure.....Wagner

FRIDAY, AUGUST 2.
Operatic Night.

Overture, William Tell.....Rossini
Selection, Cavalleria Rusticana.....Mascagni
Violin solo, Canzonetta.....
Joseph Kovarik.
Selection, Carmen.....Bizet
Ballet music, L'Africaine.....Meyerbeer
Waltz, Kroll's Ballklänge.....Strauss
Rondo d'Amour (by request).....Van Westerhout
Selection, La Traviata.....Verdi
Trumpet solo, Inflammatus.....Rossini
Albert Bode.
Prologue, Pagliacci.....Leoncavallo
March, La Reine de Saba.....Gounod

SATURDAY, AUGUST 3.
Popular Night.

March, The Stars and Stripes Forever.....Sousa
Overture, Hermits' Bells.....Maillart
Selection, The Runaway Girl.....Caryll
Harp solo, selected.
Charles Schuetze.
Selection, Faust.....Gounod
Waltz, Blue Danube.....Strauss
Soldiers on Parade.....Eilenberg
American Fantaisie.....Reitzel
Overture, Orpheus.....Offenbach
Violin solo, Mr. Kovarik.
String orchestra—
Virgin's Prayer.....Massenet
Love's Dream After the Ball.....Czibulka
March, St. Nicholas.....Kaltenborn

SUNDAY, AUGUST 4.
Sacred Night.

Fest Overture.....Lassen
Kammenoi Ostrow (Cloister Bells).....Rubinstein
Symphonic Poem, Les Preludes.....Liszt
Piano Quintet.....Schumann
Arthur Voorhis and the Kaltenborn String Quartet.
Waltz, Vienna Blood.....Strauss
Flower Girls' Scene, Parsifal.....Wagner
Trombone solo, Das Grab der Haide.....Heiser
Franz Eim.
Rhapsodie No. 12.....Liszt
Coronation March.....Svendsen

The first concert of the Wagner festival next Wednesday evening, August 7, will be the 300th concert Kaltenborn has conducted in the St. Nicholas Garden.

Mme. Catharine Churchill, the pianist, will spend her vacation in Halifax and other points in Nova Scotia.

Mme. Anita Lloyd is sojourning in the Berkshire Hills, and will give during August song recitals at Great Barrington, Lenox and other places.

AUGUSTA COTTLOW,
THE DISTINGUISHED YOUNG AMERICAN PIANISTE.
Management: HENRY WOLFSOHN, 131 East 17th St., New York, and
THE HAMLIN CO., Kimball Building, Chicago, Ill.

HAROLD BAUER,
AMERICAN TOUR, 1902.
Commencing in January with BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
DATES NOW BOOKING.
For all particulars apply to GEO. W. STEWART, 120 Tremont Street, BOSTON, MASS.
General Representative for Europe: ROBERT STRAKOSCH, 59 Rue La Bruyère, PARIS.

MINNE HUMPHRYES
Soprano. Concert and Oratorio.
FOR TERMS, DATES, ETC., ADDRESS
Care MUSICAL COURIER, 1135 Broadway, or 407 First Street, Brooklyn, New York.

RUBY CUTTER,
SOPRANO,
Dramatic and Coloratura.
CONCERT and ORATORIO.
REPERTOIRE.
Under the direction of HENRY WOLFSOHN.
Boston Address: 159 Tremont Street.

RAFAEL JOSEFFY.
Address: Letter Box 38, NORTH TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

MUSIC IN LONDON.

HOTEL CECIL, LONDON,
July 20, 1901.

LALO'S "Roi d'Ys" has been produced in London, thirteen years after its first appearance in Paris, and one might almost imagine it to be a great work, so vehement and acute is the contradiction between its defenders and its attackers. Wagner's "Tristan" or the "Ring" has not aroused greater aggressiveness on the one side and anger on the other. Not even the fury of certain critics over Isidore de Lara's "Messaline" quite lately exceeds the wrath some of these same critics have shown since last Wednesday night, when "Le Roi d'Ys" was introduced to an English audience. Yet "Le Roi d'Ys" is not a work to be compared with "Messaline" for pointedness of dramatic intention, and as for comparing it with "Tristan"—well! the mere notion renders one speechless. All the same, as I have said, for one reason or another some of my brother critics seem to have gone quite mad in their determination to oppose it. Those of us who like it have had to put up with being told that we are easily satisfied. Worse things have been said about us. But that is not the point. I merely wish, before discussing the opera, to note the commotion it has caused.

What is the meaning of this commotion? Why should so harmless a work as "Le Roi d'Ys" have power to stir up the devils of anger and hatred in so many genial breasts? It is simply because the objectors really do not know what they want in opera. The tide of Wagnerism has swept away the old Italian methods and ideals; but more lately the Wagnerian theories have been questioned or flatly refused and his methods seem to be suitable to one tremendous creative genius alone, whose name was Wagner. What the next move will be no man can say. If a composer should attempt an opera on the old model, with set, clear-cut numbers, he would certainly be characterized as mournfully old-fashioned. If he writes on the Wagnerian plan, maintaining his stream of music in an unbroken flow, he is set down as a mere Wagnerian imitator. Nothing satisfies. Now there is nothing more annoying than not to know why you dislike a work of art. One grows wrathful with one's self as well as with the work of art. I take this to be the explanation of the irritation produced by "Le Roi d'Ys." These chaps who think they dislike it do not really dislike it. Simply it does not conform to an ideal which—to use a bull—is not in their minds at all. It is not Italian in structure; it cannot be called Wagnerian; they don't know what the dickens it is; and they become furious because they cacnot tell. If they are to be angry at all they should direct their anger against themselves. Unfortunately it is hardly to be expected from human nature that professional critics should give themselves away in cold print by declaring themselves unable to say why a work does not please them. Nor can they be expected to write articles denouncing their own incompetence, even if thei editors were prepared to print such articles. So they ar forced to denounce poor Lalo. It is quite amusing to se the struggles of the more conscientious to find reason for the lack of faith that is in them. They argue thus One has only to contrast "Le Roi d'Ys" with some o the greatest masterpieces of operatic music to see man of its defects. Because it is not so great as "Tristan" obviously it is an arrant failure. That is the brilliant log ical process by which one of our best critics justifies hi ways to himself. One need not trouble to pass any com ment on it.

Indeed, I have only spread at this length on the recep tion given to Lalo's opera in London because of tha curious mental attitude of uncertainty which it reveals "Le Roi d'Ys" needs no defense, but the attitude of th critical minds of the day is worth investigation. Havin got the clue one can understand why most of the critic who condemned Lara a few weeks previously condemi "Messaline," and we will be able to understand why fo some time every new work—every work new to the critics I mean—will be met not so much with adverse criticism but with petulance and grumbling. Lalo's opera is nev to us, and I have just mentioned the kind of reasonin by which it has been sought to prove it worthless. Lara' "Messaline" was new to us, and in that case no reasonin was even attempted—the critical hounds simply went i hot pursuit and tried to chase it off the stage, yelpin "Indecency!" We live indeed in troublous times. cannot think of a period when conditions were less favor able to the production of new and sincere work. If a opera is sincere we howl it down as not in the least new as antiquated in style; if it is new we rancorously poin out that the composer has sacrificed beauty and truth t ugly novelty. Of course it is true that this sort of thin has been said in every age, and if criticism had powe ultimately to prevail over fine work—which, thank th Lord, it has not—there would be singularly little fin work for it to prevail over. But things are worse now than they have ever been before. Formerly composer plodded on, one following in another's footsteps, eac adding something according to his power. But nowaday we have all read art history, we know a lot about ar tistic movements, and know it wrong. We are all tryin to "make history" according to absurd ideas about th history already accomplished. We want every compose to start away with something as original and beautifu as "Tristan," but different from "Tristan." I repeat, wha we precisely want we don't know; but in the meantim we refuse everything. It is a discouraging state o affairs. But courage, brothers! Nature takes little stock of our mad desires to found schools and start movements Some day the strong composer will come along, and heedless of our praise or blame, give us something fres because he has something fresh to give. There is n hurry. If we have to go for a time without great com posers what does it matter? The world got on very well for some thousands of years without great composers;

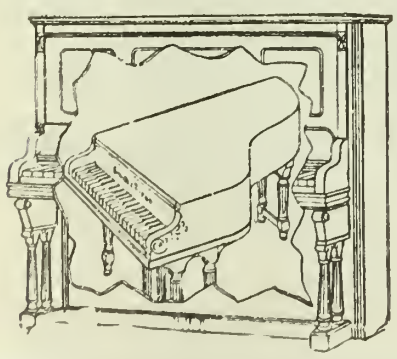
Season 1901-1902

FANNIE BLOOMFIELD ZEISLER

FOR TERMS AND DATES APPLY TO

ALINE B. STORY, 356 La Salle Avenue, CHICAGO.

LAMPERTI SCHOOL OF MUSIC,
TO BE OPENED NOVEMBER 1, 1901.
Quartier Parc Monceau,
Paris.
Temporary Address, 3 rue Gounod.



A Grand Piano
IN AN UPRIGHT CASE.
SMITH & NIXON,
Cincinnati, Ohio,
Manufacture this instrument for
MUSICIANS.

HASLAM,
Professeur de Chant.
POSE, TECHNIQUE, STYLE. RÉPERTOIRE, OPERA, CONCERT.
Direct Communication with European Managers.
54 rue Faubourg St. Honoré, PARIS.

London Organ School
AND INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.
22 Princes Street, Cavendish Sq., W., London, Eng
Established 1865. Principal: T. H. Yorke Trotter, M. A., Mus. Doc. Oxon.

At this college Private Lessons are given and classes held in all branches of Music, and in Elocution and Modern Languages.
There is a competent staff of Professors for Piano, Singing, Organ, Violin, Viola, Violoncello, Double Bass, Harp, Guitar and all Wood and Brass Wind Instruments.
A special feature is made of the training of Church and Concert Organists. The school has three 3-manual practice organs and a new grand concert organ, which has been recently completed by the Positive Organ Company on the Casson system.
The full Orchestra meets on Tuesday Evenings. The String Orchestra on Friday Afternoons.
For prospectus and full particulars apply to the office of this paper or to FRANCIS BURGESS, Secretary.

ERICSSON
BUSHNELL.
For Dates, Terms, &c., address
177 Duane Street, NEW YORK.

The American Institute of Applied Music.
(Incorporated 1900.)
EDGAR O. SILVER, President,
212 West 59th Street, New York City.
Departments:
The Metropolitan College of Music
The Metropolitan Conservatory of Music,
The Synthetic Piano School
The American Institute of Normal Methods.
The Faculty and Examiners: DUDLEY BUCK, A.C.M.; ALBERT ROSS PARSONS, A.C.M.; E. PRESSON MILLER; HARRY ROWE SHELLEY, A.C.M.; PAUL AMBROSE, WILLIAM F. SHERMAN, KATE S. CHITTENDEN, LILLIAN LITTLEHALES and others.
The residence department furnishes a refined and quiet home.
The advantages are unequaled in America.
For information address KATE S. CHITTENDEN, Dean and this time we shall not have to wait another thousand years.

As for Lalo's work, which is the occasion of this disquisition, it is very charming. It goes without saying that it is by no means a great work. No one to my knowledge ever claimed greatness for that or for anything else written by Lalo. Point after point fails to come off, either musically or dramatically. But if there are many failures there is so much that is lovely, ear haunting and striking, that these are easily forgiven. To begin with, the music flows on without any apparent breaks. I say apparent breaks because, as a matter of fact, again and again breaks occur and are only hidden by one or another of the brilliant French dodges of which Lalo was a master and often the originator. The scoring is always appropriate. The choruses, especially those in which old Breton melodies are used, are delightfully piquant. The songs given to the principal characters are at any rate always interesting. Even some of the bigger scenes are superficially effective. For instance, the appearance of Saint Constantin, with the organ accompaniment, though not within 100,000 miles of the statue scene in "Don Giovanni," is quite as good, to my mind, as the cathedral scene in "Faust." The whole work is filled with sweet, persuasive melody. I should imagine Massenet to have learned a lot from Lalo. But in Lalo the sweetness that in the case of Massenet often degenerates into the merest sugar, is flavored and kept piquant and does not become sickly. In short I do not see why "Le Roi d'Ys" should not take the place in the Covent Garden repertory of some of the antiquated Italian stuff that is still put on to fill an occasional off night. It passes three or four hot summer evening hours very agreeably.

The mounting of the opera was simply laughable. The absurdest things were done without rhyme or reason. I really believe the stage management takes a morbid pleasure in doing things wrong. One may forgive a few of the mistakes that occur, because the greed of the syndicate prevents there being sufficient rehearsal. But when out of their perversity scenes are set in a ridiculous way, one can forgive nothing. On Wednesday night in the last act the whole scene was made preposterous through not being set at all. When the seas begin to wash over the doomed city of Ys the crowd is supposed to be off the stage and take refuge on a high mountain. At Covent Garden they actually dropped the curtain as the crowd ran off, and raised it on precisely the same scene in a few minutes, brought on the crowd again and proceeded as if nothing had happened. As for the artists, Jerome was a very poor Mylio, Plançon was as fine in his own way as ever as the king of Ys; Suzanne Adams was not bad as Rozena. Paquot was highly interesting as Margared. She is tearing her voice to pieces by a wrong production, but she has intelligence and dramatic power. She has a lot to learn, but I fancy she will learn it. Flon worked hard and the band responded very well to him.

Many years ago an old friend of mine, G. W. L. Marshall Hall, now at the head of a conservatoire in Melbourne, Australia, used to conduct rehearsals of the "orchestra" of the London Organ School. Occasionally I used to call there for him and remember the alarming proportions of the band. It generally consisted of about nine players, and someone used to fill up the missing parts on a piano. Marshall Hall was then, as ever, very ambitious, and nothing would serve him but that he must rehearse Mozart and Haydn symphonies and Beethoven concertos. The results were almost unimaginable. Marshall Hall has got on since then, and so has the organ school. A friend of mine dragged me last week as far as Notting Hill to hear a performance by the students of Sullivan's "Mikado." I must testify that it was an excellent performance. Particular students I consistently decline to criticise publicly; but I may say that all appeared to be very well taught, although one or two, perhaps, will hardly find their vocation on the stage. The stage management and the band were very good. The whole affair was got up to provide funds for some charity, and judging from the number of fond parents, brothers and sisters present a fair sum of money ought to have been realized. An interesting point about it was that it was all arranged and the opera learned within six weeks. That is a more severe test of what a school can do than the plan adopted at many other colleges, the plan, namely, of devoting a whole year to learning one opera. Against that I have protested again and again; but I suppose it will go on till the end of time. The Organ School plan is the best.

The concert season is now at an end. The opera winds up after seven nights more. Melba will appear three times more. Calvé is gone. "Don Giovanni" will be given next week. And this is all the news there is.

JOHN F. RUNCIMAN.

Mrs. Louise Homer, contralto, has been engaged to sing with the Grau Opera Company during the coming season. Her roles will include Italian and German in leading parts. Mrs. Homer is an American who made a great success abroad and whose dramatic voice and charming stage presence have received high praise from leading critics in this country. Last winter she sang twenty-four times with the opera company during their long season in New York and tour through the country.

Death of Maurice Kaminsky.

MAURICE KAMINSKY, the co-director of the Kaminsky Conservatory, a well-known musician and faithful worker among the East Side people, died on last Saturday afternoon at Mt. Sinai Hospital, where an operation for appendicitis was performed. It was sad news to everybody who knew him. He was only thirty-two years of age, a straightforward and kindly man. At the funeral on Sunday afternoon the Halevy Singing Society sang part of a requiem and another part song. The young musician is survived by his uncle, Hermann Kaminsky, a Russian baritone, and his wife, with whom he resided and worked in the cause of music. These relatives were grief stricken at the sudden death of young Kaminsky. The latter was a good pianist and composer of ability.

Olive Mead at the Pan-American.

MISS OLIVE MEAD played with marked success at the concert of the New York Liederkranz given at the Pan-American. Following are extracts of reports in the Buffalo papers:

The artistic playing of Miss Olive Mead proved her to be a mistress of the violin, and she immediately won the admiration of the throng, which sat or stood entranced by her rendition of the fantasie, "Faust," which was her first number. When she accompanied Madame Blauvelt with the violin obligato to the aria from "Il Re Pastore," which was beautifully sung by Madame Blauvelt, Miss Mead shared honors with the great singer. Both the singer and the violinist were greeted with round after round of appreciative applause, and each received a large bunch of magnificent roses from admiring friends.—The Buffalo Review.

Miss Olive Mead was heard here for the first time. She made a most favorable impression, as did also the pianist. Miss Mead's full, strong tone, true harmonics and technical ability were approved at once by the audience.—Buffalo Express.

Sibyl Sammis.

MISS SAMMIS continues successful, recent appearances being at the Iowa Chautauqua, when the Iowa State Register said:

Miss Sibyl Sammis sang for her first song Dudley Buck's "A May Song," and on encore, "My Rosary," by Nevin. Her second was the page's aria from "Les Huguenots," by Meyerbeer, and a dainty little encore, "The Story of the Dimple." Miss Sammis was royally received, and her hearty welcome left no doubt as to the place she will hold in Des Moines in the future. She sings so magnificently and with the most intense expression, is so simple and unaffected in her bearing toward her audience, and is so lovely a woman that her success was assured with the first tones of her glorious voice. Miss Sammis wore an exquisite Parisian gown of pink taffeta with an overdress of thinnest black net, striped with Persian ribbon, white shirred chiffon vest and trimmed with lace and accordion plaitings of black and white chiffon. She wore a big picture hat with pink roses and lace with pink panne velvet choux. Miss Sammiss has beautiful gowns, and, what will please her feminine audience, will wear many different ones while singing in Des Moines.

Mr. Loudon G. Charlton, Carnegie Hall, New York,

HAS THE HONOR TO ANNOUNCE

THE CELEBRATED DUTCH PIANIST:

EDUARD ZELDENRUST

First American Tour, 1901-1902, Begins November 15.

"One of the three or four great pianists of the world."—LONDON TIMES.

Already Booked with Leading Orchestras. Recitals in Principal Cities. Entire Tour Now Booking. BALDWIN PIANO USED.

Published by

G. SCHIRMER, NEW YORK.

Collection of Standard Operas.

COMPLETE VOCAL SCORES.

Edition de Luxe, in cloth, $1.00 extra.

Aïda. Verdi. (Italian and English)	$2.00
Amico Fritz. Mascagni. (Italian and English)	2.00
Barber of Seville. Rossini. (Italian and English)	1.50
Cavalleria Rusticana. Mascagni. (Italian and English)	1.50
Carmen. Bizet. (French and English)	2.00
Faust. Gounod. (Italian and English)	1.50
Flying Dutchman. Wagner. (German and English)	1.50
Lohengrin. Wagner. (German and English)	1.50
Lucia di Lammermoor. Donizetti. (Italian and English)	1.00
Mignon. Thomas. (French and English)	2.00
Romeo and Juliet. Gounod. (French and English)	2.00
Samson and Delilah. Saint-Saëns. (English)	2.50
Tannhäuser. Wagner. (German and English)	1.50
La Traviata. Verdi. (Italian and English)	1.00
Il Trovatore. Verdi. (Italian and English)	1.00

☞ Others in preparation.

Send for Catalogue of SCHIRMER'S LIBRARY EDITION of Musical Classics.

JEANNETTE DURNO

CONCERT PIANIST,

3629 Vincennes Avenue, CHICAGO.

Mme. Matja von Niessen-Stone

MEZZO SOPRANO.

VOCAL RECITALS in English, French, German, Italian and Russian.

For terms and dates address

ALICE E. JOSEPH, 7a Hanover St., London, W., England.

CONCERT DIRECTION

ROBERT STRAKOSCH

59 Rue La Bruyere, PARIS.

Mrs. Laurence Weakley,

CONTRALTO.

ADDRESS:

610 N

ST

RARE OLD VI

Remarkable values in fine old inst

$10,000. Largest and finest

Send for a copy of our Catal

Biographies, Fac-simile L

LYON & HEALY,

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY
—BY THE—
MUSICAL COURIER COMPANY.
(Incorporated under the laws of the State of New York.)

St. James Building, Broadway and 26th St., New York.
TELEPHONE: 1720 Madison Square.
Cable Address: "Pegujar," New York.

ESTABLISHED JANUARY, 1880.
No. 1114.

MARC A. BLUMENBERG - - EDITOR-IN-CHIEF.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JULY 31, 1901.

LONDON, ENGLAND—
Hotel Cecil, Mr. Montague Chester, General European Representative.

BERLIN, GERMANY (Branch Office)—
Linkstrasse, 17 W., is in charge of Mr. Otto Floersheim.
Single copies for sale at the music store of Ed. Bote & G. Bock, Leipzigerstrasse 39, W.

DRESDEN—
Anna Ingman, Franklinstrasse 20.

LEIPSIC—
Hotel Hentschel, Mr. Alvin Kranich in charge.

PARIS, FRANCE—
Conducted from London Office.
Single copies for sale at Brentano's, 37 Avenue de l'Opera; 37 Rue Marbeuf; Galignani Library, 224 Rue de Rivoli; Shakespeare Library, 75 Avenue des Champs Elysées, Boulevard Kiosks.

VIENNA—
Edwin Stewart, correspondent.

ITALY—
5 Via Rondinelli, Florence, Italy, Mr. Joseph Smith in charge.

CHICAGO OFFICE—
Fine Arts Building, Michigan Boulevard, C. A. Daniell in charge.

CANADIAN OFFICE—
In charge of Miss May Hamilton. Address Main Office, New York City.

SAN FRANCISCO—
Mrs. A. Wedmore Jones, 2046 Leavenworth Street.

LOS ANGELES—
F. W. Blanchard, Blanchard Hall.

ST. LOUIS—
Nellie Allen-Hessenbruch, correspondent.

MILWAUKEE—
Controlled by Chicago Office.

INDIANAPOLIS—
Controlled by Chicago Office.

CINCINNATI OFFICE—
J. A. Homan in charge.

BOSTON OFFICE—
17 Beacon Street.

BROOKLYN OFFICE—
Hotel St. George, Clark, corner Henry Street.

BUFFALO OFFICE—
Mrs. Nellie M. Gould, 428 Ashland Avenue.

WASHINGTON OFFICE—
616 Twelfth Street, N. W., Berenice Thompson in charge.

SUBSCRIPTIONS:
Invariably in advance, including postage.
Single copies, Ten Cents.

United States, ...	$5.00
Great Britain, . . .	£1 5s.	Austria, ...	15 fl.
France, ...	31.25 fr.	Italy, ...	31.25 fr.
Germany, ...	25 m.	Russia, ...	12 r.

SPENCER T. DRIGGS - - BUSINESS MANAGER

Rates for Advertising.
PER INCH ON ADVERTISING PAGES.

Three Months.....	$25.00	Nine months.....	$75.00
Six Months.....	50.00	Twelve Months.....	100.00

ON READING PAGES.

One inch, 3 months.....	$75.00
One inch, 6 months.....	125.00
One inch, 1 year.....	200.00

Special rates for preferred positions.

One page, one insertion.....	$300.00
One-half page, one insertion.....	175.00
One Column.....	100.00

All remittances for subscriptions or advertising must be made by check, draft or money order, payable to THE MUSICAL COURIER Company.

Advertisements for the current week must be handed in by 2 P. M. on Monday.

All changes in advertisements must reach this office by Friday P. M. preceding the issue in which changes are to take effect.

...n News Company, New York, General Distributing Agents.
... News Company, Chicago, Western Distributing Agents.

...E MUSICAL COURIER EXTRA.
Every Saturday During the Year.
... ADVERTISING MEDIUM FOR ALL
...ISHERS AND MANUFACTURERS
... OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS
...OF. ALSO SPECIALLY DE-
...MUSIC and VAUDEVILLE.
...turday Extra Department."

TRUST the borough of Brooklyn for originality in unimportant matters. A pious man over there, a regular pastor of a Congregational church, is organizing trolley car choirs to Coney Island. The good man's object is to discourage the singing of ribald songs on the cars to and from the beach. The pastor's trolley car choirs are to sing hymns, we presume of the Moody and Sankey brand. From the musical point of view the plan promises to be another case of "frying pan into the fire." Between the so-called ribald songs of the street arabs and the prayer meeting drivel there is little choice, and the odds, if any, are most decidedly in favor of the former. The music of these Moody and Sankey hymns is painfully silly.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of Wagnerian opera was celebrated at Bayreuth yesterday. In replying to the congratulations of the Burgomaster, Frau Cosima Wagner said that the town would remain the home of herself and her descendants. This loyalty to a historic spot is interesting. But it would only be graceful on the part of the widow of the great composer if she did not compel Wagnerians to take such a long pilgrimage to hear all the works of the master. But she probably holds that business is business.—Evening Sun.

UNFORTUNATELY, the people of America and the whole of Europe, outside of Bayreuth, cannot attend a performance of "Parsifal" except at Bayreuth until 1913, the year when the copyright expires. The widow of Wagner may be a woman of shrewd business sense, but, alas! shrewdness is not an attribute of a woman of the noblest type. By her consent to withdraw the restrictions on "Parsifal," Mrs. Wagner would become immensely wealthy, and at the same time extend to the army of Wagner admirers in all parts of the world the long delayed wish to hear the last production of her famous husband.

IT would be interesting to read a statement giving the exact number of musical clubs in the United States. There are a number of published records, but many of the smaller clubs do not appear to be included in the lists. We trust we will be pardoned for asking if these omissions are due to modesty, exclusiveness, or indifference and neglect of the secretaries. Like the advancement of women's clubs generally, musical clubs have sprung up in all sections of the country, and hence there has been a wonderful increase in musical activities. What is being accomplished for the improvement of the art in our young country would make capital reading if some industrious musician would take the trouble to make a compilation of programs of concerts, recitals and meetings held by the regularly organized and duly registered musical clubs, say, in the past five years.

WORK OF THE MUSICAL CLUBS.

A certain clever but sarcastic feminine writer has again and again declared that the meeting of the woman's club is to-day nothing more or less than a parade of the latest fashions. On first reading this we felt shocked, but after long and serious reflection we concluded that club women were really getting back to first principles, and gradually the club would become a social function in place of the stupid and irritating abode for the discussion of weighty problems. These comments, however, apply only to the general run of women's clubs, and cannot therefore be considered in relation to musical clubs, for the very good reason that musical clubs are organized for specific work. The fact that the women who form the membership of these musical clubs dress becomingly is a decided point in their favor. The time has passed when women of genius were indifferent to frocks and bonnets. Now, particularly in this country; the women who "do things" show as much taste in their costumes as the sweet, dependent and incapable creatures who are never known to have a care or thought above what they wear.

After all of this has been said, we should like very much to hear of one musical club that is doing something toward supporting a great enterprise, an orchestra, for instance, in the community where the club holds its meetings. If the clubs formed by women musicians, or women interested in music, do no more than hold meetings for discussions and the performances of the members, or an occasional artist from the outside, we will be forced to conclude that no great efforts or sacrifices are being made. In this respect a much grander showing has been made in the world of painting. Able and eloquent papers are all very well in their way, and all members, doubtless, enjoy hearing gratis the performance of some great artist, but if the musical club is to become a potent force in the musical world some of the leading clubs must be aroused to action in behalf of some great and growing work. We make this suggestion without depreciating what has been accomplished in the past or is being done at the present time. Excepting the Seidl Society, of Brooklyn, an organization composed of women, we recall no musical society of women in this country that has undertaken high class orchestral concerts and performances of grand opera.

The Seidl Society has done this for twelve years, employing the greatest conductors in the country as well as the best orchestral musicians, at the highest salaries. Opportunity awaits every musical club in the country, and at the end of this dead, dull summer would be a good time for some of the clubs to leave the beaten tracks and inaugurate enterprises beneficial to their city, town and village.

JULY 25, 1901.

Editors The Musical Courier:

DEAR SIR—I wish to enter a protest against the way Wm. Worth Bailey, the blind violinist, is being advertised, as it hurts the prospects of all other violinists.

Johnston's advertising methods prevent poor artists and managers from securing the business that would naturally come their way if his attractions were not actually forced upon the musical clubs and societies throughout the country. It is all wrong and unjust.

VIOLINIST AND CONSTANT READER.

JOHNSTON'S VIOLINIST.

IN reply to the above we have entered the protest by printing it, and we should like to know from the writer what there is in Johnston's advertising methods which prevents anyone else from advertising as he does.

Mr. Johnston's attractions are forced upon the musical clubs and the musical public through his advertising in this paper. He would not advertise in this paper if musical institutions did not thereby know about him what they do know, or about his attractions; and if he did not advertise he would spend a great deal of money for circulars, postage and traveling agents that would have to go through the United States to present the case, and if there were no MUSICAL COURIER that is the way in which Johnston would do it. He would spend $2,000 or so in mailing circulars, and he would spend thousands of dollars in employees whom he would send over the main lines of travel and their branches, taking in all of the main centres in the West, East, South and North, and the result would be that he would spend a great deal of money, and it would not be done as effectively as he is doing it through THE MUSICAL COURIER.

The same thing can be done with other violinists, and with anybody else who is legitimate. If violinists are poor it is not Mr. Johnston's fault, because he has interested himself all his life in violinists; and maybe the writer means that there are poor violinists as violinists instead of being poor men as violinists. There are two ways to look at this. If they are poor violinists as violinists nobody wants to hear them, and if they are poor men as violinists it shows that they have not been able to get before the public in a proper way, which is through the advertising columns of THE MUSICAL COURIER.

William Worth Bailey, the blind violinist, is unknown to us except through Mr. Johnston's advertising. After we hear the young man we will know more about him. He is probably one of a thousand violinists that have not been heard by us. The other 999 will never be heard by us unless they advertise as Mr. Johnston is advertising Bailey, and he certainly would not advertise him unless he knew that the man had merit and possessed ability, for the reason that therein lies the basis of the whole advertising. It must be remembered that Mr. Johnston is advertising William Worth Bailey in THE MUSICAL COURIER where other artists are also advertised. He is not advertising William Worth Bailey in the daily press as a violin phenomenon, but he advertises him as a violin artist, as a virtuoso; and as a pupil of Ysaye, Bailey certainly promises to achieve what Mr. Johnston forecasts. We shall have to wait until he appears and is heard by everybody. Everyone is anxious to hear him. That is one of the important results of the advertising.

Mr. Johnston must protect his business enterprise. He cannot take care of other people. They are not in the habit of taking care of him. But there is no doubt that if another violinist of merit were to appear before Mr. Johnston and satisfy him of his ability, he would also make arrangements with such a one. He does not exclude other violinists simply because he has William Worth Bailey. Bring forth your artists and let us hear what they can do. Mr. Johnston will listen to them and tell each of them what he is worth. That is the way it appears to us.

THE MUSICIANS' VACATION.

WE have touched the very apogee of musical dearth and dullness. Things are at a dead standstill, and we no more expect to greet a maker of music in the streets of New York than we look to greet a batch of swallows in the snows. Everybody who is anybody—and everybody in the field of music, which happens to be a field of social rivalry as it is of art, wants to be considered "somebody"—is at mountain, lake or coast. The first chosen among the profession are presumably in Europe. The last chosen, not always the least gifted, are, heaven knows where, seeking by their usual toil amid new surroundings to even up the demands of the year, which beat as pitilessly in hot, rich summer, made for rest time, as in the central months of the winter's frost.

Many of these are now hard at work "taking rest and vacation" playing on hotel piazzas or seaside piers or warbling in the arid atmosphere of the social or public drawing room to be found at summer resorts. They are thankful to have it to do, for the summer dun in town is a grewsome, uncompromising object, and then they shall further have it to their credit at the opening of next season to state that they have summered somewhere well known to the natives, but seasonably removed from New York.

A good deal of sarcasm has been visited from time to time on some of these poor musicians because of the ignoble uses to which at various summer times they have allowed their talents to be placed. How, in the cause of financial honesty, are they to save their artistic worth from base and vulgar uses? This huge rank and file makes individually during the winter time of harvest barely sufficient for each day's bread. They can neither toil nor spin. When summer comes bread is still to be won, and their simplest choice is to cling to customary harness, even though they must throw off a solid, well-worn yoke of decency for a cheap and garish one of jingling bells. They take the best they can get to do gratefully, in this professional life of one hundred men to one position, and smother art for the time in the teeth of biting necessity.

In illustration of the melancholy overplus in musical supply as against demand we have only just at this moment to search certain "quarters" of New York where musicians are used to abide and find the vast mass of idle population starving out the hot months, unable to stir from the stern surroundings of their winter's work. And do these men happen to be any poorer musicians than even those brethren who have gone to Europe? Not always; one might say, not often; only that wheel which rules the destinies of musicians is such a reckless whirl of chance that no man may reckon on being listed according to his precise gifts. It is absolutely the case that enough idle and—sad to say—shame-faced musicians to people a young village are within a stone's throw at any moment, half way hidden in New York professional haunts.

The aspect, the association, is gloomy, even sinister. Why should music be so overcrowded? The question is trite, and no answer to it available which has not been given a hundred times over, and which never promises to relieve the impoverished state of the case. "I was first endowed with certain gifts," says a man who never could have been converted into a successful ploughman or tinker or tailor. "I managed to have them cultivated. Was that right or wrong to seek to do best that which I felt I could do best? I am here now. I can play, I can teach; I have certificates, references, industry. I can get nothing to do." The wrong does not seem on the man's side; on the contrary, everything honorable and artistic would appear to lie to his credit. But, then, where is the right, the righting, rather, of the present evil to come from? Why should the poor, cultivated, fine strung musician starve, while the mere journeyman butcher or baker or candlestick maker can confidently put together his tools and betake himself to paths of leafy summer when the time comes round, always sure of a living, and never afraid to turn the next street corner lest he should drop into the arms of some creditor whose existence alone is sufficient, even without pressure, to wear his weary heart and nerve into a wearier and wearier thread day by day.

We do not see the vast army of city-locked musicians abroad much on the general highways. They are ashamed not to be "out of town." Lack of means would be their only excuse, and it is a hard one for a sensitive man to offer. Is the only way out of this piteous evil to reduce the ranks? Must a man who feels born and driven to music force himself instead into some material groove of labor because the ranks are already too full? There is not, there cannot be, there never will be any overplus of true art. What we have solely to dread would be its dearth or decadence. The question would then swiftly resolve itself into a survival of the fittest, a complete exclusion of charlatanism. The bottom of the soil would have to be struck at and the seeds of weeds separated and thrown aside from those of healthy plants. And what an uprooting would be here, and what national scheme would it take to force such into execution! That is a question too big for this paper's present extent, which merely set out to talk passingly of the summertide of musicians, but had to face the truth in procedure that a vast majority of even the best had virtually no summertide, and realizing this, sets down the inevitable why, with the vaguest impromptu suggestion attached for a remedy.

The poor musician's lot is hard. There is no hope for him now or in posterity. The half score pupils for whom he grinds out soul and body are to be the sole testimony of his life. He knows that, unlike the poor obscure artist of gifts, he may not paint even a little memento of his talent and hang it up where some day a discriminate eye may light upon it, and say and pass on to others, "He would have done great things had he lived." The painter can find time to place part of his soul upon enduring canvas, even though it be but a foot square, but the poor music drudge!—his last vital spark is absorbed by those pupils whose after performances will only evoke, "Man knew nothing; couldn't play, couldn't teach; never turned out a pupil that could play a note."

The question naturally never arises as to whether the man ever had a pupil whom it were possible to turn out to make play. But away from gloomy mortuary finalities! We have still many musicians in the right place, if there are also many in the wrong. To all who are enjoying a happy summertide, whether half work, all work or no work, with their lines cast in fresh and pleasant places, we wish many happy and prosperous returns.

THE OPERA ORCHESTRA.

THE daily papers have been giving considerable space to an important event in the history of New York, which is of as much interest in the daily life as are the explosions in the tunnel, the broken rods of the Brooklyn bridge, the consolidation of the national banks and the agitation against Tammany; and that is, who is to engage the opera orchestra for next season at the Metropolitan Opera House? Around Murray Hill and that district there has been a great deal of agitation on this account, on the part of rich subscibers that keep in touch with this important movement, which resolves itself into the question as to whether Mr. Walter Damrosch, one of the conductors at the opera and a very well-known young man among musical people, or Mr. Nahan Franko, the concert master of the opera orchestra, and through whom the orchestra has been engaged the last few seasons, shall next season engage the opera orchestra, and the question is who is to come out as the victor in this fierce conflict of æsthetic and commercial interests, the effect upon the fiddle strings and the trombones depending seriously upon it.

Mr. Damrosch is a family man. He is very fond of those things he likes; and among others he has a brother-in-law, a young man who married his sister (we really don't know what this has to do with the musical part of it), whose name is David Mannes, an Oriental cognomen. This Mr. Mannes is a beautiful parlor violinist. He is an excellent artist in his way, and is possessed of an abundant kind of self-assurance, which has been rarified to a considerable extent since he has allied himself to the Damrosches, through the association of wedded bliss, and nothing can be said about his violin playing except what is commendable. But as a leader of the violins in a big orchestra it will require some effort before he will have acquired the experience and the technical and detailed knowledge which Mr. Nahan Franko possesses as the result of many years of application and through native talent. Mr. Walter Damrosch is probably aware that there is no better opportunity for his brother-in-law to acquire this experience than to be placed in the post of Concert Master of the orchestra, and that after several seasons he will also have that technic which Mr. Franko, at least to some extent, possesses; and it therefore seems to us that Mr. Damrosch is perfectly right in seeking to advance the interests of his relatives, which all relatives should do for one another.

Mr. Grau has no written contract with Mr. Franko, but he has a verbal one, and Mr. Grau's verbal promises are as good as his written ones. When Mr. Grau says that Mr. Franko is to have the orchestra for this season, Mr. Franko can depend upon it that he will have it; but Mr. Grau may also, as a business man, feel that the commissions that go with these engagements should be divided. There is no reason why everything in music should be a matter of money unless it is reprehensible for a paper, which is published in the interests of music, to take money for its advertising space. Why should money always be mixed up with such a beautiful thing as music? Why should musicians always have the commercial interests at heart and interests of relatives? Why should they constantly be bickering and dickering with Mr. Grau and other managers about salaries and payments of sordid, filthy lucre? Why should foreigners come over here and always discusss how much they are to get for a song or for a recital, or for a season of opera, when music is so far removed from money? Why should a musical paper ask any money for advertising or for its subscriptions? It is really an inconceivable thing this mixing of music with money, and in this respect we must not include Mr. Damrosch, because we understand that he does it for nothing.

We learn that Mr. Damrosch really wants to pay this orchestra instead of letting Mr. Grau pay, because he is such a lover of the art that he doesn't even insist upon the public purchasing his compositions. He thinks really that he must give them away if he wants the people to know that they exist. And as for his services as conductor, we understand that he has recently cabled Mr. Grau that if it was a question of money for next season he wouldn't hesitate at all to abandon such a return for his services; that it wasn't compatible with his ideas of taste and of culture. Whether he can induce his brother-in-law, Mr. David Mannes, to accept the position of Concert Master for next season without money is doubtful. Mr. Mannes is a newly married man, and, of course, he must bring up a family, aud it takes a little money nowadays in New York, with rents so high in the up-town apartments, that a man cannot very well do these things without some compensation.

With a musical paper it is entirely different, because the printers do the work for nothing, and the paper manufacturers are very glad to furnish the paper for nothing, and, of course, the landlords are delighted to give the use of offices, free of charge, to people that run a musical paper; the writers are falling over one another, crazy in their desire to write articles for nothing; the bookkeepers require special recommendations before they can come in and do their work for nothing, and the Post Office Department has long ago decided that a musical paper can go through the mails free of charge. The only expense that is left for a musical paper, therefore, is air, and it gets its atmosphere in New York free of charge, hot sometimes, too. Water must be paid for and beer, of course.

Otherwise, things are running along pleasantly, and we hope that if Mr. Damrosch succeeds and supersedes Mr. Franko, the latter will not bear any resentment against him, because Mr. Damrosch is a nice man as the world goes, always looking out for number one. Mr. Franko is also a very nice man, also looking out for number one. And in this instance the two men are looking out for number one, which is the same number one. There is apt to be a little friction, but that should not take place among musicians. We understand that Mr. Franko is a good viola player, and Mr. Damrosch may give him a place among the violas, and he could then look across the desk and see how Mr. Mannes bows; while Mr. Mannes could look across his desk and see how Mr. Franko holds the viola. These matters are always so interesting to an orchestra. Mr. Walter Damrosch is never in the habit of looking at an orchestra or watching it, so, of course, he will have no interest in these features. The reason why Mr. Damrosch doesn't look at the orchestra is because he must watch the notes of the score, and lots of them slip him; but then that doesn't make so much difference nowadays either. A few notes more or less in a Wagner score! why, what is that? A score technician and close student of scores like Mr. Paur insists upon it that every note and every expression mark shall be observed and closely watched; but then that is a modern style of conducting which requires a great deal of knowledge. In Mr. Damrosch's school of conducting those matters are inconsequential so long as the total effect on the box office is not deleterious. Considering that there is some indifference exhibited toward the notes in the scores, it is rather surprising that the orchestra plays so well, but notes that sometimes drop from the conductor's baton are picked up by the conscientious players. There are said to be some critics at the opera that not alone see them drop, but hear them drop. Mr. Damrosch does not, but then he is far above these little matters, and for this reason we congratulate him. What we want in this world is not the small, but the great things. A few notes here and there on the page of a score—what do they amount to in the total? And as for expression marks, why in many cases they are really obsolete or superannuated.

LATER.

Since discussing the above question, Mr. Grau and the Board of Directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company have decided to re-engage Mr. Nahan Franko and his orchestra. It is probable that, notwithstanding this, Mr. Walter Damrosch will continue as one of the conductors of the orchestra at the Metropolitan Opera House. Why should he not?

A RICHARD STRAUSS IN KANSAS.

KANSAS can now boast of a Richard Strauss—a Richard Strauss of the piano. His name is "Prof." J. L. Baker, and he holds forth in Armourdale, which town has "a rich beefy flavor." (See popular sauce advertisement). We prefer to let "Prof." Baker do his own pleading; we are speechless in the presence of such a circular as the following, which we herewith reproduce free of charge, only regretting that the features of the "Prof." cannot be included. Read—and then rest! "Seven forms of piano touch and four styles of movement!" Paderewski, Rosenthal, Joseffy beware! Here is something novel in piano playing.

Baker's College of Music,

621 Kansas Avenue, Armourdale.

For PIANO, ORGAN and VOICE.

TUITION:		SPECIAL RATES
$4.00 per Month. Two Lessons per Week.		Made to all Children under 12 years of age

Composer, Arranger and Publisher of Music. Author of "Baker's Band March," "Morning Glory Polka," "Cripple Creek Waltz," "Bob White's Band," Etc.

Visitors who are interested in the study of music and who desire to find out more concerning this conservatory will be received at the school every Friday night from 8 until 10 p. m., and entertained free of charge. The following are some of the pieces with which Profesor Baker will entertain his company: "The Battle of Manila" (descriptive in nine parts), covering a variety of seven forms of piano touch and four styles of movement. 1. Ships Sailing in the Bay Under Cover of Darkness. 2. The Gong Sounds and the Men Rush to Their Post of Duty. 3. Large Guns Firing and Imitation of Battle. 4. Groans and Cries of the Wounded Imitated. 5. Bugle, Calling the Band and Soldiers Together to March Out in the City. 6. An Imitation of Drums as They Parade the Streets of Manila. 7. The Band Plays Yankee Doodle. 8. Sound of the Drums Dying Away in the Distance. 9. Period of Music Representing Peace.

Three independent tunes all played at the same time on the piano: "Home, Sweet Home," "How Firm a Foundation" and "O Where, O Where is My Wee Dutch Dog?"

"Nearer, My God, to Thee," played in twenty-four different ways.

These are his own compositions and arrangements of music, and with many other pieces equally entertaining he will demonstrate the science of piano music.

A four years' course of music: Teaching theory, history, harmony, counterpoint and composition of music. Diplomas will be given to all those who finish the prescribed course.

BRING YOUR WIFE OR SWEETHEART. NO GENTLEMAN WILL BE ADMITTED UNLESS ACCOMPANIED BY A LADY!!!

THE PASSING BAND.

A lone, deep drone
Thrummeth a resonant monotone.
Up soareth the horn with an undulant flare,
That dies—is reborn—just a flash of an air,
Through the rumble of drums, as their throbbing beat
Sends a rhythmic pulse down the winding street.
Then a streaming pennant of sound is outflung,
Flamboyant from wall to wall is swung.
Near—and more near—the harmonies clear
Build skyward a ponderous tower, then sheer
It breaks in a clarion crash of sounds,
An ululant tumult, that bounds and rebounds;
A voluminous groan
From the blaring trombone;
And a clangor of brass
As the cymbals pass;
Then the drum's lone boom, as the melodies fly
Forward—and waver—and faint—and die
Into murmur amphoric,
Sweet blending, choric,
To a far away swell.
Till at last they mell
In a note long drawn—
Are gone—on—on.

—London Academy.

IT was with a peculiar satisfaction that I encountered in a speech of Alphonse Daudet the following estimate of Leo Tolstoy: "Tolstoy," said he, "has enjoyed in his youth everything that there is in life which is exquisite, luxuriant and brilliant. He has loved the chase, masquerades, races in sleighs, pretty women, friends and the arts. But now he would like to forbid that others should enjoy pleasures which his old age prevents him from repeating. In a conversion effected on a man of seventy I shall always be on my guard against regrets and that envy—oh! very distant, underhand and indirect, but tenacious—which can be read between the lines."

I have always declared that Count Tolstoy did not play fair in the game. He has passed the scriptural three score and ten; he has led by his own acknowledgment a rake-helly life; he has gambled, drunk deeply, loved women, and his belly was his god. Then he ran the intellectual gamut of dissipation. He worshipped at the shrines of false gods, wrote great, gray, godless novels; won renown, family happiness, riches, love, admiration, applause and notoriety. So having lived too happily he falls forthwith to railing at destiny like that Englishman of whom Haydn relates: "Mr. Brassey once cursed because he enjoyed too much happiness in this world." Tolstoy tasting of everything thereby damaged his palate. Man pleases him not, nor does woman. In every book of his later lonesome years he gives away the secret of life's illusion, like the mischievous and jealous rival of a conjurer. This is not fair to the young ones who, with mouth agape, gaze at the cunning pictures limned by that old arch-hypocrite, Nature. The young man who has not had the courage to make a fool of himself some time in his career has not lived. Robert Louis Stevenson once said something like this and said it better. Away with your cynics! Throw pessimism to the dogs! Let Tolstoy swear that the inverted bowl of the firmament is full of ashes, full of burnt out stars! We see the bravery of the cosmical circus, its streamers, its mad coursing through eternity. Hoop la, they're off again! Two wonderful young fools. Watch them love and languish! Lives there a more glorious spectacle? To the melancholy old seer of Russia love is an itching crime, art an enigmatic fizzle, life a burden. He has lived it all—we have not. So huzza for the veins boiling with rich, red blood; for the nerves a-tingle with the desire of life! We are all young, foolish, gay. Let the hindmost pay the bills—for the present. Later we are bound to settle up, and with interest. But that's our business. So out of the way kill-joys, maw-worms, eunuchs and them that fear life!

What cunning revenge is being enjoyed by Edmond Rostand in his "Cyrano." Anti-Semitism is still rampant in France, yet all France went daft several seasons ago over a play by a Jew, and a play that exalts one of the—to Christians—symbols of the race—its proboscis. Is Rostand an unconscious or a conscious humorist?

Says a publisher's announcement:

"Mrs. Craigie (John Oliver Hobbes) is making ready her new novel, which is to bear the extraordinary title—extraordinary even among her strong titles—of 'The Worm That God Prepared.'"

The public, then, is presumably the early bird that will catch this god-prepared worm. Is there vermifuge in Gilead for this sort of title?

When Hugh Craig was in Frankfort last June he found in a paper of the 12th inst. the news of Przybyszewski's bereavement. Stanilaws P.—never mind the rest—is a gifted though rather ulgurating writer now in Warsaw. I asked Paderewski about him, and heard enough to convince me that the man's love for music, for Chopin, particularly for the F sharp minor Polonaise, is sincere. He lectures on Chopin, plays Chopin, and writes prose that leaps heavenward in its crepitating phrases. It appears that Madame P. was born a Norwegian, her maiden name being Dagny. She was, however, a widow before she met P., and an intimate friend of Strindberg, the mysogynist, of Paris, a rabid anarch. In one of his novels, "Homo Sapiens," P. tells of Strindberg's friendship for his wife. Strindberg, quite in the George Sand manner of "Elle et Lui," answered the Pole in a novel most gallantly named "Inferno." Evidently he did not admire Mrs. P. Now follows tragedy. Enter on the scene a Caucasian millionaire's son named Euryk, who falls in love with Mrs. P., and with her husband's permission, mind you, walks off with her to Tiflis, in the Caucasus. He had met her in Norway and had escorted her to Russia. In Tiflis she must have aroused Euryk's jealousy by talking too much about Strindberg, for in June the millionaire's son shot the lady and then killed himself. Here in all its richness is the material for a decadent novel—a quadrangle instead of the familiar triangle of the French stage. I wonder whose version of the affair will be published first—Strindberg's or the murdered woman's husband, Przybyszewski?

In his extraordinarily clever caricatures, "Steckbriefe," Martin Moebius, of Berlin, thus refers to the German writing Polish poet and Chopin commentator: "Dieser deutsche Dichter mit dem polnischen nies namen hat wie sein anderer vor ihm den Seelengehalt des Gilka-Kümmels erschöpft. * * * Nur die Schnapsschänker Berlins trauern ihm nach."

Jules Huret, a Parisian critic, has been interviewing some celebrities. In conversation with Sibyl Sanderson he is unable to discover what school of music she prefers, or what opera she sings with greatest pleasure, but, on the other hand, she tells him with enthusiasm that she wears 5¾ gloves, likes violets better than any other flowers, measures 20 inches around her waist, enjoys beefsteak and roast beef, and gets up every morning between 9 and 10 o'clock except the days when she is singing in public, when she rises at 3 and dines at 4 o'clock; that she wants everybody to be fond of her and to love her as much as she loves them. The nature of these questions is indicative. Isn't this lovely? Huret goes on to his next catechism. Maeterlinck receives him indulgently. He describes the author of "Les Aveugles": "He is a tall, blond man, with square shoulders, a mustache and a ruddy complexion; serious, with a responsive smile; he is frank and sensitive; his forehead is seared with wrinkles; he speaks with a gentle, half-veiled voice (the voice of all men who smoke a pipe constantly). His sentences are short, and he hesitates as though he were afraid of words, or as though they hurt him."

TOLSTOY.

Almost immediately Huret starts him upon his theories of dramatic art. "I think," Maeterlinck begins, "that a play should first of all be a poem; that we should be less occupied with the study of characters than with the fulfilling of a destiny, the relation of each with the unknown. Everything prosaic should be debarred even from plays not written in verse; the course of events should be ordinary and within the bounds of possibility, but the characters should be presented in such a way that their relations with the unknown should appear clearly. I will give you an example. It would be impossible to dramatize this legend, but it illustrates what I mean: A peasant and his wife are seated on Sunday at table before their door, about to eat a roast chicken. Far off, on the road, the peasant sees his father approaching. He quickly hides the chicken behind him, so that he may not be obliged to share it with this uninvited guest. The old father sits down, talks for awhile, and then goes on his way, suspecting nothing. The peasant looks for his chicken, but the chicken has been turned into an enormous toad, which springs onto his face and fixes itself there, so that he is obliged to feed it all his life, lest it devour his face. * * * The anecdote is symbolic," Maeterlinck continues, "as are all anecdotes and all events in life. What would you have me do with it? Study the avarice of the son, the hideousness of his act, the complicity of his wife and the resignation of the old father? No! What interests me more than anything is the terrible role the old father plays without suspecting it. He was for a moment the instrument of God; God was using him as He uses us all, at every instant. The old man did not know it, and the others thought they did not know it, but nevertheless there should be some way of showing and making felt that at one time the mystery was on the point of revealing itself."

From Emma Calvé the adroit reporter has obtained a more subtle confession: "I became an artist," she says, "the day I forgot that I had a pretty voice and remembered nothing but the expression I wanted put into the music I was singing. This idea came to me suddenly after a convalescence. As long as I was well, fine looking and strong, a good voice was my only talent. From the day I began to suffer my sensibility was awakened. I understood a multitude of things that had been obscure before. I felt the need of making other souls understand what I perceived. My moral conscience was aroused. I became a better woman. It seemed to me that I was born to suffering and to art at the same moment."

You will perceive that dear old Emma's conscience is still troubling her. It is usually as elastic as a rubberneck ball. But she has her dull days, like all prima donnas.

The growth of Christianity among the Japanese is not without opposition. The Yorodzu Choho, Tokio, says: "In the long history of Christendom we do not know a single case of a country saved by it. With Montezuma's Mexico and the Inca's Peruvian empire the course of Christendom has been absorption, destruction, annihilation. It has killed India—politically at least. It has killed Burmah and Annam. It has killed Hawaii. It has killed Madagascar, and it will yet kill Abyssinia, Egypt and Morocco. What security have we that Christendom will not kill China, Corea, and even Japan, if the opportunity offers? Christendom does its destructive work, not only by guns and bayonets, but by means much more formidable. It kills non-Christians by its rums and whiskies and by its diseases."

Adolf Henselt was in the custom of going every summer to Dresden, where some of his wife's relatives lived. One day Alexander Dreyschock, going to call upon him, heard him playing in a very animated way. He seated himself upon the stairs and awaited a long time for the playing to end. He said that for fullness, swe tness of tone and beauty of phrasing it surpassed anything that he had ever heard in his life, and he was particularly struck with the beauty of the ideas. At length the playing ceased, and Dreyschock knocked at the door. After being warmly welcomed by Henselt, he, full of curiosity, asked Henselt what he had been playing. "Oh, merely a new idea," evasively answered the other. Whenever he had a new idea he could not rest until he turned it over and viewed it from every possible aspect. Dreyschock asked to hear the study again. Henselt sat down and played it for him—but with what a difference! Such was his nervousness and constraint in the presence of a listener that the playing was entirely different. Not only was the phrasing less finished and the conception less intense, but the very tone itself had lost its round, full and poetic quality. This was the effect of constriction due to nervousness. And yet Henselt was one of the world's greatest pianists!

In "Main Currents in Nineteenth Century Literature," by George Brandes, the first volume of which has just appeared from the press of the Macmillan Company, there is an interesting appreciation of Sénancour apropos of his "Obermann," which students of Matthew Arnold will read with esoteric interest. Brandes sums up his estimate of Sénancour in the following words:

"His own generation overlooked him; he was not appreciated while he lived, although he was in the unhappy position of possessing no source of income but his pen. But in the days of the romantic school he attained renown; the romantic critics bound his simple field flowers into garlands along with the passion flowers and roses of Chateaubriand and Madame de Stael. And he deserved the fame he attained. For he was one of the most remarkable authors of the emigrant literature—a worshiper of nature, as becomes a pupil of Rousseau; melancholy, as befits a genuine admirer of Ossian; weary of life, as befits a contemporary of Chateaubriand. He is thoroughly modern in his theories on religion, morality, education and the position of women in society. He is the regular German romanticist in his sentimentality, his indolence, and his dread of contact with reality, as if it were something that would burn him, and he is the French romanticist in his mixture of liberal mindedness with excessive scrupulosity and of enthusiasm with refined sensuousness—a combination which reappears in French literature twenty years later in Sainte-Beuve's 'Joseph Delorme.' Everything stamps him as a herald or forerunner of the long train of greater intellects who at this moment begin their progress through the century. His weak voice announces them and he prepares their way."

Esther Singleton has made a clever recipe for a modern musical composition: Take a good sized orchestral cauldron and throw into it—first with extreme caution and afterward as hastily as you like—the usual complement of instruments, with the addition of a generous bass tuba, a harp and a thunder machine. Arrange them in groups or semicircles around the conductor. With this accomplished proceed with the score.

Procure at your musical grocer's a bunch of thin phrases or themes not made of more than four notes—three are better—and if you can find a good and durable monotone, buy it immediately and transfer it to your music paper. Select from your bunch of themes one and give it to the violins; let them draw it out to the thinness of gold wire and then to the thinness of gossamer. Entice the listener into its hopeless net of intricate woven rhythms. Distribute, meanwhile, the other phrases, decorously taking care to introduce them at intervals and in different rhythms. Take the first phrase or theme and change it into a triplet; give it to the woodwind; let them hand it over to the horns, which will proclaim it heroically. Add nothing to the original phrase except the monotone, which the tympani may thump for ninety-five consecutive measures. Treat the other phrases or themes in the same manner. Now it is about time to put in a climax. Throw it in with the utmost violence, adding a dash of recklessness if possible. Bring in your soprano. Let her declaim a few sorrowful notes redolent of fatalism, and make the orchestra accompany her with her own musical portrait, done with a realistic touch, so that anyone who is not previously acquainted with the score will exclaim, "What a fine portrait of Hildegarde von Ophicleide!" This is very simple. For example:

Blue eyes, color and expression produced on the violins; full, red, pre-Raphaelitic lips, pomegranate tones on 'cello; white neck and arms, described by the oboes, bassoons and English horns; magnificent Teutonic figure, indicated by the trombone and tuba. Treat all the characters in the same manner, and take them to the woods, to the seashore, or place them in a mediæval village. The woodland scene, with its possibilities of waving trees, rippling brooks and coaxing chortles from the woodwind, is preferred by the best landscape painters in music.

Proceed to boil the cauldron. Stir it around with the baton, whip up the violins to a stiff froth, start the thunder machine, and bang the tympani enthusiastically. Now drip in a few harp tones, gently at first, and then let a torrent of arpeggi, rapidly executed, fall upon the arid waste. Throw more harps into the seething mass of white, hot music, and stop suddenly to introduce a pathetic solo for the violoncello. Repeat the ethereal and dramatic harp performance and allow the cauldron to boil furiously. When anything approaching a melody arises to the top skim it off instantly, and when every ingredient put into the pot loses the little character it originally possessed, proclaim the excellence of the composition in a grand bravura flourish and hand it to the critics to taste.

A year ago, while I was drinking afternoon tea in a London drawing room, says an English contemporary, entered a tall, lithe man, with coal black hair, beard and mustaches, restless visionary eyes, and a nervous mouth, twitching with half sad humor. I did not know him, but he magnetized me immediately. I intuitively divined the intensity of his personal force, the rich radiance of his character, the passionate idiosyncrasy of his soul. At that time Zionism was a mere shibboleth to me, one of the husks that are blown about the social and political highway. But the moment I saw this modern Moses, this practical prophet, Zionism became a vivid reality. For I recognized in him at once one of those apostles who work miracles by the power of their will and the empire of their egoism. At that time Herzl could not speak a word of English. After a few commonplaces he drifted away again, leaving me profoundly interested in his romantic genius. He had done nothing, said nothing, but he had been himself. Now, the man who can be himself in a drawing room is rare. And this man's self was so bizarre, so disturbing, so strange, that I caught myself wondering at its persistence in my mind. Why should I keep in my memory so clear a picture of Herzl when so many other men and women fade out of it like shadows of shadows?

Well, the other day I met Herzl again in another drawing room—the drawing room of the Hotel Cecil. Here it was I who drifted in, and the first thing that disentangled itself from the rout of men and women was the old restless visionary gaze that had haunted me before. The Jewish leader was holding a kind of levée, with lyrical interludes in the shape of songs by his Hungarian compatriot, Mlle. Aurelia Revy, a young prima donna who has won golden praise with the Carl Rosa Opera Company and at Covent Garden. My talk with Herzl was laced with musical outbursts. He expounded his gorgeous dreams to the sound of airs by Wagner, Schubert, Bach and Gounod. I think the music was as worthy of the dreams as the dreams were worthy of the music. If all idealist politics were conducted thus, if all humanitarian visions were set to music, the world would not be so drab and dull.

I was astonished to find that Herzl had learned to speak English with wonderful fluency. Now and then he falls back on a charming Latinism (such as "avitate" for "avoid"), but he expresses himself with surprising lucidity. The dominant note in his idealism is his confidence. He has faith in his faith. He believes through walls of difficulty. And this imaginative prophet has in him a granite basis of common sense. He keeps his visions well in leash, and prefers to talk of the hard, practical side of his vast scheme for leading the people of Israel back to the Promised Land.

It is a potent force, this new pride of race which Herzl has rekindled. I was struck by the passionate energy with which he and his comrades protested against the injustice of judging the Jews by their black sheep. The core and heart of the Zionist movement is its canonization of the Jew as a Jew, its glorification of the Jew's historic heritage, its call to the Jew to emerge from his subterranean hiding places and to stand before the world as a racial unity. Zangwill put this all in a parable. "The Jew in the past," he said, "has acted like the ostrich. He has buried his head in the sand, with the natural result that the world has been tempted to kick the most prominent part of his anatomy. Some influential Jews prefer to continue these tactics. But we think the time has come to stand erect."

And as Mlle. Revy sang some of her own wild Hungarian folksongs, I could not help thinking that there is more dynamic force in this Jewish renascence than the Gentile imagines. For the Jews, above all races, are idealists. If this great ideal took fire and blazed through their ranks, who shall say where it would end? But the men who are organizing it are very prudent. Herzl deprecates wild and nebulous aims. He prefers to keep the movement on the practical line of an agricultural and industrial colony. Yet, in his restless, visionary eyes there is a loftier dream, a more splendid conception, the immortal image of Israel a nation, and not the least of the nations of the earth. "Meine Ruh' ist hin."

In Tolstoy, says Andrew D. White in the Idler we see a man who, nourished in and on Russia is a narrow and fantastic teacher, and a man of genius denouncing all science, and commending what he calls "faith"; urging a return to a state of nature, which is simply Rousseau modified by misreadings of the New Testament; repudiating marriage, though himself most happily married, and the father of sixteen children; holding that Æschylus and Dante and Shakespeare were no great in literature, and making of some obscure writer a literary idol; holding that Michael Angelo and Raphael were not great in sculpture and painting, yet insisting on the eminence of sundry unknown artists who have painted brutally; holding that Beethoven, Händel, Mozart and Haydn were not great in music, but that some unknown performer, outside any healthful musical evolution has given us the music of the future; declaring Napoleon to have had no genius, but presenting Kutusoff as a military ideal; loathing science—that organized knowledge which has done more than all else to bring us out of mediæval cruelty into a better world—and extolling a "faith" which

The National Conservatory of Music of America, 128 East Seventeenth Street NEW YORK.

JEANNETTE M. THURBER, PRESIDENT.

Artistic Faculty, consisting of { RAFAEL JOSEFFY, ADELE MARGULIES, LEOPOLD LICHTENBERG, LEO SCHULZ, HENRY T. FINCK, MAX SPICKER, CHARLES HEINROTH, AND OTHERS.

SUMMER TERM BEGINS IN MAY.
ADMISSION DAILY. . . . . .

has always been the most effective pretext for bloodshed and oppression.

The long, slow, everyday work of developing a better future for his countrymen is to be done by others far less gifted than Tolstoy. His paradoxes will be forgotten; but his devoted life, his noble thonghts and his lofty ideals will, as centuries roll on, more and more give life and light to the new Russia.

A story which comes from Rome makes it evident not only that the Pope is in full possession of all his intellectual faculties, but that he has also a very delightful sense of humor. It appears that a certain French gentleman, whose social qualities are very charming but whose life is perhaps not all that it ought to be, quite frequently enjoys the privilege of an informal chat with His Holiness, to whom he is in many ways persona grata. At one of these interviews not long ago the Pope, forgetting, perhaps, that times have changed since he was young, and as a mark of special favor, proffered his open snuff box to his guest. "Thank you," said the Frenchman, with a bow of declination, "I haven't that particular vice." "Ah," said His Holiness, smiling with an arch benevolence, "if it really were a vice you would be sure to have it."

Louis Elbel's Success.

THE journals of South Bend, Ind., are enthusiastic concerning the European success of Louis Elbel, a young pianist who won distinctions in his graduate and post-graduate courses at the Chicago Musical College, and studied elsewhere in this country with prominent musicians, including Alberto Jonás. Mr. Elbel played in Leipsic, Germany, recently, and he has accepted important engagements for next season. But let an editorial, which appeared in a South Bend paper, explain these interesting developments:

The brilliant success achieved by Louis Elbel on his introduction to the musical world of Leipsic has been heralded to the people of South Bend and his hundreds of friends and admirers in all parts of the country. Nowhere, of course, was it hailed with such general pleasure and satisfaction as in South Bend, the city of his birth, and the scene of his early labors and triumphs. * * * Though precocious as a child, Louis never posed as a phenomenon, but, possessing the genius of the art, he labored persistently and intelligently, and his present distinction is an example of what may be accomplished by a combination of these two qualities. * * * Two years ago the time arrived for him to seek the cultivated centres of Europe, and Leipsic was selected as the one in which an ambitious student might most likely achieve the distinction desired. Since then he has been constantly under the instruction of Prof. Martin Krauser, one of the most noted piano teachers in the world, and to whose unerring estimate of his capacity Louis owes much with respect to his rapid and symmetrical development. His acceptance as a soloist at the Leipsic Zoological Garden was a pronounced evidence of the high estimation in which he was held before public trial, and the highest compliment it is possible for a graduate to receive. * * *. South Bend (Ind.) News, July 7, 1901.

REMINISCENCES OF BALFE.

OF our few English operatic composers Michael Balfe, a Hibernian, claims respectful notice, although almost all his operas are on the dusty shelf, while the poorest perhaps of all, "The Bohemian Girl," continues to please the "British public." Balfe, a baritone vocalist, used to sing in his own operas, and the writer heard him in that capacity at Drury Lane Theatre in December, 1837, when his opera "Joan of Arc" was produced. Balfe also sang at the same theatre in the spring of 1838 as Papageno in Mozart's opera "The Magic Flute." Bunn's English version was a miserable travesty of the original German. What the Italians call lazzi were allowed to favorite artists, and old Lablache often used or abused them at the Italian opera. No great joke, in the Serenade Scene of "Don Giovanni," to open the window and cry "good night"; but his foolish flatterers always laughed! Balfe, in Papageno's second air, had to sing the line "where learned sages say" (but he altered the words to "learned asses"), and hereupon a few fools in the pit made an idiotic cachinnation! Balfe used to write his operas with other composers' scores by his side, and unblushingly borrowed many of the ripieno orchestral accompaniments. He enraged classical critics by introducing that dreadful instrument the cornet-à-pistons, the terror of dancers at evening parties; he told a friend on the night of a new opera that "he was going to make a thundering noise." And he did so.

Balfe gave singing lessons. One of his (male) pupils came one afternoon, and in bad voice. So Balfe exclaimed: "You can't sing at all, go upstairs and talk to the girls (Balfe's daughters) till you are less husky."

In 1841 there was a controversy between Balfe and Henry Phillips, the baritone vocalist, about some professional lady with whom Phillips was evidently in love. The writer read the printed correspondence, and an abstract was sent to the Times newspaper, but the editor, Tom Barnes, declined to publish the paper, as scandalous, or, at least, unedifying, and possibly defamatory or libelous.

Reference has been made to Henry Phillips, a once famous baritone. He sustained several leading parts at Drury Lane and the English opera houses, or Lyceum, in operas of Balfe, Barnett, F. Romer and other English composers. He had to mount on stilts in order to personify the giant Polyphemus, when Macready brought out Händel's "Acis and Galatea" at old Drury Lane in February, 1842, and in the prelude or recitative to the air in G minor, "O Ruddier Than the Cherry," took F natural below the lines—just out of the baritone register by the way—and the gaping pittites applauded the low note accordingly. A friend, hardly a musical one, opined that this note was "the lowest D"! The writer saw Phillips for the last time in 1846 at a morning concert held at the Princess' Theatre in Oxford street, by a well-known and excellent musician of the day, Mr. Blewitt, a capital composer of elegant comic songs. Poor Henry Phillips accompanied his own weak song, "The Emigrant Ship," with a refrain, "God Be With Them All the Way"; but he did not raise a hand. The song was sadly tame, and the performance quite betrayed a broken down artist. Sad to record and remember these declines and falls! The same remark is applicable to poor Giulia Grisi, whom the writer heard sing out of tune in an ordinary ballad after her retirement from the opera house.—"A. M." in Musical Standard.

Melanie de Wienzkowska.

MADAME DE WIENZKOWSKA, the well-known pianist and teacher, is spending her vacation in the White Mountains in New Hampshire.

Even while resting from a busy and successful season Madame Wienzkowska is preparing for next season's work with vigor and enthusiasm, and her popularity and ability as a musician and teacher will be even more decided the coming year.

Armed with the indorsement of Leschetizky, who took an undivided interest in her, she is well fitted to successfully conduct the classes and recitals which she announces for the coming season. More particulars of these will be given later.

BROOKE'S MARINE BAND.—The Cincinnati Enquirer, in a recent issue referred thus to the Brooke concerts at the Zoological Garden:

"The usual two concerts will be given by the Brooke Chicago Marine Band to-day, and the patrons of the garden can look forward to enjoying a musical treat, as Conductor Brooke has arranged two excellent programs, containing numbers which will please all, as there will be classical, popular and rag-time selections on each one."

E. PRESSON MILLER.—E. Presson Miller, for a number of years the efficient director of the voice department of the Metropolitan College of Music, now known as the American Institute of Music, has severed his connection with that institution, and will open a private studio, No. 601 and 602 Carnegie Hall, in September. Mr. Miller, after one of the most successful seasons of his career, will rest during August and resume his teaching about September 15. His correct and careful training of the voice has made him popular. His pupils are meeting with success in New York and all parts of the country.

EMIL HOFMANN.—Emil Hofmann, the distinguished baritone, who made many and notable successes in America last season in oratorio and recital work, is now resting in the Black Forest. After sailing for Europe last April, Mr. Hofmann filled a number of important engagements in England, Scotland and on the Continent. At the end of a month's recreation in Germany Mr. Hofmann will go to Bayreuth for the Wagner music dramas, then to Munich for the opening of the Prince Regent Theatre. Before returning to America in October for the coming season, when he will be under the sole direction of Loudon G. Charlton, Mr. Hofmann will make a concert tour of Germany and Austria with Alvin Kranich, the pianist.

Pears'

Pears' soap does nothing but cleanse, it has no medical properties; but it brings the color of health and health itself. Give it time.

Sold all over the world.

An indispensable toilet luxury for professional people.

NORDICA

Season 1901-1902.

RECITALS ONLY.

SEE LATER ANNOUNCEMENTS.

LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, NEW YORK.

Mr. PLUNKET GREENE, Basso-Cantante,

In America March, April, May, 1902.

All communications regarding Terms and Dates to be addressed to

GEO. MAXWELL, 9 East 17th Street, New York City.

Mme. Charlotte MACONDA

Most Versatile and Brilliant American Soprano.

Re-engaged for New England Festivals.

(THIRD CONSECUTIVE SEASON).

Scored a Succession of Sensational Triumphs last Season in New York, Boston, Washington, St. Louis and other leading cities.

Oratorio, Festival, Concert and Recital Engagements now Booking.

Sole.... Management, LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, NEW YORK.

CORRECT BREATHING.

A Lecture on Correct Breathing; Its Importance in Connection With Work on the Clavier and Piano, Delivered by Frank E. Rebarer, at Clavier Hall, July 25, 1901.

AFTER thoroughly explaining and illustrating the principles of correct breathing, and exhibiting absolute control of the breath from a standpoint of ease, comfort, efficacy and power, Mr. Rebarer said:

This lecture is given for the purpose of impressing upon you the necessity of breathing correctly, so that as students you may secure nerve force and mental control of the same, and free yourselves from rigidity, the foe of pianists. The Clavier, as I understand it, is a device by the use of which is secured correct movement of muscle, and perfect proper control over the same by the mind, so that when called upon the entire physical forces respond to mental direction, the mind having become conscious of its power over the muscles, and to what extent that power may be applied. Its object is the education of pianists in the principles of touch and technic, and application of the same in piano playing. Co-ordinate condition of the mental and physical power is obtained by training the muscles through mental concentration, upon the physical movement involved in the performance of the exercises attached to Clavier work, this process to be continued with a thorough understanding of the principles surrounding it, until a full, practical realization of the principles is established and consequent results secured.

If correct breathing obtains during practice at the Clavier the student secures repose and thoughtful work results with permanent benefit.

To do anything well, there must be a healthy condition of the mental and physical processes involved in the action necessary for the accomplishment of the result in view. We will therefore consider the importance of correct breathing as a means of strengthening and preserving the mental and physical powers. If we wish to live we must breathe. Nature, for fear perhaps that at some time we might forget to breathe, has so constructed us that we cannot refuse to breathe, because, mark you, when we try not to breathe by setting the breathing muscles so that they will not move, as soon as the oxygen within us is exhausted we lose power to mentally control the muscles, and they involuntarily fly to their work and air rushes in. The conscious mental faculties lose control under such circumstances and are never in perfect condition or possess absolute control over nerve and physical force as long as correct breathing is interfered with. Then, if it is imperatively necessary that we breathe to preserve our faculties, and rejuvenate them, so to speak, by the oxygen carried to them in the act of breath taking, it is but reasonable logic to assert that if the oxygen furnished is pure, and the quantity is large and sufficient, the better the working of the mental faculties. In precisely the same manner is to be considered the necessity of supplying oxygen and its life giving properties for the benefit of the physical processes involved in nerve and muscular development.

Then to live we must have oxygen, and we obtain oxygen by breathing. Life giving properties required by the mind and physical processes come to us through the breath and are maintained thereby. If we breathe correctly we give to the muscles elasticity, the true condition for the development of strength, establish a control over such elasticity by concentration of the mind, and are thus enabled to direct consciously our forces. The instant the mind becomes overanxious in the prosecution of the effort employed, we lose control of the breath taking forces, conscious power is lost and muscular rigidity follows.

If the breathing muscles become tensioned we lose mental control over the nervous processes, and elasticity of muscle departs, followed by different conditions than those we intended should prevail in the prosecution of the effort. Every performer has doubtless at some time experienced this without perhaps understanding thoroughly the cause. For successful results there must be co-ordinate working of the mind and physical processes; breathing is the result of, or let us say involves, muscular action, and this action should be trained so that the breathing muscles at work may be brought to a condition of elasticity and strength in keeping with the other muscles, and thus support all physical movement. This is an important principle and should be thoroughly understood and appreciated in the training of muscle for any purpose whatsoever." To the imperfect training of the breathing muscles is due in a great measure the nervous and uncertain feeling which comes to the performer at the very time when he needs strength and endurance and perfect control of his forces.

Breathing exercises should be practiced apart from the Clavier or piano. The principle underlying should be understood and applied during every exercise, and this done under mental control until the habit of breathing correctly is established, and it becomes a physical law always the same by day and by night.

If during practice at the Clavier or piano strained or effort full breathing is felt, the student should by sensation, and pleasant sensation at that, remove such strain or effort by applying the principle taught in correct breathing exercises. No one can meet the requirements as regards technic in connection with the piano unless the physical processes are trained on correct lines, and a necessary adjunct to proper training of muscles is correct breathing.

There should be no stiffening of the body, not for an instant, in drawing forth large, full chords from the instrument. Elasticity must ever prevail and reserved force be maintained during the performance, no matter how great the endurance called for. Tension of the breathing muscles prevents elasticity throughout and renders impossible the maintenance of reserve force. Contraction of muscle under such tension exhausts the breath. Expansion of the body under correct breathing holds the breath and supports and strengthens the forces employed.

Some of the faults which prevent good work at the piano are:

Tension of muscles of the tongue and larynx, causing dryness of the throat and nervous strain.

Stiffening at the sides of the body, especially in the delivery of large forceful chords, and consequent rigidity of spine; result, heavy unmusical tone.

Uplifting of the shoulders and tension about the neck and contiguous muscles, causing discomfort the relieving of which brings, as a rule, uncontrolled relaxation and consequent interruption of forceful legato tonal effect.

A common and most pernicious fault is the stiffening of legs, spine and sides in manipulating the pedals.

By making correct breathing a purpose and constantly keeping such in mind the student becomes habituated to a state of suppleness. His body takes on a state of expansion. His breathing becomes full and deep. His muscles grow elastic. He steps high as he walks, and feels a pleasure in all physical action. This pleasure, a mental sensation, becomes centralized as it were in the mind, and eventually the artist is never satisfied without it. His life and enjoyment lie in expansion and curves, and he becomes adverse to angles and contraction under tension. He objects to a contracted feeling at the neck and throat and frees himself of this discomfort. His sides expand and move with freedom; the shoulders are at ease and elasticity dominates spine and limbs.

In this condition he feels the pleasurable sensation of mental control over all physical processes, and can exercise at will every muscle of the body and feel their efficiency from his toes to his finger tips.

There was a man, I knew him, in a city where I resided, who taught as he called it, "Ambidexterity." He wrote at the same time with both hands and both feet, holding the pens between the thumb and first and second fingers of each hand and between the large and two adjoining toes of each foot. His life was a constant application of mental control over muscle. His respiration was to my mind as perfect as could be desired. The tension of one muscle would have destroyed co-ordinate action, and writing as he did would have become an impossibility.

When elastic action of muscle becomes habitual, flexibility easily follows, and all movement begets additional strength and endurance. Tension departs, and in the greatest efforts absolute control, which means nerve force in reserve, obtains. In this condition effort is resolved into pleasurable sensation, and the soul is permitted to influence the mind of the performer.

The emotions engendered by the subject, that is the composition, are allowed full play, and are given forth by the performer to the delight of himself and the audience. The piano to my mind is not a lifeless instrument. I prefer to consider it full of vibrations (tone), ready to respond to the will of the player. When the co-ordinate mental and physical action is correct the soul can speak unhindered and the piano gratefully yields its best, its most perfect tone under such conditions. It ever demonstrates the will and mood of the performer, and becomes as it were a part of himself and not an instrument constructed for the exhibition of the dexterity of the player, and to be, as is often the case, punished by crashing blows, the result of jerky, angular contortions.

Miss Emma Thursby is taking a much needed rest after her long season of teaching. She is stopping in the Adirondacks at the Willey House, Hurricane, Essex County N. Y., and later in the season she will go to Greenacre Eliot, Me., where two of her pupils, Miss Grace Clare and Miss Rebecca Cornett, are singing.

THIS SPACE IS TO BE DEVOTED TO THE INSERTION OF

PORTRAITS OF SUCCESSFUL

BOWMAN PUPILS

Mr. BOWMAN is assigning LESSON HOURS for next season. Early application is suggested. He may be addressed until SEPT. 5th at HIS SUMMER HOME, Grand View Cottage, SQUIRREL ISLAND, Coast of MAINE

E. M. BOWMAN. Piano and Theory Studio: Steinway Hall, New Yo.

Organist and Conductor Baptist Temple Choir, Brookly

THE ONLY "LESCHETIZKY" SCHOOL OF PIANO PLAYING IN AMERICA.

Named after PROF. THEO. LESCHETIZKY, of Vienna, by his special permission.

Mme. DE WIENZKOWSKA, DIRECTRESS AND FOUNDER.

PROF. LESCHETIZKY'S Sole Principal Assistant in this country, formerly in Vienna; also Concert Pianiste.

CARNEGIE HALL. Address Communications: 147 W. Eighty-second St, NEW YORK CITY.

LESCHETIZKY—"Mme. Wienzkowska's success as a piano virtuosa and teacher is eminent."
PADEREWSKI—"Mme. Wienzkowska is a finished pianiste and possesses an extraordinary ability of communicating to others a complete knowledge of her art."
HANS RICHTER—"I consider you an artist of finest esprit and taste and a representative of a most solid school."

The Carlisle-Carr Concert Bureau and Greater Britain Musical Agency

(The Foreign and Colonial Bureau),

108 New Bond Street, LONDON, W., ENGLAND.

Opera, Oratorio, Concerts, At Homes, Garden Parties, Children Parties.

Sole control of the "Artists' Popular Concerts."

Telegraphic Address: "PANDECT," London.

MR. WHITNEY TEW

In America

November and December, 1901

The London Press says of Mr. Tew's singing:

Times—"Mr. Tew displayed a magnificent voice and great dignity of style."

Telegraph—"Mr. Tew possesses a fine voice of cultured style; he is a singer of high quality and a musician of broad sympathies and wide research."

Express—"Revealed the possession of a prodigious memory, a sonorous voice and a wealth of vigor."

Daily News—"Manifestly an experienced vocalist, endowed with a powerful voice of agreeable quality. He is a linguist and his artistic taste and judgment demonstrated by his excellent choice of a program."

Musical Courier (London)—"A hearty, straightforward delivery, which was all the more charming because of his admirable diction and pure intonation."

Lady—"His songs were admirably chosen, and the beautiful quality of his voice and his good method were best shown in Brahms' Liebeslieder."

Sunday Times—"Displayed a resonant low baritone voice and a refined method."

Musical Standard—"Eminently successful as an interpretive artist, for he sang with much feeling and intuition into the dramatic and poetic meaning of his text. His voice is a fine organ."

Musical News—"Mr. Tew has a good bass voice which he uses always with finished art and discretion. That he possesses an extensive repertory culled from the best music written for the bass voice was evidenced."

Morning Post—"Mr. Tew's deep bass voice was well suited to the music of the Landgraf." (National Grand Opera Co., in Tannhauser.)

The Stage—"Mr. Tew gave a strong and impressive embodiment of the Cardinal."

The Era—"Mr. Whitney Tew, the author, gave a strikingly characteristic reading of Richelieu, his acting in the downfall scene being especially impressive and touching."

Field—"That fine bass singer, Mr. Whitney Tew, gave the first of his recitals last week. He possesses a powerful voice of beautiful quality which can stand work. He has both voice and brains."

Anglo-American—"Mr. Tew's fine voice was in the best of form. He is to be commended for his persistent fidelity to a really superior class of music."

Sole Representative

Henry Wolfsohn

131 East 17th Stree

NEW YORK

BUFFALO MUSIC.

BUFFALO, July 27, 1901.

A FINE concert was given at the Temple of Music July 26 by the Arion Singing Society, of Newark, N. J., under the direction of Carl Heller, assisted by the Tenor Emil Zeh, Violinist Carl Schoner and William J. Gomph, organist and accompanist. Following is the program:

Military Overture.....Mendelssohn
W. J. Gomph.
Morgen im Wald.....Hegar
Roslein wann bluehst du auf.....Oregert
Arion Singing Society.
Seventh Concerto.....De Beriot
Carl Schoner, Violin.
An die junc Geliebte.....Neubner
Ich hab einen trauten Liebgesell.....Winkler
Nachtlied.....Engelsberg
Arion Singing Society.
Organ solo, Minute and Trio, Canzona.....Wolstenholme
William J. Gomph.
Tenor solo, Du bist mein All.....Bradsky
Emil Zeh.
Im Wald.....Leu
Nachtzauber.....Storch
Arion Singing Society.
Language of Flowers.....H. Carri
Mazurka.....Wieniawski
Carl Schoner, Violin.
Hymne an die Madonna.....Kremser
Chorus, Tenor, Harp and Organ.

It is wonderful what such small societies often accomplish. There were thirty-five singers, about evenly balanced as to tenors and basses, singing all their numbers à capella, with good attack and fine shading. Specially fine was Mr. Shoner's Seventh Concerto for the violin, by De Beriot, accompanied by Mr. Gomph. Emil Zeh, of whose singing a more explicit account will be given next week, sang beautifully. Being recalled, he gave "The Cavalleria" "Ave Maria." His is a voice of rare quality.

The multitudes that gather daily in the Temple, or at the band stands, are greatly pleased at the good music they enjoy free of charge, and it is the general opinion that the directors have done a good work to make the music a special feature. The Sixty-fifth Regiment, N. G. N. Y., Band, Conductor John Powell, play daily, likewise the Seventy-fourth Regiment, N. G. N. Y., Band, Justus G. Miller, conductor, while the Havana Municipal Police Band, under the direction of Captain Guillermo M. Tomas, gather around them an enthusiastic crowd.

This band was sent to the Pan-American Exposition by the municipality of Havana as a special compliment to the people of the United States. Without exception it is the finest military band at the Pan-American. This morning's program was:

March, To Buffalo.....Lopez
Rienzi Overture.....Wagner
Mefistofele.....Boets
Uncle Sam's Land.....G. M. Tomas

Next week's number of THE MUSICAL COURIER will give a complete article about this famous band; also of Miss Annie Peat, Wisconsin's brilliant organist, who assisted at the ceremonies at the Temple, this being Wisconsin Day.

The Royal Bavarian Infantry Band are playing at Alt Nuremberg, under the direction of Jacob Peupus. Although a much smaller band in point of excellence, they are a close second to the Havana Band.

On account of delay in receiving pictures promised my account of organ recitals and different singers will not be published till next week. The article will date from July 15.

MRS. KATHERINE RIESBERG.

Amy Murray in Nova Scotia.

MISS AMY MURRAY has achieved remarkable musical success in her Scottish recitals. Following are additional criticisms from the press of Nova Scotia:

Not often does it fall to the lot of Pictonians to have the opportunity of hearing an entertainer of the stamp of Miss Amy Murray, who appeared in Advocate Hall Wednesday evening. Quite fittingly has she been termed "the Queen of Scottish singers." Miss Murray has an extremely rich voice and knows how to use it to good effect. In a pleasant, informal manner she made brief introductory remarks concerning most of her songs, which added much to the pleasure of the entertainments, and appealed with special emphasis to those of Scottish descent. Miss Murray was deserving of a much larger audience.—The Advocate, Pictou, N. S., July 19, 1901.

A good-sized audience attended the concert in Orpheus Hall last night, given by Miss Murray, of New York, who well merits her reputation. Aside from her engaging personality, Miss Murray provided an entertainment which found its way into marked favor with every listener. Not only did she sing the songs of Scotland delightfully, but several times during the evening she explained her songs and told thrilling little bits of Scottish history, which added an intelligent interest to the pleasure they gave. Her spirited rendering of "Bonnie Dundee," "Young Lochinvar" and "Hey, Johnnie Cope," will live in the memory of all who heard her. The old version of "The Flowers of the Forest," "The Rowan Tree" and "Will Ye No' Come Back Again" were among the gems of the evening. In several of her songs Miss Murray accompanied herself on the harp, a quaint, old-fashioned one, a model, as she told her audience of the harp of Mary Queen of Scots, which is now in the South Kensington Museum.

Before the last number on the program Miss Murray begged permission to retire for a few moments, as she wished to sing her last song in costume.

The distant cry of "Caller Herrin!" announced the re-entrance of Miss Murray in the quaint holiday dress of a Newhaven fishwife, bearing the "creel" upon her back. As might be expected, she entered thoroughly into the spirit of this delightful song, and its rendering was dramatic and full of color. At its close Miss Murray gave the quaint fishwives' toast, "Here's tae Oors an' Oors." "Which will ye have first," she then asked, "God Save the King!" or "Auld Lang Syne?" the audience choosing in favor of the latter. "Then up wi' ye!" she said in her spirited way, and standing, all joined in singing the old favorite and thus ended one of the pleasantest entertainments we have been present at for a long time.—Acadian Recorder, Halifax, N. S., June 15, 1901.

Miss Murray, the gifted singer of Scottish melodies, made her first appearance before an Antigonish audience in the College Hall on last Tuesday evening. A good house was in attendance, but doubtless had the public anticipated such a delightful entertainment standing room would have been at a premium. Miss Murray charmed her audience no less by her pleasing personality than by her rich and musical voice. She gave a short history of each song, which made the entertainment doubly interesting. A much enjoyed feature was the rendering of two Gaelic songs with clarsach accompaniment. The clarsach in Miss Murray's possession is an exact copy of the harp used by Mary Queen of Scots in Holyrood Palace. The original is now in Kensington Museum. It is difficult to say which of the many songs rendered by Miss Murray gave the greatest general pleasure, but what pleased us best was "Bonnie Dundee," "Hey, Johnny Cope," and "Alastair MacAlastair," the last mentioned being given in response to a hearty encore. Miss Murray gave as the closing song "Caller Herrin'," in the holiday dress of a Newhaven fishwife. This splendid character song was a decidedly good feature. Miss Mary Scott made an excellent accompanist. It is understood that Miss Murray may again be heard in Antigonish ere long. A crowded house should greet her next appearance.

On Wednesday morning Miss Murray sang several songs in the convent hall to the great pleasure of the sisters and pupils.—Weekly Greetings, Antigonish, N. S., June 25, 1901.

The audience which welcomed the talented Scottish vocalist, Miss Murray, on her second visit to Antigonish Tuesday night, at McDonald's Hall, was one which, for critical knowledge of Scottish music and poetry, might delight any performer. Clergymen and other admirers of the "auld Scots' songs" were present from various and distant parts, and it is not too much to say that they enjoyed Miss Murray's singing and acting immensely. Between song and story and impersonations of humorous or typical characters, no one could be otherwise than delighted and instructed by Miss Murray's performance. Her recital of the burning of Castle Tirrim by Captain Clan Ronald (Aillean dearg) on the occasion of his departure to join Dundee before the battle of Sheriffmuir was one that recalled memories of a past now almost forgotten. Captain Clan Ronald was killed at Sheriffmuir, and in him died perhaps the noblest and most chivalrous of the long line of chieftains of his house. Miss Payne, daughter of Mr. Payne, of the St. John Sun, accompanied Miss Murray on the piano. Although a very young girl, she is a decidedly clever musician.—The Casket, Antigonish, N. S.

Adele Laeis Baldwin at Bar Harbor.

MRS. BALDWIN is spending the summer at Bar Harbor, Me. She was engaged to sing at an entertainment given at the Newport House by the Yersin Sisters on Wednesday last. A daughter of Mrs. Stanley Mortimer, of New York, gave a recitation. She is very young, but shows great talent. The Bar Harbor paper says: "Mrs. Baldwin, who is a very handsome woman, wore a beautiful gown, and the audience was most enthusiastic over her singing. She has a glorious contralto voice, and she sang her part in "La Ballade du Désespéré," by Bemberg, with rare taste and expression; her enunciation was perfect."

Mrs. Baldwin has been engaged to sing at a number of private musicales to be given next month.

Mrs. Julie Wyman, the contralto, was on a visit to this city this week.

SOUSA AND HIS BAND

Office: Astor Court Building, New York.

Eighteenth Semi-Annual and Fifth Transcontinental Tour.

Sunday, July 7, to Monday, September 2, INCLUSIVE,

MANHATTAN BEACH, NEW YORK CITY.

GREGORY HAST.
AMERICA ONLY NOVEMBER AND DECEMBER, 1901.

Mr. Gregory
Hast
Famous English Tenor.

Of the St. James, Hall Popular, London Ballad, Queen's Hall Oratorio, Crystal Palace Saturday and Royal Albert Hall Concerts.

Sole Direction:
Loudon G. Charlton,
Carnegie Hall, New York.

JOS. S. BAERNSTEIN
BASSO

51 EAST 64TH STREET,
NEW YORK CITY.

The Brilliant Pianiste

Season 1901-1902.

JESSIE SHAY.

Exclusive Management:
LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, New York.

BAILLY

THIS IS TO { MUSICAL CLUBS / MUSICAL SOCIETIES / MUSICAL MANAGERS } and Speculators in Musical Attractions.

If you want to please your people, fill your houses and make money, then engage ARTISTS THAT DRAW—artists that the public REALLY want to hear.

Young WM. WORTH BAILEY,
the Blind Violinist, is TRULY a GREAT artist.

ELIZABETH NORTHROP, Soprano
EDWIN M. SHONERT, Pianist
} Assisting Artists.

A Season of 50 Concerts is being arranged by
R. E. JOHNSTON,
SUMMER ADDRESS, 257 West 92d Street, New York City,

Whom you should write for particulars.

NOTE—Send for Booklet and Souvenir.

EVERETT PIANO USED EXCLUSIVELY.

NOTES ABOUT THE MUSIC CLUBS AND SOCIETIES.

THE prospectus of the Saturday Club, of Sacramento, announces a piano recital by Fannie Bloomfield-Zeisler, for April 12, 1902. Some years ago Madame Zeisler played for the Saturday Club, and the enthusiasm of the members at the time was something to be remembered, and while the coming recital is some eight months off, many in looking over the prospectus of the forthcoming season predict that Madame Zeisler's appearance will be the event of the year.

A new musical club with thirty-five members was recently organized at the residence of Mrs. H. P. Wells, at Paducah, Ky. The hostess was elected president, and the other officers are Harry Gilbert, vice-president; E. J. Paxton, recording secretary; Miss Ada Brazelton, corresponding secretary; Emmet Bagby, treasurer; Miss Virginia Lesh, librarian; Mrs. James Weille, chairman of program committee. The president appointed a committee to frame by-laws and a constitution, and Miss Brazelton was elected chairman of this committee. The title of the new organization is the Paducah Musical Club. As both men and women are eligible to membership, it promises to become a real power in the town.

The Chaminade Club, of Los Angeles, held its closing meeting on July 5, at the home of Miss Helen Day. An interesting program was presented. The club will resume its musical sessions on September 4.

The Ladies' Thursday Musicale, of Minneapolis, Minn., was the beneficiary of a concert given on July 19 at Lake Harriet, Minn., by the Banda Rossa.

Mrs. W. A. Titsworth entertained at her home July 10 the members of the Matinee Musical Club, of Montrose, Pa. "Chaminade" and "Saint-Saëns" were the subjects for the day. The papers and illustrations were given by members.

The Troy (N. Y.) Vocal Society recently gave a successful excursion to Lake Champlain.

About 150 of the members of the Arion Singing Society, accompanied by their families, went on an excursion to the Pan-American last month.

The Cincinnati (Ohio) Maennerchor has elected the following officers: William Schaefer, director; Fred. Seitz, assistant and president; J. Blankenbuehler, vice-president; H. Luebbert, financial secretary; Jacob Marqua, recorder; Charles Wichman, Sr., treasurer; George Wichman, librarian; William Blankenbuehler, assistant, and the following committee on music: William Avril, Henry Zimpelman, Jacob Marqua and J. Blankenbuehler.

The Concordia Singing Society, of St. Paul, Minn., will soon begin rehearsing "The Emperor and the Abbot," a new opera written by the society's conductor, Mr. Harmsen.

The Monday Musical Club, of St. Paul, held its closing meeting for this season on July 22, and a feature of the program was the outline of the prospectus for next season.

GREGORY HAST.—"Onaway, Awake Beloved," the beautiful tenor solo from Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha," is more or less familiar to American audiences, but its full musical and artistic value will probably be enjoyed for the first time when Gregory Hast sings it in his forthcoming tournée in this country. Mr. Taylor and Mr. Hast are warm personal friends, and the famous English tenor, for whom the lovely song in the "Wedding Feast" was especially written, sang it at one of his Queen's Hall recitals to the composer's accompaniment. Mr. Hast's American tour, which will be limited to November and December, is solely under the direction of Loudon G. Charlton.

Asheville, N. C., Summer School.

THE fourth season opened last week, at Asheville College, with pupils in attendance from nearly all of the Southern States. Naturally, the department of music has enrolled the largest number of pupils, there being a goodly number to receive instruction on the piano, under Professors Babcock and Riesberg; these are all hard at work on solos, studies, ensemble music, &c. Miss Estelle Harris and Percy Hemus, teachers of vocal music, have a number of excellent voices in training, and Claude Trevlyn, the violin teacher, has some young ladies who play exceptionally well. The harmony classes are well attended and there is much ensemble playing, art and organ also having students. The pupils in music have the constant stimulus of their teachers' presence and criticism and there is much mutual interest and goodly fellowship. Some of the more advanced pupils will later be heard in concert.

The school of expression and the department of physical culture has been flourishing, and the former especially has had a large attendance, giving many recitals, both by pupils and teachers. There is much activity at the college, with the practicing of the pupils on the piano, violin, voice, organ, &c., and all are animated with the desire to make unusual progress in the six weeks' course.

American School of Opera

Berkeley Lyceum
23 West 44th Street

WM. G. STEWART, Director. LAIRD EASTON, Secretary and Treasurer.

For prospectus and all information apply to Secretary.

NEW YORK, June 4, 1901.

MR. WILLIAM G. STEWART, Director American School of Opera, Berkeley Lyceum, New York City:

My Dear Mr. Stewart—We take this opportunity of complimenting you on the splendid practical results accomplished by your School of Opera during the first year of its existence and gladly bear testimony to its advantages as a training school for those desirous of following a professional career in opera.

We are more than pleased with the graduates of your institution who have become members of the Bostonians and will gladly avail ourselves in the future of the opportunity for engaging singers who have pursued a course of study under your direction. With best wishes always, Yours very sincerely.

W. H. MacDonald

Kindergarten Music Building.

The Original and Standard System of Kindergarten Music.

Kina K. Darlington

1069 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.

Mme. OGDEN CRANE.

The Art of Singing.

Special attention given to tone production. Founded on the pure Italian method. Sole teacher of Hattie Diamond Nathan, Edith Hutchins, Lillian Le Roy, Lillian Spitz and many others.

SUMMER SCHOOL:
Post Office Building, Asbury Park, N. J.,
From June 24 to September 14.
In New York Studio Thursdays,
3 East 14th Street,
Cor. Fifth Avenue, NEW YORK.

HERBERT WITHERSPOON

Opera, Oratorio, Concert, Recitals.

BASS.

For Terms, Dates, &c., address
Residence Studio: 202 West 78th St., New York.

REBECCA MACKENZIE

SOPRANO.

Available for Concert, Oratorio and Song Recitals.

Address FRED O. RENARD, Manager.
444 Central Park West, NEW YORK CITY

ALICE E. JOSEPH,

Late Private Secretary to Sir Augustus Harris.

THE OPERA AND CONCERT AGENCY,
7a Hanover Street, Regent Street, LONDON, England,
Authorized to represent all the Best Artists in the World!
ADVICE GRATIS.

Elizabeth Hazard

SOPRANO

Drawing Room Concerts
Song Recitals

Direction
Emile Levy
141 Fifth Ave.

Paris.

SCHOOL FOR ACTING.
EMIL BERTIN,
1er Régisseur de la Scène de l'Opera Comique.
Stage Practice. In Cast.
41 rue des Martyrs, Paris.

PROFESSOR OF FRENCH,
Special Method for Foreigners.
MLLE. MARIE FOURNAISE,
American reference. 29 Boulevard de Batignolles.

Mme. FLORENZA d'ARONA,
VOCAL PROFESSEUR,
5 rue Bassano, Paris.
Special sessions during the summer in REPERTOIRE AND INTERPRETATION.

LA VILLA VIOLETTE
TROCADERO,
22 Rue Raynouard. Mme. Fiessinger.
Assortment of rooms. Excellent table. Gardens.
All facilities of 'bus and tram.

FRENCH SCHOOL
M. DUMARTHERAY,
From Sounds to Literature, Pronunciation, Accent, Conversation.
(Opera.) 14 rue Taitbout.

MME. J. VIEUXTEMPS,
VOCAL PROFESSOR.
Classes and Private Lessons. Placing and Mending of Tones. 25 rue de Tocqueville (Monceau).

THE FRENCH LANGUAGE
Rapidly, easily and correctly acquired by KIMON'S PRACTICAL SYSTEM.
(3 francs, post free.)
Private lessons by M. D. Kimon,
10 rue Cambon, Paris.

MLLE. GRACE LEE HESS
SCHOOL.
Supplementary Education.
French Language Obligatory.
145 Avenue Victor Hugo, Paris.

BALDELLI,
ITALIAN BARITONE.
Théâtre Royal, Madrid. Professeur de Chant.
(Champs Elysées). 6 rue Euler, Paris.

Mme. ROGER-MICLOS,
PIANO—PARIS.
Elementary and Superior Class and Private Public Pupils' Concerts.
(l'Etoile.) 27 Avenue MacMahon.

Mme. ROSINE LABORDE,
PROF. DE CHANT.
62 rue de Ponthieu, Paris.

MISS JULIA KLUMPKE,
VIOLINISTE.
Pupil of MM. Eugene Ysaye and G. Rémy.
Concerts, Musicales, Lessons, Violin and Accompaniment. 10 rue Froidevaux, Paris.

MLLE. KIKINA,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
Ancienne Elève de MARCHESI.
100 Avenue de Villiers, Paris.

DELLE SEDIE, Paris.
Pure Italian Method. Complete course. Stage practice. Voice, lyric, declamation, languages, solfège, ensemble music, mise-en-scène.
Class and single lessons.
Regular course, three years. Terms moderate.
30 rue St. Petersbourg.

MLLE. MARTINI,
Artiste Opéra, Opéra Comique, Théâtre Lyrique, Professor of "Mime."
Silent Interpretation, Stage Business, Gesture, Pantomime, &c.
87 rue St. Lazare, Paris.

MLLE. NILANDE,
Authorized Teacher of the Yersin Phono-Rhythmic Method. French Diction. French Language.
(Av. Marceau). 37 rue de Chaillot.

INSTITUT MOZART.
Language. Complete Musical Education. Singing, Diction by best professors. Board and residence for pupils' comfort; quiet, convenient.
Apply to manager, Miss HEGEMANN,
7 rue du Commandant Riviere.

MME. ROBINSON DUFF,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
4 rue de la Renaissance l'Alma, Paris.

MME. MARIE ROZE,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT,
37 rue Joubert. Paris
Chaussée d'Antin,
Mise-en-scène. Ensemble practice in cast. on stage.

MME. IDA LURIG,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
French—Italian—German.
Specialty of German Songs and Oratorio.
(Trocadero) 5 rue Petrarque, Paris.

HOLMES COWPER
TENOR.
ADDRESS Kimball Hall OR
The Hamlin Co., CHICAGO

GENEVA (Switzerland) CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC
Established 1835. 1,200 Students. 60 Professors.
FERDINAND HELD, DIRECTOR.
The Conservatory embraces: Instrumental (comprising all solo and all instrumental Instruments), Voca Theory of Music, Harmony and Composition, Declamation Schools.
PRINCIPAL TEACHERS: Harmony, Composition, Theory, History of Music—MM. Otto Barblan, Jaque Dalcroze, Joseph Lauber, Kling, Combe, &c. PIANO—MM. Willy Rohborg, Schulz, Fricker, Eckert Mlles. Janiszevska, Fontannaz, Bovet, Lagier, Marcelnes, &c. VIOLIN—MM. Henri Martoan (Virtuosity Class for professionals (diplomas), Quintuor, Orchestra; Pahnke, Reymond, &c. SINGING—MM. Leopold Ketten, Alfonzo Dami, Mme. Brambilla-Ponchiolli, &c. ORGAN—Mr. Barblan 'CELLO—MM. Holzmann, Ad. Rehberg. FLUTE—Gessert, Krantz. OBOE—Rouge. TRUMPET—Renard. HARP—Tramonti. SOLFEGE—Kling, Mmes. Chassevaut, Terroux, Fuchs, Kunz. Winte Term begin September 2. Entrance Examination end of August. Inscriptions at any time fro August 19. For full details and prospectus apply to the direction.

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS.

MUSICAL COURIER.

A WEEKLY JOURNAL DEVOTED TO MUSIC AND THE MUSIC TRADES.

Twenty-Second Year. Price 10 Cents. Subscription, $5.00. Foreign $6.00.—Annually.

VOL. XLIII—NO. 6. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 7, 1901. WHOLE NO. 1115.

HATTIE SCHOLDER

New York.

MRS. RATCLIFFE CAPERTON,

Representative and assistant of LAMPERTI.
New York, 138 Fifth Avenue; Philadelphia, 408 South 18th Street. Summer residence, Dresden, Germany.
"Mrs. Ratcliffe Caperton is my only representative, and I advise all pupils desiring to study with me to be prepared by her."
Dresden, Sedanstrasse 17. G. B. LAMPERTI.

ALBERTO LAURENCE,

155 East 18th Street, New York.
The voice formed and developed; the art of singing taught; method after the purest Italian schools; a bad voice made good, true and beautiful.

HENRY T. FLECK,

Conductor Haarlem Philharmonic Society of the City of New York.
Address: Normal College, New York.

MISS NORA MAYNARD GREEN,

VOCAL TEACHER.
Studio: 303 Fifth Avenue, New York.

MAX KNITEL-TREUMANN,

BARITONE.
Voice Culture—Art of Singing.
Carnegie Hall, Room 837.
Mail address: 15 Washington Terrace, New York.

GEORGE M. GREENE,

Voice Culture and Artistic Singing.
Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.
Studio: 489 Fifth Ave., Mondays and Thursdays.
Residence and address:
424 West 23d Street, New York.

MR. C. WHITNEY COOMBS,

(Church of the Holy Communion). Organ lessons and practice given on one of Roosevelt's finest instruments. Special advantages for the study of church music and the training of boys' voices.
Address: 49 West 20th Street, New York.

TOM KARL,

Concerts, Recitals and Vocal Instruction.
Studio: Carnegie Hall.
Residence: 18 West 75th Street, New York.

MISS MARY FIDÉLIA BURT.

Author of Original Methods in Sight Singing, Ear Training, Musical Stenography. All materials copyrighted. No authorized teachers in Greater New York.
Address: 48 Lefferts Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.

E. H. LOCKHART, Bass-Baritone.

Studios: 121 East Twenty-third street, New York. Voices quickly placed and developed. Special work given for breath control. The Art of Singing taught by method used in the old Italian schools. Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.

DUDLEY BUCK, JR.,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Song Lecture Recitals.
810 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

HOWARD BROCKWAY,

COMPOSER-PIANIST.
Pupils received in Composition, Harmony, Piano and Song Interpretation.
Studio: 817-818 Carnegie Hall, New York.

WALTER HENRY HALL,

Conductor Oratorio Society, Brooklyn, N. Y.
Organist and Choirmaster St. James' Church, New York.
For terms for conducting, address St. James' Church, Madison Ave. and 71st St., New York.

MME. LOUISE FINKEL,

SCHOOL OF VOCAL MUSIC.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.

EUGENE A. BERNSTEIN,

PIANIST.
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Studio: 160 East 70th Street, New York.

LUCILLE SMITH MORRIS,

PIANIST. INSTRUCTION. Concerts, Recitals.
Pupil of Wm. Sherwood and Mrs. A. K. Virgil.
Certified teacher of Virgil Clavier Method.
Studio: 201 West 81st Street, New York.

RICHARD ARNOLD,

Concertmaster Philharmonic Society.
INSTRUCTION.
208 East 61st Street, New York.

MR. FRANCIS STUART,

TEACHER OF SINGING.
First season in New York. Ten years in San Francisco. Pupil of Lamperti, the elder.
Being in full possession of my method of singing, he has the ability to form great artists.—FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
Reception hours, Mondays and Thursdays, 2 to 3.
Studio: 86 Madison Ave., near Twenty-eighth St.

LILLIE D'ANGELO BERGH

SCHOOL OF SINGING.
Operatic course. Teachers' special course, all departments. Famous specialists. Prospectus. The Albany Broadway and 52d Street, New York.

ROSETTA WIENER,

PIANO, SIGHT READING and
New York School of Accompanying.
Carnegie Hall, 301-2.

MR. CHARLES LEE TRACY,

PIANOFORTE INSTRUCTION.
Certificated Teacher of the LESCHETIZKY METHOD.
Studio: Carnegie Hall, New York City.

MAX BENDHEIM,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
332 West 56th Street, New York City.

PAUL TIDDEN,

PIANIST.
314 East 15th Street, New York.
Will accept a limited number of pupils.

HERBERT HEMINGWAY JOY,

Voice Culture and Singing.
Italian School.
Studio: 116 Carnegie Hall, New York.

GUSTAV L. BECKER,

CONCERT PIANIST and TEACHER of PIANO and COMPOSITION.
Address: 1 West 104th Street, New York.

SIGNOR FILOTEO GRECO,

THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio: 51 West 35th Street, New York.

M. THEODOR BJORKSTEN AND MME. TORPADIE BJORKSTEN,

INSTRUCTORS IN SINGING.
New Studios: Carnegie Hall, New York.

PERRY AVERILL—BARITONE,

OPERA—ORATORIO—CONCERT AND VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
220 Central Park South, New York.

J. ARMOUR GALLOWAY,

Voice Culture and the Art of Singing,
Studio: Rooms 43 and 44 Y. M. C. A. Building, 318 West 57th Street, New York.

MARIE SEYMOUR BISSELL,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Pupils prepared for Church, Concert and Oratorio.
Studio: 135 East 16th Street, New York.

MRS. MARY HISSEM DE MOSS,

SOPRANO,
106 West 90th Street,
New York City.

SAMUEL B. MOYLE,

BASSO CANTANTE.
Oratorio, Concert, Musicales, Voice Culture—Italian Method. Tone Placing and Reparation a specialty. Studio: 136 Fifth Avenue, New York.

GEORGE SWEET,

OPERA, ORATORIO, CONCERT.
304 West 72d Street, New York.

J. HARRY WHEELER,

Voice Production and the Art of Singing.
Voices educated strictly in the Italian School.
Studio: 81 Fifth Ave., corner 16th St., New York.
July and August at Chautauqua Assembly.

MR. EDMUND SEVERN,
Violin, Composition, Ensemble.
MRS. EDMUND SEVERN,
Piano and Voice.
Studio: 131 West 56th Street, New York.
"Severn Trio."

ENRICO DUZENSI,

OPERA TENOR.
Will accept pupils for Voice Culture; good voice cultivated per contract; Italian method.
145 East 83d Street, near Lexington Ave.

CARL C. MÜLLER,

Translator of "Sechter's Fundamental Harmonies."
Author of "Tables for Harmonic Exercises."
Teacher of Piano, Harmony, Counterpoint and Composition. 1291 Lexington Ave., New York.

MME. HELENE MAIGILLE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION, REPERTOIRE.
Studio and residence: 1211-15 Carnegie Hall, New York.
Summer course.

MR. EMILIO AGRAMONTE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Summer Course.

SAUL HAROLD LICHTENSTEIN,

VIOLINIST.
Pupil of Sauret and Thomson.
Concerts, At Homes, &c. Pupils accepted.
Address: 103 West 114th Street, New York.

J. WARREN ANDREWS,

CONCERT ORGANIST and TEACHER.
Send for list of Pupils holding positions.
Address: Church of the Divine Paternity, 76th St. and Eighth Ave., New York City.

THE NEW YORK INSTITUTE FOR VIOLIN PLAYING AND SCHOOL FOR PIANO AND VOCAL CULTURE.

230 East 62d Street

Complete musical education given to students from the beginning to the highest perfection.
F. & H. CARRI, Directors.

MME. LUISA CAPPIANI,

VOICE CULTURE, SKILL OF SINGING.
"The Louella," 159 West 45th Street, New York.

RICHARD T. PERCY,

Concert Organist and Accompanist.
Organ Lessons at Marble Collegiate Church, corner Fifth Avenue and 29th Street.
Studio: 1402 Broadway, New York.

MISS MARGARET GOETZ,

CONTRALTO (mezzo range).
Concerts, Song Recitals, Vocal Instruction.
Address: 36 Gramercy Park, New York.

THE ARENS VOCAL STUDIO

(affiliated with the American School of Opera).
Coaching a specialty.
Normal courses for Voice Teachers.
261 West Fifty-fourth Street, New York.
For circulars address Miss Lucie May Benedict, 25 West Sixty-fifth Street.
Reception hour, 2 p. m., Wednesdays excepted.
Fall term begins September 20.

HENRY HOLDEN HUSS,

Instruction in Piano and Theory of Music.
Studio for non-resident pupils: Steinway Hall.
Personal address: 318 East 150th Street, New York.

FRANCIS FISCHER POWERS,

VOICE CULTURE AND THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio (and invariable address): Carnegie Hall, New York. New York season, October 20 to May 1; Kansas City, Mo., season, Pepper Building, May 15 to August 1; Los Angeles, Cal., season, Westminster Hotel, August 10 to October 10.

MRS. HADDEN-ALEXANDER,

PIANIST.
Powers-Alexander Studios,
Carnegie Hall, New York.

HENRY SCHRADIECK'S

VIOLIN SCHOOL.
Violin, Piano, Theory and Ensemble Playing.
Residence and Studio:
535 Washington Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

WILLIAM H. BARBER,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
Studio: Steinway Hall, New York.

F. W. RIESBERG,

ACCOMPANIST.
Instruction—Piano, Organ, Harmony.
With THE MUSICAL COURIER.
Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.
Secretary-Treasurer New York State M. T. A.
Residence Studio:
954 8th Ave., corner 56th Street, New York.

S. C. BENNETT,

Instructor in Voice Building and the Art of Singing.
Teacher of Mme. Genevra Johnstone-Bishop and many other talented vocalists.
Studio: 836 Carnegie Hall, New York.

MME. EMMA RODERICK,

Rapid Development and Complete Education of the Voice. 118 West 44th Street, New York.

MRS. GRENVILLE SNELLING,

SOPRANO.
Concerts, Recitals, Musicals, Oratorio.
Address: 111 Fifth Avenue, New York.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF MUSIC,

179 East 64th Street, New York.
WM. M. SEMNACHER, Director.
I regard Mr. Semnacher as the greatest teacher of piano in this country.
Henry T. Fleck, Director of Music,
Normal College, New York City.

MRS. HENRY SMOCK BOICE,

VOICE CULTURE.
Musical Art Department of Adelphi College.
Residence-Studio: 127 McDonough St., B'klyn, N.Y.
Pupils prepared for Church, Concert, Oratorio.
138 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Monday and Thursday Afternoons.

SERRANO VOCAL INSTITUTE,

323 East 14th Street, New York.

Conducted by EMILIA BENIE DE SERRANO and CARLOS A. DE SERRANO.

Teachers of Charlotte Maconda, Fannie Francisca.

KATHERINE RUTH HEYMAN,

Concert Pianiste.
145 East 23d Street, New York.

GUY DORÉ LATTA, OPERA TENOR

Voice Culture and Singing.
Tone production, placing and development a specialty. Guarantees to increase range and make any voice strong and beautiful. Summer rates.
372 West 120th Street, New York.

JOSEPH PIZZARELLO,

VOCAL INSTRUCTOR.
Voice Developed—Style—Opera.
43 West 34th Street, New York

ALICE GARRIGUE MOTT,

VOCAL CULTURE.
Carnegie Hall, New York.

MR. AND MRS. THEO. J. TOEDT,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Home Studio: 151 East 62d Street, New York.

LENA DORIA DEVINE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Representative Teacher of the methods of the famous master, FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
136 Fifth Avenue, New York.

MISS FANNIE HIRSCH,

CONCERT AND ORATORIO.
DRAMATIC SOPRANO. Steinway Hall, or 170 East 61st St., New York.

MISS EMMA HOWSON,

PRIMA DONNA.
Royal Italian and English Opera Company.
Lamperti Method Absolutely Taught.
Tuesdays and Fridays, 96 Fifth Ave., New York.

EMMA THURSBY,

SOPRANO.
Will receive a limited number of pupils.
Residence-Studio: 34 Gramercy Park, New York.

ISIDORE LUCKSTONE,

The Accompanist and Musical Director.
STYLE, REPERTOIRE, FINISH, VOCAL CULTURE.
836 Lexington Ave., or address MUSICAL COURIER.

ARTHUR VOORHIS,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
100 Clifton Place, Jersey City, N. J.
Care MUSICAL COURIER, New York.

MME. ADELE LEWING

CONCERT PIANIST.
Authorized Teacher of the Leschetizky Method.
Special terms to out of town teachers.
Concerts. Recitals. Musicales.
Address: Care Steinway Hall, or 127 East 73d Street, New York.

MISS GENEVIEVE BISBEE,

PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Leschetizky Method. Summer courses.
1109-1110 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

KATHARINE PELTON,

Mezzo Soprano.
Sole Direction HENRY WOLFSOHN,
131 East 17th Street, New York.

CHARLOTTE A. BABCOCK,

Certificated Pupil of Dr. William Mason.
Pianoforte Instruction.
Studios: 810-14 Carnegie Hall, New York.
Summer season, Bernardsville, N. J.

SIGNOR A. CARBONE,

Member several years Metropolitan Grand Opera Company.
VOICE CULTURE. OPERA SCHOOL.
Summer Course.
Studio: 240 Fifth Ave., New York.

JOSEPH P. DONNELLY.

VOICE, ORGAN, PIANO.
Organist-Director All Saints,
Madison Avenue and 129th Street, New York.
Residence-Studio: 2033 Madison Avenue.
Brooklyn Studio: The Pouch Gallery.

MARK M. FONAROFF,

VIOLINIST—INSTRUCTION.
References: Adolf Brodsky, Henry Schradieck, Alex. Lambert, H. E. Krehbiel.
129 East 82d Street, New York.

STELLA PRINCE STOCKER.

COMPOSER-DIRECTOR.
Recital-Lectures, ARTHUR STOCKER, boy soprano, assisting. For season 1901-1902.
Address: 11 Schmiedc Strasse, Hamburg, Germany, or care P. J. Kreider, 251 West 71st Street, New York.

MARIE PARCELLO,

DRAMATIC CONTRALTO.
Music Rooms: 1103-4-5 Carnegie Hall, New York.

HUGO TROETSCHEL.

Organist Schermerhorn St. Evangelical Church.
Instruction: Piano—Organ—Theory.
Organ Lessons given on large three-manual Roosevelt Organ.
Residence: 384 Bainbridge St., Brooklyn, N. Y

Mr. & Mrs. WALTER H. ROBINSON,

TENOR AND CONTRALTO SOLOISTS.
Oratorio, Concerts and Musicales.
Voice Production and Repertoire.
Studio: 405 Carnegie Hall, New York.

A. J. GOODRICH,

Personal or Correspondence Lessons in Harmony, Counterpoint, Composition, Orchestration and Practical Musicianship

Author of "Analytical Harmony," "Theory of Interpretation," "Complete Music Analysis," "Synthetic Counterpoint," "Guide to a Practical Musicianship."

Glens Falls, N. Y

MUSICAL COURIER OFFICES—FINE ARTS BUILDING.

CHICAGO, July 27, 1901

UNDER the auspices of the School of Methods, in the Fine Arts Building, Bicknell Young gave an exceptionally interesting lecture-recital on July 23, the subject being "Ballads and Ballad Singing." Mr. Beall was the capable accompanist. Next Tuesday afternoon Mr. Young will give another complimentary recital.

At the American Conservatory on the morning of July 26 an artistic recital was given by Mme. Ragna Linné, vocalist, and Theodore Militzer, pianist. A large and enthusiastic audience attended this event, which was the last of a special summer series given by the American Conservatory. John J. Hattstaedt, the director of the institution, will return to Chicago on September 1.

Carolyn Louise Willard selected a talented group of young musicians for the recital recently given at her residence on Lake avenue. The pianist of the occasion, Miss Mabelle Crossman, who is one of Miss Willard's most promising pupils, contributed a representative group of numbers, including Grieg's Sonata for Piano and Violin, op. 45; "Humoreske," Tschaikowsky; "Polonaise," op. 26, No. 1, Chopin, and Moszkowski's Valse, op. 57. She displayed technical facility amounting to brilliancy of execution, and an ability to interpret artistically. Miss Maude Lindon, who possesses a pleasing light soprano voice, sang with much expression, Aria, from Bizet's "Carmen," and "An Orchard Cradle Song," Denza, being among her selections. This vocalist is a pupil and assistant of Mrs. Hess-Burr. The fine tone and other satisfactory musical characteristics of the third performer, Guy Woodward, violinist, aroused much appreciation. Miss Willard, who is to be congratulated upon the success of this event, is now conducting summer classes in Union City and Coldwater, Mich.

Miss Beatrice Coleman, who was a pupil of Maurice Aronson before the latter came to Chicago, has taught music in the State of Nevada for six years, her ambition being to pursue a three years' course with her former instructor. Miss Coleman writes that she will arrive in Chicago on August 25, to remain here permanently. She is most enthusiastic at the prospect of resuming her work with Mr. Aronson.

During the coming season Mrs. Frances Carey Libbe, contralto, will accept concert and oratorio engagements in Chicago and its vicinity.

The Spiering Quartet (Theodore Spiering, first violin; Otto Roehrborn, second violin; William Diestel, viola, and Herman Diestel, 'cello) will give a series of recitals at Winona Lake, Ind., on July 29, 30 and 31.

A promising young vocalist in the "King Dodo" chorus at Studebaker Hall, Fine Arts Building, is Carolyn V. Mason, of this city.

The announcement of the death of Lillian Green, one of the cleverest, most beautiful and most popular members of the "King Dodo" cast, has been received with sincere regret by the young artist's ardent Western admirers. Miss Green's role is now being satisfactorily played by Cheridah Simpson, a spirited "Piola."

One of the most creditable programs that the Chicago Auditorium Conservatory has presented during the summer season was that given recently by the pupils of Robert Stevens and Enrico Sansone. The composers represented included Bach, Chopin, Schumann, De Beriot, Moszkowski, Paderewski, Brahms, Mozart, Gleason, Henselt and Pratt, Miss Laura Campbell, Joseph Garrimoni, Donato Laulette, M. Koolish, C. Barrilli and R. Sansone being the capable performers. This event served to illustrate that many talented young musicians are pursuing their studies under Mr. Stevens and Mr. Sansone at the Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.

Looking back upon the most prosperous year of his Chicago career, and having already disposed of his entire time for next season, Maurice Aronson, the well-known pianist and instructor, will enjoy his vacation in various Wisconsin resorts. He closes his studio on August 1 and will return during the latter part of that month, the regular season commencing on Monday, September 9.

To the list of appreciative estimates which music critics made of Glenn Hall's singing during the past season the following may well be added:

It was a genuine pleasure to hear Mr. Hall's beautiful clear, ringing voice. The first great burst of applause from the audience came after the tenor recitative, "Men, Brethren and Fathers," sung by Mr. Hall in faultless style and earnestness and sincerity of manner. All the recitatives sung by Mr. Hall were discreetly and judiciously sung, and with the instinct of a singer who is an artist.

We cannot resist saying a word of Mr. Hall's singing of the aria, "Be Thou Faithful Unto Death." No better example of "bel canto" has been heard in Spartanburg. The heartiest applause of the evening greeted Mr. Hall at the end of the aria. The audience stormily demanded its repetition, to which Mr. Hall responded, singing it perhaps with even more deeply religious fervor than before.—Spartanburg (S. C.) Herald, May 3.

Glenn Hall's appearance was the signal for a storm of applause. He sang an aria from "Eugen Onegin," one of the best of the operas of the great Russian composer, Tschaikowsky. The aria was rendered with great beauty of tone and absolute sincerity of style. After repeated recalls he sang Dvorák's "Songs My Mother Taught Me." In the latter, as well as the aria, the orchestra accompanied him exquisitely.—Spartanburg (S. C.) Herald, May 4.

Miss Emma E. Clark recently appeared in a lecture-recital under the auspices of the St. Cecelia Club, of Midland, Mich. Her program included compositions by Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, Liszt, Mendelssohn, Chopin, Schumann, Rubinstein and Arensky. Miss Clark is now on a yachting cruise on the lakes and expects to return to Chicago in September.

Interest in Miss Esther Feé, the young American violinist, who will visit America the coming season, is manifested in the many inquiries being received for her. She will visit the Pacific Coast and the Northwest and open her American tour with a New York orchestra.

Miss Electa Gifford, the soprano, and Sydney Biden, baritone, have been engaged for a recital in Milwaukee, to be held at the Pabst Theatre on November 4. This concert will follow their appearance at Muskegon on October 29.

William H. Sherwood will visit nearly every section of the country. Later engagements for him are Wellesley College, Wellesley Hills, Mass., and Muncie, Ind. Mr. Sherwood, who gave several recitals in North Carolina and Virginia last season, goes again this fall.

Master Lloyd Simonson, the boy soprano, has been engaged for a recital at Muskegon, Mich.

Mr. Baker, the manager of these artists, predicts a busy season for those under his management, having, he says, received more inquiries for them up to the present time than he received last season up to October 1. This is certainly gratifying for those connected with his office, as he is devoting himself almost entirely to those announced under his direction.

Genevieve Clark Wilson at Neenah.

Genevieve Clark Wilson, the popular soprano, who is under the exclusive direction of the Hamlin Company for the coming season, sang at Neenah, Wis., on July 19, with the success that this artist always achieves. The Neenah Daily News says:

"Genevieve Clark Wilson was the vocalist of the evening. She is considered by many to be the prima donna of the concert stage in the West, and it is quite impossible to speak too highly of her singing. Her charm and grace of manner added not a little to the unalloyed enjoyment of her singing. Her voice is one of rare sweetness and flexibility, which is combined with purity of tone and expression."

AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF APPLIED MUSIC.

TOM KARL, the eminent tenor, has been selected to assume the directorship of the vocal classes of the Metropolitan College of Music, now one of the departments of the American Institute of Applied Music. The prestige of Mr. Karl as an opera tenor is a fixed fact in the minds of the musical public, but his success in other branches of his art may not be so widely known and appreciated.

Mr. Karl studied for two years in Birmingham, England, with Henry Phillips, who, as a young man, sang the part of Elijah when it was first performed in England. Under him Mr. Karl made a study of English diction in its relation to vocal art. In 1868, by the advice of the tenor Sims Reeves, and also of his teacher, he went, when scarcely twenty, to Italy to study, remaining there for seven years, during which time he gained good control of the Italian language. In 1870 Mr. Karl was chosen by Errico Petrella, who was then at the zenith of his glory as a composer, to sing the tenor role in "La Contessa d'Amalfi," and after a successful début he was heard in all the large Italian cities, singing for an entire season at La Scala, Milan, and subsequently he appeared in most of the other European musical centres.

He came to New York with Parepa-Rosa in 1871, and returned again to Europe, where he completed a successful tour of Italy and other European countries, lasting for several seasons.

During his career as grand opera tenor he sang with many of the big artists of the time, Galetti, Antoinietta Fricci, Carolina Ferni, Theresa Titjens, Pauline Lucca, Christine Nilsson, Annie Louise Carey, Adelaide Phillips, Ilma di Murska, Marie Roze and Clara Louise Kellogg.

Realizing the immense field of usefulness open to English opera, Mr. Karl was one of the organizers, and for many years one of the managers, as well as leading tenor, of the most successful of English opera companies.

During his many years of stage service Mr. Karl has studied and sung over 150 operas.

Entirely apart from his career as an opera tenor, he managed to take time to establish a reputation as an oratorio singer, and he has been the soloist many times at the great festivals, such as Worcester, and with the Handel and Haydn Society of Boston.

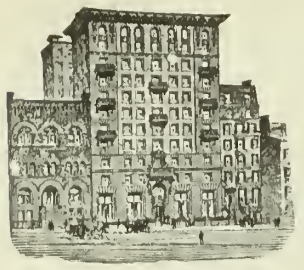
Although Mr. Karl was not identified exclusively with the profession of teaching until the last few years, he had taught enough pupils to gain a reputation for success in that direction, so that when he finally consented to devote his time to vocal training it was immediately filled by a class consisting not only of professional students, but by society pupils as well, who demand a training of quite a different stamp. Mr. Karl took up the profession of teaching at the height of his physical powers, and he carried into his work magnetism, enthusiasm and vigor, and added to that he was able to contribute the rich results of an exceptional artistic life. His pupils are scattered throughout the country in church positions and schools, and quite a number of his opera students have been started upon successful stage careers.

In Mr. Karl's hands the vocal department of the Metropolitan College will add to the good name that has already been won for it during the past.

Mrs. Stocker's German Tour Ended.

MRS. STELLA PRINCE STOCKER, who is now crossing the Atlantic, delivered her final lecture in Germany at Berringer's Music Hall, at Warnemünde, on July 20. Her topic, "Indian Myths and Melodies," is naturally one to arouse the interest of intellectual and musical Germans, and her audience proved to be one of the largest ever assembled at the hall. Many persons of distinction heard the lecture, which was accompanied with musical illustrations. Mrs. Stocker returns to New York with her young son, Master Arthur Stocker, the boy soprano.

Boston Music Notes.



Hotel Bellevue,
17 Beacon Street,
Boston, August 3, 1901.

THE Faelten Pianoforte School has issued its Year Book in an attractive form, the cover in blue being ornamented with silver borders and letters. On the back of the cover is a picture of the new building to which the school will move on September 1. This building is centrally located on Huntington avenue, overlooking the Public Library and Copley square, adjacent to the Pierce Building, where there are so many teachers and musicians, with every facility in the way of both steam and street cars for transportation. The calendar for the fifth season is: School commences Monday, September 16, and closes Saturday, June 21, with vacations of a week at Christmas and Easter. The faculty of the school comprises Carl Faelten, director; Reinhold Faelten, Mrs. Reinhold Faelten, Forrest J. Cressman, George F. Granberry, Bertram C. Henry, Miss Alberta V. Munro, Miss Susie A. Crane, with assistant teachers from the Normal Course. H. F. Spurr, Jr., is business manager.

To quote from the prospectus: "The instruction in this school is given under the Faelten system. The distinguishing features of this system are not to be found in any peculiar hand position or finger treatment, but rather in the thoroughness and completeness with which the pupil's general musical proficiency is promoted. Concentrated attention, positive knowledge, intelligent ear, reliable memory, fluency in sight reading and artistic piano playing are developed simultaneously. The superiority of this training is shown by the uniformly excellent progress of those who have received their musical instruction under this system from the beginning and by the improvement of those who have adopted it later."

At the weekly lessons in interpretation Carl Faelten plays works which are being studied by pupils in the school, supplementing the playing of each selection with explanatory remarks on interpretation. At the weekly lectures valuable subjects are taken up concerning the study of music and the art of teaching. During the season Mr. Faelten gives a series of six recitals with programs from standard piano literature.

A review of the past season's work is given, in which 448 students took part. A list of the works played by Mr. Faelten at the recitals and interpretation also appears. Wednesday noons Mrs. Reinhold Faelten gave lectures upon topics of general interest connected with the work of the school, twenty-six being given during the season. The pupils held twenty-two pupils' recitals, 205 pupils taking part. Seventeen were public and five were given on invitation from the following: New Hampshire Music Teachers' Association, at The Weirs, N. H.; Lynn Pianoforte School, Lynn; Hunnewell Club, Newton; Friday Morning Club, Worcester; Perkins Institution for the Blind, South Boston. Two pupils gave an entire program each, Miss Nellie Dean and Miss Laura R. Appell.

A report on the Scholarship Fund shows a gratifying increase. The presentation of diplomas to the graduating class took place in Faelten Hall June 12, in the presence of the faculty and students. The graduates were Miss Laura R. Appell, Harrisburg, Pa.; Miss Grace E. Chandler, Dorchester, and Miss Elizabeth Laing Gibb, Dedham. Mr. Faelten addressed the students, alluding to the severe tests and examinations they had undergone.

Louis C. Elson, who is spending the summer in Europe, is sending letters to the Evening Post of New York as special correspondent. A recent letter from Monte Casino, Italy, was dated July 8, and is devoted principally to a description of his visit to the monastery at the above mentioned place, the first monastery that the world possessed, founded in the early part of the sixth century. Among the treasures in the library Mr. Elson found "a most important musical manuscript of the eleventh century, the earliest example of the 'Ut, re, mi, fa, sol, la' system." At high mass "the organ played by one of the brothers was a noble instrument, very sweet toned, yet sufficiently powerful." From private letters received from Mr. Elson it is learned that his intention is to visit Russia before returning home.

The music room at the Sweetwater, Bedford Springs, was filled with an interested company of listeners last Wednesday when the management gave a song recital. The artists were Miss Luella Flagg, a pupil of Miss Lena Little's, Walter Knowles and J. Arthur Colburn. The cover of the program was decorated with a group of ferns in their natural colors surrounding the gold lettering. Miss Flagg in her number from "Samson and Delilah" won especial commendation. In the audience were Mr. and Mrs. John H. Lee, Miss Anna Sturgis, M. and Mrs. George H. Converse, John A. Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Ayer, Mrs. J. M. R. Taylor, Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Smith, Henry H. Arnold, Miss Emily S. Shepard, Mr. and Mrs. Vernon A. Field, Miss Elsa Field, Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Comstock, F. B. Wildes, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Dana, Mrs. N. D. Arnold, Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Post, Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Carr and Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Russegue.

Stephen Townsend has been engaged as one of the soloists at the Worcester Music Festival in September. He will sing "The Voice of Christ" in "The Beatitudes," by César Franck.

The one act concert operetta, "Love and Whist," to be given at Music Hall during the week of August 5, was first produced at the Star Theatre, New York, and was a marked success. It is published by the Oliver Ditson Company.

Under the patronage of the summer residents of Nahant a series of four descriptive piano recitals has been arranged to take place on Fridays and Tuesdays, August 16, 20, 23 and 27, at 11 o'clock in the morning, in the ballroom at the club. The lecture-recitals will be given by Miss Estella Neuhaus, who has given like recitals in other places. Miss Neuhaus has also given the series at various houses hereabouts, including Mrs. Robert M. Morse's at Jamaica Plain, Mrs. Bennett's at Brookline, and also at Mrs. Walter Channing's and Miss Minna Train's, also in Brookline, as well as at Mrs. Albert Nickerson's in Dedham. The first recital will embrace the classical school, with illustrations from Bach, Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven; the second will be the romantic school of composition, with selections from Schumann, Mendelssohn, Schubert, Chopin and Liszt. The third morning of the series will be given over to Wagner and his works, with excerpts from "Tannhäuser," "Lohengrin," "The Ring of the Nibelungen," "Tristan and Isolde" and "Parsifal." Modern composers and the Russian school of composition will form the program on the last morning, with examples of the works of Brahms, Dvorák, Grieg, Sinding, Borodin, Ilinsky and Tschaikowsky.

Recently the Boston Daily Advertiser said editorially:

"One of the civic fathers of Marlboro is trying to secure the adoption of a new plan of popular summer concerts. This alderman thinks that there is a danger that people will grow tired of municipal band concerts. Consequently he proposes that in addition to the music of the band, a chorus of from 500 to 1,000 voices be organized to sing familiar patriotic airs and other music likely to appeal to the popular taste. He would not object to the introduction of a cannon and fireworks to give a spectacular effect to the novel concerts. Any visitor to a municipal band concert in Boston must have noticed that when the band plays familiar music the auditors often seem tempted to assist the instruments either by whistling or by humming the air. The chances are that if the Marlboro experiment is fairly carried out, the idea will spread."

Studying with Montefiore.—Miss Mabel Peeples, the well-known and favorite soprano, of Kansas City, Mo., is studying with Caroline Montefiore.

Miss Josephine Schaffer, a pupil of Miss Emma Thursby, sang last week at a tea given by Mrs. Benjamin Corlier, at the summer home of the latter in the Adirondacks. Miss Schaffer has joined Miss Thursby at the Willey House, at Hurricane, Essex County, N. Y.

SHERWOOD,
Greatest American Pianist.
ESTHER FEE,
Violinist.
(Paris—In America Nov. 1.)
BRUNO STEINDEL,
The Noted 'Cellist.
CLARA MURRAY,
Harpist.
LEONE LANGDON KEY,
Organist.

CHARLES R. BAKER,
MANAGER OF
High Class and Distinguished MUSICAL ARTISTS,
Fine Arts Building,
CHICAGO.

ELECTA GIFFORD,
Soprano.
(Late of Royal Opera, Amsterdam.)
MABELLE CRAWFORD,
Contralto.
GLENN HALL,
Tenor.
SYDNEY LLOYD WRIGHTSON,
The English Baritone.
MASTER LLOYD SIMONSON,
The Famous Boy Soprano.

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

MARY WOOD CHASE, PIANO VIRTUOSA.
For Terms, Dates, &c., address HANNAH & HAMLIN, Managers.
Personal address: 3031 Prairie Avenue. 514 Kimball Hall, CHICAGO.

FRANK T. BAIRD,
THE ART OF SINGING.
34 Monroe St., Chicago, Ill.

Mr. & Mrs. BICKNELL YOUNG,
67 Kimball Hall,
CHICAGO, ILL.

EDWARD MEEK,
BARITONE.
Pupils accepted.
924 Fine Arts Building, Chicago.

NINETEENTH YEAR.
1899-1900.
Mrs. REGINA WATSON'S SCHOOL
for the
HIGHER ART OF PIANO PLAYING.
297 Indiana Street, Chicago, Ill.

CLARA G. TRIMBLE, SOPRANO.
Address 619 Fine Arts Building, Chicago.

THE SPIERING QUARTET,
708 Fine Arts Building, Michigan Boulevard, CHICAGO.

MAURICE ARONSON PIANIST. Auditorium Building, (Tower, 1406.) Chicago.
Concerts, Recitals, Musicales, Lectures.
For the past four years chief assistant to Leopold Godowsky. Four Competent Assistants. Write for circular

W. C. E. SEEBOECK, PIANIST,
Just returned from Europe, where he made very successful appearances.
Studio 727 FINE ARTS BUILDING, CHICAGO, ILL.

HELEN BUCKLEY, SOPRANO.
Vocal Instruction. ORATORIO, CONCERTS, RECITALS.
5316 MADISON AVENUE, CHICAGO.

Mrs. GEORGE A. COE,
(Barth and Moszkowski)
Pianist and Lecturer. 640 University Place, EVANSTON, ILL.

THE KALTENBORN CONCERTS.

INTEREST in the Wagner Festival arranged for Wednesday, Thursday and Friday nights of this week at the St. Nicholas Garden extends beyond the boundaries of Greater New York. Since the announcement was made, a week ago, many have inquired at the St. Nicholas Garden concerning programs, soloists, &c. The soloists are Miss Mary Mansfield, soprano; Mrs. Dora Phillips, soprano; J. F. Thomson, baritone, and Franz Kaltenborn, violinist.

Conductor Kaltenborn has planned his programs for the three festival nights in chronological order. The opening note to-night will be from "Rienzi" and the closing bar on Friday night from "Parsifal." This is a Wagner year in musical circles in both the Old and New Worlds. The Wagner Jubilee at Bayreuth, which will be continued this month, may have inspired the Wagner festival at the St. Nicholas Garden. At all events, the memory of the greatest dramatic composer will be reverentially honored by hosts of New Yorkers and residents of neighboring cities and towns.

By what may seem a strange coincidence, the opening festival night will be the 300th concert which Franz Kaltenborn has conducted at the St. Nicholas Garden, this being the third season of his leadership there. The programs for the Wagner festival nights follow:

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 7.
(300th Concert.)
FIRST WAGNER FESTIVAL NIGHT.

Rienzi, or The Last of the Tribunes (first produced at Dresden, October 20, 1842).
War March.
Overture.
The Flying Dutchman (first produced at Dresden, January 2, 1843).
Overture.
Spinning Chorus and Senta's Ballade.
Mrs. Dora Phillips and Orchestra.
Grand Duet.
Mrs. Dora Phillips and James Fitch Thomson.
Tannhauser (first produced at Dresden, October 20, 1845).
Overture and Bacchanale.
Trombone Solo Song, The Evening Star.
Franz Eim.
Aria, Dich theure Halle.
Miss Mary Mansfield.
Introduction to Third Act.
March.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 8.
(301st Concert.)
SECOND WAGNER FESTIVAL NIGHT.

Lohengrin (first produced at Weimar, on the anniversary of Goethe's birthday, August 28, 1850).
Prelude.
Arrival of Lohengrin, Prayer of the King and Finale to First Act.
Concert arrangement by R. Klugeschied.
Bridal Procession and Introduction to Third Act.
Tristan und Isolde (first produced at Munich, June 10, 1865).
Violin Solo, Träume.
Franz Kaltenborn.
Prelude and Love Scene, Second Act.
Concert arrangement by W. H. Humiston.
Introduction to Third Act.
Corno Englese Solo, Joseph Eller.
Prelude und Liebestod.
Miss Mary Mansfield and Orchestra.
Die Meistersinger (first produced at Munich, June 21, 1868).
Prelude.
Walter's Prize Song.
Violin Solo, Franz Kaltenborn.
Prelude to Third Act, Dance of the Apprentices and Procession of Meistersingers.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 9.
(302d Concert.)
THIRD WAGNER FESTIVAL NIGHT.

Der Ring des Nibelungen (first produced in series form at Bayreuth, August 13-16, 1876).
Das Rheingold.
Prelude, Song of the Rhine Daughters, Arrival of the Giants, Song of Fricka, Arrival of Loge passing through Nibelheim, Entrance of the Gods into Walhalla.
Die Walküre.
Ride of the Valkyries.
Wotan's Farewell and Magic Fire Scene.
Siegfried.
Waldweben.
Brünnhilde's Awakening.
Concert arrangement by W. H. Humiston.
Die Götterdämmerung.
Morning Dawn and Siegfried's Rhine Journey.
Siegfried's Death and Funeral March.
Parsifal (first produced at Bayreuth, July 22, 1882). Seven months before Wagner's death).
Prelude.
Paraphrase.
Violin Solo, Franz Kaltenborn.
Flower Girls' Scene.

Soloists appeared as usual at the concerts last week. That sterling pianist, Leopold Winkler, played with the orchestra on Wednesday the Schubert-Liszt "Wanderer Fantaisie," and once more aroused his admirers to applaud his sane and beautiful art. Miss Sophia Friedman sang the "Jewel Song," from "Faust," at the same, and William Schulze played a horn solo. At the Wagner concert last Thursday Joseph Eller played as oboe solo the inspired song "Traume," and the audience compelled him to repeat the number. Sunday night many music lovers went to hear music of the best sort. Arthur Voorhis and the Kaltenborn Quartet played the Schumann Piano Quintet with musical seriousness, and all went to stamp the performance in every way worthy of the beautiful composition. Mr. Voorhis apparently enjoys ensemble playing.

The symphony concert last night (Tuesday), with Miss Ida Branth as the violin soloist, will be reviewed next week.

Following are the programs for the coming Saturday and Sunday:

SATURDAY, AUGUST 10.
(303d Concert.)
POPULAR NIGHT.

Overture, The Merry Wives of Windsor.....Nicolai
Ballet Music, Sylvia.....Delibes
Slow Waltz.
Pizzicati Polka.
Harp Solo, Legende.....Zabel
Charles Schuetze.
Selection, The Burgomaster.....Luder
Soprano Solo, Sumnier.....Chaminade
Miss Maud Beach.
Waltz, Nordseebilder.....Strauss
Soldiers on Parade.....Eilenberg
American Fantasie.....Rietzel
Songs—
Irish Folksong.....Foote
Waltz Song, Cupid and I.....Herbert
Miss Maud Beach.
Selection, Chimes of Normandy.....Planquette
Violin Duet, Traum der Sennerin.....Labitzky
Mr. Kovarik, Mr. Bach.
March, The Invincible Eagle.....Sousa

SUNDAY, AUGUST 11.
(304th Concert.)
SACRED NIGHT.

Master Saul Wolsky, violin; Joseph Eller, oboe; Charles Kurth, flute; E. Wissler, clarinet; Wilhelm Schulze, horn; Paul Pieschel, bassoon.
The Kaltenborn String Quartet.
Franz Kaltenborn, first violin; William Rowell, second violin; Gustave Bach, viola; Louis Heine, 'cello.
Overture, Robespierre.....Litolff
Symphonic Poem, Tasso.....Liszt
Violin Solo, Fantaisie.....Leonard
Master Wolsky.
Kammenoi Ostrow (Cloister Bells).....Rubinstein
American Quartet, op. 96.....Dvorák
Lento.
Finale (vivace ma non troppo).
The Kaltenborn String Quartet.
Waltz, Beautiful May.....Strauss
Quintet, for wind instruments.....Onslow
Andante.
Scherzo Energico.
Mr. Eller, Mr. Kurth, Mr. Wissler, Mr. Schulze, Mr. Pieschel.
Dream Music, Hänsel und Gretel.....Humperdinck
Serenade.....Saint-Saëns
Ride of the Valkyries, Die Walküre.....Wagner

ESTABLISHED 1867.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, President.

The Largest and Most Complete Institution of Musical Learning in America.

COLLEGE BUILDING, 202 MICHIGAN BLVD.

The finest structure in existence devoted exclusively to a Musical College.

SCHOOL OF ACTING, MUSIC ELOCUTION, ORATORY, LANGUAGES.

BOARD OF MUSICAL DIRECTORS.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, DR. LOUIS FALK,
HANS VON SCHILLER, WILLIAM CASTLE,
BERNARD LISTEMANN, S. E. JACOBSOHN,
RUDOLPH GANZ, CHARLES GAUTHIER.
HERMAN DEVRIES,
HART CONWAY, Director School of Acting.
Catalogue Mailed Free.

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

MISS ESTHER FEÉ, VIOLINISTE.
(PARIS—IN AMERICA NOVEMBER 1st.)
Exclusive Management CHARLES R. BAKER Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

HARRISON M. WILD CONCERT ORGANIST.
Studio 6, .. 241 .. Wabash Ave., CHICAGO.
Piano and Organ Instruction.

D. A. CLIPPINGER,
THE ART OF SINGING.
Conductor.
410 Kimball Hall, Chicago, Ill.

EARL R. DRAKE,
VIOLIN VIRTUOSO.
Teacher.
Studio: Kimball Hall, Chicago.

VICTOR GARWOOD,
Kimball Hall, Chicago.

William A. WILLETT, BARITONE.
Address, Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.

ALLEN SPENCER,
PIANIST. Concerts, Recitals.
Address: KIMBALL HALL, CHICAGO.

KARLETON HACKETT,
Teacher of Singing,
Kimball Hall, Chicago.

MARY PECK THOMSON,
SOPRANO,
620 Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

CAROLYN LOUISE WILLARD,
CONCERT PIANIST. Instruction.
Pupil of Ernst Jedliczka, Bloomfield-Zeisler.
For terms and dates address
4164 Lake Avenue, Chicago.

FREDERICK WARREN,
BARITONE,
Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.

MUSICAL KINDERGARTEN FOR THE PIANOFORTE.
BY FANNIE CHURCH PARSONS.
For full information concerning normal instruction or children's class work, address . . .
MRS. PARSONS' NORMAL TRAINING SCHOOL,
Handel Hall, CHICAGO, ILL.

Mrs. THEODORE WORCESTER, Pianist.
(GODOWSKY.)
Concerts, Recitals and Salon Musicales. Recitals from Russian Composers.
ADDRESS: 1402 Auditorium Tower, CHICAGO.

R. CAPOUL CUTTRISS WARDE,
SINGING MASTER.
The teacher of many prominent artists now before the public. Send for list.
STUDIO: No. 911 Cable Building, Cor. Jackson and Wabash, CHICAGO.

MINNIE CRUDUP VESEY, MEZZO CONTRALTO
CONCERTS, RECITALS, VOCAL TEACHER, COACHING.
Address HANNNH & HAMLIN, 514 Kimball Hall, CHICAGO.

Chicago Auditorium Conservatory
FREDERIC GRANT GLEASON, Director. ROY ARTHUR HUNT, Manager.
FALL TERM OPENS SEPT. 9. Catalogue free.

ROWDON Basso-Cantante,
623 Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO, ILL.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY,
JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, Director, Kimball Building, 243 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO.
ALL BRANCHES OF MUSIC. DRAMATIC ART. TEACHERS' TRAINING DEPARTMENT.
JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, VICTOR GARWOOD, ALLEN H. SPENCER, GERTRUDE MURDOUGH, GLENN DILLARD GUNN, HOWARD WELLS, Piano; KARLETON HACKETT, NOYES B. MINER, HOLMES COWPER, GLENN HALL, RAGNA LINNE, MABEL GOODWIN, LOUISE BLISH, Singing; WILHELM MIDDELSCHULTE, Organ; JAN VAN OORDT, Violin; ADOLPH WEIDIG, Composition; JAN KALAS, Violoncello, and thirty other superior instructors.
Catalogue mailed free. 243 Wabash Avenue, care of American Conservatory.

Gottschalk Lyric School. Musical and Dramatic.
CATALOGUE MAILED ON APPLICATION.
L. G. GOTTSCHALK, Director. KIMBALL HALL, 243-253 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO.

Western New York Office THE MUSICAL COURIER,
749 NORWOOD AVENUE,
BUFFALO, N. Y., July 31, 1901.

THREE delightful recitals were given July 12-14 by William Reed, of Quebec, P. Q., organist and choirmaster of Chalmers Church. He was elected to an organ scholarship at Keble College, Oxford, England, in open competition against thirty candidates. He was professor of organ at the Conservatory of Music in Toronto, and has given numerous recitals throughout Ontario. Mrs. Howard Humphreys and Mrs. Jeanette MacCormac Smith assisted as solo singers; also the members of St. Paul's choir of Buffalo, under the direction of Mr. Webster.

Mr. Reed's reading of the fine program by Dudley Buck, Gounod, Guilmant, Haydn, Schumann, Wolstenholme, Dethier and others were scholarly productions while the grand march "Tannhäuser" (Wagner), as well as a composition by himself, "Grand Chœur," in D, were played with splendid technic, and were recalled. He was ably assisted by one of his numerous pupils, T. A. Davies, organist and choirmaster of the First James Square Presbyterian Church, of Toronto, who played several selections with much taste and skill.

WILLIAM REED.

Mrs. Jeanette MacCormac Smith, soprano soloist for concert and oratorio, sang "These Are They," from Gaul's "Holy City" and the "Ave Maria" from Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana." In response to an encore she gave "Ora Pro Nobis" (Picolomini) with fine effect.

She is the possessor of a sweet, clear soprano voice of exquisite quality and perfect execution, and by her artistic singing has become a pronounced favorite wherever she has appeared. Her repertory is very extensive, embracing, as it does, oratorio, operatic, ballad and Scotch music. With an experience of ten years before the public as a concert singer and as a soloist in one of the leading churches, Mrs. Smith is well equipped to take her place with our leading entertainments. Canadian papers have given her fine notices wherever she has appeared.

Frank H. Sims, of New Orleans, gave three recitals July 15-17 before a large sized audience, who, contrary to the usual custom, kept their seats, denoting interest in the organist's work.

Francis L. York, of Detroit, gave three delightful concerts July 18-20. Among Mr. York's programs we find several transcriptions by himself of favorite numbers, such as "Ronde d'Amour," by Von Westerhout; "Morning," from the "Peer Gynt" suite, and Nevin's "Narcissus." His interpretations of works of the French school were particularly nice and his tone coloring fine.

Francis L. York was born in 1861, in Ontonagon, Mich. He received his musical education in the University of Michigan and later studied with Alexandre Guilmant, Paris. He has been organist in various churches in Detroit, and was teacher of piano, organ and harmony in the University School of Music, Ann Arbor, Mich. He is organist and choirmaster of Christ P. E. Church, Detroit; teacher of piano, organ and composition in the Detroit Conservatory of Music and in the State Normal College, Ypsilanti, Mich. He has composed songs, quartets, organ arrangements, &c.; is the author of a text book on harmony, a contributor to musical journals, and is vice-president of the National Music Teachers' Association.

Mr. York is secretary and local treasurer of the M. T. N. A., and has been offered the chair of music in three different colleges, and the choir in Detroit of which he has the direction is acknowledged to be the best of that city. Before studying with Guilmant he was with C. B. Cady, of Chicago, a graduated U. of M., and took the degree of master of arts, with thesis and harmony, being the only graduate ever unanimously recommended by the faculty of U. of M. for degree of M. A. with the highest honors.

MRS. J. M. SMITH.

At one of Mr. York's concerts Miss Genevieve Day assisted. She is a young Brooklyn singer, with a fine stage appearance. She sang "Fear Ye Not, O Israel" (Buck) and "Oh, Divine Redeemer" (Gounod). As encores she gave "Du bist wie eine Blume," by Cantor, and "Holy City," taking the high D with ease.

The Brooklyn Times, the Brooklyn Eagle, Dr. Francis P. Hamlet, organist of the Cathedral of Incarnation, where she has sung for two summers; E. M. Bowman, organist of the Baptist Temple, all speak in the highest praise of her ability. Her repertory is large, as she sings selections from all the best masters.

Miss Day is a pupil of Madame Fridenberg, and has of late been filling many concert engagements. Her voice, a rare one, is decidedly dramatic soprano and of astonishing breadth, volume and purity of tone. She evinces wonderful training and also unusual comprehension of interpretation. We understand that she is studying for grand opera, and predict for her marked success upon the lyric stage.

F. L. YORK.

All the musicians of Buffalo and a great crowd of visitors flocked to the Temple to hear the famed organist J. D. Dussault, of Montreal. He gave three regular concerts, and by request a fourth one, July 23, in the evening. He is the organist of the Church of Notre Dame, and his reputation had reached us from tourists who had heard him play that grand organ. Mr. Dussault was a pupil of Dr. Austin Pearce in New York and of Gigout in Paris. His playing is brilliant, registration fine and he is particularly happy in the interpretations of Widor and Rheinberger. His "Rondo de Concert," by Alf. Hollins, was an exquisite piece, played in a musicianly manner. Mr. Dussault is booked for many concerts this coming fall. He was assisted by L. H. McWade, tenor, of Philadelphia, and Robert Kent Parker, baritone. Mr. Parker is eminent at Chautauqua and fresh from vocal triumphs in England. Mr. Parker sang "Like as the Heart Desireth," by Francis Allitsen.

S. D. Cushing, from Toledo, Ohio, gave two organ recitals. His constant change in the programs made it difficult for the average audience to follow him. The talented Miss Edith Ely, soprano soloist of the Church of the Messiah, Buffalo, sang first "I Will Extol Thee," from Eli, by Costa, and had a most enthusiastic encore, for which she sang the Intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana." For her second number she sang "There Is a Green Hill Away," the audience insisting on a repetition. William Gomph played an exquisite acompaniment.

George B. Carter, from Elmira, gave an enjoyable recital July 29. Want of space crowds out a description of his program, which will appear later.

Mrs. Mary Chappell Fisher, of Rochester, gave three organ recitals. She has a clear and facile technic, and her versatility in her programs was highly appreciated, and, like her great master Guilmant, she presents to the public only legitimate music. Her last number was "Final," by

ST. LOUIS ADVERTISEMENTS.

HOMER MOORE, BARITONE.
The Odeon, St. Louis, Mo.

MRS. STELLA KELLOGG HAINES,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION:
101, 102, 103 Vista Building, Cor. Grand and Franklin, ST. LOUIS, MO.

ALEXANDER HENNEMAN,
VOCAL CULTURE.
Opera. Coaching. Oratorio.
Henneman Hall, 2723 Olive St., ST. LOUIS.

Cesar Franck, a great composition seldom played, which opens with vigorous theme for pedals alone.

Ferdinand Dunkley, from Asheville, N. C., gave a recital July 31. His selections were good, his playing clear cut, though sadly lacking in coloring. He evidently had not familiarized himself with the organ, nor memorized the stops. Referring to his memoranda on the music he lost time between each number. In the midst of the "Bridal Chorus," from "Lohengrin," the band began to play, which put an end to his concert. Poor Dunkley, he is in hot water most of the time.

GENEVIEVE DAY.

MRS. K. RIESBERG.

OLIVE MEAD.—The following paragraph about Miss Olive Mead was omitted from the young violinist's Buffalo press notices:

Miss Olive Mead, the young violinist, gave many evidences of unusual talent. Her technic is well developed and her tone true. Besides her solo number she played the obligato to the Mozart aria, and played it beautifully.—Buffalo Evening News.

BERTA GROSSE-THOMASON.—Mme. Berta Grosse-Thomason, the pianist and teacher, of Brooklyn, is spending her vacation in the Adirondacks. She is a guest at Forest View House, at Lake Placid. In addition to her teaching this coming season, she will give some recitals and plans are already under consideration for dates in Brooklyn and Morristown, N. J.

Miss Lilian Leroy has signed a three years' contract with the "Wizard of the Nile" company. She is another of Mme. Ogden Crane's ambitious pupils, and has been successful in no small degree. She is to play the soubrette parts.

CINCINNATI.

CINCINNATI, August 3, 1901.

OUTSIDE the usual activity of the summer schools there is absolutely nothing going on in matters musical of this city. Everything is as quiet as a graveyard.

Most of the prominent musicians are away from the city, spending their vacations at lakeside, seashore or in the mountains. Several of them are in Europe and have written to their friends about the pleasant times they are enjoying.

Mr. and Mrs. Edwin W. Glover are enjoying some fine fishing sport among the Canadian lakes.

Miss Dell Kendall and her grandmother, Mrs. Martin, have gone to their country home, Island Farm, in Indiana.

Robert Hosea, baritone, was in the city a few days visiting his home and his many friends in the city. Mr. Hosea is acquiring for himself a national reputation.

Signorina Tecla Vigna is spending her vacation at home.

Chas. A. Graninger is still at home conducting a summer school.

Mrs. Lottie Adam-Rasehig, formerly of Cincinnati, is about to start for Europe, where she will continue her course in vocal culture. She will probably study under Randegger.

Frederic J. Hoffmann, pianist, of the College of Music faculty, leaves for Europe on August 7. He will continue his studies under Leschetizky.

Mr. and Mrs. Georg Krueger are spending a delightful vacation in Baden-Baden, Germany.

Mr. and Mrs. Theodor Bohlmann are enjoying their honeymoon in Berlin.

J. A. HOMAN.

Aramenti Pupils' Recital.

THE pupils of the Aramenti School of Vocal Culture, at Seattle, Washington, gave their annual recital at the Seattle Theatre on July 23. Mme. Julia Aramenti's success in the far Northwest has delighted her friends here in the East, but then success was predicted for her. The critics of Seattle accorded just praise to excellent training of the Aramenti pupils. Another point worthy of special mention regarding the recital was that the affair was not complimentary, but given for the benefit of a deserving local charity, the Boys' and Girls' Aid Society, of Seattle. In referring to the "star" pupils of Madame Aramenti, who sang at the recital the Seattle Times of July 29, said:

Miss Dolan has a beautifully trained soprano voice, and won considerable applause in her rendition of the "Swiss Echo Song," as well as in the duet, "I Heard a Voice," sung with Mr. Wilson.

Miss Shepard received her entire training from Madame Aramenti, as did Miss Dolan. She sang a beautiful duet with Mr. Mason in the latter part of the evening. Miss Shepard is a leading member in the church choir of Our Lady of Good Help.

Madame Aramenti, who loaned her direction and training of the various vocalists for the benefit entirely free of charge, is deserving of a great deal of credit for the accomplished manner in which the different numbers were rendered. The proceeds of the recital, which were quite large, went entirely to the Boys' and Girls' Aid Society.

Madame Aramenti expects to take her vacation in September, and spend most of her time in New York.

AMERICAN AND FOREIGN TRAINING.

Editors The Musical Courier:

I READ with a great deal of pleasure a letter from "A Foreign Enthusiast," which appeared in a recent issue of your valuable paper. It is interesting to note that on the same page with a letter commenting on the jealousy shown toward American musicians in Germany are to be found extracts from the German press ecstatically praising an American singer. What is there in this apparent condition?

May I be pardoned for suggesting that the press extracts certainly indicate a phase of the German attitude as surely as does the letter. And yet how can both so apparently contradictory attitudes exist in the same people? The fact of the matter probably is that the one attitude is that held by a certain narrow class of professionals, while the other is that held by the vast mass of real music lovers of Germany. Nor does this solution militate in any way against the full force of "A Foreign Enthusiast's" plea for a school of some kind which will make Americans entirely independent alike of German help or German praise. Plenty of comment from the German press shows us that American voices and American talent are appreciated, while, on the other hand, we are continually hearing of the rebuffs our artists receive at the hands of their German fellow artists. Without a doubt it is time that America rallied to the support of any institution that might tend to force respect from these foreign professionals. There is material aplenty in this country to maintain a musical institution whose product shall vie in every way with that which comes from abroad.

It seems to me, however, that the only way in which such an institution can be made to do the highest, best and most disinterested work would be by indorsement. Only when it can be absolutely independent of pupils' tuition fees can it devote its every energy to turning out finished artists, and nothing but finished artists. Should our millionaires, who are constantly searching to elevate the country along educational lines, and who to this end are scattering libraries broadcast, but turn a little of their attention and wealth to this one very important department of education, it would not be many years before such incidents as the Powell boycott of Berlin would be things of the past.

As a patriotic American and as a sincere lover of music, I look forward to the time when some such school as the American School of Opera, mentioned by "A Foreign Enthusiast," shall become a veritable hub in the vast wheel of American musical life.

QUID NUNC.

McCall Lanham Here.

MCCALL LANHAM is now here in New York, where he will soon resume his work as teacher and soloist in oratorio, opera and concert. After his return from abroad some months ago Mr. Lanham went to Texas to fill a number of special engagements, and his success led to other engagements, and finally a tour was arranged for him. This proved financially as well as artistically successful. His finely trained and sympathetic voice promises to win for this young man an important place in the musical world. Mr. Lanham has been engaged as instructor in the vocal department of the School of Applied Music at 212 West Fifty-ninth street.

At Madame Cappiani's Summer Home.

MISS FLORENCE ROBINSON, a gifted young woman from Salt Lake City, is studying this summer with Mme. Luisa Cappiani, at the Cappiani summer cottage at Ferry Beach, Me. Miss Robinson's mother and sister are also members of the Cappiani household, which includes, too, Mrs. De Linelle Cooper, Madame Cappiani's private secretary. Besides music the ladies have croquet as an amusement, and card parties afford another opportunity for passing an idle hour.

AUGUSTA COTTLOW,
THE DISTINGUISHED YOUNG AMERICAN PIANISTE.
Management: HENRY WOLFSOHN, 131 East 17th St., New York, and
THE HAMLIN CO., Kimball Building, Chicago, Ill.

MRS.
Carl Alves
Has Resumed Vocal Instruction at her Home Studio:
1146 Park Ave. near 91st Street, New York.

LOUIS V. SAAR
PIANO and COMPOSITION.
REPERTOIRE and SONG INTERPRETATION.
Will resume teaching on September 16.
Early application for instruction is suggested.
6 East 83d Street, - - NEW YORK CITY.

JULIAN PASCAL
Pianist. Concert, Recitals, Musicales.
For Terms and Dates address care of
MUSICAL COURIER, 1135 Broadway, New York.

HENRI G. SCOTT,
BASSO.
ORATORIO, CONCERT, RECITALS.
ADDRESS: 14 E. 42d Street, NEW YORK.
2117 N. 20th Street, PHILADELPHIA.

MISS MONTEFIORE
VOICE.
Private Studio and Address:
THE ORMONDE,
2030 Broadway, corner 70th St., New York.

ETHEL L. ROBINSON,
(LONDON CONCERT DIRECTION)
Telegrams: "Musikchor, London."
122 Beaufort St., S. W., LONDON, ENGLAND.

Musical . . People.

W. F. Skeele, of Los Angeles, officiated as organist at the recent Epworth League Convention, held at San Francisco.

Miss Maud Stenson and her sister, Blanche Stenson, gave recently a song and piano recital at Dixon College, Dixon, Ill.

Miss Mary McGowan, soprano, assisted the orchestra at a recent concert given at the Earlington, Richfield Springs, N. Y.

The music pupils of Miss Matie Crowley gave a recital at her home, 256 Ravine street, Janesville, Wis., on the evening of July 19.

The name of Mrs. Bernice Pollock Nelson, a resident of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., is to be added to the list of concert vocalists this coming season.

Raymond E. Reeder, of St. Louis, Mo., will be at the head of the violin department of the Waco (Tex.) Conservatory of Music this autumn.

Eugene Luening has sold his interest in the Wisconsin Conservatory of Music to Hans Bruening. The name of the institution will not be changed.

The pupils of the Dallas (Tex.) School of Music, of which Mrs. A. E. Smythe is director, gave a piano and song recital on the evening of July 18.

Miss Carrie Lum, a pupil of the Boston Conservatory of Music, sang recently at a special service of the First Presbyterian Church at Birmingham, Ala.

Miss Elizabeth King, a Maine singer, who has studied and sang abroad with marked success, is to return home for a brief visit and then locate in New York.

The second prize in the violin department at the Royal Conservatory of Music at Brussels was won by a boy from Springfield, Ohio—Master Francis Rea McMillen.

Miss Esther St. John, a church soprano, well known in the West, expects to become a member of the faculty of the Michigan Conservatory of Music in Detroit.

Miss Vera Eva Roberts, of Peoria, Ill., has, according to some Western newspaper reports, made a successful début in grand opera at the Imperial Theatre in Vienna.

Miss Grace Hazard, a member of the Valley Opera Company, now singing at Syracuse, N. Y., is a sister of Robert Hazard, a popular Washington (D. C.) newspaper man.

At one of the best concerts given at the Colorado Chautauqua, at Boulder, Col., this season, the soloists were members of the Rischar Orchestra, and Miss Irma Haight, a Chicago soprano.

Miss Edna More, of Deposit, N. Y., and Miss Laura M. Wright, of Detroit, Mich., both students of Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio, gave a piano recital at Connel Grove on August 2.

Rowena Schiffbauer, a piano prodigy, thirteen years of age, has entered upon a four years' course with Alberto Jonás, of Detroit, Mich. Little Miss Schiffbauer's home is in Kansas City, Mo.

Miss Elizabeth Leopold, of Pottstown, Pa., has resigned as an instructor of music in the Wilson College, Chambersburg, and accepted the position of first soprano in Holy Trinity Chapel, Philadelphia.

W. Grant Egbert, violinist, assisted Mr. Salter at the organ recital given at Sage Chapel, Ithaca, N. Y., on July 23. The program included works by Guilmant, Beethoven, Schumann, Wagner, Liszt, Dubois and Wolstenholme.

William Henry Humiston, organist of Trinity Congregational Church, Harrison street, East Orange, is a native of Ohio. He studied the organ with Clarence Eddy and composition with Edward MacDowell. He has a fine general education.

Charles N. Pollard, one of the best known musicians of New Hampshire, secured a leave of absence as organist at Pilgrim Church, Manchester, and will spend some time in travel in Europe. During his absence Edward Everett will act as substitute.

R. W. Vincent, formerly director of the Holyoke (Mass.) College of Music, is now the director of the California College of Music at Oakland, Cal., a new institution, opened only last May. The college at Holyoke was sold last April to Edwin Hall Pierce, of Auburn, N. Y.

Miss Hannah Schmidtkonz, a daughter of the Rev. A. Schmidtkonz, of Kingston, N. Y., has been engaged as organist of the Wurts Street Baptist Church, at Kingston, for the remaining Sundays of the summer. Miss Schmidtkonz is a graduate of the New England Conservatory.

Miss Georgia Hall, a Joseffy pupil, gave a recital at the studio of Alexander Zenier, Fond du Lac, Wis., on July 17. Among those in the audience was Bishop Grafton, of Wisconsin. Miss Hall, who formerly resided at Fond du Lac, has promised to give a recital at Grafton Hall in the early autumn.

The Minnesota State Music Teachers' Association, organized last June, elected the following officers: President, Clarence A. Marshall, Minneapolis; first vice-president, Charles A. Fisher, St. Paul; secretary-treasurer, Miss Jennie Pinch, St. Paul; auditor, W. A. Wheaton, St. Paul; program committee, Gerard Tonning, Duluth; Emil Ober-Hoffer, Minneapolis; Carl Heilmaier, St. Paul.

An excellent musical program was presented at the twenty-sixth annual commencement of St. Catherine's Normal Institute, corner of Harlem and Arlington avenues, Baltimore, Md. The Schubert-Liszt "Military March" at the opening of the exercises was played by the following students: Misses Florence Dyer, May Muller, Regina Codd, Emma Walbrecher, Bertha Kahler and Blanche Roper.

While in Saratoga for the Railway Master Mechanics and Master Car Builders' conventions in June, Reeves' American Band, of Providence, R. I., made a great hit with a new composition by Miss Annie C. Holmes, of Westbrook, Me. It is entitled "Echoes from the Lake." It is a grand concert waltz, with beautiful melodies and a smooth obligato. Miss Holmes is very favorably known in Providence, where she attended the Friends' School, from which she was graduated. She is now a resident of Westbrook, Me., where she is the organist and director of music of the Warren Congregational Church, and a very successful teacher of piano instruction, both there and at the Virgil Clavier School in Portland. Her friends and old schoolmates will be pleased to know she has made an enviable reputation as a composer.

Concert in Aid of a Worthy Cause.

A COMMITTEE has been appointed to arrange for a big concert at the Brooklyn Academy of Music for the benefit of the German Hospital of Brooklyn. The date fixed is November 3.

Dr. John W. Schildge, prominent in the councils of the Brooklyn Arion and United Singers of Brooklyn, has been elected president of the committee, and his associates are F. Heitmann, vice-president; Louis Weide, secretary, and Herman Scheidt, all good citizens of Brooklyn. The German Hospital is one of the worthy institutions of the borough and deserving of support. The concert is sure to be a success.

NATIONAL CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC.

Examination Dates.

THE dates for the seventeenth annual entrance examinations of the National Conservatory, 128 East Seventeenth street, New York, are as follows:

Piano and Organ—September 17 (Tuesday), 10 a. m. to 12 m., 2 to 4 p. m.

Violin, Viola, 'Cello, Contrabass, Harp and all Other Orchestral Instruments—September 18 (Wednesday), 10 a. m. to 12 m., 2 to 4 p. m.

Singing—September 19 (Thursday), 10 a. m. to 12 m., 2 to 4 p. m., 8 to 10 p. m.

Children's Day—September 21 (Saturday), Piano and Violin—10 a. m to 12 m., 2 to 4 p. m.

We give the above dates every week because we believe in calling the attention of the readers of THE MUSICAL COURIER to the remarkable advantages offered by the National Conservatory to those desiring a thorough musical education. The faculty of the institution is of world wide reputation and the pedagogic system pursued has hitherto been productive of the highest results. Every department of the National Conservatory is unique, every department has at its head a teacher who has won artistic honors and has had large experience as a musical instructor. The orchestral classes attracted much talent last season, and the series of public concerts inaugurated in 1898-99 will be continued this coming season. The operatic classes are filling in, and the examinations promise to be of the liveliest competitive character. Do not forget that genuine talent will be carefully nurtured and developed at the National Conservatory, as the remarkable history of the institution so conclusively proves. September 3 the season of 1901-1902 begins.

Mrs. Jeannette M. Thurber, founder and president, will personally receive all applicants, their parents or guardians.

New York Musicians in Florence.

MR. AND MRS. EDMUND SEVERN, who are associated this summer with the director of the Francis Walker Summer School of Arts in Florence, Italy, write that they are enjoying the climate as well as the "art" atmosphere of the Tuscan capital. Mrs. Severn has with her one of her most promising vocal pupils, Miss Augusta Galbraith, whose singing is already attracting the attention of critics. Mr. Severn also has violin pupils under his care, and altogether an ideal summer is being passed. In a letter to a friend Mrs. Severn states that the weather in Florence is warm, but "not hot." As her letter was written about the time when the thermometer in New York was sizzling in the nineties, her distinction between "warm" and "hot" will be appreciated by those who recall our remarkably trying summer here.

The Severns and Mr. Walker expect to return to New York about the middle of September.

ALBERT MILDENBERG.—Albert Mildenberg, the pianist, left for the Buffalo Exposition last week to be present at the concert given at which a group of his latest songs were sung by Miss Gertrude Kale.

They were "Pussy Willow," "One Clasp," "So Dear a Dream," which had never yet been sung in public, and "A Thousand Thoughts" and "The Violet," both of which have already met with much favor. Mrs. Elizabeth Hazard, the soprano, will also sing the first three of the group at the Kaltenborn concert on Thursday, August 15.

On next operatic night the Kaltenborn Orchestra will produce a "Ballet Suite" from Mr. Mildenberg's opera "The Wood Witch." This opera was given last winter by young ladies exclusively and caused much favorable comment.

E. PRESSON MILLER,
VOICE CULTURE.
601-602 Carnegie Hall, New York.

Carlos N. Sanchez
OPERATIC TENOR, TEACHER OF SINGING.
Voice Building a Specialty. Repertory: Church, Oratorio and Opera.
Studios: 138 Fifth Ave., New York.
Monday, Wednesday, Thursday and Saturday,
RESIDENCE: 758 WEST END AVENUE,
Corner 97th Street.

JOSEPHINE S. JACOBY,
CONTRALTO.
Address: 104 West 58th Street, NEW YORK.

1901 ANNUAL TOUR OF 1902
PAUR SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,
EMIL PAUR, Conductor.
Conductor New York Philharmonic.
Formerly Conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra
WISSNER PIANO USED.
Miss ANNA MILLAR, Manager, 540 Fulton St. Brooklyn, N. Y.

HATTIE SCHOLDER.

IN the list of artists, young or old, upon whom the Creator has stamped "genius" belongs the little girl whose picture appears on the front page of this paper.

Hattie Scholder was born in New York, May 11, 1891, and is consequently just a little more than ten years of age. The way her father discovered her talent is interesting. One day in the spring of 1894, when he returned home he heard some one playing an etude by Koehler, a composition which he had vainly attempted to master. Upon entering the parlor he was amazed to see his little daughter Hattie sitting before the keyboard. His joy knew no bounds, for he at once realized that she was a genius.

Hattie was immediately placed under a capable teacher, who watched over her lovingly. It was not long, however, before pupil outstripped teacher. Mr. Scholder was advised to secure a thorough teacher. They insisted that he should place his daughter under Samuel Eppinger, director of the Eppinger Conservatory of Music. No sooner had Mr. Eppinger heard the little girl than he volunteered to take her in hand and to teach her free of charge. He undertook in May, 1898, the responsibility of developing the girl's talent, and devoted to her several hours a day. Mr. Eppinger, having wholesome ideas regarding the instruction of the young, believing that there should be a sound mind in a sound body, watched closely the physical development of his pupil, as well as her mental growth. Being a healthy, strong child, Hattie was capable of practicing and studying several hours a day without the least fatigue. Her progress was so rapid as to astonish her preceptor.

Last November Hattie Scholder made her début in Mendelssohn Hall, New York. This is what this paper said of the concert:

In Mendelssohn Hall last Friday night in the presence of an audience that overflowed the auditorium, Hattie Scholder, a genuine prodigy, made her début. She is a healthy, well developed girl of nine, and, beyond doubt, is richly gifted. She has made extraordinary advancement in the art of piano playing for one of her years. She had the assistance of an orchestra of forty under the baton of Arthur Mees. The program was: Overture, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," by Nicolai; Concerto in E flat major (Koechel, 482), first movement, by Mozart; suite, "Les Erinnyes," by Massenet; "Fantaisie on Hungarian Airs," by Liszt; "Hungarian Dances," by Brahms. In the first movement of the Mozart concerto the young pianist played with such intelligence and repose as to place the audience at ease at once. Her phrasing was above reproach and her accuracy was really surprising. The audience testified its surprise and delight by an insistent demand for an encore, and Miss Scholder dashed off with verve and brilliancy a Chopin etude. All who are familiar with the difficulties with which the Liszt "Hungarian Fantaisie" is replete marveled that a mere child should undertake to play this work. The misgivings of those who feared that she would be unable to cope with these difficulties were incontinently exorcised. The little girl passed through the trying ordeal triumphantly, thereby arousing the audience to a high pitch of enthusiasm. Responding to a vehement recall, she played with fascinating abandon and virtuoso speed a waltz by Chopin, and the audience would not rest content until she had played again. The girl's success was really sensational. Her composure, self-poise and surety were as unusual as her strength and endurance. Not once did she falter or manifest the least fatigue. Everything that she did showed that she had been most carefully and conscientiously taught. Her capable and painstaking teacher, Samuel Eppinger, director of the Eppinger Conservatory of Music, has watched her development and guided her progress with loving interest. He has every reason to be proud of her, as she should be proud of him. It is certain that she could not have fallen into better hands. As there seems no limit to Hattie Scholder's talents, there are no limits to the possibilities before her. Beyond question she is one of the most promising musical prodigies before the public.

The newspapers made much of Hattie's début and gave her appreciative notices. A few of these are appended:

Another Josef Hofmann seems to have arisen to astonish the public, only this time the musical prodigy is a charming little girl, nine years old, with rosy cheeks, perfect health, plenty of vitality and undoubted genius. Her brief career has rarely been duplicated, and fully illustrates how great a future she has before her.—New York Press, November 19.

Mendelssohn Hall was the scene of the appearance last night of Miss Hattie Scholder, a child prodigy in piano playing, only nine years of age. Little Miss Scholder was heard, with orchestral accompaniment, in the first movement of Mozart's E flat major concerto, Liszt's "Fantaisie on Hungarian Airs," and a suite by Massenet. She exhibited abounding temperamental powers and amazing technic for one of her years, and, what was more remarkable, a soundness in phrasing that left little room for blame.—New York Herald, December 14.

Last March Miss Scholder played in Boston, her success being sensational, as the following notices attest:

Miss Scholder is a little girl of nine. That she has talent is evident enough; that she has great talent, more than probable. She has plainly been well and carefully taught. She plays clearly, nimbly and without undue contraction of the muscles even in difficult passages. Moreover, she has plainly a good sense of rhythm, which she shows in the way of making the rhythm perfectly clear, even when she hurries the tempo. She has great aplomb.—Boston Herald, March 8, 1901.

On Thursday afternoon a piano recital was given by little Hattie Scholder, assisted by Mme. Pierron-Hartmann, mezzo-soprano, in Steinert Hall. The little pianist was billed as a phenomenal child pianist, but she played more like a full-fledged artist with perfect technic and wonderful experience for so young a child. She was much applauded, and gave an encore which was Chopin's difficult G flat study. H. C. Hopper, Boston Times, March 10, 1901.

Miss Hattie Scholder is a child pianist, but one who, instead of playing the simplest things, as nearly everyone of her age does, plays such as the Chopin C minor (Revolutionary) study, the Schumann "Bird as a Prophet" and others that one expects only to hear from the adult pianist of experience. Miss Hattie is certainly remarkable for her years, as it is no easy matter to memorize and play with technical proficiency such pieces as those above mentioned, and she has many others of the same character in her repertory, for as extra numbers she played another of Mendelssohn's "Songs Without Words," and Chopin's G flat study from op. 25. As a child prodigy, she is one of the best ever heard in this city.—Boston Post, March 8, 1901.

Little Miss Scholder's latest success was won at Willow Grove, near Philadelphia, two weeks ago, when she appeared in connection with the Symphony Orchestra that was filling an engagement there. The young pianist received most favorable notices in all the Philadelphia newspapers.

Miss Scholder's repertory has constantly grown until now it is an extraordinary one for a girl of her age. Here it is:

Prelude and Fugue, C minor	Bach
Prelude and Fugue, D major	Bach
Prelude and Fugue, C sharp major	Bach
Theme and Variations	Beethoven
Sonate, op. 10, No. 2	Beethoven
Sonate, op. 31, No. 3	Beethoven
Pastoral	Scarlatti
Caprice	Scarlatti
Six numbers from Kinder Scenen, including Traumerei and Vogel als Prophet	Schumann
Consolation	Mendelssohn
Spinning Song	Mendelssohn
Etude (Mignon)	Schutt
Bolero	Ravina
Etude	Ravina
Tarantella	Heller
Etude	Moszkowski
Etude, op. 10, No. 12	Chopin
Etude, op. 25, No. 9	Chopin
Noeturnes, op. 9, No. 2	Chopin
Op. 32, No. 1	Chopin
Waltzes, op. 64, No. 2	Chopin
Valse Brillante, A flat major, op. 42	Chopin
Mazurka, B flat major	Chopin
Concertos with Orchestral Accompaniment.
Hungarian Fantaisie	Liszt
Concerto, E flat major	Mozart
Concerto	Mohr
Concerto, C minor	Beethoven

MARY MÜNCHHOFF.

More European Press Notices.

SUBSCRIPTION CONCERT OF THE KONIGLICHEN HOF-THEATRE.

In the concert which opened with the "Manfred" overture we renewed the acquaintance with a singer, Miss Mary Münchhoff, who appeared last year in the Tivoli concerts. Her charming appearance, natural, sympathetic manners and the phenomenal vocal talent which distinguish this youthful singer, gained for her this time also a magnificent success. In the aria, "L'Allegro, il penseroso ed il moderato," by Händel, her skill in coloratura, the flexibility and sweet, soft quantity of her voice were shown to good advantage. That which distinguishes this singer from all her contemporaries is the warm timbre of her voice, as well as her perfectly natural and therefore fascinating way of rendering all musical compositions. There is not the slightest trace of mannerism or coquetry. Her faultless tone formation is proof that a good method has developed her glorious natural talent into virtuosity. It was necessary to add two encores to the three songs on the program.—Hannoverische Courier, March 23, 1901.

Miss Mary Münchhoff sang with customary brilliancy the "Bell Song" from "Lakmé," which is very little known here. For a singer ranking as high as Miss Münchhoff the myriads of difficulties in coloratura offer great opportunities for arousing admiration and wonder. We value the genuine musical sense of beauty which revealed itself distinctly in the rendering of a group of songs more than all the purling passages of vocal virtuosity. A deep impression was made by Giordani's "Caro mio ben," and the well-known Grieg song, "Der Wintermag Scheiden."—Magdeburger Zeitung, February 20, 1901.

The highly esteemed singer Mary Münchhoff enraptured her audience with specimens of her coloratura art; enraptured, and still more, set their hearts aglow, not only in the cavatina, but also in the Schumann songs. We have seldom heard these well-known songs sung with such deep feeling. For the hearty applause which greeted her the artist gave two encores.—Magdeburger Anzeiger, January 6, 1901.

The charming German-American Mary Münchhoff shines in the heavens of art as a star of the first magnitude at the present time; less brilliantly, perhaps, than many an advertised star, but all the more honored in those circles where genuine, ensouled art is valued.—Magdeburger General Anzeiger, January 6, 1901.

SUBSCRIPTION CONCERT OF THE HERZOGLICHEN HOFKAPELLE.

Mary Münchhoff was the attraction. The melodious voice of the singer made her popular immediately after rendering the "Litaner," by Schubert. The applause increased from song to song, so that the artist was compelled to add "The Nightingale." This created such enthusiasm that the applause would not cease. It is seldom that a singer even approaches the artistic heights that Miss Münchhoff has gained. Her trill and piano are enchanting. Her correct pronunciation deserves especial praise. Her rendering of the aria from the opera "Philemon and Baucis," by Gounod, with orchestral accompaniment, was a magnificent success, and after this great effort she was forced to give an encore. It would give us great pleasure to meet this singer in another concert.—Braunschweiger Neueste Nachrichten, December 10, 1900.

In Mary Münchhoff we made the acquaintance of a singer who is highly accomplished, not only in rendering plain, simple songs, but also coloratura. Her soft, sweet soprano voice; her crystal, clear intonation, even in the highest registers, and the fascinating, sympathetic quality of tone, charm her audience. She possesses an admirable vocal technic, which places her in the ranks of the greatest coloratura singers. Her selections were choice and pleasing, and gave her opportunity to show her manifold artistic ability. In the brilliant, effective aria from Gounod's "Philemon and Baucis," and the well-known piece de bravure, Alabieff's "Nightingale," she enraptured her audience with rippling trills, piquant staccati, smooth runs and chromatics of the most brilliant and florid style. The enthusiasm created by her efforts increased at her artistic rendering of several songs with piano accompaniment. The lovely, tender song by Bach, "Willst du dein Herz mie schenken?"; the simple, pensive songs by Cornelius, "Untren" and "Das Veilchen"; the charming "Slumber Song," by Taubert, an extra song and an encore, which she very amiably offered, won the gratitude and affection of all. The artist was honored with stormy applause and repeated calls to appear again.—Chemnitz, October 5, 1900.

Mr. PLUNKET GREENE, Basso-Cantante,

In America March, April, May, 1902.

All communications regarding Terms and Dates to be addressed to

GEO. MAXWELL, 9 East 17th Street, New York City.

ST. NICHOLAS GARDEN, 66th Street, near Columbus Avenue.

KALTENBORN ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS.

Every Evening at 8:15. Admission, 50 cents.

VARIED PROGRAM NIGHTLY. AUTOMATICALLY COOLED. NO DRAFT.

DR. HOCH'S CONSERVATOIRE

For All Branches of Music.

IN FRANKFORT-ON-THE-MAIN.

The Winter Term commences September 1. Tuition is given by Messrs. Rector Prof. Dr. SCHOLZ and Prof. J. KNORR, Theory and History; Prof. J. FAST, L. UZIELLI, E. ENGESSER, C. FRIEDBERG and Miss MAYER, Piano; GELHAAR, Organ; Prof HUGO HEERMANN, Prof. KOENING, F. BASSERMANN and A. HESS, Violin; Prof. B. COSSMANN and Prof. HUGO BECKER, Violoncello; H. EN BELLWIDT and Miss SOHN and others, Singing. Fees: 360 to 450 marks a year. Prospectus sent free. Applications should be sent as soon as possible to THE MANAGEMENT.

GRACE G.

GARDNER,

Concert and Oratorio

SOPRANO.

Pupil of Blasco, Milan; Schmidt, Berlin; Henschel, London.

Studio: 36 West 25th St., New York.

ARTHUR

BERESFORD,

BASSO-BARITONE.

STEINERT HALL, BOSTON, MASS.

J. FRED

WOLLE,

ORGANIST.

Address: THE WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., New York.

BROAD STREET CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC,

GILBERT RAYNOLDS COMBS, Director.

1331 South Broad Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE FREE.

Sara Anderson,

Soprano,

For terms and particulars address

51 East 64th St.,

NEW YORK CITY.

2046 Leavenworth Street,
San Francisco, July 29, 1901.

THE new Stanford memorial organ has been the centre of interest in 'Frisco for the past two weeks during the Epworth League Convention, when it was used to accompany all the choruses; but the leaguers are gone, and the town is quiet again, as nearly everyone is away, and the season will not have begun to move forward till September, though some of the studios open August 1.

Mrs. Oscar Mansfeldt has resumed teaching; also Mrs. Marriner Campbell, Mrs. Von Meyerinck and a few others. Otto Bendix, Roscoe Warren Lucy, the Howes, Pasmore and nearly all the prominent musicians are still away. The outlook for organ recitals this winter is bad, for now it transpires that we are losing not alone Dr. H. J. Stewart, but Dr. Franklin Palmer, of St. Dominic's, has already taken his departure for a tour around the world. He intends to spend some time in Paris, where he will study under Widor, the celebrated organist of the Church of St. Sulpice, whose organ is the largest in Paris. Dr. Palmer expects to be away from San Francisco about two years. On the other hand, Dr. Stewart says that he will never return here for a permanency. There is nothing here for a good musician.

It is to be hoped that such a sentiment expressed by such a man as Dr. Stewart, the loss of whom to 'Frisco is a serious one, will sting the good people of this town out of the lethargy that seems to posses them, and awake them to a sense of the obligation due people who bring their talents to our community, and who, finding that appreciation is lacking and progress a dead letter, sooner or later take themselves off to a more encouraging field of operation. The people are beginning to stir, but so slowly! The splendid attendance at the convention concerts, and later at the recital given by Dr. Stewart on the fine new instrument loaned for the convention season, has proved what can be done. What we need, and need sadly, is a music hall of good proportions and thoroughly equipped for such occasions. But the question constantly arises, "Would the people support it if they had it?" and here the matter seems to rest. Many of us feel the slur this places upon the few as well as the many, and feel it keenly; but a mere handful of progressive spirits are but a unit in a movement of this kind, and we can but hope that ultimately the people of 'Frisco will be shamed into doing something in this line that will be worthy the name, and redeem us from the reputation we are rapidly acquiring and keep our best musicians at home.

Speaking of the new organ, which is a splendid instrument, Dr. Stewart in his recital on Saturday afternoon displayed the instrument to its utmost advantage, bringing out the many beautiful and individual tones as no one else could do, since Stewart is a master of this king of instruments.

His audience consisted of some 2,000 intelligent listeners, many of whom were warm personal friends of the organist, others having had the advantage of study under his tuition, and the fine program was duly appreciated and heartily applauded all through. Just before the closing number Dr. Stewart ascended the speaker's stand, and calling the attention of the audience by a few quiet words said he believed in "rendering honor where honor was due, and wished to introduce Murray M. Harris, of Los Angeles, the builder of the splendid instrument." Mr. Harris was called to the front and bowed his acknowledgment of the burst of applause with which he was received. Dr. Stewart's program opened with Guilmant's masterly Sonata No. 1, in D minor, a splendid composition for the organ, and one which put the audience in a thoroughly good humor for the following numbers. The "Pastorale" was one of the most beautifully handled bits it was ever my pleasure to listen to, and brought out the tender human soul that seemed to be hiding in the heart of the great instrument somewhere. The Finale displayed the power the splendid diapasons were capable of breathing forth, and there is in this organ a more complete set of diapason stops than is usual even with organs of this size. The "Communion in F" (Grison) was so persistently encored it was finally repeated, and the two Wagner numbers sounded almost as if rendered by a full orchestra.

It was a thoroughly enjoyable recital and a rare treat, for outside the churches there is absolutely no opportunity for organ concerts. After the close of the program Dr. Stewart held an impromptu reception, when he was greeted on all sides with congratulations and received many a warm hand clasp, and at the solicitation of his friends rendered many a dainty bit of improvisation in explanation of the various stops and combinations. The program for Saturday's recital was as follows:

Sonata, No. 1, in D minor	Guilmant
Canteline Nuptiale	Dubois
Toccata	Dubois
Communion in F	Grison
Marche Funèbre et Chant Seraphique	Guilmant
Consolation in D flat	Liszt
Poloanise in A	Chopin
Wotan's Farewell and Magic Fire Scene	Wagner
Song of the Rhine Maidens (Götterdämmerung)	Wagner
Kaiser March	Wagner

To-night will be the final public appearance of Dr. Stewart in our city, and is virtually a farewell concert. It will doubtless be more largely attended than that of Saturday, as everyone will seize the opportunity of hearing both the lovely instrument and Dr. Stewart also for the last time. To-morrow begins the work of taking down and removing the organ for its journey to the Memorial Chapel in Palo Alto, which is to be its future home, and at the end of August Dr. Stewart leaves 'Frisco for his new position in Trinity Church, Boston. Following is the program for to-night's concert, to which will be added by urgent request Chopin's celebrated "Marche Funebre," which Dr. Stewart plays magnificently.

Suite Gothique	Boellmann
Air with Variations, in G	Lemmens
Fantaisia in D minor	Merkel
Priere in D flat	Callaerts
Intermezzo in B flat	Callaerts
Slumber Song	Schytte
Triumphal March (Sigurd Jorsalfer)	Grieg
Im Volkston	Grieg
Ranz des Vaches	Grieg
Danse à la Paysanne	Grieg
Fantaisia, Das Rheingold	Wagner

This week will deprive us of two favorite singers who have elected to go the way of men and maids generally and enter the ranks of matrons and benedicts. Both the young ladies in question are pupils of Mrs. Marriner Campbell. Miss Isella Van Pelt becomes the bride of Thomas Mills, a banker, of Kingston, Canada. Miss Xena Roberts, also a pupil of Mrs. Campbell, will fill the position of contralto in Calvary Church choir vacated by Miss Van Pelt. Miss Marie Partridge, the soprano of St. Stephen's Church, is to marry Charles Stanley Price, a rising young lawyer of Salt Lake City.

The quartet of Mrs. Campbell's pupils, Mrs. Mead, Miss Kerr, Miss Roberts and Miss Van Pelt, which, with the Knickerbocker Male Quartet and Roscoe Warren Lucy, pianist, made such a hit this season in Chautauqua circles up North, sang again at the Chatauqua gathering at Pacific Grove last week, with such success they were telegraphed to return. The same combination with Walter Campbell will give a concert Wednesday night at the Seamen's Institute, and will be under the direction of Mrs. Campbell.

Mrs. A. Wedmore Jones.

Charlotte Maconda.

CHARLOTTE MACONDA is at Asbury Park, where she is resting after a long and successful season of concert, oratorio and recital work in all the principal cities of the East, including New York, Boston and Washington. Madame Maconda's engagements commence again in October with the New England Music Festivals, for which she has been re-engaged for the third consecutive year. Her brilliancy and versatility as an artist, as well as her personal charm and popularity, are gaining further proof each season by the kind and the number of demands for appearances by her. Many engagements of the highest class are already booked for next winter by her manager, Loudon G. Charlton. Madame Maconda has earned her success and merits her triumphs.

Katherine Fisk.

KATHERINE FISK, after a tour through the Middle West late in the spring in which she was accorded a series of ovations, is summering in Nova Scotia. Mrs. Fisk's pre-eminence among American contraltos is evidenced by the number of return dates and other important bookings already announced for her, for next season, by her manager, Loudon G. Charlton. Meanwhile she is enjoying the sea air and cool breezes at Cape Breton and will not return to New York before October 1.

Elsa Marshall,
Soprano.
222 Hosea Avenue,
Clifton,
CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Madame
CLARA NOVELLO DAVIES
Professor of Voice Production.
Conductor of the Royal Welsh Ladies' Choir.
(Under Royal patronage.)
Madame Davies has a vacancy for two resident lady pupils
For Prospectus and Terms apply to
121 Victoria St., Westminster, LONDON, S. W.

GLENN HALL
TENOR.
Address CHAS. R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building,
or Kimball Hall, Chicago,

The Guilmant Organ School.
(COPYRIGHT.)
PRESIDENT: ALEXANDRE GUILMANT. DIRECTOR: WILLIAM C. CARL.
Reopens October 14.

SCHEDULE OF WORK:

FIRST YEAR.
The Organ—Private lessons, one each week.
Harmony—Class lessons, one each week.
Musical Form—Musical Dictation and Musical Knowledge—Class lessons.
Service Playing—Chants, Hymn Tunes, Anthems, Etc.—Class lessons.

SECOND YEAR.
The Organ—Private lessons, one each week.
Harmony and Counterpoint—Class lessons, one each week.
Musical Analysis—Musical History, Organ Tuning—Class lessons.
Service Playing—Chants, Hymn Tunes, Anthems, Etc.—Class lessons.

STUDENTS' RECITALS OCCUR EACH MONTH.

Address: THE GUILMANT ORGAN SCHOOL, 34 West 12th St., New York.

DRESDEN, FRANKLINSTRASSE 20,
July 21, 1901.

THE Fourth of July was celebrated here by an American composers' night at the Belvedere, which was crowded to the utmost. Deeply regretting that insurmountable circumstances prevented my accepting the invitation I had received to attend the concert, I ask the privilege of quoting a few lines on the subject communicated to me by a highly esteemed member of the American colony in Dresden who was present. He writes:

"For the Dresden readers of THE MUSICAL COURIER the annual celebration of the Glorious Fourth at the Royal Belvedere is quite an event—the gathering of Americans, members of the colony as well as the transient traveler visiting this most charming city. No one who has ever witnessed it will forget the patriotic reunion. The hall and garden both were crowded, Americans predominating, intermingled with the German aristocracy of the capital. To an attentive observer the scene was uncommonly interesting. The enthusiasm bursting forth with the first chord of every national air demonstrated a patriotism hardly reached by any other nationality.

"It must have amazed the German visitors, who are not inspired with the same impulse, hardly anyone appearing able to comprehend it. We owe sincere thanks to Herr Trenkler for his repeated consideration of our national holiday. The program consisted of a number of American popular airs, marches by Sousa, &c.; Wagner's overture to 'Tannhäuser' and Weber's 'Jubel Overture' and the 'Fantaisie Dramatique,' by A. Sieberg, which were splendidly given and created a deep impression. The evening was Director Trenkler's greatest success of the season."

So far the quotation, which, however, did not mention the unusually enthusiastic reception A. Sieberg's entaisie met with. It was favorably referred to in the daily papers, especially so in the Neueste Nachrichten, which recognized the beauties of the composition in full. The performance was reported to have been superior to the production of it last year, when it formed one of the hems of the American selections.

The summer vacations of the Royal Opera having set in on July 1 there remains musically not much worth chronicling at present. The competitive singing festival in the music hall of the International Art Exhibition on Monday last was a success. Among the twelve male choral societies which entered the ranks the Orpheus won the first prize.

Pupils' recitals form another feature of Dresden's summer life. Recognizing the good results achieved at some recent vocal examinations of the various schools here, attention should be drawn to the importance of a perfect pronunciation of the German language as a medium for musical expression. The Franklin College, of Dresden (preparing students for the best universities in the world, including the Harvard and Yale institutions), having some years ago attached to its staff of teachers a German lady, Frau Dechner, of the well-known Senff-Georgi elocution school, I embrace the opportunity of mentioning this fact as a great compliment to her, for as a rule only male teachers are engaged in this profession. Frau Deckner meanwhile, according to the flattering "certificate" of the head master of the college, John A. Logie, has gained such "unexceptionable results" that I trust this information will be a welcome hint to foreigners visiting Dresden and wishing to learn German, all the more so as Frau Deckner, who owns a pleasant home in the Werderstrasse 15, intends staying in the city, continuing her instructions even during the holidays. Her terms, which are always moderate, will be reduced in summer.

A new Italian composer, Stefano Donaudy, of Naples (aged twenty), is busy on an opera called "Theodor Körner," which, as the papers here state, will be of great interest to Dresden, chiefly so on account of the hero, the historical warrior and poet, Theodor Körner, of Dresden, whose life's tale, short and dazzling as it was, certainly offers an effective theme for the musical treatment of a young author of lofty strivings. The "H" critic in the Neueste Nachrichten is very enthusiastic about the score.

After a short sketch of the libretto, the latter done by the composer's brother, which as to its historical and biographical content is a true description of the poet's life, the music is referred to as being "grand in descriptive power and simplicity of expression." Among the acting persons are, besides Theodor Körner, Christian Körner, his father; Toni Adamberger, the Vienna actress, who was the fiancée of the poet, Zriny, Schiller, Novalis, &c. The first scene is laid in Vienna, the second act is in Loschwitz, with a view of Dresden in the background; later on Woebbelin, where Theodor Körner fell fighting for his fatherland. The book pictures him as a lover, poet, soldier and hero. The finishing touch on this work will be given this month, after which it will be published as soon as possible, appearing at the same time in Italian and German.

Speaking of publications I have to mention a new violin school for beginners (Vorschule für den Unterricht im Violenspiel), by Pius Köhler, edited by Edm. Stoll, of Leipsic, which has been recommended to me as being theoretically and practically commendable.

According to news from Brussels Mme. Lina Rüegger, the mother of Elsa Rüegger, the well-known 'cellist, has opened a music school in that city, Rue Simonis 18, where the pupils are taught by the first masters of the capital. Among the patrons are celebrities such as I. B. Colyns, A. de Greef, Ed. Jacobs, &c. Young ladies eager to pursue their studies under Madame Rüegger's own supervision find a pleasant home in her house, where special attention is paid to health and the comforts of home life.

Paderewski before leaving Dresden, true to his well-known generosity and noble character, gave a large sum to be distributed among the choristers and the employees of the Royal Opera, this as a token of his reconnaissance for the care they took in the studying of his opera. Never have we here met with a composer so unassuming and so full of consideration to everybody, as well as personally so highly thought of and beloved as is Paderewski.

A. INGMAN.

MISS JOSEPH'S BOOKINGS.—Miss Alice E. Joseph, opera and concert agent, of 7A Hanover street, London, has arranged engagements for Madame Melba and party with the Belfast Philharmonic Society, on October 18, and with Mr. Kuhe at the Dome, Brighton, on October 25.

EUROPEAN NOTES.

THE 17th of July thirty years ago was the death-day of Karl Tausig, an artist who seemed to be destined to be the successor of Liszt. It was after a visit to him at Weimar that Tausig was attacked by a serious fever, and died before he had reached his thirtieth year. From his school for higher piano playing, founded in 1866, at Berlin, issued such pupils as Rafael Joseffy, Oskar Reif, Max Pinner, Vera Timanoff and other celebrated performers. Tausig was one of the early champions of Wagner's ideas. Wagner spoke of him first and foremost in his address on the laying of the foundation stone of the theatre at Bayreuth as one of the most able supporters of his plan. Wagner wrote for his tomb:

"Reif sein zum Sterben, des Lebens zögernd sprie Bende Frucht, früh sie erwerben, in Lenzes jahnerblühender Flucht, war es Dein Loos, war es Dein Wagen—wir mussen Dein Loos wie Dein Wagen beklagen."

How artists used to be rewarded in London may be inferred from a curious announcement that has been unearthed by Mr. Edwards from a daily paper of 1833, to the effect that "elegant pieces of plate" had been prepared by the Philharmonic Society for presentation to Pasta, Malibran and Herz, "for singing and performing without any charge." Down, however, to a much later date the custom was continued by the Sacred Harmonic Society, who offered such low fees that several of the singers preferred that the total amount due to them for the season should be devoted to the purchase of plate, which was inscribed as "presented by the directors" to the singers in question. The vocalists seemed to imagine that small as the fees were, the affair was of value as an advertisement.

Alfred Cortot and Willy Schütz have formed a society for giving model performances of classical operas in Paris. The necessary funds have been raised, and the first performance, the "Götterdämmerung," will take place April 15, 1902. Madames Litvinne and Brema, and Ernst Van Dyck and Edouard de Reszké are engaged, as well as two celebrated French vocalists. The orchestra will consist of 100 pieces

NORDICA

Season 1901-1902.

RECITALS ONLY.

SEE LATER ANNOUNCEMENTS.

LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, NEW YORK.

ACCOMPANIST.

T. W. RIESBERG.

INSTRUCTION.

Piano, Organ, Harmony.

With THE MUSICAL COURIER.
Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.
Secretary-Treasurer New York State M. T. A.
Residence-Studio: 954 Eighth Ave., cor. 56th St., NEW YORK.
TELEPHONE: 452 COLUMBUS.

OSCAR SAENGER,

Vocal Instruction,

WILL RESUME TEACHING ON SEPTEMBER 16.

Teacher of Josephine S. Jacoby, Contralto; Elizabeth D. Leonard, Contralto; Madame de Pasquali, Soprano; Sara Anderson, Soprano; Hildegard Hoffmann, Soprano; E. Léon Rains, Basso; Joseph S. Baernstein, Basso; John I. Young, Tenor, and other prominent singers now before the public

STUDIO: 51 East 64th Street, NEW YORK.

Mme. VON KLENNER, Garcia Representative,

HAS OPENED A

Special Summer School at Lake Chautauqua, N. Y.

PARIS EXPOSITION, 1900.
Only Honorable Mention or Distinction of Any Vocal Instructor.

FOR PARTICULARS
Address THE WALDMERE, LAKEWOOD, LAKE CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y.
or 40 STUYVESANT STREET, NEW YORK, Second Avenue and 10th Street.
AFTER OCT. 1, 230 WEST 52d STREET.

VAN YORX Tenor,

6 E. 17 St., NEW YORK.

Under Management of WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., NEW YORK CITY.

chosen from the Lamoureux Orchestra, and will be invisible, as at Bayreuth. It is supposed that Cortot, a young genius of twenty-three, will conduct in chief and superintend the staging and rehearsals. With him will be Chevillard, Mottl and Siegfried Wagner. One of the most interesting revivals will be Berlioz's "Damnation de Faust" with the costumes and decorations desired by the composer.

The opera performances at Covent Garden this season were:

Faust	8	Much Ado	2
Lohengrin	6	Roi d'Ys	2
Otello	6	Cavalleria	2
Romeo	5	Meistersinger	2
Tristan	5	Hansel	2
Carmen	5	Messaline	2
Aida	4	Don Giovanni	2
Tannhäuser	4	Huguenots	2
La Bohéme	4	Siegfried	2
Lucia (Mad Scene)	4	Tosca	1
Rigoletto	3

How delightful to learn that London enjoys the Mad Scene in "Lucia," a scene which always recalls the memory of youth, and poor, dear Emma Abbott.

The ballet "Pan im Busch," music by Felix Mottl, was performed for the first time June 20 at the Court Theatre of Munich, and had a brilliant success.

At Dresden the novelties for the coming season will be "Madchenherz," by C. Buongiorno; "Fearnnoth," a one act piece by R. Strauss; "Runczahl," by Dr. A. Stelzner, and "Der Polneicke Jude," by Weis, which has hitherto only been given at the German Theatre, of Prague.

The Opéra Comique, of Paris, announces for the next season "La Troupe Jolicour," by Coquard, as its first novelty; then follow "Griseldis," by Massenet; "Titania," by Huë; "Circe," by the brothers Hillemacher; "Muguethe," by Misso; "Le Carmelite," by Hahn, and "Peleas et Melisande," by Dubussy. The performance of "Tristan and Isolde" will be deferred till the season of 1902-1903, as Van Dyck is engaged for 1901-1902 in America. Perhaps "Der Freischütz" will be given in its place.

A concert room performance of a new two act opera, "Urwass," was lately given in St. Petersburg. The composer, Dlusski, is a well-known musician of the Russian capital, and this, his first dramatic composition, is full of melodic charm and suffused with Oriental color. The success was pronounced, and the work will be given next season on the stage.

A two days' festival took place last month under the direction of R. Hol at Utrecht. The first day was devoted to the now popular "Beatitudes" of César Franck, the second to fragments of "Fidelio" and "The Meistersinger," concerto and two new orchestral works by young musicians of Utrecht. The first, a "Holland Rhapsodie," by Van Aurovz, is marked by talent and well instrumented, and the "Romantic Intermezzo," by Wagenaar, is a cleverly writteen "Traumerei."

Frank L. Limbert has taken two scenes from Sudermann's "Johannes" as a text for a new composition. The scenes are the eighth of the fourth act and the eighth of the fifth act, and they form the two corresponding divisions of the work, which is for three solo voices and orchestra. To both the vocal and instrumental portions Limbert has given proper expression, and, although the melody with its long drawn cantilene, sometimes falls short of the instrumentation, yet on the whole the voices have the chief part. Color is left to the instruments and worked out by the orchestra with great taste and delicacy.

MADAME PATTI'S DEBUT IN NEW ORLEANS.

THE announcement that Madame Patti had sold her beautiful castle in Wales and intended to spend most of her time hereafter in Sweden, the country of her newly married husband's birth, has been made the occasion for the publication of many articles referring to the famous singer and her wonderful career. Madame Patti now rarely honors the stage, and the infrequency of her public appearances no doubt has contributed in some degree to increase the prestige which has always surrounded them. Nevertheless, she ranks, and will always rank in the estimation of judicious critics, as one of the most gifted and artistic vocalists in the world. Her great and enduring fame lends a particular interest to the early incidents of her career, and to those precocious manifestations of genius which it is always pleasant to discover in the lives of the distinguished people of the world. It is a curious and not uninteresting fact that when Madame Patti made her first appearance in New Orleans, at the tender age of ten years, the discerning critics of the local press pronounced her voice one of the most exceptional in the history of music and predicted for her the phenomenal success which has always attended her career upon the stage. The whole history of Madame Patti's début in this city is full of interest, and as the facts constitute an important chapter in the musical history of New Orleans, it may be worth while to record them here in some detail.

Maurice Strakosch, tenor, pianist, composer and impresario, came to New Orleans with his company of artists in the spring of 1853. Strakosch had been originally educated as a pianist, and at eleven years of age made his début at Brunn, when he performed a concerto by Hummel. After reaching manhood he aspired to become a tenor, and for three years or more received instructions from Madame Pasta, for whom Bellini wrote "Norma" and "Sonnambula." After finishing his education as a vocalist, however, he decided to abandon an operatic career, and in his capacity as a concert pianist traveled for some years throughout Europe.

In 1848 Strakosch came to America, and soon after his arrival in New York began his career as an impresario. Shortly after reaching New York, in 1848, Strakosch organized a concert company, which included, among others, Mlle. Parodi, also a pupil of Pasta, and Mlle. Amalia Patti, a sister of Adelina. With this company Strakosch visited a great many cities, and at the end of a two year tour, married Mlle. Amalia Patti. As the brother-in-law of Adelina, who was at that time a mere child, Strakosch evinced much interest in her musical education, and the excellent vocal lessons received by him from Pasta were carefully imparted to the youthful songstress, who was even then exciting much astonishment by her skill and dexterity as a vocalist. At any rate, Strakosch was a thorough musician, both as a singer and instrumentalist, and, as Adelina Patti remained under his control for many years, in fact, until she married the Marquis de Caux, it is quite likely to presume that she had an opportunity to profit greatly by the counsel and experience of her talented brother-in-law, who was always at hand to advise and direct her musical studies.

In February, 1853, Strakosch visited New Orleans with a concert company, consisting of Ole Bull, violinist; Amalia Patti Strakosch, contralto; Adelina Patti, soprano, and Strakosch himself as pianist.

The first concert was announced for Thursday, February 24, but, through some unavoidable cause, was postponed until Saturday, February 26. This concert took place at the Odd Fellows' Hall, and the daily papers and concert programs referred to Miss Adelina Patti as being only nine years old. As a matter of fact, however, it may be stated that, shortly after reaching New Orleans, Adelina Patti celebrated her tenth birthday, as she was born in Madrid on February 10, 1843. Therefore, at the time of her first appearance in New Orleans, on February 26, 1853 Miss Patti had just turned her tenth year. Her tour, however, had commenced some four or five months before, at which time Strakosch very properly advertised the little songstress as being nine years old—that is, not having completed her tenth birthday, and, under these circumstances it was entirely in order for him to adhere to this announcement on all of his programs until the close of the season.

Madame Strakosch did not sing at the first concert, and indeed, was ill throughout her entire stay in New Orleans appearing only at the last concert, and then begging to be excused after singing her first number. Adelina, therefore was left alone to interpret the vocal part of the program and the quoted criticisms written by local papers at the time will show how well she sustained her part of the performances. At this concert Ole Bull played a concert

MRS.
WEBB GARDNER
SOPRANO.
FIRST SEASON IN AMERICA.
ORATORIO, CONCERT RECITAL.
Sole direction, LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, New York.

Mme. SCHUMANN-HEINK, Mr. BISPHAM, Sig. CAMPANARI,
And other Members of the MAURICE GRAU OPERA CO.,
Are open for Concerts, Oratorios, Recitals and Musical Festivals during the Season 1901-2.
FOR TERMS AND DATES ADDRESS
ERNEST GOERLITZ, Sole and Exclusive Agent, Metropolitan Opera House, New York City.

Miss ADELE MARGULIES
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Studios: Nos. 705-6 Carnegie Hall, New York

M. I.
SCHERHEY,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Combined Italian-French-German Method.
CHURCH, CONCERT, ORATORIO, OPERA.
Studio: 780 PARK AVENUE, Cor. 73d St., NEW YORK.
Telephone: Seventy-ninth, 1152.

Mrs. HELEN TRUST
SOPRANO.
Vocal Recitals in English, French, Italian.
33 Grove End Road,
St. John's Wood, London, England.

THIRD AMERICAN TOUR
SEASON 1901-2.
161 Concerts Last Season.
LEONORA JACKSON
ASSISTED BY Harry J. Fellows,
Tenor.
William Bauer, Pianist.
Direction ERNEST H. JACKSON and A. L. WAKEFIELD.
Address: NEW YORK, 31 Union Square West. CHICAGO, 71 Monroe Stree

composed by himself, a national fantaisie dedicated to the Congress of the United States, and Paganini's "Carnival of Venice" and "Witches' Dance." A footnote on the program called the reader's attention to the fact that the last named piece had only recently been received by Ole Bull, up to which time the execution of double harmonics was not believed possible. The audience were also requested in the newspaper announcements to occupy their seats ten minutes before the concert commenced. The price of admission was $1 and $2. Strakosch played two of his own compositions—a fantaisie on "Lucia" and Banjo Caprice. Miss Adelina Patti sang "O Luce Di Quest Anima," from Donizetti's "Linda," the Rondo Finale of "Ah, Non Giunge," from "Sonnambula"; "Coming Thrôugh the Rye" and Jenny Lind's celebrated "Echo Song," composed by Eckert.

The opinion formed at that time regarding Adelina Patti can best be made known by quoting the following criticism taken from a daily paper of Monday, February 28, 1853. This criticism is, indeed, a truly remarkable one in view of its prophetic nature, as Madame Patti's reputation at the present time, as it has been for many years past, is a complete verification of the unerring prediction set forth in such a comprehensive and musicianly review of her singing at so tender an age when precociousness might perhaps render it impossible for the critic to adequately determine her future possibilities.

"Odd Fellows' Hall presented on Saturday night a magnificent array of beauty and fashion assembled to do homage to the matured musical genius of the great Norwegian and the precocious and astonishing excellence of Miss Adelina Patti. The immense area of the hall was completely occupied, and from the stage to the farther extremity scarcely space enough was left for a single additional spectator. We have seldom witnessed in New Orleans a more brilliant and numerous assembly, or one in which the ladies constituted so important an element. The concert opened by Strakosch with a fantaisie from 'Lucia,' of which the execution was marked by the extreme agility, neatness, expression and taste which distinguishes this delightful pianist. Soon after leaving the stage, Strakosch reappeared leading by the hand a little girl of almost infantile years and form, with a dark but expressive physiognomy, and a pair of very animated black eyes. This was Adelina Patti, and the moment she uttered a note the audience were satisfied that her vocal capabilities had not been exaggerated. Imagine a child nine years of age warbling the intricate, florid and ornamental music of one of Donizetti's most difficult cavatinas, and executing it, not merely with tame correctness, but with a precision, a power, a richness of sound, a boundless flexibility and a degree of spirit and soul not unworthy of the most finished and renowned prima donna. This child is, indeed, wonderfully gifted. Her voice is a pure soprano of delicious quality, true, rich, equal, firm, of vast compass and apparently under perfect control. Nothing can be more exquisite than this instrument—art alone is needed to render it absolutely unsurpassed, and, when age shall have deepened its volume and augmented its sonority, its possessor will be endowed with the most glorious voice that God ever gave to woman. That it requires cultivation and labor now—that it needs all the aids and appliances of sound artistic instruction, may be inferred from the fact that Adelina Patti has seen but nine summers. But if her guardians and teachers spare her too much exertion, and procure her all the advantages which so highly endowed a little creature deserves to enjoy, then will come a time when she may challenge the world for a peer. Why, even now, the simple fact that this child sings 'Ah, Non Giunge' and Jenny Lind's 'Herdsman's Song,' with the echo in a style to delight the most fastidious connoisseur, suffices to prove that she is a vocal wonder."

The second concert was given at Odd Fellows' Hall on Wednesday, March 2. On this occasion Adelina Patti sang the following: "Cavatina," from "Ernani"; "Home, Sweet Home"; Eckert's "Echo Song" and "Je Suis le Bayadere," rendered familiar at that time by Anna Bishop. Strakosch played his own arrangement of "Fille du Regiment" and "La Sylphide." Ole Bull played his own compositions, being a transcription of Bellini's "Romeo and Juliette," and a "Nocturne Amoroso" and "Rondo Giocoso," also Paganini's "Introduction and Caprice" on "Nel Cor Piu" of Pasiello, and "Carnival of Venice." In a daily paper of March 3 the following criticism appears:

"Another full and fashionable assemblage greeted Ole Bull and his assistant artists last evening at Odd Fellows' Hall, and richly was the audience repaid for its attendance. The great Norwegian performed with even more than his wonted fire, vigor and sprit; while little Adelina Patti won unstinted and enthusiastic applause by her admirable execution of the morceaux assigned to her on the program. This child is truly termed a musical phenomenon. The possession of a voice of such wondrous purity, clearness, compass and flexibility is in itself an endowment of the rarest character; but, when we add that this delicious voice is inspired by genius of a high order, exquisite sensibility and intuitive taste, those who have not witnessed Miss Patti's execution will be enabled to conceive the extent of our admiration, while those who have will not wonder at the encomiums we have lavished upon her. We repeat what we have said, after hearing her for the first time, that, if her vocal powers are properly cultivated and ripened by methodical instruction, instead of being prematurely forced into hothouse luxuriance, she is destined to become the greatest songstress that ever charmed the ear of the public."

The last concert was advertised for the evening of Friday, March 4. On this occasion Amalia Patti Strakosch assisted, and was announced to sing the "Cavatina" from "Barbiere de Seville"; "Ah, Mon Fils," from "Le Prophete," and "Chanson a Boire," from "Lucrezia Borgia." Finding herself too indisposed, however, to proceed after the "Cavatina" from the "Barbiere," Mr. Strakosch came forward and presented her excuses to the public. Adelina Patti sang "Ah, Non Giunge," from "Sonnambula"; the celebrated "Air Polka" of Sontag, and Eckert's "Echo Song." Ole Bull and Strakosch made up the remaining numbers, the former playing Paganini's "Witches' Dance," a "Polacca" and "Fantaisie Nationale," of his own composition, and the latter playing his "La Chasse" and "Le Rossignol."

Although this concert was positively announced as the last, the artists were finally persuaded to prolong their stay, and another concert was arranged for the evening of Wednesday, March 9. Unfortunately, this time Adelina Patti was suddenly taken ill and could not sing her numbers, which consisted of "Cavatina" from "Ernani"; "Je Suis le Bayadere," Jenny Lind's "Bird Song" and Eckert's "Echo Song." Ole Bull played variations on a theme from "Romeo and Juliette," of Bellini; introduction and variations on "Nel Cor Piu," of Pasiello, by Paganini; a fantaisie arranged by himself on themes from "Sonnambula" and "Favorita," and the irrepressible "Carnival de Venice." Strakosch played his "Lucia" fantaisie and "Banjo Caprice."

A final concert for the benefit of the orphan asylums was announced for Saturday, March 12, but, on account of the continued indisposition of Miss Adelina Patti and Madame Strakosch, the affair was indefinitely postponed. On March 14, however, Strakosch took his company of artists to Mobile for a series of concerts, returning to New Orleans on Sunday, March 20, and on the evening of Tuesday, March 22, their last concert for the benefit of charitable institutions, postponed from March 12, took place at the Odd Fellows' Hall.

Strakosch and Ole Bull are dead, but Adelina Patti is still the living exponent of song, having more than fulfilled the remarkable prophetic utterances predicted of her at the early age of nine, during her visit to New Orleans in the spring of 1853. In 1856-57 Adelina Patti made a short concert tour of the Antilles in company with Gottschalk, and, on November 24, 1859, she made her début on the operatic stage in New York in the opera of "Lucia," under the direction of her brother-in-law, Maurice Strakosch.—William L. Hawes, in New Orleans Daily Picayune.

FREE PORTRAITS OF American Composers

MAILED FREE, our Special Catalogues, Selected Songs and Selected Piano Music, containing 39 portraits of composers of songs and 23 composers of piano music, together with reproductions, in part, of music and a list of successful compositions by each composer.

For the best works of eminent composers of all nations order Oliver Ditson Company Editions.

The musical publications of all publishers carried in stock.

Send for circular "Music by Mail," giving special prices on sheet music and octavo music.

Oliver Ditson Company - - - Boston
Chas. H. Ditson & Co. - - New York
J. E. Ditson & Co. - - - Philadelphia
A388

VICTOR HARRIS,

Vocal Training.

The Art of Singing in All Its Branches.

STUDIO: THE ALPINE, 55 West 33d Street, NEW YORK.

RUBY CUTTER,

SOPRANO,

Dramatic and Coloratura.

CONCERT and ORATORIO.
REPERTOIRE.

Under the direction of HENRY WOLFSOHN.

Boston Address: 159 Tremont Street.

HAROLD BAUER,

AMERICAN TOUR, 1902.

Commencing in January with BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

DATES NOW BOOKING.

For all particulars apply to GEO. W. STEWART, 120 Tremont Street, BOSTON, MASS.

General Representative for Europe: ROBERT STRAKOSCH, 59 Rue La Bruyère, PARIS.

RAFAEL JOSEFFY.

Address: Letter Box 38, NORTH TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

CHAUTAUQUA

HOTEL ATHENAEUM,
CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y.,
August 3, 1901.

"There is no God!" he, mocking, said. "Behold,
Honor have I, and happiness, and gold.
Abundantly from day to day I live.
What more, I ask you, has your God to give?"
And so he went his way—until that night—
Which comes at last, when all our fancied might
From out our clutch like running water slips.
"Oh God!" he prayed, between his bloodless lips.
—Edwin L. Sabin, in the June Chautauquan.

ART, science and religion are irresistible. The Pan-American Exposition and the Chautauqua Assembly unite in bringing many thousands of visitors to New York State this summer.

It is satisfactory to observe that in learned Chautauqua discourses music is not being neglected. In the concluding address of his "Pan-American Series," Rev. Albert L. Hudson paid a tribute to an American bandmaster. This is what he said:

"The educational element in the electrical effects was discovered by a bandmaster, and by him first expressed. Everyone feels a thrill when the illumination comes, growing from the first red glow to a burst of brilliance. But we could not feel what it meant until Sousa's band played 'Nearer My God to Thee.' Then it flashed on us that all this means the partnership of God and man. Our minds went over the experiences of a lifetime, and we saw that man is drawing nearer to God. The band told the most wonderful significance of the Pan-American."

Here, indeed, may be found a noble mingling of religion and music. Will not John Philip Sousa be inspired anew, such words having been spoken?

But, alas! The voice of a critic is heard; his theme likewise being none other than the great fair:

"Christian civilization is going amusement crazy," asserted Rev. Dr. Orrin P. Gifford during his July sojourn in Chautauqua. And he added: "The average man or woman does not care to think. At the Pan-American Exposition the solid exhibits are deserted for the Midway." Referring again to Buffalo's present centre of attraction, he said:

"I know a devout woman in Buffalo who will not go inside the Exposition grounds. She does not wish to take the trouble, although she has heard how beautiful it is there. She says she has had a vision. This vision is so wonderful that she thinks human hands cannot approach anything so magnificent. So she stays at home—only a short distance from the Pan-American—without seeing it. I believe her vision is that of the New Jerusalem."

However, if of a terrestrial nature, perhaps this vision which the Buffalo lady has seen is none other than the Chautauqua Assembly! Why not? "Chautauqua seems absolutely sane and wholesome," is a statement for which Professor Axson, of Princeton, who came here to lecture on Macbeth and Browning, is responsible.

Music journalism has not been discussed here as yet this season, but "The American press is superior to ours," said Dr. Marcus Dods, professor in New College, Edinburgh, Scotland. "It may be a little sensational," he continued, "but it is fair and kind, and treats the church as an equal with other subjects, and not as something to be mocked and looked down upon. Your great headlines amuse us; we have nothing like that, but," he added, smiling, "I have come to understand them, I think. People read them and nothing more."

The Chautauqua concert-goer is often favorably impressed and sometimes fairly astonished when he observes the broad and lucid effects which Dr. H. R. Palmer, of New York, secures in conducting his amphitheatre choir, for the organization, though recognized as an indispensable feature of the assembly, must ever be of a transitory or impromptu nature. Thus, under extraordinary circumstances, Dr. Palmer forcibly evidences that he possesses the essential characteristics of a leader.

The orchestra this season, as formerly, is conducted by Charles E. Rogers, whose duties are exacting, the list of compositions which claim his baton being long and varied.

I. V. Flagler presides at the Amphitheatre organ, playing solos which the vast audiences do not fail to appreciate, and giving valuable support with his organ accompaniments. The services of Henry B. Vincent, piano accompanist, likewise are in constant demand.

A future issue of THE MUSICAL COURIER will contain an extensive account of the progress which is being made here by the many promising pupils of one of America's most prominent pianists, William H. Sherwood.

J. Harry Wheeler, the eminent vocal instructor, is in the midst of the busiest season he has experienced here. His representative class numbers sixty pupils, a number of whom came from New York, and he gives twenty-three lessons daily, teaching from 7.30 a. m. until 8.30 p. m., all of which is not surprising, for before Mr. Wheeler left his New York studio his Chautauqua engagement book was in constant demand. As this great and ever increasing popularity convincingly illustrates, he has loyally supported and promoted the musical interests of the assembly. Next year he will doubtless find it necessary to increase his staff of vocal assistants at Chautauqua.

Mrs. E. T. Tobey, of Memphis, Tenn., whose methods are indorsed by William H. Sherwood, is conducting interesting classes in piano instruction.

Members of the first quartet which sang here this season were Mrs. Ada M. Sheffield, soprano, of Chicago; Miss Grace L. Carter, contralto, of Boston; Edward Strong, tenor, of New York, and J. Lawrence Knowles, basso, of New York. Mrs. Charles Howard Trego, soprano, of Chicago; Miss Minnie C. Vesey, contralto, of Nashville, Tenn.; Charles E. Lindlinger, tenor, of Chicago, and Gustav Holmquist, basso, of Chicago, constitute the present quartet, which will be succeeded on Friday of next week by Mme. Schultze Wichmann, soprano; Mme. Lowe Wichmann, contralto; Ben Franklin, tenor, and Dr. Carl Dufft, basso.

One of this week's visitors is Miss Banker, of Rochester, N. Y., a pupil of Mme. Evans Von Klenner, the distinguished New York vocal instructor, who has this season successfully established an influential summer school of singing at Lakewood, on Chatauqua Lake. As many Chatauquans are aware, Madame Von Klenner is an exceptionally accomplished musician, fortunate in the possession of an artistic reputation which is international.

Robert Kent Parker, whose fine bass voice made a very favorable impression here last season, will revisit the assembly this year. Mr. Parker spent the winter in Europe and he is now at Cambridge Springs, Pa.

Chatauqua's most important forthcoming musical event is a performance of "The Messiah," to be given under Dr

Season 1901-1902

FANNIE BLOOMFIELD ZEISLER

FOR TERMS AND DATES APPLY TO

ALINE B. STORY, 356 La Salle Avenue, CHICAGO.

LAMPERTI SCHOOL OF MUSIC,
TO BE OPENED NOVEMBER 1, 1901.
Quartier Parc Monceau,
Paris.
Temporary Address, 3 rue Gounod.

HASLAM,
Professeur de Chant.
POSE, TECHNIQUE, STYLE, RÉPERTOIRE, OPERA, CONCERT.
☞ Direct Communication with European Managers.
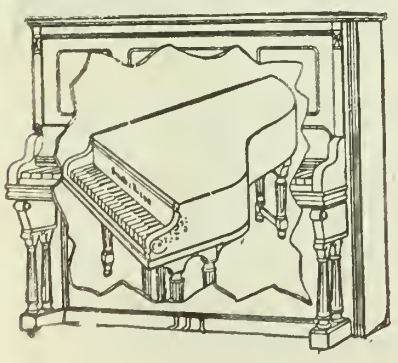
54 rue Faubourg St. Honoré, PARIS.

ERICSSON
BUSHNELL.
For Dates, Terms, &c., address
177 Duane Street, NEW YORK



A Grand Piano
IN AN UPRIGHT CASE.
•
SMITH & NIXON,
Cincinnati, Ohio,
Manufacture this instrument for
MUSICIANS.

London Organ School
AND INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.
22 Princes Street, Cavendish Sq., W., London, Eng.
Established 1865. Principal: T. H. Yorke Trotter, M. A., Mus. Doc. Oxon.

At this college Private Lessons are given and classes held in all branches of Music, and in Elocution and Modern Languages.
There is a competent staff of Professors for Piano, Singing, Organ, Violin, Viola, Violoncello, Double Bass, Harp, Guitar and all Wood and Brass Wind Instruments.
A special feature is made of the training of Church and Concert Organists. The school has three 3-manual practice organs and a new grand concert organ, which has been recently completed by the Positive Organ Company on the Casson system.
The full Orchestra meets on Tuesday Evenings. The String Orchestra on Friday Afternoons.
For prospectus and full particulars apply to the office of this paper or to FRANCIS BURGESS, Secretary.

The American Institute of Applied Music
(Incorporated 1900.)
EDGAR O. SILVER, President,
212 West 59th Street, New York City.
Departments:
The Metropolitan College of Music.
The Metropolitan Conservatory of Music,
The Synthetic Piano School
The American Institute of Normal Methods.
The Faculty and Examiners: DUDLEY BUCK, A.C.M.; ALBERT R[O]SS PARSONS, A.C.M.; E. PRESSON MILLER; HARRY ROWE SHELLEY, A.C.M.; PA[U]L AMBROSE, WILLIAM F. SHERMAN, KATE S. CHITTENDEN, LILLIAN LITTLEHALE and others.
The residence department furnishes a refined and quiet home.
The advantages are unequaled in America.
For information address KATE S. CHITTENDEN, Dean

Palmer's direction in the Amphitheatre on Friday evening, August 9. A correspondent has written to the Assembly Herald, wisely suggesting that applause be dispensed with on this occasion.

The sixth program in the Sherwood-Marcosson series of piano and violin recitals will be presented on August 6, the numbers consisting of compositions by Chopin, Liszt, Wagner-Liszt, Wieniawski and E. R. Kroeger. A notable feature of the last recital was the performance of Beethoven's "Emperor Concerto" by Mrs. Arthur Middleton Barnhart, of Chicago, a gifted pupil of Mr. Sherwood.

Next Monday afternoon at 5 o'clock George B. Wick, one of J. Harry Wheeler's new pupils, will give "Eliland."

Mrs. Charles Howard Trego, the Chicago soprano, who sang here successfully last year, is arousing even more enthusiasm at this summer's concerts, her voice having continued to develop during the intervening months.

Mrs. Jean D. Ives, pianist, of Montreal, will arrive here early next week.

Frank Chapin Bray, the brilliant young editor of the Chautauquan, and Mrs. Bray are at present enjoying the assembly's social and educational advantages.

Under the capable direction of William S. Bailey, manager and editor, the Chautauqua Assembly Herald continues to claim thousands of interested readers.

Hints, a publication devoted to plays and entertainments, is represented here by its competent promoters, who live in Byron, N. Y.

Accounts of other Chautauqua events and developments will be found in future issues of THE MUSICAL COURIER.

M. H.

TIVADAR NACHEZ.

WE annex some foreign notices of the performances of the eminent Hungarian violinist, Tivadar Nachèz.

At the sixth Kaim concert the soloist of the evening was Tivadar Nachèz, a violinist of the first rank. He played first the Concerto in E, by Bach (with orchestra), and gave a very classical performance. His technic is unfailing, and the profound meaning of the adagio was perfectly revealed to the audience by his interpretation, which was at once rich in tone and noble in its warmth of feeling. Other pieces, with piano accompaniment, were Beethoven's Romance in G; a Study in Octaves by Paganini, and Schumann's "Abendlied." Tivadar Nachèz received stormy applause; his perfectly beautiful, ideal tone, and his mastery of the art of phrasing, as well as his astonishing technic, deserved this recognition.—Dr. H. Porges, Münchener Neueste Nachrichten, December 6, 1899.

At the sixth Kaim concert the Hungarian violinist played the E major Concerto of Bach (with orchestra). His bowing is noble, his tone of wonderful beauty and carrying power. In precise definition of the melodic and rhythmic forms; in the charming warmth of the cantilene and in the sharp individualization of the motives, all interpreted with quiet and repose, he can seek in vain for a rival. He seemed to me exhaust stylistically the slow movement. We admired his far flowing, singing tone in the G major Romance of Beethoven and Schumann's "Abendlied." The Octave Etude of Paganini, played with dazzling technic, roused a storm of enthusiasm. As an addition he gave a Chaconne by Bach in D minor.—Dr. Kroyer, Münchener Allgemeine Zeitung, December 5, 1899.

The violin virtuoso, Tivadar Nachéz, one of the first representatives of the instrument, had a brilliant success at the Kaim concert. In the Bach Concerto he gave a performance distinguished by technical ability as well as delivery. He drew from the slow movement all its profound feeling. In the solo pieces he could display, especially in the Paganini number, his whole technical virtuosity; in the "Abendlied" of Schumann the whole tenderness and poetry of his tone, and gained by both stormy applause.—Arthur Hohn, Münchener Zeitung, December 6, 1899.

At the second concert of the Bach Society at Heidelberg, the E major Violin Concerto of Bach was given by Tivadar Nachéz, a composition which in internal melodic attains the most beautiful cantilene of all times. The last movement floated away with wonderful grace; finely chiseled work, yet not robbed of its grand traits. The rendition contributed to make the enjoyment of the listeners, a thing not to be forgotten. In Herr Nachéz we have a true magician on his instrument; nay, we do not hesitate to declare him to be the best whom we have ever heard. Apart from his technical infallibility, brilliantly displayed in the Paganini compositions, he possesses qualities which place him pretty well without a rival. His noble, far carrying, singing tone in the Bach Adagio, in the Beethoven Romance and in the "Abendlied" of Schumann (given as an encore), filled with rapture the enthusiastic audience, which rewarded the performances of this truly phenomenal artist by numerous recalls.—Heidelberger Tagblatt, November 15, 1899.

CLAVIER PIANO SCHOOL.

NOTWITHSTANDING the inclement weather of Monday evening, July 29, Clavier Hall was filled with one of the largest audiences of the summer season to hear the following program, presented by Miss Winnifred Willett, a member of the faculty of the Clavier Piano School:

Prelude and Fugue, A minor	Bach-Liszt
Sonata, op. 31, No. 2, D minor	Beethoven
Prelude, op. 28, A flat major	Chopin
Etude, A flat major	Chopin
Valse, op. 64, No. 2	Chopin
Nocturne, op. 48, C minor	Chopin
Ballade, op. 23, G minor	Chopin
Barcarolle, No. 5, A minor	Rubinstein
Gnomenreigen	Liszt

Miss Willett's playing was characterized by broad, full tone, excellent technic and comprehensive interpretation of the numbers given. Beethoven's Adagio, Chopin's Valse and Rubinstein's Barcarolle were perhaps the selections best given, but to the playing of all was given a scholarly excellence, the result of careful training and diligent study.

Miss Willett has been a student under Mr. Virgil for two years, and her acquaintances and many admirers notice with pleasure the improvement in her present work over that of last year, which clearly evidences the correct schooling she has received, speaks well for her ability and points to future success as an artist. This was the only recital given at the school during the week, as the other evenings were so thoroughly taken up with routine work.

W. A. White, recently of North Carolina, has begun a class in the line of his talk of the previous week on "Positive Pitch and How to Acquire It." This class is making a considerable degree of progress, and the work will undoubtedly be continued at the school this coming season. A fuller account of this new departure will be given in a later issue.

Mrs. Gertrude H. Murdough, of Chicago, gave a most interesting and instructive talk on "What Is Music Study" Friday afternoon, August 2. The class listened with undivided attention and recognized its great value, coming from one whose experience, both in study and successful teaching, has been large. During the coming week another hour will be given to discussions by members of the school and further remarks by Mrs. Murdough.

Interest in the class in harmony under F. H. Shepard has continued unabated. His unique and practical method of the study of harmony is a decided break from the usual method of harmony study, and gives them a grasp of the situation scientifically, and yet at the same time something which they can practically use in their everyday work, both in study and teaching. The day for teaching harmony after the manner of the old pedagogy has passed, and the day now is when every piano player and every piano pupil must know and understand harmony and must be able to practically use that knowledge.

The teachers' training class is a new feature of the school this year, conducted under Mr. Virgil's direction, in which a small class of young people (who are beginners in the work) are taught by the teachers here assembled. Their work is examined and criticised if necessary, many points being brought out in teaching that could not otherwise be touched upon in pure lecture work. This has made it of great value and interest to the teachers here, and it is expected that this work will also be carried on in the regular sessions as one of the important features of the school.

There have been several additional pupils in this last week who had found it impossible to be here the full course, but as they had taken some previous instruction here are capable of entering in one of the several classes, as well as taking up individual work with private teachers.

Recitals will be given by members of the faculty—Mrs. Alexander, August 12; Miss Brower, August 15; S. M. Fabian, artist teacher of the school, August 16. Miss Jennie Wells Chase, of Lyndon, Vt., a pupil of the school, will give a recital August 14.

Clavier Hall has been filled at these summer recitals with pupils and their friends and others in the city who are interested in piano work.

Miss Mabel Peeples, the well-known soprano, of Kansas City, Mo., is in New York studying with Caroline Montefiore.

Mr. Loudon G. Charlton, Carnegie Hall, New York,

HAS THE HONOR TO ANNOUNCE

THE CELEBRATED DUTCH PIANIST:

EDUARD ZELDENRUST

First American Tour, 1901-1902, Begins November 15.

"One of the three or four great pianists of the world."—LONDON TIMES.

Already Booked with Leading Orchestras. Recitals in Principal Cities. Entire Tour Now Booking. BALDWIN PIANO USED.

Published by

G. SCHIRMER, NEW YORK.

Collection of Standard Operas.

COMPLETE VOCAL SCORES.

Edition de Luxe, in cloth. $1.00 extra.

Aida. Verdi. (Italian and English)	$2.00
Amico Fritz. Mascagni. (Italian and English)	2.00
Barber of Seville. Rossini. (Italian and English)	1.50
Cavalleria Rusticana. Mascagni. (Italian and English)	1.50
Carmen. Bizet. (French and English)	2.00
Faust. Gounod. (Italian and English)	1.50
Flying Dutchman. Wagner. (German and English)	1.50
Lohengrin. Wagner. (German and English)	1.50
Lucia di Lammermoor. Donizetti. (Italian and English)	1.00
Mignon. Thomas. (French and English)	2.00
Romeo and Juliet. Gounod. (French and English)	2.00
Samson and Delilah. Saint-Saëns. (English)	2.50
Tannhäuser. Wagner. (German and English)	1.50
La Traviata. Verdi. (Italian and English)	1.00
Il Trovatore. Verdi. (Italian and English)	1.00

☞ Others in preparation.

Send for Catalogue of SCHIRMER'S LIBRARY EDITION of Musical Classics.

JEANNETTE DURNO

CONCERT PIANIST,

3629 Vincennes Avenue, CHICAGO.

Mme. Matja von Niessen-Stone

MEZZO SOPRANO.

VOCAL RECITALS in English, French, German, Italian and Russian.

For terms and dates address ALICE E. JOSEPH, 7a Hanover St., London, W., England.

RARE OLD VIOLINS

Remarkable values in fine old instruments from $50 to $10,000. Largest and finest collection in the world. Send for a copy of our Catalog, just issued, containing Biographies, Fac-simile Labels, Etc. Easy Terms.

LYON & HEALY, 133 Adams Street, CHICAGO

SOUSA AND HIS BAND

Office: Astor Court Building, New York.

Eighteenth Semi-Annual and Fifth Transcontinental Tour.

Sunday, July 7, to Monday, September 2, INCLUSIVE,

MANHATTAN BEACH,

NEW YORK CITY.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY
—BY THE—
MUSICAL COURIER COMPANY.
(Incorporated under the laws of the State of New York.)

St. James Building, Broadway and 26th St., New York.
TELEPHONE: 1720 Madison Square.
Cable Address: "Pegujar," New York.

ESTABLISHED JANUARY, 1880.

No. 1115.

MARC A. BLUMENBERG - - EDITOR-IN-CHIEF.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 7, 1901.

LONDON, ENGLAND—
Hotel Cecil, Mr. Montague Chester, General European Representative.

BERLIN, GERMANY (Branch Office)—
Linkstrasse, 17 W., is in charge of Mr. Otto Floersheim.
Single copies for sale at the music store of Ed. Bote & G. Bock, Leipzigerstrasse 39, W.

DRESDEN—
Anna Ingman, Franklinstrasse 20.

LEIPSIC—
Hotel Heutschel, Mr. Alvin Kranich in charge.

PARIS, FRANCE—
Conducted from London Office.
Single copies for sale at Brentano's, 37 Avenue de l'Opera; 37 Rue Marbeuf; Galignani Library, 224 Rue de Rivoli; Shakespeare Library, 75 Avenue des Champs Elysées, Boulevard Kiosks.

VIENNA—
Edwin Stewart, correspondent.

ITALY—
5 Via Roudinelli, Florence, Italy, Mr. Joseph Smith in charge.

CHICAGO OFFICE—
Fine Arts Building, Michigan Boulevard, C. A. Daniell in charge.

CANADIAN OFFICE—
In charge of Miss May Hamilton. Address Main Office, New York City.

SAN FRANCISCO—
Mrs. A. Wedmore Jones, 2046 Leavenworth Street.

LOS ANGELES—
F. W. Blanchard, Blanchard Hall.

ST. LOUIS—
Nellie Allen-Hessenbruch, correspondent.

MILWAUKEE—
Controlled by Chicago Office.

INDIANAPOLIS—
Controlled by Chicago Office.

CINCINNATI OFFICE—
J. A. Homan in charge.

BOSTON OFFICE—
17 Beacon Street.

BROOKLYN OFFICE—
Hotel St. George, Clark, corner Henry Street.

BUFFALO OFFICE—
Mrs. Nellie M. Gould, 428 Ashland Avenue.

WASHINGTON OFFICE—
616 Twelfth Street, N. W., Berenice Thompson in charge.

SUBSCRIPTIONS:

Invariably in advance, including postage.
Single copies, Ten Cents.

United States, ...	$5.00
Great Britain, . .	£1 5s.	Austria, . . .	15 fl.
France, . . .	31.25 fr.	Italy, . . .	31.25 fr.
Germany, . . .	25 m.	Russia, . . .	12 r.

SPENCER T. DRIGGS - - BUSINESS MANAGER

Rates for Advertising.

PER INCH ON ADVERTISING PAGES.

Three Months.....	$25.00	Nine months.....	$75.00
Six Months.....	50.00	Twelve Months.....	100.00

ON READING PAGES.

One inch, 3 months.....	$75.00
One inch, 6 months.....	125.00
One inch, 1 year.....	200.00

Special rates for preferred positions.

One page, one insertion.....	$300.00
One-half page, one insertion.....	175.00
One Column.....	100.00

All remittances for subscriptions or advertising must be made by check, draft or money order, payable to THE MUSICAL COURIER Company.

Advertisements for the current week must be handed in by 2 P. M. on Monday.

All changes in advertisements must reach this office by Friday 5 P. M. preceding the issue in which changes are to take effect.

American News Company, New York, General Distributing Agents.
Western News Company, Chicago, Western Distributing Agents.

THE MUSICAL COURIER EXTRA.

Published Every Saturday During the Year.

GREATEST ADVERTISING MEDIUM FOR ALL MUSIC PUBLISHERS AND MANUFACTURERS and IMPORTERS OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS OR PARTS THEREOF. ALSO SPECIALLY DEVOTED TO POPULAR MUSIC and VAUDEVILLE.

For Particulars apply to "Saturday Extra Department."

MARC A. BLUMENBERG, editor-in-chief of THE MUSICAL COURIER, left for Europe a week ago to-day.

FOR the second time an editorial writer in the Evening Journal has referred to Beethoven as a married man. The great composer of nine symphonies died a bachelor on March 26, 1827. This is the second time THE MUSICAL COURIER has corrected the erroneous statement regarding Beethoven made in the New York Evening Journal.

BERLIN, July 31.—Engelbert Humperdinck, Albert Niemann and Hans Thoma are circulating a petition among the Bayreuth visitors asking the Reichstag to prolong Bayreuth's monopoly over the production of Wagner's "Parsifal" beyond the copyright.—European Cable.

THE Reichstag having previously rejected Frau Cosima's request, will not be likely to reverse its decision.

EVERYBODY knows Mignon's song, "Kennst du das Land," and everybody quotes one line as "Möcht ich mit dir, O mein Geliebter sein." In the two manuscripts of the song that still exist the word is "Gebieter," not "Geliebter," and there is no reason to suppose that Goethe made a mistake in writing the lines or afterward changed the word. In fact, to a student of "Wilhelm Meister" the word "geliebter" appears quite out of keeping with the pathetic, self-repressed character of Mignon. As Franz Kahn writes in the Frankfurter Zeitung it is a blasphemy to suppose that she would, after the fashion of Philine, thus proclaim the passion that is consuming her.

A FEDERAL prisoner in the Omaha (Neb.) jail became highly indignant over the words of a hymn sung at a recent service in the building. The minister started the familiar number, "There is a fountain filled with blood," and the stanza which begins "The dying thief rejoiced to see that fountain in his day," proved too much for the sensitive nerves of the offending one, and before anyone could wink he hit a brother prisoner who joined in the singing over the head, and the minister who led the singing was roughly handled. The man held by the Federal authorities took the hymn as a personal insult to himself. Really the minister should have been more considerate of the feelings of his congregation, and announced a Moody and Sankey selection with a soothing text, "Blessel Assurance," or "Oh, Come Beulah Land."

Even in jail when you touch a man at his vulnerable point he gets furious.

A PERSON with a grievance has entered his complaint in one of the daily papers over the indifference of conductors to English, Irish, Scotch and negro melodies. Ye gods! The writer objected to the powerful influence in this country of the Germanic-Hungarian music to the neglect of the "noble music of Italy." How funny! His inverted reference to the uptown concert hall was no other than to the St. Nicholas Garden, where the Kaltenborn Orchestra is now in the tenth week of the third season, and this evening (Wednesday) Kaltenborn conducts his 300th concert in that auditorium. The programs given at these concerts may not always happen to please everybody, but it's rather a source of encouragement to hear that the largest audiences assemble on the nights when Wagner and Beethoven masterpieces are to be performed. If a summer public is willing to pay for the best music, no manager in his right mind would offer it trash.

A very forcible rejoinder from one man to the stupid correspondent very pithily stated the case by declaring that there is no such thing as "German music," and there isn't, either. There is as much difference between a Mozart symphony and a Wagner music drama as there is between a modest lily of the valley and a mammoth bush of huge American Beauties. The one is lovely and the other is beautiful, and the cultivated being admires both.

THE following letter pleases us very much:

WINNECONNE, July 15, 1901.

Editors The Musical Courier:

DEAR SIRS—Can you give the address of Walter Damrosch, a noted musician? I would like some facts about old Maggini violins, and would like very much to correspond with him just a little. TOBIAS C. MILLER,
Winneconne, Wis.

P. S.—I feel quite sure I have a genuine Maggini violin, and would like to verify my idea by facts from Prof. Damrosch if possible.

"PROF." DAMROSCH.

The address of "Prof." Damrosch, "a noted musician," is Willow Grove Park, Philadelphia, Pa. At that place he conducts a band which plays popular music for trolley car excursionists. "Prof." Damrosch, while not personally a fiddler, can doubtless tell our correspondent all about old Botticino-Marino Maggini, of Brescia, whose violins are almost as much prized as those of Stradivarius and Guarnerius. Mr. Damrosch's father was an excellent violin artist. Walter has had so much experience that he can now distinguish his first violins from his seconds, because of their respective positions in the orchestra. The 'cellos he recognizes by their peculiar shape and peculiar position while being played. But we greatly doubt his connoisseurship in the question of Maggini violins, which have besides other endearing and rare qualities a soft viola-like tone; furthermore, we do not think that he is aware of the label in these fiddles, which usually reads: "Gio. Paolo Maggini, Brescia."

Still all this is no reason why Mr. Miller should not write to the "Prof." and find what he seeks—"if possible." The only thing which surprises us is how Mr. Miller knew that W. D. was "a noted musician." Possibly a musician of notes was meant!

IN the "Music Annual" for 1900 there is an interesting review of the most important events of the musical world since the death of Richard Wagner. The author, Leopold Schmidt, expresses an objective judgment on the younger musicians who have been developed under the influence of Wagner on one hand, and under the influence of Brahms on the other, as well as on those composers who have been developed independently of these two masters. The review or essay is impartial, not only in its judgment of art, but in its contents. It discusses the productions of France, Russia, Bohemia, Austria-Hungary and Italy in opera, operetta, the modern lied and instrumental music.

MUSIC SINCE WAGNER.

The Wagner movement, with which the discussion begins, is declared to have in a certain degree come to a stop. The words "in a certain degree" are explained by the statement that the movement now tends to a clearer, more intime understanding of the master's work, while there is no longer an attempt to regard as the only road the salvation in judgment of all art solely from an exclusive Wagnerian point of view. Branches of the art, which contain in themselves the conditions of their development, are now flourishing in renewed freedom and have more universal aims than could have, for some time past, been hoped for. The productions of German musicians during the period under review leads to the conclusion that the "Wagner school" is barren of promise, while on the other hand foreign countries display everywhere a stirulating activity, the most permanent being the powerful impulse of the Italian operatic composer and the author that the manifold, multiform variety of modern music, the blending, from this side and that side, than that we are in the right way to preserve the treasures of the artistic ideal. The tension of the public arising from overheated enthusiasm has slackened to a noticeable degree, and hence may be explained the unmistakable tendency of the present period to form a compromise between the light diet of specialties and the enjoyment of higher work of art. Yet the last decade has been marked by a preponderant production of symphonic work, in spite of the taste for specialties, especially on the stage, and the development of the stage in the new direction is due not to the countrymen of Wagner, but to the Italians.

"During the last decade," Herr Schmidt concludes by saying, "the intrusion of foreign elements has greatly increased, and in addition to the French and the Italians, the Scandinavians, the Bohemians and particularly the Russians, contest the first place with the German musicians.

WE have reached the eighth instalment of composers' birthdays and their relation to astrology. Occult philosophers take themselves seriously, and there is no reason why they should not. Some of their books are superior productions from a literary point of view, and again many of their publications are drivel of the worst sort, and most likely responsible for the stiff skepticism which generally prevails regarding this very ancient philosophy. To open some of these occult books is a pleasure, but many of them must have been written by minds hopelessly stupid and ill trained. However, the good books on astrology are worth reading. Their writers adhere to the ancient belief, and are quite justified in claiming that intelligent people would universally accept astrology had it not been for charlatans and the mercenary humbugs who brought it into bad repute.

COMPOSERS BORN IN AUGUST.

That many men and women seem born to meet terrible fates is inevitable, and every thoughtful mind has been impressed with the truthfulness of the statement. When one begins to study the sad careers in history and in our own narrow circles, the Calvinistic doctrine is not a hard one to grasp. The prisons in all countries will help to emphasize the idea that certain men were born under malign planets. "Born to be damned" is a truism, even if it arouses Methodists and kindred sects to deny it. A theory exists to-day among many Christians that is a very old and Pagan doctrine, namely, that the totally wicked will be annihilated at death.

The ego of the being with a soul killed by gross materialism, indifference and cruelty becomes extinct when the breath leaves the body. One class of scholars declare the soul to be great goodness; and another class, powerful mentality. At this very time an interesting discussion is in progress over certain chapters of a new book on "Immortality," by the Rev. Dr. S. D. McConnell, rector of Holy Trinity Protestant Episcopal Church, Brooklyn. The author of the book believes goodness of the vivid, exalted type is the substance that keeps alive the soul after the body becomes cold clay.

While great minds continue to battle over the doctrine of immortality, we find that the master minds of music believed the soul to be immortal. Bach, Beethoven, Haydn, Mozart, Schubert, Schumann, Mendelssohn and Wagner were men with deep religious natures and implicit faith in things supernatural. Applying their birthdays and music to the laws of astrology we can hardly fail to be impressed with the reasonableness of certain occult teachings. In the Zodiac, as we have often seen it designed, are twelve signs "dwelling" in four domains. The domains are described as Earth, Fire, Air and Water. By a simple example in division we learn that there are three signs in each domain. The Earth Triplicity are Taurus, Virgo and Capricorn. The Fire Triplicity are Aries, Leo and Sagittarius. The Air Triplicity are Gemini, Libra and Aquarius. The Water Triplicity are Cancer, Scorpio and Pisces. Through some mysterious process we are informed that the greatest geniuses are likely to be born in the domains of fire and air, for the reason that certain spiritual currents run more powerfully toward those domains than to water and earth. Well, to begin, we find that Beethoven was born in a fire sign, Sagittarius, which prevails from November 22 to December 21. Bach also was born in a fire sign, Aries, which prevails from March 21 to April 21. Haydn was also born in this sign. Mozart, Schubert and Mendelssohn were all born in the air domain, in the sign Aquarius, which prevails from January 20 to February 20. Wagner was also born in the air domain, in the sign Gemini, which prevails from May 21 to June 21. Schumann was also born in this sign, and so was Gounod. Having quoted Bach, Beethoven, Mozart, Haydn, Schubert and Wagner as proofs of the astrological theory of genius in the realm of music, it would be interesting to study it in its relation to literature, poetry and statesmanship. Shakespeare was born in Aries, and also Bismarck. George Eliot was born in Sagittarius, also the poet Cowper. Both are fire signs.

The sign Leo, the second and least important in the domain of fire, prevails at the beginning of August. Leo people are credited with some generous, magnetic and passionate natures of the other fire signs, but astrology scholars have discovered that for some causes they are rarely as able as Aries people and Sagittarius people, sister signs in the fire domain. One reason for this is the imitative faculty which Leo people get through their ruling planet, the Sun. Actors are seldom creators, although frequently they are reported as "creating" certain roles, but the roles are invariably the creatures of other men's brains. Jupiter is the ruling planet of Sagittarius and Mars the ruling planet of Aries. Looking over the pages of one of the best birthday books of composers and musicians, we do not find a single name of a music writer of the first rank, and thus once more astrology scores a point.

Here are the names of composers and musicians born in August: August 2, Julius Schuloff (1825), from all accounts is still living in Bohemia; August 3, Frederic Clay (1840), died November 27, 1889; August 4, Ernst Kossak (1814), died January 3, 1880; August 5, Ambroise Thomas (1811), died February 12, 1896; August 6, Hermann Mendel (1834), died October 26, 1876; August 7, Carl Joseph Formes (1816), died December 15, 1889; August 8, Julius Stern (1820), died February 27, 1883; August 9, Charles Bochsha (1789), died January 6, 1856; August 10, Alexander Glazounow (1865), teaching in Russia; August 11, Martin Gerbert von Hosnau (1720), died May 13, 1793; August 12, Jean Louis Nicode (1853), still living; August 13, Salomon Jadassohn (1831), still living; also William Thomas Best (1826), died May 10, 1897; August 14, Alexander Winterberger (1834), still living; August 15, Johann Nepomuk Mälzel (1772), died July 21, 1838; August 16, Heinrich August Marschner (1796), died at Hanover December 14, 1861; August 17, Peter Leonard Benoit (1834), died March 5, 1891; August 18, Benjamin Louis Godard (1849), died January 11, 1895; August 19, Antonio Salieri (1750), died May 7, 1825; August 20, Christine Nilsson (1843), still living; August 21, Otto Goldschmidt (1829), from all accounts he is still living; August 22, Joseph Strauss (1827), died July 22, 1870; August 23, Moritz Moszkowski (1854), still living; August 24, Edward Napravnik (1839), still living; also Theodore Dubois (1837), still living; August 25, Carl August Haupt (1810), died July 4, 1891; August 26, Aloys Schmitt (1788), died July 25, 1866; August 27, Heinrich Urbon (1837), still living; August 28, Walter Cecil Macfarren (1826), from all accounts he is still alive; August 29, Raphael Georg Kiesewetter (1773), died January 1, 1850; also Felix Mottl (1856), still very much alive; August 30, George Frederick Root (1820), died August 6, 1895; August 31, Hermann Helmholtz (1821), died September 8, 1894; also Edmund Kretschmer (1830), still living.

The astrological division in the month of August occurs about the 20th of the month, and when Leo retires Virgo, the second sign in the earth triplicity, enters and continues to rule the zodiacal sphere until September 21. The characteristics of the Virgo people naturally are different from those possessed by the Leo people. The Virgo men and women are calmer, colder and more diplomatic in their dealings with associates, but in the long run do not make any more friends than the Leo people. The combination of Leo and Virgo is excellent. Those born between August 20 and August 28 are especially fortunate in possessing traits in both signs. Leo warms and inspires Virgo, and Virgo in turn calms and balances the impetuous Leo.

DURING the last few years a number of musical artists have decided to do their own managing on the plea that they are dissatisfied with the managers. They find that the results are not as they expected them, and they have been accused by the managers of being the cause of the trouble, and they therefore determined to ascertain whether they were responsible or whether the managers were responsible, and for that reason they have done their own managing.

WHAT IS THE TROUBLE?

Among these artists are:

Mrs. Fannie Bloomfield-Zeisler,
Mrs. Josephine Jacoby,
Joseph Baernstein,
Miss Sara Anderson and
William C. Carl;

and now to these names must be added the name of Lillian Blauvelt, who has also decided to do her own managing from her own resources, independent of any managing bureau.

It must be admitted that the artists mentioned above have been successful, and they have been successful without the aid of managers, and there is no use to argue to the contrary in the face of these facts. Everyone in the world of music knows that these artists mentioned above have been successful, not only artistically, but financially, and that they stand very high in their respective spheres; and they have done this without the aid of managers or of managerial bureaus and without the influence of any managers whatever. They have used the columns of THE MUSICAL COURIER liberally, and they have had business acumen and judgment, together with good advice, behind them, and they have succeeded.

What we would like to ask now is, what will the managers do if this thing becomes general? For some years past Lillian Blauvelt has been dissatisfied with her managers, not specifying any particular one. Whenever she has had management she has always complained of it, and her dissatisfaction is shown by her assuming her own management independent of any manager. She is only one of many others who have threatened to become individually responsible for their own careers instead of leaving them in the hands of managers.

Of course, as soon as the artists become acquainted with the paraphernalia and the methods and the system used in the managerial offices, they can handle that part of it themselves and advertise in THE MUSICAL COURIER and push their business from a commercial point of view, and take care of their artistic interests themselves. There is an investment necessary because it requires office work, in the way of stenographic and clerk work, mailing facilities, &c., besides the services of clipping bureaus to get what notices are printed about them in the newspapers; and in this latter respect the managers are very delinquent, for they do not attend to the clippings referring to their artists as they should. The artists always do it better themselves. It is probable that all of these people whom we have mentioned above know this as the result of actual experience, and have therefore decided to become their own managers.

The outcome will be watched with some interest now, because this is the beginning in a smaller degree of what has already been done in Europe on a broader scope. Emma Eames always had her individual manager; Tamagno had his individual manager; Paderewski has his individual manager; Maurel had his individual manager; Patti had her individual manager; and thus this movement goes forward, voluntarily and unconsciously as it were, to its final solution. Within the next season or two it will have solved itself unless managers do something by combining for the purpose of establishing a large central systematic business bureau that will control the managerial musical field, as the dramatic field is now controlled by a system which yields big and profitable results. The trouble is that the musical managers are so rich, individually, now that they don't care to do this.

* * *

EMIL SAUER, the celebrated pianist, has issued an advertisement stating that those institutions and organizations that look upon his co-operation as desirous should be kind enough to send all their applications to him directly and personally, as he will not, as a matter of principle, take into consideration any engagements secured through any agencies.

"THE word 'Klangfarbe' is to a certain extent the answer to the question as to what is modern in music. It is borrowed from the art of painting, and what in music is called Klangfarbe the painters call color tone. The painter has such a sensitive feeling for color that he, as it were, hears it. He speaks of color symphonies, and the musician has such a sensitive feeling for tone that, as it were, he sees it, or at least can characterize by a color the tone of this or that instrument." This may be called the text on which Heinrich Pudor has based an article on modern music.

PUDOR ON MODERN MUSIC.

Till lately not only the public has regarded art from the point of view of the understanding in the first place, and only in the second place from the point of view of the senses, but the artists themselves have worked with the understanding, not with the heart and the blood. Hence in painting we have historical painting, allegorical painting, genre painting; we have dramas to be read, allegorical sculpture, historical architecture, and contrapuntal, mathematical, theoretically affected music. The first art to return to nature was painting. Men deserted the studio for nature, studied light and color and discovered their charm. Other arts followed the same path, and music has not lagged behind.

The change did not take place simultaneously everywhere. The Scandinavians, who had been untouched by the mathematical doctrinaire school, were among the first to recognize the charm of nature. The French, who are more impulsive than intellectual, according to Pudor, were less inclined than the Germans to allow the sensual charm of tone to sink into intellectual speculation. But German music for a time passed into the hands of doctrinaires, into a style of counterpoint written for the eye and the understanding, not for the heart and the ear. The Germans tried to be as learned as possible, to bring into their compositions as much science as possible, while of the ear, the senses, the heart and blood, the feelings, they took no heed. To this tendency Johannes Brahms fell a victim.

Many of the heroes of German music, Herr Pudor continues, paid little regard to the question of instrumentation. Schumann, for example, was not a master of it, yet it is instrumentation that appeals to the ear, that insists on being heard, that insists on being felt, that is purely sensuous and has nothing to do directly with the intellect, for instrumentation is concerned solely with the tone color of the instruments. Modern music with modern instruments makes us feel as if our ears and sense of hearing had just discovered what they had been unconscious of before, namely, what tone is, how it touches the ear and creates, awakes, a sensuous feeling, not merely an ethical or an intellectual feeling. Intellectual speculation breaks down when the pure sense is appealed to. The air waves which carry sound, which charm, thrill, quicken our nerves, echo in our nerves and stir the blood are purely physical. "This physical factor in our sensitiveness to sound we have forgotten. Music has become almost a spiritual science; it has become unnaturally spiritualized and forgotten its connection with the senses. It is with the physical factor of tone that instrumentation is concerned. The Idea is spiritual, Counterpoint is intellectual, Instrumentation is purely sensuous and physical. The quality of the charm which the tone produces on our auditory nerves is its affair. The harmony of the tone colors is the aim of symphonic instrumentation."

The Russians, continues Pudor, were the first to conceive the value of instrumentation for modern music. It is Glazounow who says that the classical style has overlived itself, and that the future belongs to the ballet. He vows that he will write nothing but ballet music. In Rimsky Korsakow everything is instrumentation. His music offers studies and sketches of instrumentation which remind one of the color studies of the impressionists. "He is the Degas or the Whistler of music." His music is sensuous, physical; we may say in his case we feel the taste of the tone on the tongue. With Rimsky Korsakow Puder brackets Vincent D'Indy.

It must not be supposed that Herr Pudor in the above remarks rejoices to see music cease to be psychical and become purely physical. Far from it; the physical is a necessary preliminary condition for the psychical, and the modern, purely sensuous music is only a phase of transition. "We have unlearned the art of hearing; we compose only 'tone studies' and studies in instrumentation. The spiritual will retain, but we must first create the modern body before we can think of the spirit which that body creates. Art is feeling. From feeling it is born, and to feeling it returns. But latterly it has been wont to turn to intellect, and to be born from the intellect and understanding. We must now hear tone sounding in nature. To conceive the world as feeling, that is the task of our time."

ALL honor to the memory of Empress Frederick, the eldest daughter of the late Queen Victoria, baptized Victoria Adelaide Mary Luisa. The deceased Empress was a generous patron of the arts, inheriting doubtless her superior mentality and artistic inclination from her late father, Prince Albert, "The Good," as she did her domestic virtues from her mother.

MRS. HADDEN-ALEXANDER'S SECOND RECITAL.—Mrs. Hadden-Alexander will give a second recital at the Clavier Piano School next Monday, August 12.

THE MEN WHO SAIL THE SEA.

Now Odysseus with his ships sailed westward from Malcio and found the Lotophagian Isles; but the story is told by his sailormen:

We put forth to sea,
Leaving our dead to rot in Thrace,
(Six men dead to a ship's crew there,
Rotting; all rotted but bone and hair
In the shaken brine of sea and sand—
A brine that did eat of belly and face
And the meat of foot and hand;
Rotting)—

Leaving the gaunt dead, forth put we,
Urgent over the unclaimed sea;
Heartsick our leader was, we no less,
Irked with our wandering loneliness;
Saw, as we bent to our oars, the deep
Yearn up to us like girls' breasts—and sleep
Seemed better than warwork—

Overhead
An iron storm loosened and flapped; we fled,
Sailing, pushed by an iron wind,
Sailing—

Birds dropped black from an angry sky,
Waves swept clamoring crow-jack high,
Landward rioted wind and spray,
There was wail of timber, and sea-dirge dinned,
'Till, lo! of a sudden, the storm stopped—
Day—
Day, rose and gold, royal mile and mile,
At the end of it, beckoning, the Isle!

Then we bent starkly to the oars, for we heard voices calling to us and we sang:

Oh, girls who eat the lotos and lie among the flowers,
Whose eyes strain ever seaward, across the barren hours,
Always there are sailormen, wind-blown upon the deep,
Whose souls are white with yearning for kisses and for sleep.

So we came to the Isles and kissed the women's lips; and for a time there was peace and we sailed no more, affronting the winds and the seas; for we had eaten of the flower of the Lotos.

—Vance Thompson, in St. Louis Mirror.

I HAVE gone through much of Verdi's music this summer, and while I cannot go the lengths of THE MUSICAL COURIER in its admiration for the dead Italian, there need be no fear for his future—as operatic futures go; and that is not very far, for nothing is so short lived as an opera. Consider. Much of Wagner is already stale, while Mozart seems fresher with the passing of every decade. Perhaps we have had too much "Lohengrin," too much "Tannhäuser," and after fifty years on the silent shelf these works will sound quite fresh to our grandchildren.

Verdi. The absolute brainlessness of his music before "Aïda" was composed should not close our eyes to the promise and potency of this early music. It is the music of a passionate Italian temperament—music hastily conceived, still more speedily jotted down, and tumbled anyhow on the stage. Musical Italy before 1880 was devoted to the voice. Give it a plank, a dramatic situation, an aria, and success pursued the composer. As for the dramatic unities, the orchestral commentary, the welding of action, story and music—why they could all go hang. Melody—irrelevant, fatuous, trivial melody —and again melody, was the shibboleth. The wonder is that an orchestra was ever employed—except that it made more noise than a piano player; that costumes were ever worn—only that they looked braver, gayer in the flare of the footlights than street attire. And most wonderful of all was the expense of a theatre, for to those melomaniacs anything but a tune was a deterrent factor. The singer and the song sung composed an opera. All the rest was sheer waste of material—or Teutonic madness.

Verdi's acquaintance with Arrigo Boïto was the turning point in his career. He knew Boïto's far better than he knew Wagner's scores. If he was affected at all by Wagnerism it was by way of Boïto and not at first hand. I am not prepared to deny that Verdi ever listened to the "Ring," to "Tristan" or to "Meistersinger" in their entirety by competent throats, yet I sincerely doubt it. The Italian's early music is full of Rossini, Donizetti, Bellini and Meyerbeer. He could, being of a receptive nature, not have escaped Wagner had he known him thoroughly. He was a very suspicious, proud old man—as proud of "I Due Foscari" as of "Aïda"—and almost to the day of his death deprecated Wagner's influence on modern opera. To see then, as do many wise men of music, Wagner peering sardonically from behind the lively and exciting bars of Verdi's later scores, is to claim a clairvoyance to which I dare not pretend.

Take any of Verdi's operas previous to those of 1850, and what do we get? A string of passionate tunes bracketed in the conventional cavatina-cabaletta style; little attempt at following the book—such awful books!—and the orchestra, a huge strumming machine, strumming without color, appositeness, rhyme or reason? And then the febrile, simian-like restlessness of the music. It was written for people of a low order of musical intelligence, people who must hum a tune or ever after view it with contempt. Verdi could furnish tunes by the hundred—real, vital, dramatic ones. Think of the waste, the saddening waste, of material made by the young maestro in "Oberto," "Nabucco," "I Lombardi," "Ernani," "I Due Foscari," "Attila," "Macbeth," "Luisa Miller" and "I Masnadieri"! If he could have but saved them for his latter days—for his so-called third period!

I know that your died in the wool Verdian refuses to consider the later music. He even listens to "Aïda" under protest. In it lurks the Wagnerian Wurm that in "Otello" and "Falstaffo" stings to death the melodic genius of the venerable master. Now, I quarrel with no man's artistic tastes. It were a futile proceeding. If you love "Rigoletto" better than "Otello" I have no objection to make. I cannot bring any argument to bear upon you, for I am not a special pleader in matters musical. As well try to convince a man who asserts that Dumas père is a greater novelist than Flaubert. Yet I enjoy certain moments in "Rigoletto," just as I think "The Three Guardsmen" rattling good reading. To call either opera or romance great art is to mix your critical values.

"Rigoletto," "Il Trovatore" and "La Traviata" have one cardinal merit, in addition to their miracles of mellifluousness—they prefigure the later Verdi, the thinking Verdi, the truer musical dramatist. In regarding these we again encounter critical superciliousness of the most pronounced type. The Neo-Verdians will have none of the middle century Verdi—forgetting that no man may lift himself to the stars by his own bootstraps. Verdi offers a fine picture of crawling, creeping evolution. I confess that I believe the man would have stuck at "Don Carlos," "Sicilian Vespers," "Araldo," "Un Ballo in Maschera," "La Forza del Destino," "Simon Boccanegra" and the rest of the reactionary stuff had it not been for the masterful influence of Boïto, himself a composer. Boïto helped Verdi to scramble upon the shoulders of Verdi, compelled the Verdi of 1887 to forget the Verdi of 1871.

"Aïda" is pointed out as the great turn in the style of the composer. It is fuller of Meyerbeerisms than any opera composed since "L'Africaine," even as full as is "Rienzi." Indeed, I doubt if "Aïda" would have been born had not "L'Africaine" preceded it. The semblance to Meyerbeer does not stop at the libretto; there is the same flamboyancy in color, the same barbaric taste for full blown harmonies and exotic tunes—not to mention the similarities in the stories. Wagner had far less to do with "Aïda" than Meyerbeer, though many believe the contrary. To "Rigoletto," in 1851, if you please, must we go searching for the roots of the mature Verdi. In the declamatory monologues of the hunchback jester are the germs of the more intellectual and subtle monologues of "Iago" and of "Falstaffo." "Il Trovatore" contains strong dramatic situations, and if the tower scene is become hackneyed, yet how well devised! In this much admired, much sung composition are to be found harmonic straws which indicate to the keen observer the way the musical wind was bound to blow nearly a half century later. With "Traviata" Verdi made his first attempt at musical psychologizing. Banal as is the book, there is no denying the power of some of its situations. No, decidedly it will not do to overlook the Verdi of 1850. It would be building musical history without straw; and straw, as we well know, makes a fierce flame when burning.

Verdi was not by nature a reformer. A man of sensual gifts in the way of music making, a born dramatizer of anything from a chair to a murder, he took up the operatic form as he found it and did not seek to develop it. But he poured into its ancient, honorable and somewhat shaky mold stuff of a stirring nature—and also an amazing amount of it. Think of the twenty-five and more operas he made before he reached "Aïda"! To be sure, there is a suspicious resemblance between his melodies, his characters, his situations; there is always the blood curdling story of intrigue—political, passionate—with its elopements, loves, cutthroat conspirators, booted chorus and its orchestral tremolo. We get the dime novel set to music, the inartistic glorification of the melodrama. Verdi needed money, love, fame, easily gained, and being a much more industrious man than Rossini he contrived to turn out in forty years twice as many musical potboilers. I have always admired Rossini's musical laziness. Once rich he refused to compose any more. As his facility was on a par with his lack of artistic conscience, the thought of the amount he might have left makes one shudder. But luckily he was content to have given us—not to mention any of the others—"The Barber of Seville," a masterpiece pure and undefiled.

Verdi, also lacking a conscience, and without high artistic ideals, produced operas as indefatigably as incubators chickens. Naturally such music perished early, and his failures more than balance his successes. He made money, an enormous amount; he was probably the richest composer that ever drove a pen. The usual fate has overtaken the early music, while even "Rigoletto," "Il Trovatore" and "La Traviata" no longer draw unless sung by an "all star" cast.

I pass over the "Manzoni Requiem" of 1874. It was too near the "Aïda" epoch to make a great forward step. "Otello" in 1887 set the musical world mad with surprise, curiosity, delight. It reveals little or none of the narrow, noisy, vulgar and violent Verdi of 1850. The character drawing is done by the burin of a man who is master of his material. The plot moves in processional splendor, and the musical psychology is often subtle. At last Verdi has flowered. His other music, smelling ranker of the soil, showing more thematic invention, was but the effort of a hot headed man of the footlights, a seeker after applause and money. In "Otello" all musical provincialisms have vanished; the writing is clear, the passion more controlled, all the effects aimed at easily compassed. The mastercraft of Iago is set over against the fiery, nerve shaking passion of Otello, and Shakespeare is suggested, withal a very Italian one.

"Falstaffo" was a second surprise. How an old graybeard of eighty could have conceived such music is only to be explained by the young heart of the man, by his sweetly healthy nature, his Latin frugality in living. He was ever a taciturn man, a stoic, not an epicurean. As an index of character his music is often misleading. Add to these qualities the beautiful friendship of Arrigo Boïto, and the sum total is a setting of Shakespeare's comedy such as the world has never seen. Here again Wagner had less to do with the matter than is supposed. In the musical dialogue Verdi patterned after "Die Meistersinger," for the emotion ever follows the text. From Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro" and Rossini's "Barber of Seville" he imbibed no little of gay sunshine and effervescence. But his form is his own; it grew out of the situations of the play and was not a procrustean bed of theory upon which the composer stretched his characters. It is laughing and joyous, this comedy of an octogenarian. It fairly ripples with the humor of the Fat Knight. There are no leading motives in the Wagnerian sense, though every character is outlined with precision.

Now I assert that Arrigo Boïto helped all this, stimulated a young-old man to conquer new and more fruitful provinces. And Boïto, who built two of the best librettos we know, certainly influenced Verdi in his study of instrumentation. Compare "Rigoletto" and "Otello" orchestrally! The advance is remarkable, all things being considered. And at Verdi's years! I suspect that Verdi made the sketches, which Boïto transformed into painted pictures; just as I discern, as can anyone with ears, the intellectual characteristics in common between Mefistofele and Iago's monologues. Yet Verdi is true Verdi to the last.

A skeptical correspondent asks me if such a person as Lingwood Evans, the Australian poet, ever existed. Why, man, he is alive to-day, redheaded with wrath at the state of things in the Cosmos, revolutionist, a mystic and a great mad poet. Ask Vance Thompson if Lingwood Evans lives! It was but a month ago the poet passed through Paris by night, and he muttered as he walked. What curse he put upon Lutetia I know not, but I look for vague, grave complications; Lingwood Evans is prophet as well as poet, and doubtless some drear night in November—the month of mad melancholies—he will vanish within the implacable walls of a Ha-Ha house. Unhappy, blasphemous, vile and marvelous Lingwood!

I have been asked to write something about the Evans verse. Why should I, when Vance Thompson has done so, and most convincingly? Do you remember how with what audacity he introduced the poet to the English reading world?

"In one of his grave prefaces Lingwood Evans boasts of being a gentleman; but he bears, I observe, a plain point sanguine in his arms, which is a suspicious abatement. Perhaps it is a question of little moment. Mr. Evans was born in New York about thirty-five years ago. For the last ten years he has lived abroad. Since 1894 he has resided in Melbourne, Australia, and his books are published by McEwen & Evans, of that city. And his work, it seems to me, is colored with Australian thought—the recklessness, fervor and ennui that make the poems of Lindsay Gordon strangely notable in modern literature.

A strange and reckless poet, this—

Reckless and weary of life, as Cybele amid the felled pine trees and fierce trumpets of the castrate priests. A woodcut of Lingwood Evans lies on my writing table. 'Tis a strong and brutal face, with the jowls of a prize fighter. (The hair of the man is red.) That he should have chanted sombre and violent strophes of revolt would seem reasonable; he has written "The Father of Livor," a book of strange fervors and shy and mystic impulses—a book so extraordinary that I hardly know how to describe it. Has he genius? That dolorous flower (la plus belle fleur du mal, O Baudelaire!) of modern, sated life? Yes, he has genius, very fine in quality and eminently individual. Compared with him the little creatures of the Bodley Head dwindle to mere dwarfs—and vanish, squeaking and gibbering. His strength is that of the proud Belgian poets. He has scaled the heights of introspection. Read here:

The cats of ebony and gold traversed the night, the night—
The cats of flame and ebony traversed my soul, oh, God!
From end to end, like tempests fierce and bright,
Like tempests and the black winds blown abroad.

I looked into the night—
Black, infinite, it ran in curves
And spirals, up and up—the night!
Terror, like a cord hard round the throat,
Silenced me; no cry, no death gasp!
Down the black spirals of the night they came;
Sudden the cats of ebony and gold
Squatted along my garden wall
And held me with their eyes—
Silent, like patient madmen, all
The cats of metal and of flame.

Haggard—weary of effort, sullen, sad—
I stared into the eyes, the eyes
Of the cats of ebony and gold—the eyes!

This excerpt is from "The Father of Livor"; it is one of the intermezzi of the prose story of the King of Torelore—a story at once close and consistent in its ironic realism. It is a study of democracy. Lingwood Evans writes as one who has gone down in the dark and greasy world of artisans and laborers. He knows their dull thoughts. He knows their insolence and their ambitions.

The second intermezzo follows King Torelore's account of his first battle:

A fool, a fool; I wander through
The Forest of Numbers, and, hallucinate,
Mine open eyes see prodigies
And my shut eyes the vertigoes of life.
My brows are bloody, for, obstinate,
I rammed the obstinate tree stems—

Gaunt trees—in the clear earth
The roots are lean and living scrolls
(I read the problems of the circling roots)—
The gaunt trees charge the sky like lances;
And the rocks, the rocks quadrangular,
Are blocks of fear and silence!

A fool, a fool, I read the text
Of far-off laws—the poor débris
Of what dead geometric universe?

And overhead, the stars and stars,
Myriad stars and white linen veils,
That float (the veils, the veils!)
Round the gold Isis of the firmament.
I am the fool of the Forest of Numbers.
Hallucinate! My bells chime out
Primordial problems, definite and dead.

What more could be said after this? The critic then calls this verse "hallucinate," and quotes further. But you must remember that black, bitter poem of revolt, in which "the symbol flies like a flag"! I printed it last winter, with its dreary symphony of a soul peopled by iron gods and green, decaying music. It is rather morbid, and it is also very terrifying. Lingwood Evans is the poet of outcasts, murderer, atheists, anarchists, all the vast horde surging around the sewers of life—a horde that some day will rise and make the world its horrible own. Maxine Gorki writes of them, but even Gorki, realist that he is, dare not put upon paper the revolting truths that Lingwood Evans tranquilly faces and accepts. I have said more than I should—I regret it.

An interesting explanation of the word Mephistopheles is proposed and defended by W. H. Roscher, in an article entitled "Ephialtes," found in Volume 20 of the philological section of the reports of the Saxon Academy of Sciences. Rejecting the many proposed mechanical derivations of the word from the Greek or the Hebrew, the writer first analyzes the character of Mephistopheles as depicted by mediæval literature, and finds that he is represented as an obliging and helpful spirit, ready at any moment to assist those whom he favors, after the manner of kobolds, elfs, and so forth. Hence the derivation of the name μεγιστ-ώφελης i. e., useful in the highest degree, kindred in origin to that of ancient Ephialtes, usually identified with Pan. The change from Megistopheles to Mephistopheles Roscher explains as intentional, and he finds parallels in many popular corruptions of the names of gods and demons, originating in the fear that, if their names were correctly pronounced, their presence would be unnecessarily invoked, followed by punishment.

Pope Paul the Fourth was so shocked at Michael Angelo's undressed figures in his famous "Last Judgment" that he employed Daniele da Volterra to clothe them; and he, in consequence, received the nickname of "Il Braghettone" (the breeches maker). Michael Angelo, with his usual wit, punished Messer Biagio da Cesena, master of the ceremonies (who first suggested to the Pope the impropriety of nude figures), by painting him in hell, with ass's ears, as Midas. The story goes that Biagio implored the Pope to insist upon the removal of this caricature, whereupon Paul the Fourth replied: "I might have released you from purgatory, but over hell I have no power!"

HENRY WOLFSOHN BACK FROM EUROPE.—Manager Henry Wolfsohn has returned from a two months' sojourn in Europe. Josef Hofmann will be among the artists he will manage. Fritz Kreisler returns to this country in January, and Gerardy in December, and both will be managed by Mr. Wolfsohn. This manager will also book for Madame Bloomfield-Zeisler, and other well-known artists under his management include Whitney Tew, the English basso; Miss Anna Otten, the young violinist, and a number of local singers and instrumentalists.

WAGNER LECTURE RECITALS.—Among the most interesting musical attractions particularly well adapted for women's clubs will be Carl Armbruster's lecture recitals on Wagner music-dramas, with stereoptical views of the Bayreuth Theatre, Villa Wahnfried, as well as the leading scenes from the "Nibelungen Ring," "Tristan and Isolde" and "Parsifal." The vocal illustrations will be given by Miss Pauline Cramer, one of the Bayreuth artists.

CANARIES ARE HER PUPILS.

AN enterprise of interest to bird lovers is the little home studio for canaries kept by a Brooklyn woman. To teach a bird to sing sounds is somewhat like taking liberties with nature, but there is a distinct difference between the singing of these birds after taking a full course of music lessons and their performance as given without regard to the laws of harmony.

Primitive bird organs imported from Germany are the main educators in the studio. A thoroughly finished resident pupil, who has been under the organ's influence from infancy, brings the faculty $50, and is considered well worth the money. Pupils from outside are received. Birds with shrill, high pitched voices are taught to manage and modulate their tones, while birds who have not sung for a long time and whose owners are worried about them recover their voices and catch fresh inspiration from hearing the organ play.

The bird culturist has her birds in a top story flat in that part of Brooklyn where rents are cheap enough to allow of space to spread out in. The best rooms are given up to the birds and the organs, although the regulating of singing methods and various details of bird raising are conducted cheek by jowl with homely family tasks.

"In my part of Germany nobody would put up with the singing of an untrained canary," says the principal of the industry, who has lived long enough in America to speak English well. "They would as lief listen to a cat squalling or a parrot scolding. Over here I've heard the birds that were kept for pets singing in tones that made me wince, and I sent for an organ and trained a few birds, just to see if the people would notice the difference in the performance.

"Several bird dealers sent their customers and their friends to hear my birds and I got so many orders for trained singers that I went in regularly for the business. My birds now have been sold as far away as Wisconsin and South Dakota, and there are generally orders ahead for certain kinds of singers."

The bird organ is strange, both in sound and appearance, to an American observer. Of the height of a tall corner clock, it consists of big, water filled cylinders, fitting one into the other, and manipulated by ropes and pulleys that hang from a stout crossbar. The seat of the music itself is contained in a small box affixed to the top.

The organ gives out a low, plaintive monotone that goes on and on like the sound of a streamlet running over rocks or the wind's motion in the trees.

It is music soothing and appealing rather than stimulating, but now and again comes a strain that suggests the piping of the shepherds out on the hills, and the tinkling of cowbells in the meadow. No wonder it sets the canaries to thinking and summoning up their sweetest notes. There are two organs in the rooms, each playing to a separate class of pupils, the canaries being divided into advanced and primary grades, according to their voice, quality and physique.

"The organ cannot give the birds their variety of strains, but it prompts them to make the best of their powers," said the bird culturist. "They take lessons from it unconsciously and learn to sing with taste and expression. It is a very dull or sickly bird that will not try to sing under its influence and it has an astonishing effect over nervous, fidgety birds."

The organ used for rehearsing the senior class of pupils is run by electricity and is of finer workmanship than the other organ, though of similar pattern. Its tones are richer and more refined, although the music is as simple and rustic. There are some quite old heads at singing kept in the primary grade because of their defective method, birds with husky, uncertain voices or whose performance is of such loud register as to be more of a nuisance than a pleasure. Prospective purchasers are invited to choose birds from the senior class, and it is said that singers secured from the studio never lapse into careless, incorrect singing after being removed from the organ's vicinity. Their style once formed is formed for life.

The very young birds are kept by themselves and the female birds are also kept separate from the others, although allowed to fly at liberty behind a wire netting, a make believe fir tree serving them for a roosting place. They can hear the music from the other rooms, though never required to sing.

"In order to have good voices the birds must have good constitutions," says the mistress, as she looks in at her hopefuls flying about in the open. "I give my females every chance to exercise and keep healthy, so that their

The National Conservatory of Music of America, 128 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

JEANNETTE M. THURBER, PRESIDENT.

Artistic Faculty, consisting of { RAFAEL JOSEFFY, ADELE MARGULIES, LEOPOLD LICHTENBERG, LEO SCHULZ, HENRY T. FINCK, MAX SPICKER, CHARLES HEINROTH, AND OTHERS.

SUMMER TERM BEGINS IN MAY.
ADMISSION DAILY. . . . . .

nestlings will be hatched with sound physique. Some few of the mothers sing, but I do not encourage them to do so.

"Of course, I get acquainted with the temper and characteristics of all my birds, and can tell from a fledgling's first trial arias whether he is apt to become a valuable singer. Occasionally, though, some bird that I passed over as scarcely worth training develops wonderfully.

"The trouble is that almost all the people who come here fall in love with my teachers and want to rob me of them. I have almost a dozen teachers helping to train the others, and nothing would induce me to sell them.

"There! you hear that duet in the further room? That is Old Bach, my oldest professor, and a pupil. He has been put off to himself in a cage with a beginner for a day or two. The pupil, I suppose, has just made a hit, and he is performing a duet with him in celebration."

There are as many birds in as closely ranged cages in the studio as one might find at an ordinary bird store, but there is none of the din and hubbub that assaults the ear at such places, the confusion incident to so many singers at once all on a different key. These birds are versed in all the laws of propriety and harmony, and would as soon think of violating those laws as a disciplined opera chorus would think of singing out of tune.

The bird culturist's bright little daughter, Minna, has named the teachers according to her notion of their qualities. Minna helps a great deal with the birds out of school hours and knows when a teacher is tired and should be put up behind the dark curtain to rest, and when he should be introduced into some raw pupil's cage to teach him proper song methods. She could also give an amateur bird raiser excellent points as to the health standard of birds, the particular build that marks a fine singer and the especial food to be administered at certain stages.

"I call this teacher Bluff," she says, "because he likes to shirk and play sick when he is wanted to give a lesson. He humps himself up on his perch and looks grouty when there's nothing at all the matter with him. The one next to him is named Fussy on account of his set ways. The minute his seed isn't exactly to his taste, or his bath doesn't suit he gets irritable, but he's a good worker. He taught the bullfinches to sing finely and they didn't know a note when they came.

"That big bird is Frump, named so because he makes such a to-do about moulting, takes so long to moult and looks all the while ragged and melancholy. The one next to him is Great Airs. He has the clearest, most delicious notes and sings always something new. But he's conceited and won't give a single great performance unless he has the floor all to himself and the other birds listening.

"Sometimes when the new organ is playing he will put his head on one side and look grave and preoccupied for a long time, as if puzzling out the theme. It is said in the old country that the inventor of the first bird organ made it as a substitute for the natural wildwood sounds that a house bird never hears, waterfalls, the sighing of the pines, and the humming of bees and katydids. I think Great Airs has some intuition about that, and after the organ stops playing he will start in and sing such tender, dreamy things, as if going over old memories.

"Some canaries can imitate. There's Chippy and Greenwing together in one cage. They can't bear to be separated. There was a flute player here once, and the next day Chippy was trying to get his notes. Another time he seemed to be working on a coon song. Chippy does not make a very good teacher; he gets out of patience if his pupils are stupid, and sometimes will sit dumb for a whole half day until put back into his own cage."

The whole cost of a bird organ, including the custom house duty, is about $40. Only the main music box is imported. The metal tanks, cylinders and heavy wood framing and pulleys are set up on the premises. There isn't a house in the bird raising districts of Germany that has not got its bird organ, and even those families that have stopped raising birds still keep the organ because of its pleasant, limpid sound.

The instruments are rarely found in this country. The Brooklyn studio where they are set going for many hours daily is regarded by the neighbors as quite a show place. The car conductors on lines leading out that way have become used now to strangers inquiring for the little side street where the bird culturist keeps her tuneful colony.—New York Sun.

Zeldenrust.

JOSEF ISRAELS, the world renowned Dutch painter, is making a sketch from life of his celebrated countryman, Eduard Zeldenrust, the pianist. The picture, when completed, will be shipped at once to Loudon G. Charlton, Zeldenrust's American manager, to be put on exhibition in New York.

REMINISCENCES OF AUBER.

AUBER is well known as a popular French composer of operas, and he died at an advanced age. His works are too numerous for specification seriatim, and very few of them proved the reverse of successful. Auber used to gather his ideas during a ride in the Champs Elysées, between breakfast and luncheon times, but the French are too wise to eat heavy meat breakfasts at 8 or 9 o'clock in the morning. A roll and a cup of coffee are found fully sufficient. "John Bull" is comparatively a cannibal! Auber, with other musical notables, was shut out of the opera if he came too late and had to wait in the corridor for a continuation. When, at the Opéra Comique, he found his own name on the bills for that particular night, he went off, not caring to hear his own music!

Auber will be mainly remembered in London for his sensational opera, "Gustave III.," which, produced at old Covent Garden Theatre in December, 1833, had a "run" till the following Easter (A. D. 1834), which fell on March 30. Tom Cooke, then conductor, had the presumption to manufacture the well-known bass song in E flat, "When Time Hath Bereft Thee of Charms," out of the overture in the same key, taking the "motive" from the first eight bars. This air was sung by Henry Phillips, and at the word "madness" a skip had to be made of an "eleventh," from B flat on the second line to E flat above the bass staff. Phillips was replaced by young Seguin, the son of a well-known music seller. "Gustave III." was performed at Her Majesty's Theatre in 1851.

JEAN GERARDY

December, 1901, to May, 1902.

WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., New York.

FRITZ KREISLER

January to May, 1902.

WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU.

CARL ARMBRUSTER. Wagner Lecture Recitals.

VOCAL ILLUSTRATIONS: Miss Pauline Cramer.

Stereopticon Views of Bayreuth and the Principal Scenes of the Wagner Music Dramas.

Address WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th Street, NEW YORK.

OLIVE MEAD, VIOLINIST.

Appearing during the coming season of 1901-2 with the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA in Boston for the third time. During July and August, please address MISS MEAD personally, West Elm Avenue, Wollaston, Mass.

Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

THE T. ADAMOWSKI TRIO.

MR. T. ADAMOWSKI, Violin.
MISS EDITH THOMPSON, Piano.
MR. JOSEF KELLER, Violoncello.

During the absence for a year in Europe of Mme. Szumowska and Mr. Josef Adamowski their places in the Trio will be taken by Miss Thompson and Mr. Keller.

ADAMOWSKI QUARTET

Fourteenth Season.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, 1st Violin.
Mr. A. MALDAUER, 2d Violin.
Mr. M. ZACH, Viola.
Mr. J. KELLER, Violoncello.

Members of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

HELEN NIEBUHR, CONTRALTO.

Oratorio and Concert Repertoire.

Exclusive Management
Loudon G. Charlton,
CARNEGIE HALL, NEW YORK.

Mme. Charlotte MACONDA

Most Versatile and Brilliant American Soprano.

Re-engaged for New England Festivals.

(THIRD CONSECUTIVE SEASON).

Scored a Succession of Sensational Triumphs last Season in New York, Boston, Washington, St. Louis and other leading cities.

Oratorio, Festival, Concert and Recital Engagements now Booking.

Sole.... Management, LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, NEW YORK.

GIRL STUDENTS' HARD LIFE.

(From the Boston Evening Transcript.)

THERE are many classes of people gathered together in the great cities of America, but of them none is more picturesque and interesting than women students—not the girls who are attending the institutions where there are dormitories, but the young women who come to the cities to work independently and to live independently. In studying them, the first thing that impresses one is the fact that they are poor. I have yet to find one who has more than she actually needs, while many do not have half the necessaries of life. It is astonishing how many parents send their daughters away to study, dress and live well on an allowance that would be considered small to give a college man for spending money. There are girls in Boston, for instance, that are shockingly poor, yet they belong to excellent families and are accustomed to comfortable homes. They come with small allowances and their first step is to get the best instruction. What is left of their money they live on, and it is most interesting to see how they do it.

I know one girl who decided to take up art after she was graduated from the high school of her own city. "Well," her mother said, "you know there are no advantages to be had here, and you know that we cannot give you money enough to go away." But the girl was not satisfied. She did not want to stop studying and simply live quietly at home, doing nothing but dancing and going to the "teas." She was ambitious. So finally her parents agreed to give her the money that would naturally go for gowns and spending money, and let her do what she chose with it. She came to Boston and paid her tuition at one of the art schools, and got what artists' materials were necessary to begin her work. There was almost nothing left to live on, but the little woman was not in the least discouraged. She tramped all over town, and finally found an attic room that has no heat, save for the good intentions of the most useless small fireplace on earth, and that has one dormer window, from which nothing can be seen but the house opposite, not even a glimpse of the street. There is only one place in it where it is safe to stand full height, and that is right in the centre.

It is a room that one would not think of putting a servant into, but my friend and another art student took it. It was deplorably shabby and dirty, but the girls gave it a rousing cleaning and banished the big bed, getting two narrow cots, with bright, inexpensive covers to use in its place. They have a few soft pillows, which make the cots suggest comfort. The "comfort," by the way, is only an idle dream. They covered the dingy old walls with a few framed pictures and lots of sketches and studies in pencil and color. One of the girls has a brass kettle and some cups, so they rigged up a tea table and set it in front of the window and a bit under one of the eaves, with great effect. On the mantelpiece are a few good books, and the fire, although a farce in most ways, is still cheerful to look into. These girls have to climb four flights of the crookedest, narrowest, steepest, darkest stairs in the West End. I have been over miles of old stairs in Boston, but I have never seen the equal of these. I never call upon my plucky artist friends that I do not remember a dear but ungrammatical old soul I know, who once said, in describing a trip up a mountain, that, "She clim and she clim, and she clim, 'til she clum clear to the top!" But the only reference these young women have ever made to the self-sacrifice shown by their friends in going to have a cup of tea with them is a sign painted in jolly colors under a skull and crossbones and tacked onto the outside of their door. It reads: "Heaven One Flight Up."

Economy is a subject that is pretty thoroughly understood by the students. They know where to get the most for the least money—that is, they do after their first year. But, oh, that first year! The alacrity with which they accept the invitations of grandmamma's and Uncle John's stupid old friends "to run out to Dorchester and Newton often and have just a plain home dinner" is something appalling. Last year four girls living together never asked one another what engagements they had for the coming week, but instead: "Well, girls, what square meals have you in prospect?" Frequently a girl living this way does not take board by the week, because she is apt to be in one part of the town at noon and somewhere else at 6 o'clock. So she gets a sandwich and a cream puff for luncheon, and at night she is too tired to care about anything to eat, so she decides not to go out again in the rain, bu stay in her room and eat some fruit. And so it goes, until enough friends speak of her paleness to make her wonder what the matter is. Girls have to learn the importance of regular meals and wholesome food. They economize in the wrong place. But the second year they are likely to have more to eat, and go to the theatre less.

I met a girl a year or two ago who went one entire winter without either umbrella or rubbers. She said she could not afford to have them. This girl had a scholarship at one of the art schools, and she lived on what she could make decorating dinner cards and calendars and candy boxes for shops. She used to wash her clothes in the bathtub and wear them rough dried. She got her own breakfast—a cup of cocoa, made with condensed milk, and a shredded wheat biscuit. Often she had no luncheon because she was too much interested in her canvas to leave it, and she dined wherever she happened to be, and to the extent of whatever she happened to have. "What in the world are you thinking of to give your health so little consideration?" I asked her one day. "Well," was her highly satisfactory answer, "at lunch time I think it won't be long till dinner time if I work hard enough. At dinner I am usually too tired to think, and at breakfast I think what a calamity it would be if I were to get to eating my broom brush by mistake some morning." Yet one occasionally sees this girl at the symphony rehearsals, and in some way she has managed to buy copies of most of the poets. I have found her in her tiny room buried in a volume of Longfellow when it was easy to see that she was not having the common necessities of life, but she was always bright and ready to chat about this book and that, and the recent art exhibitions.

It is a mystery why all the clever girls who do such stunning things do not make more of a financial success. Perhaps a business head and an artistic temperament do not belong to the same mortal. The art students work like fiends, yet they seem to be content to drudge on simply for the sake of making better pictures every year. They do not appear to care how poor they are or whether or not any one ever hears of their work. Doubtless they would sell you a sketch if you went to them, but they would not be likely to call to see you until you bought something to get rid of them. It is seldom, indeed, that one hears of an art student's doing anything but study, no matter how many years she has been in the work. The most talented girl I know has been seven years at the same school, getting a scholarship year after year, and living on less than it takes to run a Chinaman, and hoping that something will turn up so that she can get to Paris to study. I have asked at least twenty art students what they are going to do when they get through studying, and only one of them has decided. There is a prosperous look about that girl that is refreshing.

The medical students and the girls who have gone into the normal schools of domestic science, dancing, gymnastics and the like, are in some ways to be congratulated. They have a definite time to study and then they are either graduated or dropped. If they have any business ability they succeed, and if not they drop out of sight. The art and music students have no time limit put on their work. They study until they feel they are fitted to do something.

To be sure, they always study more or less—the work is never ended. But there does come a time when a student is also an artist. The music students seem to have more of the quality of success oftener than the art students. One notices that the young pianist has a few pupils at very small rates, and that the young singer is in some chorus choir that pays her one or two dollars a Sunday. No one ever heard of a singer living "gipsy style" for seven years. She would seek other fields of usefulness first. There is a young artist in New York who is a decided success, a "rage," in fact. He came to the conclusion "early in the game," as he puts it, that he liked art and good clothes and good living. He was willing to work, but he wanted something for it. He has worked out his own salvation. He attended an art school only three weeks, just long enough to get himself thoroughly disliked. But the people of his class are still at the school, and doubtless will be for some time, while he at the age of twenty-two years is making pictures for leading magazines. Yet his pictures are not as good as those of my friend who has been studying for seven years, and who, like so many other young women, started out poor and has got into the fatal habit of staying poor.

There is a strong bond of sympathy existing between girls who are working with a purpose. I was present at the meeting of two young women in a small town in Maine recently, when the hostess said: "You will be glad to know each other, I am sure, because you are both studying music in Boston." That was enough to make them friends. It was amusing to hear them compare notes. "To think that we should both have lived on the same street and have been studying music," one exclaimed. "What a shame we did not meet then," said the other. "And do tell me, did you have a perfectly dreadful time finding a house where they would allow you to have a piano? I have been all over the town and I never have found but one woman that said 'yes' outright. She

THIS SPACE IS TO BE DEVOTED TO THE INSERTION OF
PORTRAITS OF SUCCESSFUL
BOWMAN PUPILS
Mr. BOWMAN is assigning LESSON HOURS for next season. Early application is suggested. He may be addressed until SEPT. 5th at HIS SUMMER HOME, Grand View Cottage, SQUIRREL ISLAND, COAST OF MAINE
E. M. BOWMAN. Piano and Theory Studio: Steinway Hall, New York
Organist and Conductor Baptist Temple Choir, Brooklyn.

THE ONLY "LESCHETIZKY" SCHOOL OF PIANO PLAYING IN AMERICA.
Named after PROF. THEO. LESCHETIZKY, of Vienna, by his special permission.
Mme. DE WIENZKOWSKA, DIRECTRESS AND FOUNDER.
PROF. LESCHETIZKY'S Sole Principal Assistant in this country, formerly in Vienna; also Concert Pianiste.
CARNEGIE HALL. Address Communications: 147 W. Eighty-second St., NEW YORK CITY.
LESCHETIZKY—"Mme. Wienzkowska's success as a piano virtuosa and teacher is eminent."
PADEREWSKI—"Mme. Wienzkowska is a finished pianiste and possesses an extraordinary ability of communicating to others a complete knowledge of her art."
HANS RICHTER—"I consider you an artist of finest esprit and taste, and a representative of a most solid school."

The Carlisle-Carr Concert Bureau and Greater Britain Musical Agency
(The Foreign and Colonial Bureau),
108 New Bond Street, LONDON, W., ENGLAND.
Opera, Oratorio, Concerts, At Homes, Garden Parties, Children Parties.
Sole control of the "Artists' Popular Concerts."
Telegraphic Address: "PANDECT," London.

MR. WHITNEY TEW
In America
November and December, 1901
The London Press says of Mr. Tew's singing:
Times—"Mr. Tew displayed a magnificent voice and great dignity of style."
Telegraph—"Mr. Tew possesses a fine voice of cultured style; be is a singer of high quality and a musician of broad sympathies and wide research."
Express—"Revealed the possession of a prodigious memory, a sonorous voice and a wealth of vigor."
Daily News—"Manifestly an experienced vocalist, endowed with a powerful voice of agreeable quality. He is a linguist and his artistic taste and judgment demonstrated by his excellent choice of a program."
Musical Courier (London)—"A hearty, straigbtforward delivery, which was all the more charming because of his admirable diction and pure intonation."
Lady—"His songs were admirably chosen, and the beautiful quality of his voice and his good method were best shown in Brahms' Liebeslieder."
Sunday Times—"Displayed a resonant low baritone voice and a refined method."
Musical Standard—"Eminently successful as an interpretive artist, for he sang with much feeling and intuition into the dramatic and poetic meaning of his text. His voice is a fine organ."
Musical News—"Mr. Tew has a good bass voice which be uses always with finished art and discretion. That he possesses an exteusive repertory culled from the best music written for the bass voice was evidenced."
Morning Post—"Mr. Tew's deep bass voice was well suited to the music of the Landgraf." (National Grand Opera Co., in Tannhauser.)
The Stage—"Mr. Tew gave a strong and impressive embodiment of the Cardinal."
The Era—"Mr. Whitney Tew, the author, gave a strikingly characteristic reading of Richelieu, his acting in the downfall scene being especially impressive and touching."
Field—"That fine bass singer, Mr. Whitney Tew, gave the first of his recitals last week. He possesses a powerful voice of beautiful quality which can stand work. He has both voice and brains."
Anglo-American—"Mr. Tew's fine voice was in the best of form. He is to be commended for his persistent fidelity to a really superior class of music."
Sole Representative:
Henry Wolfsohn
131 East 17th Street
NEW YORK

was most gracious, saying that she didn't care what went on in the house since her husband had taken up the trombone, which he practiced on from eight to ten hours a day."

"I hope you took her address," said the first girl; "she is worth remembering. The worst thing I had to contend with was my wall paper. It was old and torn, and simply killed my water colors, and so one day I went downtown and got 150 sheets of stunning green drawing paper and a lot of thumb tacks, and I fitted the paper on almost any way. And doesn't one find the most beastly old furniture and carpets in rented rooms! After a day room hunting I felt as though even life had a marble top on it."

One of these young women is back in town now. I went to see her the other day and found her sitting in the middle of the floor with a hammer in her hand and pieces of wood lying all about her. "How do you do?" she said; "come right in and don't be frightened. I haven't suddenly gone to running a saw mill. This is only a spinning wheel that I got of a fossil up in the hills of New Hampshire this summer. I thought I would begin another year of study and starvation by getting a companion. I am sure the wheel and I will be congenial friends—that is, if I ever get it together again. Take this chair. That couch really isn't safe." We had a lively chat for a few moments when she said, "Oh, wouldn't you like to see my new kitchen with hot and cold water, gas range, and all the comforts of a home?" She had taken a cracker box, put hinges on the cover so it opened down, and set it on top of a trunk in a small store room which was next to hers. It was a most amusing affair! She had driven tacks on the inside of the box, from which hung cups. The saucers and plates stood against the back, and the sugar and things she had in neat little tin boxes. On top of the kitchen with "all the modern improvements" stood two oil stoves, and above them hung the dish pan and a few cooking utensils. This girl tells me she gets very tired of boarding house fare and that she has decided to get one or two meals a day for herself to break the monotony. I stayed to luncheon with her and we had the coziest sort of a time. She cooked in the store room and served the meal on a "cutting" table, which she covered with a dainty cloth.

There was a member of this fraternity of students a few years ago whose story is a good illustration of the loneliness often found in the lives of girls who go to the cities strangers and do not happen to make friends. A very beautiful little girl with soft brown eyes came to Boston once to learn to sing. She got a room in a poor part of town. It was not heated and was only about half furnished. She had a cheap piano put in and took lessons of one of the best teachers. She made remarkable progress in technic, but her voice kept growing smaller and smaller, until it was nothing but an exquisite thread. But she had the temperament of a Brunnhilde. Her teacher was more than puzzled and made efforts to find the reason for this unusual state of things. She went to see the girl often, and although her room was cold and dreary there were always flowers on her table. "I am glad that someone sends her flowers. She is so extravagantly fond of them," the teacher mused. One day the girl went out in a bad storm and came back with a bunch of violets. She had got very wet and had taken a cold, which quickly ran into pneumonia. Three days later she died. The physicians said she had starved to death. There were but few things to be packed up and sent to her relatives, but among them were found several florist's boxes. The teacher made inquiries and found that a shabbily dressed little woman with brown eyes had been buying flowers of this florist all winter.

But if there is much that is dreary in the life of the struggling student, there is much that is bright and satisfactory, and a well balanced girl manages to have many good times in a small way. She is absolutely free. She makes no effort to keep up with anyone's code but her own, which is an excellent one, by the way. If she goes to the opera, she and her chums put on their bicycle skirts and go "rush" without the slightest care for what their fashionable acquaintances may say. She lunches at Parker's when she feels like it—or to be more exact, when she can afford it. I grieve to say that she sometimes carries a Boston bag, although when she first came to town she declared she would die first! She often sketches people in the cars, regardless of their comfort or discomfort, and I have known her to walk blocks and blocks down the street, bumping into someone occasionally, to get an outline picture of some soldiers or Chinamen, or an eccentric character, and if she meets a friend who is thoughtful enough to tell her that "the action in the sketches is simply great," she is quite happy.' She is apt to spend many evenings at the library looking like a tramp on wet nights, and lost in some good book. She is not afraid of the dark, so she comes cheerfully trudging home alone if her roommate is not there.

Pleasant afternoons find her sitting on a camp stool sketching some sailors down at the wharf or one of the queer little streets of the West End. She never tires of the old cemeteries. Surely you have passed her and her friends with their violins and music rolls, standing looking through the iron fences trying to make out some name on a tombstone. Then again you are very likely to see her with her "Materia Medica" under her arm, down at the Quincy Market. Possibly all the girls in her house are going to have a spread to-night and she has to get the lobsters. She is rather glad to be out and see the hurry and rush, and she is sure to walk home by way of the old Hancock Tavern. She is often at the matinees—not down in the parquet rattling the paper in a box of candy and telling her companion "how perfectly dear Faversham is as Henri Beauclerc," but you will find her away upstairs in the top balcony at the best plays. She is very quiet both in dress and manner, and you can see that she is enjoying every breath of some fine work. She is the best chaperoned girl I know, because she chaperones herself and she is in the way of doing things well. The student's life may not always be an easy one, and a poor girl has little pleasure outside of that which she makes for herself, but her life is certainly never lacking in interest.

One girl summed up things pretty well when she remarked that a student's life is made up of dark streaks and bright spots.

HERR KAPELLMEISTER ADOLF GOETTMANN (Berlin, W., Buelowstr, 85A), from whose well-known vocal school during the past year three tenors, one baritone and a coloratura singer were engaged for important German and foreign opera houses, as well as two mezzo sopranos, two altos and one baritone, appeared with very good success in concert and in church, will reopen his vocal class on September 16. The experienced voice builder accepts newcomers from September 1, after his return from Marburg, where, upon invitation of the university authorities of that town, he is holding lectures upon the subject of "Education of the Vocal Organ and Speaking Tone Production."

1901

STATEMENT OF

THE TRAVELERS

INSURANCE COMPANY of Hartford, Conn.

Chartered 1863. (Stock.) Life, Accident and Employees Liability Insurance.

JAMES G. BATTERSON, President,

PAID-UP CAPITAL, $1,000,000.00

JANUARY 1, 1901.

Total Assets, (Accident premiums in the hands of Agents not included.)	$30,861,030.06
TOTAL LIABILITIES (Including Reserves),	26,317,903.25
EXCESS SECURITY to Policy-holders,	$4,543,126.81
SURPLUS	3,543,126.81
Paid to Policy-holders since 1864,	$42,643,384.92
Paid to Policy-holders in 1900,	2,908,464.03
Loaned to Policy-holders on Policies (Life),	1,586,652.20
Life Insurance in Force,	109,019,851.00

GAINS FOR THE YEAR 1900:

IN ASSETS,	$3,167,819.96
IN INSURANCE IN FORCE (Life Department Only),	8,685,297 06
INCREASE IN RESERVES (Both Departments), (3½ per cent. basis),	2,484,392.52
PREMIUMS COLLECTED,	6,890,888 55

SYLVESTER C. DUNHAM, Vice-President.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Secretary,
J. B. LEWIS, M. D., Medical Director and Adjuster.
EDWARD V. PRESTON Superintendent of Agencies.
HIRAM J. MESSENGER, Actuary.

The Virgil Correspondence School.

THE CLAVIER METHOD BY MAIL.

A new, superior and eminently efficient system for Teachers and Players (only). Special Technic Course (24 lessons). Every principle explicitly stated and clearly illustrated. Each lesson taken gives the right to send a question letter, the answers to which will receive Mr. VIRGIL'S personal attention.

Certificates to qualified teachers of the CLAVIER METHOD.

Prospectus, explaining system, terms, conditions, &c., sent on application. Address

SECRETARY, VIRGIL CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL,
26 West 15th Street, New York.

GREGORY HAST.
IN AMERICA ONLY NOVEMBER AND DECEMBER, 1901.

Mr. Gregory Hast

Famous English Tenor.

Of the St. James, Hall Popular, London Ballad, Queen's Hall Oratorio, Crystal Palace Saturday and Royal Albert Hall Concerts.

Sole Direction:
Loudon G. Charlton,
Carnegie Hall, New York.

JOS. S. BAERNSTEIN
BASSO

51 EAST 64TH STREET,
NEW YORK CITY.

MINNE HUMPHRYES

Soprano, Concert and Oratorio.

FOR TERMS, DATES, ETC., ADDRESS
Care MUSICAL COURIER, 1135 Broadway, or 407 First Street, Brooklyn, New York.

BAILEY

THIS IS TO { MUSICAL CLUBS / MUSICAL SOCIETIES / MUSICAL MANAGERS } and Speculators in Musical Attractions.

If you want to please your people, fill your houses and make money, then engage ARTISTS THAT DRAW—artists that the public REALLY want to hear.

Young WM. WORTH BAILEY,

the Blind Violinist, is TRULY a GREAT artist.

ELIZABETH NORTHROP, Soprano
EDWIN M. SHONERT, Pianist } Assisting Artists.

A Season of 50 Concerts is being arranged by

R. E. JOHNSTON,

SUMMER ADDRESS, 257 West 92d Street, New York City,

Whom you should write for particulars. NOTE—Send for Booklet and Souvenir.

EVERETT PIANO USED EXCLUSIVELY.

The John Church Company's Music in London.

THE John Church Music Company's music has been used very extensively in London lately. Here is a partial list of composers whose songs have been sung there during the month of June, with date, places and names of singers:

The Sweetest Flower.....Hawley
The Japs (1st).....Hampstead
John Straffird (2d).....Brighton
Miss Jenkins Colyer (4th).....Westminster
The Japs (5th).....Cricklewood
Mme. Mabel Claridge (5th).....Torquay
Mme. Mabel Claridge (6th).....Torquay
Miss Jenkins Colyer (6th).....Holborn Town Hall
Miss Annie Stone (12th).....Hotel Cecil
Miss F. Dewhurst (15th).....The Kursaal, Bexhill-on-Sea
Miss Frederika Taylor (20th).....Steinway Hall
Miss Grainger Kerr (22d).....Wimbledon
Miss Evelyn Stuart (24th).....Steinway Hall
Mme. Bertha Moore (25th).....Queen's Hall
Walter J. Walls (25th).....Grosvenor Club
Robert Howard (26th).....Margate
Robert Howard (27th).....Margate
Robert Howard (28th).....Margate
Robert Howard (29th).....Margate
Miss Ada Burnand (21st).....Regent's Park
Miss Grainger Kerr (28th).....Cavendish Square
Madame Himing (19th).....Surbiton

El Capitan Song.....Sousa
The Japs (1st).....Hampstead
The Japs (5th).....Cricklewood

My Love Nell.....Fox
Gabriel Thorp (1st).....Cavendish Rooms
Wallis A. Wallis (5th).....Brighton
David Bispham (8th).....Royal Albert Hall
David Bispham (13th).....Empire
David Bispham (17th).....Salle Erard
Gabriel Thorp (26th).....Suffolk Street Gallery
Gabriel Thorp (26th).....Kensington
Gabriel Thorp (28th).....S. Kensington

When First I Saw.....Lassen
Miss Frederika Taylor (1st).....Cavendish Rooms
Miss Frederika Taylor (21st).....Portland Place
Miss Frederika Taylor (22d).....Bayswater
Miss Frederika Taylor (28th).....Cadogan Place

The Lark Now Leaves His Watery Nest.....Horatio Parker
Miss F. Taylor (1st).....Cavendish Rooms
Miss Emily Squire (3d).....Llandudno
Miss Frederika Taylor (11th).....S. Kensington
Miss Evelyn Stuart (11th).....Bermondsey
Miss Jessie Bradford (15th).....Playgoers' Club
Miss Frederika Taylor (17th).....St. James' Hall
Miss Frederika Taylor (20th).....Steinway Hall
Miss Frederika Taylor (21st).....Portland Place
Miss Frederika Taylor (22d).....Bayswater
Stanley Hill's Select Choir (22d).....Biggleswade
Miss Kingston Neele (27th).....City
Miss Frederika Taylor (28th).....Cadogan Square

Necklace of Love.....Nevin
Madame McKenzie (3d).....Hotel Cecil
Madame Himing (19th).....Surbiton
Miss M. Burton (19th).....Hove
Miss Grainger Kerr (22d).....Wimbledon
Miss Grainger Kerr (28th).....Cavendish Square
Miss Grainger Kerr (29th).....Tottenham

All for You.....D'Hardelot
R. Festin Davies (3d).....Clacton-on-Sea
Miss Percival Allen (10th).....Regent's Park
R. Festin Davies (6th).....Clacton-on-Sea
John Lyons (13th).....Portman Rooms
Miss Hortense Paulsen (25th).....St. James' Hall
Miss Grainger Kerr (27th).....City
Miss Grainger Kerr (29th).....Totteridge

Rainy Day.....Blumenthal
Madame McKenzie (6th).....St. James' Hall

Molly's Eyes.....C. B. Hawley
Miss Ada Burnand (7th).....Regent's Park

Lillian Nordica.

MME. LILLIAN NORDICA, just now in the height of her career, is to make her first recital tour in her native land this coming season, commencing about November 10. She has appeared in many American cities at various times during the past twelve years; in grand opera; as star soloist at great music festivals and with the leading symphony orchestras; on independent programs; and she has toured at the head of her own concert companies, but never before have American audiences heard her in recital, when she contributes every number on the program except two by the pianist who accompanies her.

Loudon G. Charlton, who is the sole manager of her recital tour, announces that the bookings now being rapidly made will include Canada, Texas and the Pacific Coast, as well as the territory between.

H. Elwood Piano, a well-known organist and teacher, of Highland Falls, died Sunday afternoon on the steamer Mary Powell.

A new opera, "Ghitana," by Max Oberleithner, has been accepted at the City Theatre, of Cologne, and will be the first novelty of the fall season.

American School of Opera

Berkeley Lyceum
23 West 44th Street

WM. G. STEWART, Director. LAIRD EASTON, Secretary and Treasurer.

For prospectus and all information apply to Secretary.

MR. WILLIAM G. STEWART, Director American School of Opera, Berkeley Lyceum, New York City:

NEW YORK, June 4, 1901.

My Dear Mr. Stewart—We take this opportunity of complimenting you on the splendid practical results accomplished by your School of Opera during the first year of its existence and gladly bear testimony to its advantages as a training school for those desirous of following a professional career in opera.

We are more than pleased with the graduates of your institution who have become members of the Bostonians and will gladly avail ourselves in the future of the opportunity for engaging singers who have pursued a course of study under your direction.

With best wishes always, Yours very sincerely.

W. H. MacDonald

Kindergarten Music Building.
The Original and Standard System of Kindergarten Music.
Kina K. Darlington
1069 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.

Mme. OGDEN CRANE.
The Art of Singing.
Special attention given to tone production. Founded on the pure Italian method. Sole teacher of Hattie Diamond Nathan, Edith Hutchins, Lillian Le Roy, Lillian Spitz and many others.
SUMMER SCHOOL:
Post Office Building, Asbury Park, N. J., From June 24 to September 14.
In New York Studio Thursdays,
3 East 14th Street,
Cor. Fifth Avenue, NEW YORK.

HERBERT WITHERSPOON
Opera, Oratorio, Concert, Recitals.
BASS.
For Terms, Dates, &c., address
Residence Studio: 202 West 78th St., New York.

REBECCA MACKENZIE
SOPRANO.
Available for Concert, Oratorio and Song Recitals.
Address FRED O. RENARD, Manager,
444 Central Park West, NEW YORK CITY

ALICE E. JOSEPH,
Late Private Secretary to Sir Augustus Harris.
THE OPERA AND CONCERT AGENCY,
7a Hanover Street, Regent Street, LONDON, England,
Authorized to represent all the Best Artists in the World!
ADVICE GRATIS.

Elizabeth Hazard
SOPRANO
Drawing Room Concerts
Song Recitals
Direction Emile Levy
141 Fifth Ave.

Paris.

SCHOOL FOR ACTING.
EMIL BERTIN,
1er Régisseur de la Scène de l'Opera Comique.
Stage Practice. In Cast.
41 rue des Martyrs, Paris.

PROFESSOR OF FRENCH,
Special Method for Foreigners.
MLLE. MARIE FOURNAISE,
American reference. 29 Boulevard de Batignolles.

Mme. FLORENZA d'ARONA,
VOCAL PROFESSEUR,
5 rue Bassano, Paris.
Special sessions during the summer in REPERTOIRE AND INTERPRETATION.

LA VILLA VIOLETTE
TROCADERO,
22 Rue Raynouard. Mme. Fiessinger.
Assortment of rooms. Excellent table. Gardens. All facilities of 'bus and tram.

FRENCH SCHOOL
M. DUMARTHERAY,
From Sounds to Literature, Pronunciation, Accent, Conversation.
(Opera.) 14 rue Taitbout.

MME. IDA LURIG,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
French Italian—German.
Specialty of German Songs and Oratorio.
(Trocadero) 5 rue Petrarque, Paris.

THE FRENCH LANGUAGE
Rapidly, easily and correctly acquired by KIMON'S PRACTICAL SYSTEM.
(3 francs, post free.)
Private lessons by M. D. Kimon,
10 rue Cambon, Paris.

MLLE. GRACE LEE HESS SCHOOL.
Supplementary Education.
French Language Obligatory.
145 Avenue Victor Hugo, Paris.

INSTITUT MOZART.
Language. Complete Musical Education. Singing, Diction by best professors. Board and residence for pupils' comfort; quiet, convenient.
Apply to manager, MISS HEGEMANN,
7 rue du Commandant Riviere.

Mme. ROGER-MICLOS,
PIANO—PARIS.
Elementary and Superior Class and Private Public Pupils' Concerts.
(l'Etoile.) 27 Avenue MacMahon.

Mme. ROSINE LABORDE,
PROF. DE CHANT.
62 rue de Ponthieu, Paris.

MISS JULIA KLUMPKE,
VIOLINISTE.
Pupil of MM. Eugene Ysaye and G. Rémy.
Concerts, Musicales, Lessons, Violin and Accompaniment. 10 rue Froidevaux, Paris.

MME. MARIE ROZE,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT,
37 rue Joubert.
Chaussée d'Antin, Paris.
Mise-en-scène. Ensemble practice in cast on stage.

DELLE SEDIE, Paris.
Pure Italian Method. Complete course. Stage practice. Voice, lyric, declamation, languages, solfège, ensemble music, mise-en-scène.
Class and single lessons.
Regular course, three years. Terms moderate.
30 rue St. Petersbourg.

MLLE. MARTINI,
Artiste Opéra, Opéra Comique, Théâtre Lyrique, Professor of "Mime."
Silent Interpretation, Stage Business, Gesture, Pantomime, &c.
87 rue St. Lazare, Paris.

MLLE. NILANDE,
Authorized Teacher of the Yersin Phono-Rhythmic Method. French Diction. French Language. (Av. Marceau). 37 rue de Chaillot.

MLLE. KIKINA,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
Ancienne Elève de MARCHESI,
100 Avenue de Villiers, Paris.

BALDELLI,
ITALIAN BARITONE.
Théâtre Royal, Madrid. Professeur de Chant. (Champs Elysées). 6 rue Euler, Paris.

MME. J. VIEUXTEMPS,
VOCAL PROFESSOR.
Classes and Private Lessons. Placing and Mending of Tones. 25 rue de Tocqueville (Monceau).

MME. ROBINSON DUFF,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
4 rue de la Renaissance l'Alma, Paris.

LEIPSIC. DRESDEN.
Mrs. SKENE-GIPSER.
Only opportunity in Leipsic to study the Leschetizky Method.
ONCE A WEEK IN DRESDEN.
Best recommendations by Leschetizky, Nikisch, Hans Sitt and others.
Piano Lessons given in English or German.
STUDIO: 39b. Mitzer Strasse, LEIPSIC.

McCALL LANHAM, BARITONE.
Opera, Oratorio, Concert, Vocal Instruction.
Open for engagements Address
Care American School of Applied Music,
212 West 59th st., New York

GENEVA (Switzerland) CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC.
Established 1835. 1,200 Students. 60 Professors.
FERDINAND HELD, DIRECTOR.
The Conservatory embraces: Instrumental (comprising all solo and all Instrumental Instruments), Vocal, Theory of Music, Harmony and Composition, Declamation Schools.
PRINCIPAL TEACHERS: Harmony, Composition, Theory, History of Music—MM. Otto Barblan, Jaques Daloroze, Joseph Lauber, Kling, Combe, &c. PIANO—MM. Willy Rehberg, Schulz, Fricker, Eckert; Mlles. Janiszevska, Fontannaz, Bovet, Lugler, Marchuhes, &c. VIOLIN—MM. Henri Marteau (Virtuosity Class for professionals (diplomas), Quatuor, Orchestra; Pahnke, Reymond, &c. SINGING—MM. Leopold Ketten, Alfonzo Dami, Mme. Brambilla-Ponchielli, &c. ORGAN—Mr. Barblan. 'CELLO—MM. Holzmann, Ad. Rehberg. FLUTE—Gessert, Krantz. OBOE—Rouge. TRUMPET—Renard. HARP—Tramonti. SOLFEGE—Kling, Mmes. Chassevant, Terroux, Fuchs, Kunz. Winter Term begin September 2. Entrance Examination end of August. Inscriptions at any time from August 19. For full details and prospectus apply to the direction.

LIBRARY
OF THE
UNIVERSITY of ILLINOIS.

MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK · LONDON · PARIS · BERLIN · CHICAGO · BOSTON

VOL. XLIII.—No. 7—Whole No. 1116.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 14, 1901.

MRS. WEBB-GARDNER

TWENTY-SECOND YEAR.

Price 10 Cents. Subscription, $5.00. Foreign $6.00.—Annually.

New York.

MRS. RATCLIFFE CAPERTON,

Representative and assistant of LAMPERTI.
New York, 138 Fifth Avenue; Philadelphia, 408 South 18th Street. Summer residence, Dresden, Germany.
"Mrs. Ratcliffe Caperton is my only representative, and I advise all pupils desiring to study with me to be prepared by her."
Dresden, Sedanstrasse 17. G. B. LAMPERTI.

ALBERTO LAURENCE,

155 East 18th Street, New York.
The voice formed and developed; the art of singing taught; method after the purest Italian schools; a bad voice made good, true and beautiful.

HENRY T. FLECK,

Conductor Haarlem Philharmonic Society of the City of New York.
Address: Normal College, New York.

MISS NORA MAYNARD GREEN,

VOCAL TEACHER.
Studio: 303 Fifth Avenue, New York.

MAX KNITEL-TREUMANN,

BARITONE.
Voice Culture—Art of Singing.
Carnegie Hall, Room 837.
Mail address: 15 Washington Terrace, New York.

GEORGE M. GREENE,

Voice Culture and Artistic Singing.
Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.
Studio: 489 Fifth Ave., Mondays and Thursdays.
Residence and address:
424 West 23d Street, New York.

MR. C. WHITNEY COOMBS,

(Church of the Holy Communion). Organ lessons and practice given on one of Roosevelt's finest instruments. Special advantages for the study of church music and the training of boys' voices.
Address: 49 West 20th Street, New York.

TOM KARL,

Concerts, Recitals and Vocal Instruction.
Studio: Carnegie Hall.
Residence: 18 West 75th Street, New York.

MISS MARY FIDÉLIA BURT.

Author of Original Methods in Sight Singing, Ear Training, Musical Stenography. All materials copyrighted. No authorized teachers in Greater New York.
Address: 48 Lefferts Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.

E. H. LOCKHART, Bass-Baritone.

Studios: 121 East Twenty-third street, New York. Voices quickly placed and developed. Special work given for breath control. The Art of Singing taught by method used in the old Italian schools. Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.

DUDLEY BUCK, JR.,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Song Lecture Recitals.
810 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

HOWARD BROCKWAY,

COMPOSER-PIANIST.
Pupils received in Composition, Harmony, Piano and Song Interpretation.
Studio: 817-818 Carnegie Hall, New York.

WALTER HENRY HALL,

Conductor Oratorio Society, Brooklyn, N. Y.
Organist and Choirmaster St. James' Church, New York.
For terms for conducting, address St. James' Church, Madison Ave. and 71st St., New York.

MME. LOUISE FINKEL,

SCHOOL OF VOCAL MUSIC.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.

EUGENE A. BERNSTEIN,

PIANIST.
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Studio: 160 East 70th Street, New York.

LUCILLE SMITH MORRIS,

PIANIST. INSTRUCTION, Concerts, Recitals.
Pupil of Wm. Sherwood and Mrs. A. K. Virgil.
Certified teacher of Virgil Clavier Method.
Studio: 201 West 81st Street, New York.

RICHARD ARNOLD,

Concertmaster Philharmonic Society.
INSTRUCTION.
208 East 61st Street, New York.

MR. FRANCIS STUART,

TEACHER OF SINGING.
First season in New York. Ten years in San Francisco. Pupil of Lamperti, the elder.
Being in full possession of my method of singing, he has the ability to form great artists.—FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
Reception hours, Mondays and Thursdays, 2 to 3.
Studio: 86 Madison Ave., near Twenty-eighth St.

LILLIE D'ANGELO BERGH

SCHOOL OF SINGING.
Operatic course. Teachers' special course, all departments. Famous specialists. Prospectus. The Albany Broadway and 52d Street, New York.

ROSETTA WIENER,

PIANO, SIGHT READING and New York School of Accompanying.
Carnegie Hall, 301-2.

MR. CHARLES LEE TRACY,

PIANOFORTE INSTRUCTION.
Certificated Teacher of the LESCHETIZKY METHOD.
Studio: Carnegie Hall. New York City.

MAX BENDHEIM,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
332 West 56th Street. New York City.

PAUL TIDDEN,

PIANIST.
314 East 15th Street, New York.
Will accept a limited number of pupils.

HERBERT HEMINGWAY JOY,

Voice Culture and Singing.
Italian School.
Studio: 116 Carnegie Hall, New York.

GUSTAV L. BECKER,

CONCERT PIANIST and TEACHER of PIANO and COMPOSITION.
Address: 1 West 104th Street, New York.

SIGNOR FILOTEO GRECO,

THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio: 51 West 35th Street, New York.

M. THEODOR BJORKSTEN AND MME. TORPADIE BJORKSTEN,

INSTRUCTORS IN SINGING.
New Studios: Carnegie Hall, New York.

PERRY AVERILL—BARITONE,

OPERA—ORATORIO—CONCERT AND VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
220 Central Park South, New York.

J. ARMOUR GALLOWAY,

Voice Culture and the Art of Singing,
Studio: Rooms 43 and 44 Y. M. C. A. Building, 318 West 57th Street, New York.

MARIE SEYMOUR BISSELL,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Pupils prepared for Church, Concert and Oratorio.
Studio: 135 East 16th Street, New York.

MRS. MARY HISSEM DE MOSS,

SOPRANO,
106 West 90th Street,
New York City.

SAMUEL B. MOYLE,

BASSO CANTANTE.
Oratorio, Concert, Musicales, Voice Culture—Italian Method. Tone Placing and Reparation a specialty. Studio: 136 Fifth Avenue, New York.

GEORGE SWEET,

OPERA, ORATORIO, CONCERT.
304 West 72d Street, New York.

J. HARRY WHEELER,

Voice Production and the Art of Singing.
Voices educated strictly in the Italian School.
Studio: 81 Fifth Ave., corner 16th St., New York.
July and August at Chautauqua Assembly.

MR. EDMUND SEVERN,
Violin, Composition, Ensemble.
MRS. EDMUND SEVERN,
Piano and Voice.
Studio: 131 West 56th Street, New York.
"Severn Trio."

ENRICO DUZENSI,

OPERA TENOR.
Will accept pupils for Voice Culture; good voice cultivated per contract; Italian method.
145 East 83d Street, near Lexington Ave.

CARL C. MÜLLER,

Translator of "Sechter's Fundamental Harmonies."
Author of "Tables for Harmonic Exercises."
Teacher of Piano, Harmony, Counterpoint and Composition. 1291 Lexington Ave., New York.

MME. HELENE MAIGILLE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION, REPERTOIRE.
Studio and residence: 1211-15 Carnegie Hall,
Summer course. New York.

MR. EMILIO AGRAMONTE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Summer Course.

SAUL HAROLD LICHTENSTEIN,

VIOLINIST.
Pupil of Saurei and Thomson.
Concerts, At Homes, &c. Pupils accepted.
Address: 103 West 114th Street, New York.

J. WARREN ANDREWS,

CONCERT ORGANIST and TEACHER.
Send for list of Pupils holding positions.
Address: Church of the Divine Paternity,
76th St. and Eighth Ave., New York City.

THE NEW YORK INSTITUTE FOR VIOLIN PLAYING AND SCHOOL FOR PIANO AND VOCAL CULTURE.

230 East 62d Street

Complete musical education given to students from the beginning to the highest perfection.
F. & H. CARRI, Directors.

MME. LUISA CAPPIANI,

VOICE CULTURE, SKILL OF SINGING.
"The Louella," 159 West 45th Street,
New York.

RICHARD T. PERCY,

Concert Organist and Accompanist
Organ Lessons at Marble Collegiate Church, corner Fifth Avenue and 29th Street.
Studio: 1402 Broadway, New York.

MISS MARGARET GOETZ,

CONTRALTO (mezzo range).
Concerts, Song Recitals, Vocal Instruction.
Address: 36 Gramercy Park, New York.

THE ARENS VOCAL STUDIO

(affiliated with the American School of Opera).
Coaching a specialty.
Normal courses for Voice Teachers.
261 West Fifty-fourth Street, New York.
For circulars address Miss Lucie May Benedict, 25 West Sixty-fifth Street.
Reception hour, 2 p. m., Wednesdays excepted.
Fall term begins September 20.

HENRY HOLDEN HUSS,

Instruction in Piano and Theory of Music.
Studio for non-resident pupils: Steinway Hall.
Personal address: 318 East 150th Street, New York.

FRANCIS FISCHER POWERS,

VOICE CULTURE AND THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio (and invariable address): Carnegie Hall, New York. New York season, October 20 to May 1; Kansas City, Mo., season, Pepper Building, May 15 to August 1; Los Angeles, Cal., season, Westminster Hotel, August 10 to October 10.

MRS. HADDEN-ALEXANDER,

PIANIST.
Powers-Alexander Studios,
Carnegie Hall, New York.

HENRY SCHRADIECK'S

VIOLIN SCHOOL.
Violin, Piano, Theory and Ensemble Playing.
Residence and Studio:
535 Washington Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

WILLIAM H. BARBER,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
Studio: Steinway Hall,
New York.

F. W. RIESBERG,

ACCOMPANIST.
Instruction—Piano, Organ, Harmony.
With THE MUSICAL COURIER.
Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.
Secretary-Treasurer New York State M. T. A.
Residence Studio:
954 8th Ave., corner 56th Street, New York.

S. C. BENNETT,

Instructor in Voice Building and the Art of Singing.
Teacher of Mme. Genevra Johnstone-Bishop and many other talented vocalists.
Studio: 836 Carnegie Hall, New York.

MME. EMMA RODERICK,

Rapid Development and Complete Education of the Voice. 118 West 44th Street, New York.

MRS. GRENVILLE SNELLING,

SOPRANO.
Concerts, Recitals, Musicals, Oratorio.
Address: 111 Fifth Avenue, New York.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF MUSIC,

179 East 64th Street, New York.
WM. M. SEMNACHER, Director.
I regard Mr. Semnacher as the greatest teacher of piano in this country.
Henry T. Fleck, Director of Music,
Normal College, New York City.

MRS. HENRY SMOCK BOICE,

VOICE CULTURE.
Musical Art Department of Adelphi College.
Residence-Studio: 127 McDonough St., B'klyn, N.Y.
Pupils prepared for Church, Concert, Oratorio.
138 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Monday and Thursday Afternoons.

SERRANO VOCAL INSTITUTE,

323 East 14th Street, New York.

Conducted by EMILIA BENIE DE SERRANO and CARLOS A. DE SERRANO.

Teachers of Charlotte Maconda, Fannie Francisca.

KATHERINE RUTH HEYMAN,

Concert Pianiste.
145 East 23d Street, New York.

GUY DORÉ LATTA, OPERA TENOR

Voice Culture and Singing.
Tone production, placing and development a specialty. Guarantees to increase range and make any voice strong and beautiful. Summer rates.
372 West 120th Street, New York.

JOSEPH PIZZARELLO,

VOCAL INSTRUCTOR
Voice Developed—Style Opera.
43 West 34th Street, New York

ALICE GARRIGUE MOTT,

VOCAL CULTURE.
Carnegie Hall, New York.

MR. AND MRS. THEO. J. TOEDT,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Home Studio: 151 East 62d Street, New York.

LENA DORIA DEVINE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Representative Teacher of the methods of the famous master, FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
136 Fifth Avenue. New York.

MISS FANNIE HIRSCH,

CONCERT AND ORATORIO.
DRAMATIC SOPRANO Steinway Hall, or 170 East 61st St., New York.

MISS EMMA HOWSON,

PRIMA DONNA.
Royal Italian and English Opera Company.
Lamperti Method Absolutely Taught.
Tuesdays and Fridays, 96 Fifth Ave., New York.

EMMA THURSBY.

SOPRANO.
Will receive a limited number of pupils.
Residence-Studio: 34 Gramercy Park, New York.

ISIDORE LUCKSTONE,

The Accompanist and Musical Director.
STYLE, REPERTOIRE, FINISH, VOCAL CULTURE.
836 Lexington Ave., or address MUSICAL COURIER.

ARTHUR VOORHIS,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
100 Clifton Place, Jersey City, N. J.
Care MUSICAL COURIER, New York.

MME. ADELE LEWING

CONCERT PIANIST.
Authorized Teacher of the Leschetizky Method.
Special terms to out of town teachers.
Concerts. Recitals. Musicales.
Address: Care Steinway Hall, or 127 East 73d Street, New York.

MISS GENEVIEVE BISBEE,

PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Leschetizky Method. Summer courses.
1109-1110 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

KATHARINE PELTON,

Mezzo Soprano.
Sole Direction HENRY WOLFSOHN,
131 East 17th Street, New York.

CHARLOTTE A. BABCOCK,

Certificated Pupil of Dr. William Mason.
Pianoforte Instruction.
Studios: 810-14 Carnegie Hall, New York.
Summer season, Bernardsville, N. J.

SIGNOR A. CARBONE,

Member several years Metropolitan Grand Opera Company.
VOICE CULTURE. OPERA SCHOOL.
Summer Course.
Studio: 240 Fifth Ave., New York.

JOSEPH P. DONNELLY,

VOICE, ORGAN, PIANO.
Organist-Director All Saints,
Madison Avenue and 129th Street, New York.
Residence-Studio: 2033 Madison Avenue.
Brooklyn Studio: The Pouch Gallery.

CARL VENTH,

VIOLIN SCHOOL.
14 Seventh Avenue,
Brooklyn, N. Y.

STELLA PRINCE STOCKER.

COMPOSER-DIRECTOR.
Recital-Lectures, ARTHUR STOCKER, boy soprano, assisting. For season 1901-1902.
Address: 11 Schmiede Strasse, Hamburg, Germany, or care P. J. Kreider, 251 West 71st Street, New York.

McCALL LANHAM, BARITONE.

Opera, Oratorio, Concert, Vocal Instruction.
Open for engagements. Address
Care American School of Applied Music.
212 West 59th Street, New York.

HUGO TROETSCHEL.

Organist Schermerhorn St. Evangelical Church.
Instruction: Piano—Organ—Theory.
Organ Lessons given on large three-manual Roosevelt Organ.
Residence: 384 Bainbridge St., Brooklyn, N. Y

Mr. & Mrs. WALTER H. ROBINSON,

TENOR AND CONTRALTO SOLOISTS
Oratorio, Concerts and Musicales.
Voice Production and Repertoire.
Studio: 405 Carnegie Hall, New York.

A. J. GOODRICH,

Personal or Correspondence Lessons in Harmony, Counterpoint, Composition, Orchestration and Practical Musicianship.
Author of "Analytical Harmony," "Theory of Interpretation," "Complete Music Analysis," "Synthetic Counterpoint," "Guide to a Practical Musicianship."
Glens Falls, N. Y.

GERMAN HEADQUARTERS OF THE MUSICAL COURIER,
BERLIN, W., LINKSTRASSE 17.

"THE FLYING DUTCHMAN" AT BAYREUTH.

July 25, 1901.

AS I wrote in my last week's budget I had no difficulty in securing a ticket for the opening performance at Bayreuth, and the sequel showed that I also could not have hit upon a better seat in the house if I had had a chance to select one half a year in advance, instead of having to be contented with the choice of a certain Hobson. I was not so fortunate, however, as far as the "Parsifal" performance was concerned, for I got left, and not even beautifully, all efforts to secure a ticket, although they were made by some people highest in authority at Bayreuth, proving futile. Of this, however, later on.

The spirits of the party that started from Berlin early on Sunday morning were as bright as the clear blue sky that shone overhead. There were Prof. Wilhelm Blanck, the music critic of the Vossische Zeitung, and his comely wife; the intelligent and intellectual vocalist, Mrs. Marie Blanck-Peters; then the portly little director of the Philharmonic, Sacerdoti, and his many inches taller, stately spouse; his partner, the amiable director Landeker, and his sprightly and musical little wife, reaching Bayreuth from the other side, as they came from Switzerland: next Otto Lessmann's pretty and talented young daughter Eva rushed up to the train under the chaperonage of an elderly lady, her father joining the party at another station, where the critic of the New Yorker Staats Zeitung, my old friend August Spanuth, and his wife, Amanda, née Fabris, also boarded the train. At the very last moment, apparently cool as a cucumber, despite the already pretty severe and later on perfectly scorching heat, Wilhelm Klatte, of the Lokal Anzeiger, walked up the platform and, saluting the party of friends, vouchsafed the information that he had received sudden and unexpected orders for Bayreuth from his paper, which was embarrassing, in that he was on the eve, or morning, as the case may be, of becoming a father for the first time in his life. "You know how it is when one has to go away from home, leaving his wife on so important an occasion," he said to me, shaking hands. "No, I don't," I ventured to contradict him, "but I can imagine and I sympathize with you." All the time in Bayreuth for nearly three days that fellow was walking around day and night in anxiety awaiting a telegram which never came, and when we reached Berlin again together late last night his angelic, patient wife was there at the Anhalt station, together with her mother, who, by the way, is also the mother-in-law of Ernest Hutcheson, to receive him. Meanwhile we have a bet of a bottle of champagne pending—but I am anticipating.

At Leipsic, on the way to Bayreuth, there joined us the genial Arthur Nikisch, and his ever sprightly and youthful wife; Eulenburg, the impresario, and his better half; some musical Leipsic society ladies, of course, following in Nikisch's wake; Pfau, who, like Beckmesser, "immer bei Sachs," is Nikisch's constant attendant; Arno Hilf, one of Germany's greatest violin virtuosos, and our occasional, I am sorry to say only too rare, but when he does write always highly interesting, Leipsic correspondent, Alvin Kranich, with his very charming little German wife. The young American composer and pianist only went as far as Reichenbach, where he changed cars for Bad Elster, a fashionable watering place, which boasts of a complete and efficient Kur-orchestra, and there Kranich on the next night was going to try his newest work for piano and orchestra, if not exactly on the dogs, then at least on the Kurgaeste during the dog days. The result must have been a beneficial one all around, for I received yesterday the following short but satisfactory telegram:

Phantasie fuer Pianoforte und Orchester von Kranich am 23 vom Componisten hier brilliant vorgetragen errang ausgezeichneten Erfolg. Kapellmeister Woldert.

Which, translated into the vernacular, says the fantaisie for piano and orchestra by Kranich, brilliantly performed by the composer on the 23d inst., achieved an excellent success. (Signed) Kapellmeister Woldert.

The step from Kranich to Wagner by way of Hof-Nuenmark, with two further changes of cars and at the rate of at least thirty-four and three-quarter miles per hour, was accomplished in something like six hours more. A dinner intervened, and the time was further whiled away, if not exactly beguiled, by a lecture of Arthur Nikisch on the evil habits of some few critics in indulging in composition. This dual activity ought never to be permitted, and so far as he, Nikisch, was concerned, he would never more perform a work that had been composed by a critic. "For you see," argued he, "there is Herr von P., for instance, and Professor T., who besiege me with their inferior compositions. I answer invariably that on principle I do not perform a work of a critic, so they cannot be offended, as long as I make no exception whatsoever, and I am not in danger of being suspicioned of having put a work of a critic upon the program in order to gain his good will. I made an exception once in favor of Pfohl, of Hamburg, but repented of it for his and my own sake, for his work was torn to shreds by the other critics and he was wrongly accused by one of his confrères of having exercised an influence and of having unduly used his strong position as a critic to coerce me to perform one of his compositions at a Berlin Philharmonic concert." I did not care to argue the point with Nikisch as to what the poor fellows are to do who have to write criticisms in order to make a living and who can, in spite of this, not suppress their creative inspiration or instincts. Nor did I point out to him, as I might have done, that a man in his high position ought to have the moral courage of his convictions, which should lead him to perform and bring to recognition new and unknown works, if he deemed them worthy of performance, unmindful of the charge of sordid motives being imputed to him, or of the possibility of making enemies of those composer-critics whose works he would not deign to place upon a program simply because they were inferior.

At last Bayreuth was reached and the first to greet me with that good-natured, genial, broad grin so characteristic of him was Ossip Salomonowitsch Gabrilowitsch, the eminent pianist, who had called on me at Berlin the previous day, but who had been so eager to get to the Mecca of musicians for the first time in his life that he took the night train, and hence got there ten hours earlier than the rest of us did. Hans Richter, all bustle and suppressed, good humored energy, ran from one carriage to another with a youthfulness that made him seem almost unchanged since the glorious days of 1876, at least as long as he kept his hat on his head. As soon, however, as he doffed it with a hearty "Gruess Gott," and a no less Paderewskian handshake, his bald pate shone brilliantly like a full moon through the fringe of fuzzy hair, the remnants of the once so abundant blond curls which used to look like a lion's mane. Right after Richter came Mottl in the un poco allegretto quasi andante comodo style, which befits the man and bespeaks his temperament. "Sie auch hier, das ist Recht!" he greeted me and grasped my hand. Before I could make my way through the festively decorated old town, gay with bunting, to my old quarters, the same that I have occupied for ever so many first Bayreuth performances, I had met and seen, saluted and recognized so great a number of old and new friends, artists and musical acquaintances that I fear beginning to enumerate them, lest I might forget one or the other of them, and they would feel slighted by the unintentional oversight. There was among the number of the veterans of 1876, whom Cosima Wagner had especially invited for the twenty-fifth anniversary of their participation in the first of the "Nibelungen Ring" performances at Bayreuth, the giant Albert Niemann, who walked as erect and looked as proud as if he were nearer fifty than the scriptural seventy years of age. Amalia Materna nearly knocked the coachman's oil cloth hat off with her parasol, because he would not stop his jaded mare fast enough, when she had spied and recognized me as her old friend and admirer from the days of the first New York May music festival in 1881, at the Seventh Regiment Armory. We had often met since at the Metropolitan Opera House, at Bayreuth and at Vienna, last in 1892, and I always had the sincerest admiration for the grandest Brünnhilde and Kundry whom the world has so far seen. Nobody less than Richard Wagner himself has so designated and thus distinguished her for life. While these two veterans, Materna still with lingering regret in her large dark eyes, have abdicated their public career, another one, who would deserve his otium cum dignitate, Eugen Gura, also one of the 1876 cast, continues to concertize and occasionally also to appear in opera at Munich. He is such a Meistersinger that, despite the ravages of time in his once glorious vocal organ, he affords enjoyment still to thousands of listeners all over Germany by means of his artistic delivery of Lieder.

Then I saw, unless I am greatly mistaken, another queen of song, the peerless Patti, resplendent in the charms of maquillage and an auburn wealth of hair, which did not correspond in color to the recollection I bore in mind of the raven haired male heart teaser who once upon a time sat around a festive board, a lonely woman among a gay band of New York music critics and amateurs. The sharp and clean cut, almost Wagnerian profile, and the features that make him look like a kind hearted, good natured Mephisto, of our Berlin royal—with a capital and with a small r—conductor, Dr. Muck, appeared by the side of his refined blond wife. "Got a ticket for me for 'Parsifal'?" I accosted him by the way of greeting. "No, but demand for thirty." There goes my "last hope," by Gott—schalk, I muttered as we passed by. Like a fleeting vision in a fast driven carriage I have a glance upon the Chopin-like sympathetic features of the New York pianist and composer, Richard Burmeister, who is spending his vacation at the idyllically situated Eremitage, and only comes into town for the performances. On the way up to the hill I join Colonne, the great French conductor, who tells me a long tale of woe about his ill-luck with an American manager, who failed to put up the filthy lucre, and I had the rare satisfaction of noticing and noting that he perspired even more than I did. In front of the theatre, newly painted for its jubilee, I meet the first secretary of the American Legation, John B. Jackson, and his wife, and niece, Miss Rutter; Henry Wolfsohn and wife, whose sparkling dark eyes contrast so effectively with her snowy white hair. It was always thus, ever so many years ago, the hair and the eyes I mean. "Where is your pretty daughter?" "Married, since last year. Did not bring her along!" "—— it, beg pardon—congratulate you. Please send her my best regards!" Here comes up Dr. Otto Neitzel, the representative of the Cologne Gazette, leading his intellectual Russian wife, and then I shake hands with Prof. Martin Krause, who is full of enthusiastic anticipation; Goellerich, the great Liszt interpreter, with his long locks; Mrs. H. R. Chamberlain, the lithe and pretty wife of the London representative of the New York Sun, an old true and stanch Bayreuth visitor, and W. J. Chamberlin, also of the New York Sun—but please notice the difference in the spelling; Miss Anna Gertrude Childs, a vocalist from Rockford, Ia., and quite a lot of Americans, whom I recognize by their pronunciation as well as other unfailing tokens, and then—we all spread in different directions, for there comes the "third and last call," the D minor Dutchman theme, with its open fifth, which is the final signal for the beginning of the first performance of "The Flying Dutchman" at Bayreuth.

Before I enter into any details about this remarkable performance I want to state that I consider it an epoch making event, which in a worthy manner concludes the cycle, which in 1877 already was planned, embracing the representation of also the older works of Richard Wagner. The first reproduction of "The Flying Dutchman" acted upon all who attended it somewhat like a revelation. For now nearly sixty years this opera has been given in theatres of all degrees of importance, but always more or less cut, and not in any of the world's opera houses was it reproduced complete or in a performance that even corresponded to Wagner's original intentions. This was the case for the first time at Bayreuth night before last, and, despite the few moments where the master dropped back into the style of the old opera, the impression was on the whole a mighty, deeply touching and in some episodes even an overwhelming one. Principally was this effect gained by means of a wonderful mise-en-scène of almost indescribable beauty and magical naturalness, added to which was a scenic achievement which I never before saw equaled, not even at Bayreuth. But these vivid, ever changing and admirably natural stage pictures would not have sufficed to create so deep an impression if the cast had not been, without an exception, of equally high artistic merit, and if not, last, but in this instance by no means least, for the first time in the history of this opera the work had been given as one uninterrupted whole. This innovation of not dividing "The Flying Dutchman" into three cut and dried acts with the usual quarter of an hour intermissions brought into the representation a dramatic life, a continuity of thought and style, and an augmentation of the general interest which would have been well-nigh irresistible if the idea which prompted this performance aus einem Guss had been executed with just a little more verve. This Zug, however, was at moments wanting, and this is the fault of the conductor, General Musikdirector Mottl, who, naturally inclined to be lackadaisical, was aided and abetted by Cosima Wagner, who wanted everything taken as broadly and in many instances as draggingly as possible, in order to allow of the clearest pronunciation and the plainest display of action. She is said to have out-Mottled even Mottl in this direction, and that if he had followed her injunctions literally he would have taken still broader tempi. Whatever she gained, however, in plasticity of reproduction, she lost on the other side in the dramatic verve and effect, and I believe that the latter are, after all, of greater importance and value. As it was, the performance lasted just two hours and a half to the minute, and although this surely is no small demand upon the audience's "seating capacity," I think that to most people it did not seem too long or wearisome, and with smarter tempi, especially in the exposé of the first and the male choruses of the third acts, "The Flying Dutchman" in one uninterrupted representation would certainly not prove as severe a test upon an unflagging interest in the music and stage proceedings as is, for instance, the undivided representation of "Das Rheingold" as demanded by Wagner and as performed here in Berlin, in Vienna, in Munich and of course also in Bayreuth. In New York, however, I saw the prelude to the "Nibelungen Ring" in two acts, with time for a drink between Wotan's and Loge's visit to Nibelheim and their reappearance upon the upper world.

The intermission was a welcome one and did not disturb the dramatic coherency of the action, simply because the action is slower and there is more talking than doing in "Rheingold" anyhow than there is in "The Flying Dutchman." That Richard Wagner himself had originally intended this opera to be given continuously is demonstrated not only in his writings but also in the musical scheme of the opera, as can easily be seen by the way in which he takes up the musical thread of the close of each preceding act, when he begins the short introduction to the next one. This very fact also made the present Bayreuth arrangement easily accomplishable, as far as the music was concerned, for all that was necessary to do was to excise the bars which begin each introduction of a new act, they being mere repetitions of the closing bars of the preceding act, whereby the musical continuity is immediately achieved. What must have restrained Wagner from executing his original idea and dividing "The Flying Dutchman" up into a regular three act opera were in all probability practical reasons. He may have feared also that the work would be tiring or too long for an audience. Considerations of this sort surely prevailed with him at that early stage of his creative career. But above all mechanical difficulties, which must have seemed insurmountable, must have decided him to allow the time for the changes of scenery in the usual entractes, and these reasons would probably prevent also to-day, although the mechanical stage resources have been improved so vastly since the days of the earlier Wagner works, any other opera house from giving such a production of "The Flying Dutchman" as was vouchsafed at Bayreuth, viz., with only a few moments' veiling of the stage by means of a soft drapery curtain, during which time the closing bars of one and the introductory (cut of the repetition) bars of the next act are being performed by the orchestra. This drapery curtain, by the way, was the only thing in the way of scenic display that did not please me, for in its mixture of corals and nautical emblems, or whatever it was, in the much beloved Jugend style, it seemed a veritable "secession" from good taste. A simple piece of unpainted sail cloth would have been more suitable. This, however, and Daland's yellow boots, as well as the fact that the storm clouds shifted from the left to the right in the last act, while the Dutchman's vessel sailed off right in the opposite direction, which would surely have displeased Henderson, of the Times, and besides is against nautical as well as natural laws, were the only slight drawbacks in a mise-en-scène for which I cannot otherwise find sufficiently strong terms of praise. The ocean looked wonderfully natural in a storm driven night in the first act. Perfectly home-like and cozy was the spinning room and the girls' dresses were models of taste. But greater skill in stage management than even in mise-en-scène enlivened this part of the opera. The whole bevy of girls behaved naturally. They had nothing of that drilled-in sameness of motion and gestures which make such an apathetic impression in the ordinary professional operatic chorus. In part this is due of course to the fact that this Bayreuth chorus is made up of young artists from other opera houses or talented young singers who want to make their way through this start from headquarters. They are not taken from the rank and file of existing organized operatic choruses. Hence these girls have still an individuality of their own, and to preserve this and make use of it is one of the merits and also one of the best distinguishing features of Frau Cosima Wagner's stage management. The way in which these girls listen to Senta's singing of the ballad, the sympathizing expression in their faces, the attention they pay to Mary's admonitions and injunctions, and how they jump up and forget everything in their excitement when Erik brings the news of the arrival of Daland's ship, are perfectly delightful to watch, and herein consists one of the charms of the Bayreuth performances, which one would look for in vain at any other opera house. Scarcely less full of motion was the usually very much cut seamen's scene which fills the first half of the final section of the opera. Here for the first time I heard these significant choruses sung completely, and how fresh the voices rang out; the tenors on Daland's ship and the basses, all superb, selected, sonorous material on board of the Dutchman's vessel. The spook scene, which followed, and which, whenever it is attempted at all at other opera houses, looks very much like a farce; here it came to view with a shuddering, ghastly seriousness. The light effects were managed in a masterly style, and I have never seen anything more natural on a stage than the sea fog, a veritable dense mist that arose around the phantom ship during this episode.

Of the performance from a purely musical viewpoint I should also speak with unalloyed praise, if it had not been for the said slowness of tempi of Mottl, of which he began to give a striking proof in the well-known overture. The pause he made before the first entrance in F major of the salvation theme—in the score a rest of one bar with a fermata over it—became well-nigh painful, all the more so as in the deathlike silence which pervaded the whole house one could plainly distinguish the noise made by the electric motor in the machinery hall near the theatre. The salvation theme itself, in 6-4 time, was dragged so unmercifully that it took on the character as if it had been written in 4-4 adagio time. The stormy part of the overture, however, was, like the entire work of the orchestra throughout the opera, simply superb, and I never heard more mellow brasses and more euphonious woodwind than came up from the "hystic abyss." It was a mistake, however, to make the storm howl on the stage during the closing bars of the overture. This prelude is in strict old closed form, and the peaceful and satisfying final bars of it have nothing to do with the opening of the opera itself. Also ought there to have been a moment of rest between the overture and the rising, or, rather, unfolding, of the curtain; but probably it was feared that the audience, as usual, would, on such a chance being given them, break in with ill-timed applause, which then would spoil the Stimmung by putting everybody out of the mood of the situation. Such a proceeding was, however, hardly to be expected from a Bayreuth audience, and after all and anyhow I should have preferred it to the storm howlings during the lovely D major coda of the overture. The polyphonic workmanship which distinguishes the orchestration of "The Flying Dutchman" from the first operas of Wagner, and in itself shows the enormous step forward he took, at one bound, as it were, in just this work, was brought out with utmost carefulness and clearness. Nor were the voices ever for one moment covered up, which it is so hard to avoid in his later works. Withal, the orchestration is perhaps just as rich in color and characteristics as in

SHERWOOD,
Greatest American Pianist.
ESTHER FEÉ,
Violinist.
(Paris—In America Nov. 1.)
BRUNO STEINDEL,
The Noted 'Cellist.
CLARA MURRAY,
Harpist.
LEONE LANGDON KEY,
Organist.
KATHERINE HOFMANN,
Regular Accompanist.

CHARLES R. BAKER,
MANAGER OF
High Class and Distinguished MUSICAL ARTISTS,
Fine Arts Building,
CHICAGO.

ELECTA GIFFORD,
Soprano.
(Late of Royal Opera, Amsterdam.)
MABELLE CRAWFORD,
Contralto.
GLENN HALL,
Tenor.
SYDNEY LLOYD WRIGHTSON,
The English Baritone.
MASTER LLOYD SIMONSON,
The Famous Boy Soprano.

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

MARY WOOD CHASE, PIANO VIRTUOSA.
For Terms, Dates, &c., address HANNAH & HAMLIN, Managers.
Personal address: 3031 Prairie Avenue. 514 Kimball Hall, CHICAGO.

FRANK T. BAIRD,
THE ART OF SINGING.
34 Monroe St., Chicago, Ill.

Mr. & Mrs. BICKNELL YOUNG,
67 Kimball Hall,
CHICAGO, ILL.

EDWARD MEEK,
BARITONE.
Pupils accepted.
924 Fine Arts Building, Chicago.

NINETEENTH YEAR.
1899-1900.
MRS. REGINA WATSON'S SCHOOL
for the
HIGHER ART OF PIANO PLAYING.
297 Indiana Street, Chicago, Ill.

CLARA G. TRIMBLE, SOPRANO.
Address 619 Fine Arts Building, Chicago.

THE SPIERING QUARTET,
708 Fine Arts Building, Michigan Boulevard, CHICAGO.

MAURICE ARONSON PIANIST. Auditorium Building (Tower, 1406.) Chicago
Concerts, Recitals, Musicales, Lectures
For the past four years chief assistant to Leopold Godowsky. Four Competent Assistants. Write for circula

W. C. E. SEEBOECK, PIANIST, Just returned from Europe, where he made very successful appearances.
Studio 727 FINE ARTS BUILDING, CHICAGO, ILL

HELEN BUCKLEY, SOPRANO. Vocal Instruction. ORATORIO CONCERTS RECITALS
5316 MADISON AVENUE, CHICAGO.

Mrs. GEORGE A. COE,
(BARTH and MOSZKOWSKI)
Pianist and Lecturer. 640 University Place, EVANSTON, ILL

"Lohengrin" and "Tannhäuser," while the treatment of the human voice, although it already shows the dramatic tendencies of the author of "Tristan," is still kept back carefully within the limits of what is really singable. If it were not for the occasional falling back into the cadenzas and sometimes the style of old fashioned Italian opera, one would be inclined to consider "The Flying Dutchman" as one of the most original of all of Wagner's works, just as it is certainly one of the most enjoyable as well as interesting ones. Such a love duet as the one between Senta and the Dutchman Wagner has never been surpassed; neither in "Lohengrin," which is too sweet, nor yet in "Tristan," which is too artificial and too erotic; it is no more music, but stammering of two people gone out of their senses. Nor does any other opera or music-drama of Wagner's contain an equally haunting and touching monologue as the one of the "Dutchman" in the first act, by the side of which I can place only the "To be or not to be" soliloquy of Hamlet.

In this monologue Van Rooy also gave his very best, and the delivery from a musical as well as a dramatic viewpoint was one of the great moments of the performance. For the rest he frequently overdid things, and especially the forcing of his voice in the first act caused him to deviate frequently from the pitch. Purity of intonation, however, is and always ought to be the very first of considerations. It was fulfilled satisfactorily by Miss Emmy Destinn, from the Berlin Royal Opera, whose Senta would have been a model musically if her memory had not failed her for a few moments in the final act. Whether or no this was entirely her own fault it is hard to say. Certain it is that at the last moment some new and quite unusual stage arrangements seem to have been decided upon, which probably upset Miss Destinn's composure of mind for a moment. Thus at least her amiable colleague, the tenor Kurt Sommer, from the Berlin Opera, explained it to me and tried to excuse her. Thus when Senta, who at Bayreuth comes out in Norwegian bridal costume for her betrothal celebration, meets her first fiancé, Erik, the latter is wont to retire in despair from the scene. This he did not do at Bayreuth, and the meeting of the two men probably upset Senta's equanimity. There was, however, no bad break, and as Mottl had his orchestra well in hand, disaster, which for a moment seemed imminent, was averted, and with her high A, first given out two bars too early, Miss Destinn got in again at the second and correct attempt. Oh, what a relief it was! No more beautiful pure and sympathetic voice is needed than Miss Destinn's, which in timbre fits admirably the character of the music. Histrionically she gave to the heroine less of that hysterical, almost pathological flavor which so many representatives of the part infuse into it. She was not merely or principally the love struck girl who is in the habit of hypnotizing herself before the picture of the Flying Dutchman; but in a most ideal conception she displays the unselfish devotion, nay, self-consecration, of the loving woman in whose pitying soul the salvation of the doomed man is the noble and poetic causa movens. This attitude also gives her strength in the trying meeting with the jilted Erik, who himself behaved in a far more manly and energetic style than is the habit of the usual operatic tenors, especially the Italian ones whom I saw in the part. Perhaps Burgstaller went a trifle too far in the other direction, for his acting was vehement almost to brutality, and his voice is too robust and also his delivery too little refined for the music allotted to him, and which after all just in this tenor part smacks very much of the style of good old-fashioned Italian opera. Peter Heidkamp, from Cologne, was in every way an excellent Daland. The fatherly as well as the mercenary side of the old salt was plastically portrayed, and vocally he was in no wise inferior to Van Rooy, whom I thought in this direction slightly overrated by most of those to whom I spoke after the performance. A quite notable newcomer was the tenor Petter, from Dresden, who, with a powerful and equally pleasing voice, delivered the boatswain's song. Although Mary is not a part offering so great a chance for the display of all her abilities as an actress and singer as some others in which I have before heard and admired Mme. Schumann-Heink, I must say that she made the most of her opportunities. She was really the party in command in the spinning room, and her authoritative acting, as well as the unimpaired beauty of her sonorous contralto voice, shone to imposing advantage all through this part of the second act.

The applause at the close of the performance was not adequate in enthusiastic heartiness to the merit of what had been offered to an audience which contained hardly as great a percentage of Americans and other foreigners as had heretofore always been the case. Perhaps that was the reason why the applause was not vigorous, nor lasted long enough for giving cause of unfolding once more the view of the final scene, as is customary at Bayreuth in response to prolonged demonstrations of enthusiasm. Your average Germans are a stolid sort of people. It takes them twenty-five years, more or less, to make up their mind to a trip to Bayreuth and to spend 20 marks for a seat for a performance of which afterward they do not feel sure whether it pleased them or not.

It did not cause me any severe pangs of disappointment when I found that for want of a ticket I was forced to renounce witnessing the first of this year's "Parsifal" performances. I have heard the work so often at Bayreuth that in a measure it has ceased to have any great attraction for me. Of course it would have been interesting to be able to note the differences in the conception and general interpretation between Dr. Muck and the late Hermann Levi. Both have very marked and characteristic similarities, not only in their way of conducting, but also in their artistic predilections, and hence I really believe that no better or more naturally fitted and in the matter of temperament, as well as circumspection, repose and æsthetic feeling, so similar successor to Levi could have been found. I had a proof of this in the Berlin Wagner Society's concert performance of excerpts from "Parsifal," conducted by Dr. Muck last winter. One of the first musicians in the Bayreuth band told me that our Berlin court conductor takes everything, except the flower girls' music, even broader and slightly more feierlich than the late lamented Levi was in the habit of doing, so that, for instance, the first act, which, under the latter's baton, inclusive of the Vorspiel, used to consume one hour and thirty-five minutes, now takes one hour and forty-one minutes for performance.

An artist who wants to remain incognito writes to me the following criticism: Generally speaking the first performance of "Parsifal" was excellent, the orchestra brilliant and the chorus famous. The mise-en-scène was superb, and the flower girls' chorus musically of telling effectiveness, while not quite so fascinating were their dresses, which seemed not sufficiently fantastical. Van Dyck, as Parsifal, was in brilliant voice, and kept so from beginning to end. Dramatically he was also in fine form, and the only thing that left aught to be desired was his pronunciation of the German language. Mrs. Wittich—Kundry—made the most of her "impossible" role. Amfortas—Hans Schuetz—sang out of tune sometimes during the second act, but in the third act he reached a high dramatic climax. Best of all the artists, histrionically as well as vocally, was Knuepfer, as Gurnemanz. In the Grail scene of the first act the chorus was not always strictly together with the orchestra, which probably happened because the former could not see the conductor. Everything else, however, in chorus and orchestra, as well as among the soloists, went with flawlessly precise ensemble. After the third act, by request of the enthusiastic audience, the curtain had to be lifted twice upon the final

ESTABLISHED 1867.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, President.

The Largest and Most Complete Institution of Musical Learning in America.

COLLEGE BUILDING, 202 MICHIGAN BLVD.

The finest structure in existence devoted exclusively to a Musical College.

SCHOOL OF ACTING, MUSIC ELOCUTION, ORATORY, LANGUAGES.

BOARD OF MUSICAL DIRECTORS.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, DR. LOUIS FALK,
HANS VON SCHILLER, WILLIAM CASTLE,
BERNARD LISTEMANN, S. E. JACOBSOHN,
RUDOLPH GANZ, CHARLES GAUTHIER.
HERMAN DEVRIES,
HART CONWAY, Director School of Acting.

Catalogue Mailed Free.

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

MISS ESTHER FEE, VIOLINISTE.

(PARIS—IN AMERICA NOVEMBER 1st.)

Exclusive Management CHARLES R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

HARRISON M. WILD CONCERT ORGANIST.

Studio 6, 241 .. Wabash Ave., CHICAGO.

Piano and Organ Instruction.

D. A. CLIPPINGER,
THE ART OF SINGING.
Conductor.
410 Kimball Hall, Chicago, Ill.

EARL R. DRAKE,
VIOLIN VIRTUOSO.
Teacher.
Studio: Kimball Hall, Chicago.

VICTOR GARWOOD,
Kimball Hall, Chicago.

William A. WILLETT, BARITONE.
Address, Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.

ALLEN SPENCER,
PIANIST. Concerts, Recitals.
Address: KIMBALL HALL, CHICAGO.

KARLETON HACKETT,
Teacher of Singing,
Kimball Hall, Chicago.

MARY PECK THOMSON,
SOPRANO,
620 Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

CAROLYN LOUISE WILLARD,
CONCERT PIANIST. Instruction.
Pupil of Ernst Jedliczka, Bloomfield-Zeisler.
For terms and dates address
4164 Lake Avenue, Chicago.

FREDERICK WARREN,
BARITONE,
Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.

MUSICAL KINDERGARTEN FOR THE PIANOFORTE.
BY FANNIE CHURCH PARSONS.
For full information concerning normal instruction or children's class work, address . . .
MRS. PARSONS' NORMAL TRAINING SCHOOL,
Handel Hall, CHICAGO, ILL.

Mrs. THEODORE WORCESTER, Pianist.
(GODOWSKY.)
Concerts, Recitals and Salon Musicales. Recitals from Russian Composers.
ADDRESS: 1402 Auditorium Tower, CHICAGO.

R. CAPOUL CUTTRISS WARDE,
SINGING MASTER.
The teacher of many prominent artists now before the public. Send for list.
STUDIO: No. 911 Cable Building, Cor. Jackson and Wabash, CHICAGO.

MINNIE CRUDUP VESEY, MEZZO CONTRALTO.
CONCERTS, RECITALS, VOCAL TEACHER, COACHING.
Address HANNNH & HAMLIN, 514 Kimball Hall, CHICAGO.

Chicago Auditorium Conservatory
FREDERIC GRANT GLEASON, Director. ROY ARTHUR HUNT, Manager.
FALL TERM OPENS SEPT. 9. Catalogue free.

ROWDON Basso-Cantante,
623 Fine Arts Building,
CHICAGO, ILL.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY,
JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, Director, Kimball Building, 243 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO.
ALL BRANCHES OF MUSIC. DRAMATIC ART. TEACHERS' TRAINING DEPARTMENT.
JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, VICTOR GARWOOD, ALLEN H. SPENCER, GERTRUDE MURDOUGH, GLENN DILLARD GUNN, HOWARD WELLS, Piano; KARLETON HACKETT, NOYES B. MINER, HOLMES COWPER, GLENN HALL, RAGNA LINNE, MABEL GOODWIN, LOUISE BLISH, Singing; WILHELM MIDDELSCHULTE, Organ; JAN VAN OORDT, Violin; ADOLPH WEIDIG, Composition; JAN KALAS, Violoncello, and thirty other superior instructors.
Catalogue mailed free. 243 Wabash Avenue, care of American Conservatory.

Gottschalk Lyric School. Musical and Dramatic.
CATALOGUE MAILED ON APPLICATION.
L. G. GOTTSCHALK, Director. KIMBALL HALL, 243-253 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO.

"tableau vivant," the extra raise being granted against the strictly adhered to Bayreuth traditional rules, because the first time the curtain had been dropped a few moments too early, viz., before the descending dove could be seen by the audience.

I mentioned above that in honor of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the existence of the Bayreuth festival performances the old Markgravian town had been decorated profusely with flags and bunting, creating a gay and festive impression, the reflection of which was also noticeable in the high spirit and life shown by the inhabitants. On the evening before the first performance this was demonstrated also by a torchlight procession through the principal streets of Bayreuth, culminating in a serenade and speeches in front of Villa Walnfried. The burgomaster, Dr. Casselmann, handed to Mrs. Cosima Wagner, surrounded by her family and intimate friends, like Hans Richter, Professor Thoma, Humperdinck and Kniese, an engraved address of thanks of the city, which also created Banker and Commerzienrath Adolf von Gross, who has done much work for the furtherance and maintenance of the Bayreuth ideas, a diploma, nominating him an "honorary citizen." Speeches of thanks were made by Frau and Siegfried Wagner, Herr von Gross and some others. Amusing to me was that the serenade of the Liederkranz, opened up with Mendelssohn's "Festive Song to the Artists." I wonder whether Richard turned over in his quiet resting place behind the villa. Richter seems to be won over to Bayreuth for the remainder of his life, for he announced his intention of buying a house there and devoting all his work and energy which he can spare from Manchester to the furtherance and maintenance of Bayreuth according to Wagner's intentions and the traditions of 1876. Whether they will long continue to exist remains to be seen.

Outwardly a change from his ideal, a place "far from the smoke and industrial smell of a city civilization," is already taking place, for as the town is rapidly growing, industry, of course, is growing up with it, and since my last visit to Bayreuth several new factories have risen up, one, quite a large one at that, to the right and not to the adornment of the Wagner theatre. The fear of the Bayreuth people—I mean those in authority at Bayreuth—does not, however, lie in that direction, but in a certain, not outspoken, but nevertheless existing dread of one or the other opposition undertaking, such as, for instance, the newly built and soon to be opened Prince Regent Theatre at Munich. Hence, also, Cosima Wagner's strong and, despite the parliament conclusion to the contrary, not yet abandoned efforts to get the "Parsifal" monopoly prolonged for Bayreuth by special legislation for another term of twenty years after its natural expiration, on February 13, 1913, viz., thirty years after the death of Richard Wagner.

Among the distinctions conferred by Prince Regent Luitpold of Bavaria upon musicians at Bayreuth, I mention Musikdirector Julius Kniese's professor, and Anton von Rooy's royal chamber singer title. Concertmaster Paul Prill, of Vienna, was nominated chamber virtuoso and Court Concertmaster Oscar Brueckner, of Wiesbaden, received the Ludwig Medal for Art and Science. It is also reported, but has since been denied, that the Prince Regent had nominated Bernard Stavenhagen director of the Academy of the Art of Music at Munich, in place of the retiring former director, the Baron von Perfal.

On my way from Bayreuth back to Berlin I chanced to meet Bruno Oscar Klein, whose highly talented son is making rapid progress on the violin under the tuition of Arno Hilf, at Leipsic.

Yesterday there passed through Berlin some of the world's greatest artists. Paderewski was here, but was called to Vienna by a telegram, probably in connection with the performance of his opera at the Vienna Court Opera House in the early part of the coming season. That "Manru" is destined to a long operatic life and a successful career there can be no doubt. Nikisch told me on the way to Bayreuth that he, who was on a tournée with the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra when the Dresden première took place, saw the sixth repetition of "Manru," which was largely attended. He spoke with great enthusiasm of the "immense beauties" contained in Paderewski's score.

On the same day Moriz Rosenthal happened to pass through Berlin on his way from Ostend to Gastein. So did the eminent violin virtuoso Willy Burmester, who, after a successful season in Finland, intends to lay off and take the waters at Wiesbaden. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wolfsohn also were among the casual visitors, for they were on their way from Bayreuth to Hamburg, where they are about to take the steamer back to New York.

A very pleasant call and long exchange of news and opinions I had from my old friend, Henry T. Finck, and his charming partner for life. As he has not much changed in appearance, so the radical music critic of the Evening Post has stuck to his art ideas. He has not lessened his love for Liszt, nor can he be brought over to the fold of Brahms. Nevertheless, we agreed as well as ever over the superior qualities of genuine Pilsner beer. Mr. and Mrs. Finck have spent part of the summer in Norway, and now proceed to Switzerland, where they will travel for the remainder of a well earned vacation.

Besides these, Mrs. and Miss Stencel, of San Francisco; Ossip Gabrilowitsch, of St. Petersburg; Leopold Godowsky and Mrs. Norma Knuepfel, from New York, were among the callers at the Berlin headquarters of THE MUSICAL COURIER.

At Leipsic I learned that Jadassohn had lost the savings of sixty years of a laborious work and hard striving in the bank failure that recently took place in that town.

I never knew how many friends, not to mention the enemies, which Huneker attributed to me, I had in the world, until this jubilee number of THE MUSICAL COURIER had appeared. As it is impossible for me to thank all those personally who were kind enough to send me their congratulations to the twenty-fifth anniversary of my activity as a critic, I do so none the less heartily in print. O. F.

THE BLIND VIOLINIST.

THE advent of a new violinist always excites interest in the world of music. Ever since Manager R. E. Johnston announced in THE MUSICAL COURIER, a few weeks ago, that he had engaged William Worth Bailey, a blind violinist, for a tour through the United States next fall widespread curiosity has been betrayed by the public.

The name of this novus homo, whom Manager Johnston and many capable critics regard as a phenomenon, is William Worth Bailey. Young Bailey was born in Arkansas twenty-two years ago. He comes of excellent stock, his father being a Southern gentleman of the old school, possessing wealth and social standing. Despite the fact that he was born blind, Bailey has acquired a technic which enables him to play with ease the most difficult works for the violin. His repertory holds no less than seventy-five compositions in a variety of forms. He begins with Corelli and ends with the most modern works.

The following concertos young Bailey can, it is asserted, play in the most acceptable manner:

Premier Concerto en mi majeur	Vieuxtemps
Deuxième Concerto en fa dièse mineur	Vieuxtemps
Troisième Concerto en la majeur (première partie)	Vieuxtemps
Quatrième Concerto en ré mineur (harpe à l'orchestre)	Vieuxtemps
Cinquième Concerto en la mineur	Vieuxtemps
Deuxième Concerto en ré mineur	Wieniawski
Vingt-deuxième Concerto en la mineur	Viotti
Neuvième Concerto en ré mineur	Spohr
Deuxième Concerto en ré mineur	Bruch
Troisième Concerto en si mineur	Saint-Saëns
Concerto	Mendelssohn
Concerto	Beethoven
Fantaisie Ecossaise (quatre parties, harpe à l'orchestre)	Bruch
Symphonie Espagnole	Lalo

It is related of Mozart that, even when a boy, his aural sense was so acute that he was sorely affected by discordant sounds. Once, when his ears were smitten by the blast of a trumpet, he fainted away. Young Bailey's sense of hearing is wonderfully acute, and he is thrown into paroxyms when he hears violent discords. Not long ago he was attending the rehearsal of an orchestra. Owing to the carelessness of the librarian the music on the musicians' desks was disarranged. In obedience to a movement of the conductor's baton, the violins, violas, 'cellists, contra-basso players, clarinetists, bassoon players, horn blowers, flutists, oboe players, players of the trombones, beater of the drums, cymbals and tympani, all joined in the most inharmonious blast heard since the walls of Jericho fell. Young Bailey incontinently swooned.

Bailey holds that the sine qua non of the violinist is purity of tone; that if one possess every other virtue, and yet is addicted to false intonation, he is a failure. He has committed himself to this opinion: "I believe that a violinist is such by the grace of God. Unless nature has endowed him with a true ear he can never become an acceptable violinist. No amount of study and practice will overcome the difficulty. The unpardonable sin is bad intonation."

This accounts for young Bailey's peculiarly elegant style and good intonation, purity of tone being his most charming characteristic.

MRS. WEBB-GARDNER.

IN these days of promiscuous foreign invasion, when the American musical field, in all its departments, is so largely occupied by singers and players on different instruments, who either belong abroad or have received their training there, it is a positive relief to hail an American born, American taught artist.

Such an one is Mrs. Webb-Gardner, soprano, with whom it is a matter of especial pride that she is a native of Massachusetts, and has received her entire musical education on this side of the water.

That that education is all it should have been is evidenced by the enthusiastic indorsement of both press and public, not only wherever Mrs. Webb-Gardner has sung in America, but in "difficult" and exacting Paris as well, where she appeared with conspicuous success at concerts in the American Pavilion during her visit to the exposition in 1900.

A native of Boston, Mass., where her early childhood was passed, Mrs. Webb-Gardner commenced her vocal training with Whitney of that city. Later, during a few years' residence in Chicago, she studied interpretation with Neidlinger; and for tone production and general finish she took an extended course in New York city under the well-known instructor and composer, Giacomo Minkowsky, who speaks in highest praise of her talent.

Of recent years Mrs. Webb-Gardner has lived in Washington, D. C., where she has appeared as soloist with the Boston Symphony Quartet and at other high class concerts. Socially, as well as musically, she occupies a position of the first rank, and in salon recitals, as well as public functions, her beautiful singing has won unstinted admiration and applause.

Her flexible, musical voice has extended range, and is of delicious quality, and these characteristics, together with her highly artistic interpretation and unusual charm of face and manner, make her much sought for concert and recital work.

With a versatility which enables her to acquit herself with equal distinction in oratorio, in the florid coloratura of the Italian aria, in German lieder, or Old English and French ballads, the coming season promises to yield a large number of engagements for Mrs. Webb-Gardner, especially as Loudon G. Charlton has placed her name upon his roster of artists.

Here are two or three press notices which tell their own story:

Interest in the concert in the Lafayette Square Theatre Thursday centered conspicuously around Mrs. Webb-Gardner. She was extremely handsome in a stunning gown of black net, covered thickly with silvery sequins. The large and fashionable audience greeted her enthusiastically. The Mendelssohn aria, the opening number, she phrased well, and her tones were uniformly good. It was in her subsequent numbers, however, that Mrs. Gardner did herself full justice. The old-fashioned songs, "My Mother Bids Me Bind My Hair," Händel; "From Love's Sickness to Fly" and "Nymphs and Shepherds," Purcell, were delightfully sung. It remained, however, for her last three songs to complete her triumph. They were three of Schubert's choice songs, "Hedge Roses," "Faith in Spring" and "Gretchen am Spinnrad," all done with exquisite finish and beautiful tone throughout. Mrs. Gardner's enunciation was equally good in English and in German. She was last heard here with the Boston Symphony Quartet, and there seems to be now, even more than then, a perfect uniformity of tone as well as perfect ease in singing. Mrs. Gardner has the bearing and manner of an artist, and her facial expression adds no little to the charm of her singing. The last song really showed her voice to best advantage. It was most beautiful.—Capital, Washington, D. C.

It was really a gala night, and from an artistic standpoint a big success. The program presented, among other high class artists, Mrs. Webb-Gardner, who displayed a soprano voice of high culture and beauty, and who sang with grace and expression.—Paris Exposition Edition New York Times.

Mrs. Webb-Gardner, whose beautiful voice charmed Paris last summer, contributed the vocal part of the entertainment. Mrs. Gardner's voice is a dramatic soprano of unusual sweetness and power, and she was heard to splendid advantage in all her numbers, particularly in a set of three songs by Schubert.—Post, Washington, D. C.

BOARD and residence with family of a celebrated Italian vocal teacher in New York; exceptional opportunity for refined lady to study the perfect art of singing and practice Italian. Address "Vocalist," 240 Fifth avenue, New York city.

ST. LOUIS ADVERTISEMENTS.

HOMER MOORE, BARITONE.
The Odeon, St. Louis, Mo.

MRS. STELLA KELLOGG HAINES,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION:
101, 102, 103 Vista Building, Cor. Grand and Franklin, ST. LOUIS, MO.

ALEXANDER HENNEMAN,
VOCAL CULTURE.
Opera. Oratorio.
Coaching.
Henneman Hall, 2723 Olive St., ST. LOUIS.

Boston Music Notes.

HOTEL BELLEVUE,
17 BEACON STREET,
BOSTON, August 10, 1901.

THE New Hampshire Music Teachers' Association met last week at The Weirs, N. H., a lovely spot on the border of Lake Winnipesaukee, in the heart of the White Mountains. This association was originally intended as a means of bringing together the teachers of the State, but the scope of the organization has broadened from year to year, until now soloists from well-known musical centres are the chief attraction of the festival, which serves to bring not only teachers of music but many others from both in and out of the State, who find a week spent at The Weirs at this season of the year delightful from every point of view.

The officers for the past year were: President, Rev. Lorin Webster, Plymouth; secretary, Ernest B. Folsom, Dover; assistant secretary, H. H. Gorrell, Concord; treasurer, Ernest C. Cloutman, Dover.

Board of management—President, Rev. L. Webster; secretary, Ernest B. Folsom; E. T. Baldwin, E. M. Temple, Frank E. Brown.

Program committee—President, Rev. L. Webster; secretary, Ernest B. Folsom; Prof. H. G. Blaisdell, Milo Benedict, Fred H. Osgood, Charles S. Conant, Fred B. Bower.

All the above will serve another year, with the exception of the president, who declined re-election in spite of the inducements that were held out to him. Mr. Hood, of Nashua, a man of much musical and business ability, was elected president.

The chorus this year was smaller than usual, but their work was highly spoken of, both in the "Messiah" and "Fair Ellen." Henri G. Blaisdell, the conductor of the festival, is a hard worker, and the chorus respond to his training quickly and intelligently; in fact, the musical attainments of the chorus in reading difficult music and singing it with small preparation were one of the surprises of the festival last year, when the writer was present.

Mr. Blaisdell has done so much for music in both New Hampshire and Vermont that his name is synonymous with music. During the year he conducts for nearly all the festivals, club concerts and recitals that are given in the two States, his work for many years having brought him in friendly relations with all those interested in the development and advancement of music in his section of New England. His musical library is one of the largest in this country, equal to any demand that may be made upon it.

During the business meeting the question was raised as to whether the next meeting of the association should take place at The Weirs or at Hampton Beach, but the discussion of the subject was postponed to some future time.

The programs given were:

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, JULY 30.
STATE TALENT CONCERT.

Piano solo, Die Lorelei.....Perry
Miss Mary Augusta Rand.
Song, A Christmas Lullaby.....Batchelder
Miss Sadie R. Huse.
Song, Robin Goodfellow.....Scott
Charles Schoolcraft.
Piano solo, Kreisleriana.....Schumann
Miss Myra A. Lamprey.
Serenade, Through the Leaves.....Schubert
Nathan George.
Songs—
When the Birds Go North Again.....Perkins
May Morning.....Denza
Miss Florence E. Davis.
Piano solo, Consolation.....Leschetizky
Miss Lillian Robinson.
Songs—
All For You.....Blumenschein
Valentine's Day.....A. L.
Miss Lucy M. Hoyt.
Song, Infelice, from Ernani.....Verdi
Ralph L. Eaton.
Aria, Farewell, Ye Mountains, from Jeanne d'Arc.....Tschaikowsky
Miss N. Mabel Vella.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON, JULY 31.
ORGAN RECITAL,
At the Free Baptist Church, Lakeport.
James W. Hill,
Assisted by Mrs. Mary Montgomery-Brackett, soprano; Mrs. Sara Dickey-Simpson, contralto; J. Melville Horner, baritone.

Prelude in A minor.....Bach
Vörspiel, Herzlich thut mich Verlangen.....Bach
Toccata in D minor.....Bach
Mr. Hill.
Gloria in Excelsis.....Rev. Lorin Webster
Double Quartet.
Sonata in D minor, op. 42.....Guilmant
Mr. Hill.
Aria, Confutatis, Requiem Mass.....Verdi
Mr. Horner.
Benediction Nuptiale.....Dubois
Fiat Lux.....Dubois
Largo from New World Symphony.....Dvorák
Mr. Hill.
Duet, Recordare, Requiem Mass.....Verdi
Mrs. Brackett, Mrs. Simpson.
Finale in D.....Lemmens
Mr. Hill.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, JULY 31.
SONG RECITAL.
J. Melville Horner, assisted by Miss Harriet W. Willey, Miss June Smith and James W. Hill, pianists.

Sonata in E minor, op. 7.....Grieg
Mr. Hill.
To Music.....Schubert
Aus Meinen grossen Schmerzen.....Franz
Es Hat de Rose sich beklagt.....Franz
Aus alten Marchen winktes hervor.....Schumann
Pilgrim Song.....Tschaikowsky
Mr. Horner.
Nocturne in F sharp major.....Karganoff
Les Etincelles.....Moszkowski
Miss Willey.
Cycle of Songs, from Tennyson's Maud.....Somervell
I Hate the Dreadful Hollow.
A Voice by the Cedar Tree.
She Came to the Village Church.
O Let the Solid Ground!
Birds in the High Hall Garden.
Go Not, Happy Day.
Come Into the Garden, Maud.
The Fault Was Mine.
Dead, Long Dead.
O that 'Twere Possible.
Mr. Horner.
Three Lyrics for Piano, op. 43.....Grieg
Miss Smith.
Gipsy John.....Clay
At Twilight.....Nevin
Loch Lomond (arranged).....Foote
Border Ballad.....Cowen
Mr. Horner.

THURSDAY FORENOON, AUGUST 1.
LECTURE RECITAL.
Subject, "Verdi and Wagner."
James W. Hill,
Assisted by Mrs. Mary Montgomery-Brackett, Mrs. Sara Dickey-Simpson, Miss June Smith and Miss Harriet W. Willey.

Illustrations, instrumental, from Lohengrin, Walküre, Rigoletto.
Vocal, aria, Elsa's Dream, Lohengrin.....Wagner
Song, Traume, Themes, Tristan and Isolde.....Wagner
Aria, Ah! fors e lui, Traviata.....Verdi
Mrs. Brackett.
Air, Elizabeth's Prayer, Tannhäuser.....Wagner
Aria, Ave Maria, Otello.....Verdi
Aria, from Aida.....Verdi
Mrs. Simpson.
Duet, from Aida.....Verdi
Mrs. Brackett, Mrs. Simpson.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.
CONCERT BY STATE SOLOISTS

Overture, Semiramide.....Rossini
Orchestra.
Aria from Samson, Honor and Arms.....Handel
Charles C. Prescott.
Piano solo, Troisième Ballade, op. 47.....Chopin
Miss Ada M. Aspinwall.
Song, Rizzio's Last Song.....Raff
Charles S. Conant.
Songs—
Spring.....Henschel
Wiegenlied.....Brahms
Standchen.....Strauss
Lete.....Chaminade
Miss Gladys Perkins Fogg.
Piano solo, Andante Spianato et Grande, Polonaise Brillante, op. 22.....Chopin
H. C. Whittemore.
(With orchestral accompaniment.)
Songs—
The Blind Girl's Song (La Cisca), from opera of La Gioconda.....Ponchielli
Under the Rose.....Fisher
The Years at the Spring.....Mrs. Beach
Mrs. Alice Holmes Owen.
Song, Heaven Hath Shed a Tear.....Kucken
Fred B. Bower.
Violin obligato by Mr. Blaisdell.
Piano solo, Prelude, Allemande, Courante and Allegro.....Händel
Milo Benedict.

THURSDAY EVENING.
CONCERT OF MISCELLANEOUS MUSIC.

Anthem, Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem.....Munger
Chorus and Orchestra.
Grand selection from Faust.....Gounod
Orchestra.
Aria, La Mort de Jeanne d'Arc.....Bemberg
Mr. McKinley.
Aria, She Alone Charmeth My Sadness.....Gounod
Mr. Martin.
Concerto in F minor.....Chopin
Mr. Benedict and orchestra.
Aria, Elizabeth's Greeting, from Tannhänser.....Wagner
Mrs. Kileski.
To the Castle, from Melusina.....Hofmann
Chorus.
Aria, Lend Me Your Aid, from Queen of Sheba.....Gounod
Dr. Jackson.
Grand aria, from La Sonnambula.....Bellini
Mrs. Martin.
The Dream.....Saro
The Top.....Gillet
Stringed Orchestra.
Fair Ellen.....Bruch
Mrs. Martin, Mr. Martin, Chorus and Orchestra.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, AUGUST 2.
PIANO RECITAL.
Ernst Perabo.

Prelude, Fugue, Allemande, Courante and Presto, from Piano Suite, No. 3, in D minor.....Händel
Ballade.....Rheinberger
Barcarolle.....Rheinberger
Allegretto.....Rheinberger
Idyl.....Rheinberger
Scherzo, from Sonata, G flat major.....Rheinberger
Serenade.....Verhey
Scherzino.....Verhey
Gavotte-Caprice.....Verhey
Pastorale Impromptu (new, first time).....Verhey
Prayer, from Soirées à St. Petersbourg.....Rubinstein
The Hermit, from Miniatures.....Rubinstein
Study in A flat, without opus.....Chopin
Finale from Etudes Symphoniques.....Schumann
Selections from the comic opera Iolanthe.....Sullivan
Duet, Phyllis and Strephon.....
Transcriptions of Ernst Perabo.
Duet, with chorus.....
Transcriptions of Ernst Perabo.
Concert Fantaisie upon Themes of the Opera.....Perabo

FRIDAY EVENING.
THE ORATORIO OF THE MESSIAH, BY HANDEL.
Mrs. Kileski, Mrs. Ruggles, Dr. Jackson and Mr. Martin.

At the business meeting Mr. Webster stated that the organ recital by James W. Hill was the most perfect musical affair ever given before the association.

All the soloists made successes with their audiences, Mr. Horner's program coming in for a large share of praise. Mrs. Montgomery-Brackett, a pupil of Gertrude

AUGUSTA COTTLOW,
THE DISTINGUISHED YOUNG AMERICAN PIANISTE.
Management: HENRY WOLFSOHN, 131 East 17th St., New York, and
THE HAMLIN CO., Kimball Building, Chicago, Ill.

MRS.
Carl Alves
Has Resumed Vocal Instruction at her Home Studio:
1146 Park Ave. near 91st Street, New York.

LOUIS V. SAAR
PIANO and COMPOSITION.
REPERTOIRE and SONG INTERPRETATION.
Will resume teaching on September 16.
Early application for instruction is suggested.
6 East 83d Street, - - NEW YORK CITY

ARTHUR
BERESFORD,
BASSO-BARITONE.
STEINERT HALL, BOSTON, MASS.

HENRI G. SCOTT,
BASSO.
ORATORIO, CONCERT, RECITALS.
ADDRESS: 14 E. 42d Street, NEW YORK.
2117 N. 20th Street, PHILADELPHIA.

MISS
MONTEFIORE
VOICE.
Private Studio and Address:
THE ORMONDE,
2030 Broadway, corner 70th St., New York.

ETHEL L. ROBINSON,
(LONDON CONCERT DIRECTION)
Telegrams: "Musikchor, London."
122 Beaufort St., S. W., LONDON, ENGLAND.

Franklin Sallsbury, was greatly admired for her superb work, as was also Mrs. Sara Dickey Simpson, contralto.

Mr. Webster's Communion Service in A flat is a beautiful and singable service; it made a great impression, and is worthy the attention of those interested in church music.

Arthur Whiting has just finished "Floriana," a piece for four voices and piano. The words are by Oliver Herford. The work takes about half an hour to sing and will be published about October 1. The quatrains from the "Rubaiyat," recently set to music by Mr. Whiting, are in the form of a cycle for baritone, and take about quarter of an hour to sing. This work is also expected to be published early in October.

For the coming season Mr. Whiting has arranged for the Sunday concerts in Boston and New York in connection with Kneisel, this being the sixth season they have been given. Mr. Whiting will play a number of Brahms recitals in New York, as well as in other large cities during the winter.

Miss Gertrude Walker has given two musicales at the Merryconeag House, South Harpswell, Me., and has also sung at a concert at the Maine Chautauqua, at Fryburg. In a few days Miss Walker will go to the mountains to fill other engagements.

Otto Floersheim.

"A WELL-KNOWN personage in the Berlin circle of musical critics now looks back to the twenty-fifth anniversary of his critical activity. Otto Floersheim, the correspondent and part proprietor of THE MUSICAL COURIER, was born on March 2, 1853, at Aix-la-Chapelle, and was originally intended for a commercial career. Pretty soon he adopted music as the profession of his life in which he became practically engaged in New York. Here his first musical feuilletons appeared in the German Figaro and in the Belletristischen Journal in the year 1876. In 1881 he began to write in the English language, of which he is a perfect master. Twenty-one years ago he, together with Marc A. Blumenberg, founded the professional paper, THE MUSICAL COURIER, which in the course of years has become the widest known and the most influential journal of its class in America, and as the first American musical journal which decidedly took part for Richard Wagner and his works deserves special mention. For years past Floersheim, from his present residence, conducts the German department of this paper, where he is esteemed by his friends and colleagues, who wish with all their hearts to this estimable man and artist, who likewise has appeared with success as a composer, a still longer career of activity."—Berliner Börsen Courier, July 17, 1901.

THE VON KLENNER SCHOOL AT LAKEWOOD.

LAKEWOOD, LAKE CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y., August 8, 1901.

SO popular is Mme. Evans von Klenner's summer school of singing that the session will extend into September. From vocalists desirous of studying with her Madame Von Klenner is constantly receiving applications. Under her direction a concert will be given for the benefit of the Congregational church here on August 15, when attractive instrumental and vocal numbers will be presented. The program is a subject of special interest to the social elements at the palatial hotel and many cottages.

Mme. Adele Lewing is spending her vacation in Block Island and the Adirondacks. She will resume her teaching on September 20.

Musical . . People.

Miss Ida Peterson is the new instructor of music in the public schools at Mechanicsburg, Ohio.

Miss Louise Freeman, of St. John's, Ariz., is studying both vocal and instrumental music at Ogden, Utah.

The music committee of the First Congregational Church of Detroit, has engaged Miss Edith Demuth as the soprano soloist.

Alexander Zenier, of Appleton, Wis., has been offered the position of organist and choirmaster at St. Paul's Cathedral at Fond du Lac.

Miss Ella Dow Cloutman and her pupils gave a musicale on July 31 in the lecture room of the First Congregational Church at Ottumwa, Ia.

Miss Mary Derr, a soprano singer, who has studied in New York and abroad, sang recently at a special service at the Reformed Church in Wichita, Kan.

Miss Meta Goebel, a daughter of Col. August Goebel, of Detroit, Mich., has been engaged as soprano soloist by the Fort Street Presbyterian Church of that city.

Mrs. R. H. Morehouse, a Kansas singer, made a "hit" in the performance of Gilbert and Sullivan's "Patience," recently given at Council Grove, Kan.

Joseph H. Turgon, of St. Liboire, has been engaged as organist and choirmaster of St. Joseph's Church, Salem, Mass. Mr. Turgon succeeds Mrs. A. F. Herbert.

Mrs. Karl Taylor Richards, pianist, gave a recital on August 1 in the lecture room of the Unitarian Church, Leominster, Mass. She was assisted by Miss De Avellar, soprano.

Miss Katherine Potter has returned to her home at Oakland, Cal., after two years' study abroad in London with Mrs. Carmichael Carr and in Dresden with Richard Buchmayer.

Frank Obermann, Sr., of the Vienna Trio, and Master Frank Obermann, boy violinist, gave a violin solo in the Spring Street German Lutheran Church, Kingston, N. Y., on July 28.

Louis Elbel, a young musician, of South Bend, Ind., recently returned to this country after winning laurels abroad as a pianist. Mr. Elbel will go back to Germany in the autumn.

Miss Beatrice Davidson, who has studied in Europe with La Grange and Lilli Lehmann, is soon to make her début in opera. Miss Davidson sang at a concert last month in Saratoga, N. Y.

Samuel Davis, a ten year old blind boy from Elizabeth City, N. C., is astonishing the South with his skill as a pianist. Master Davis is a pupil at the Institute for the Blind at Raleigh.

Miss Leona Clarkson, of Atlanta, Ga., and Miss Dorothy Whitcomb, also of Atlanta, sailed for Europe this week. Both young women expect to study music abroad, one the piano and the other the violin.

The Mendelssohn Quartet, recently organized at Atlanta, Ga., is composed of Miss Emma Gertrude Pollard, soprano; Mrs. Mary O'Brien, contralto; J. W. Marshbank, tenor, and John Mullin, basso.

Frank A. McCarrell gave a piano recital on August 1 at the Railway Chapel, Dennison, Ohio. He was assisted by A. P. Bunker, violinist; I. H. Crossland, tenor, and C. W. Kern, accompanist. The recital was given under the auspices of the Twin City School of Music. Mr. McCarrell played numbers by Schumann, Chopin and Schubert.

Miss Edith Hatcher, pianist, and Miss Martha Snead, vocalist, both residents of Virginia, are attracting attention in Southern cities. Miss Hatcher studied here in New York last season with Richard Burmeister.

Adolf Dahm-Peterson will remove his school of music from Ithaca to Schenectady in the autumn. Mr. Peterson has filled important posts as choirmaster and conductor, and is well known in musical circles in Central New York.

Herbert Sisson, formerly organist of the First Presbyterian Church at Kansas City (Mo.), has been appointed organist and choirmaster of St. Paul's P. E. Church, at East Cleveland, Ohio. Mr. Sisson succeeds Charles E. Clemens.

Miss Beatrice Alice Pickthall, a young English woman who came to this country ten years ago, is about to make her future home in Minneapolis, Minn., where she has already established her reputation as a church and concert soprano.

Thaddeus Rich, of Indianapolis, Ind., has returned to Germany, where he will resume his musical studies in the autumn. Mr. Rich is a violinist of ability. His father, Major Rich, represents an American manufacturing company at Hamburg.

Professor Vibbard, head of one of the departments in the Fine Arts College of Syracuse University, gave an organ recital last month on the new organ in St. Luke's Church, Elmira, N. Y. The choir and several soloists assisted in an excellent program.

Miss Blanche Moore gave a morning musicale at her home at Carthage, Mo., on July 26, at which she was assisted in the program by Miss Verna Brinkley, Miss Tressa Brinkley and the Misses Wright. The musicale was in honor of Miss Helene Stumberg.

Miss Caroline Atwood, of North Easton, Mass., is another young American who has returned this summer from serious study abroad. Miss Atwood studied with professors in Vienna. She is a pianist, and also plays the violin. Her father, Samuel A. Atwood, is a prominent citizen of North Easton.

A musicale and reception was given at the Dayton (Ohio) College of Music last month in honor of Miss Margaret Helen Laughlin. The musical program was contributed by Miss Louise Butz, president of the college; Miss Margaret Helen Laughlin, Clarence Butz, Edward R. Mueller and Lawrence Butz.

Miss Ernestine L. Sterling, who has filled the post of private stenographer to President Ledyard, of the Michigan Central Railroad, is also reported to be a fine singer. She has studied with good teachers and has filled several positions in church choirs. In the autumn she will become the soprano soloist of the Second Avenue Presbyterian Church at Detroit.

DEATH OF A BROOKLYN ORGANIST.—John Kearnan, an old resident of South Brooklyn, in the Borough of Brooklyn, and for many years organist in Catholic churches, died Tuesday, July 30, at the age of sixty-eight years. For sixty years Mr. Kearnan had lived in the house, 15 Butler street, where he passed away. He filled as his last position the place of assistant organist at St. Agnes' Church, Brooklyn. Mr. Kearnan was also a photographer but in recent years devoted his time to music. His wife died many years ago, and he is survived by three children, one son and two daughters, all of whom are married. The funeral was held from St. Agnes' Church Friday, August 2. The remains were interred at Holy Cross Cemetery in Flatbush.

E. PRESSON MILLER,
VOICE CULTURE.
601-602 Carnegie Hall, New York.

Carlos N. Sanchez
OPERATIC TENOR, TEACHER OF SINGING.
Voice Building a Specialty. Repertory: Church, Oratorio and Opera.
Studios: 138 Fifth Ave., New York.
Monday, Wednesday, Thursday and Saturday,
RESIDENCE: 758 WEST END AVENUE,
Corner 97th Street.

JOSEPHINE S. JACOBY,
CONTRALTO.
Address: 104 West 58th Street, NEW YORK

1901 ANNUAL TOUR OF 1902
PAUR SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
EMIL PAUR, Conductor.
Conductor New York Philharmonic.
Formerly Conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra
WISSNER PIANO USED.
Miss ANNA MILLAR, Manager, 540 Fulton St. Brooklyn, N. Y.

EDUARD ZELDENRUST.

AMSTERDAM, July 24, 1901.

IN the last decade so many people have devoted themselves to piano playing that it requires very great talent to be reckoned as a new and important player among the piano players of the present day.

Such a striking talent is without contradiction the young Hollander, Eduard Zeldenrust.

He was born June 5, 1865, in Amsterdam, and showed very early great endowments for music. He received his first instruction in Amsterdam from Robert Collin, and made such enormous progress that as early as his fourteenth year—this was a very special distinction and indicated a very special talent—he was received as a player in the Conservatory of Cologne, and came under the guidance of the celebrated Dr. Ferdinand Von Hiller, whose valuable and important instruction in piano, theory and counterpoint he enjoyed for five whole years. He left with the highest testimonials and followed a very refined artist, James Kwast, to Frankfort-on-the-Main. Later he enjoyed the pianistic and theoretic instruction of Prof. Fredrich Garnsheim in Rotterdam, the present celebrated and popular conductor of the Stern Singing Society in Berlin.

The last part of his artistic studies he obtained in Paris at the great conservatory from the celebrated Antoine François Marmontel, and left the impress of talent and of his very remarkable progress upon that celebrated teacher to such an extent that a free position was offered to him at the above named conservatory. This must be regarded as a special, extraordinary distinction. After such a course of study during many years in many branches, Eduard Zeldenrust became a thoroughly rounded out artist. He went thence to London, Paris, Berlin, Amsterdam. Even Italy learned to know him, and wherever he appeared, whether in the concert hall or "at homes," in every town or place he received formal ovations. His playing was called phenomenal and perfectly spirituelle. Now America will hear him in its concert halls, and, as I hope, likewise in many private circles.

As often as I have listened to the young artist, I have admired his playing and paid to his remarkable talents the high praise which it perfectly deserves. In works of the most difficult character he has enraptured me, or rather all who heard him. Of his Bach playing—to begin with the master of all masters—he is in one word magnificent. The master's chromatic Fantasia and Fugue are played by him alone. He reproduces this very difficult polyphonic composition not only with the necessary perfectly mastered technic, but likewise, from a theoretic standpoint, so clearly and intelligently that there can be no doubt on the point that we have to do with a professional of the first rank, for he succeeds in placing Bach's grand style of composition as a contrapuntist in a most brilliant light, yet in all this it is true that this very complicated composition gains by his clear execution and interesting and poetic side, for Zeldenrust has the rare advantage in that he has at his disposal an enormous force of expression, in such a way, however, that his forte is a real forte, with at the same time the most delicate nuanciring, by his noble piano playing.

Zeldenrust's versatility becomes more and more clear when we hear him play Beethoven. Just imagine when he takes his seat at the piano to play Beethoven's F minor Sonata, op. 57, the well-known Appassionata, how carefully he presses down the keys to allow our ears to receive the interesting theme so full of meaning, which consists only of notes of the F minor triad. The pp. he delivers from the beginning so persuasively and eloquently that one really receives a shock when, in the fifteenth bar, the prescribed forte appears; in one word, we must hear and at the same time feel what can scarcely be expressed in words. How impressive is his conception of the difficult Finale (allegro ma non troppo). What an astounding light Zeldenrust draws from it when he, as it were, flings with herculean force upon the attention audience the presto movement of the Finale.

One might imagine that Beethoven's spirit had taken up its abode in him. Equally grand enjoyment does Zeldenrust give us when he performs Beethoven's op. 53, the well-known Waldstein Sonata. How noble and sublime Beethoven's creations are. Both of these come from the year 1804—that is, about a century old. Yet Zeldenrust can give to these ever fresh compositions such charm, grace and attractiveness, and that to such an extent, that one might believe that the incomparable Beethoven was living in our midst and had just written the word Fine to the last page of his op. 53 and 57, which possess at the same time sublimity and profundity. But Zeldenrust is at home not only with the mighty giant Beethoven, but Chopin's piano literature is likewise perfectly known to him. What a rare, noble enjoyment it is to follow the broad flight of his conception when it breathes life into Chopin's notes, whether it be his Fantasie in F minor or the wonderful Ballade in F major or Chopin's Etudes, masterpieces of the first rank, which allow us to hear and at the same time to understand the powerfully tender feelings of the Polish darling, who, true to his fatherland, remained a Pole, though living in Paris, inimitable in his style of thinking and writing, who translated everything and more than everything into genuine poetry. All this the Hollander, Edward Zeldenrust, gives us, to whom certainly the Americans with their experience, enthusiasm and musical art will give willingly deserved laurels and more.

JACQUES HARTOG,

Professor of Musical History at the Conservatory, the Society for Promotion of Musical Art in Amsterdam.

THE CLAVIER SCHOOL.

THE series of students' piano recitals at the Clavier School, 11 West Twenty-second street, this summer, is an especially pleasing feature of the session, and not only entertaining, but to the student of methods full of arrestive thought. The beautiful and varied effects produced by the different performers in consequence of well trained minds and fingers, and in some cases the strong individuality manifest through such culture, are a fine tribute to the excellent training of the Clavier School.

John R. Raberer was the much applauded young artist of last Monday evening, and well he deserved such recognition. Most of his playing would have done credit to one of many more years of study and experience in public playing. His intellectual and technical grasp of the Rheinberger Fugue secured at once the confidence of his audience. The thread of thought carried so faithfully throughout the sonata, and especially through the allegro, gave it renewed charm. The rich tones of the instrument in the adagio cantabile, so intensely human, one might say, and truly beautiful (as they were also in the MacDowell and Chopin numbers), reminded one that Rubinstein, for such effects, always thought, he said of Rubini's voice and tried to make the piano sound like that: and one could but wonder whether or not in this instance, Mr. Rebarer depended similarly upon his imagination, but anyway it is true that his two years of training in the Clavier School has given this young pianist something more tangible than that as a means for such effects. Noticeable were his shivering chord attack in the "Wandering Iceberg" and his brilliant interpretation of the Weber selection. The evenness of his passage playing, his carefully prepared climaxes, his beautiful tone color and logical dynamics were everywhere conspicuous. With the continuance of his studies, one can but look for him to attain unusually high artistic excellence.

The following is the program:

Fugue	Rheinberger
Sonate	Beethoven
To a Wild Rose	MacDowell
From a Wandering Iceberg	MacDowell
On Scotland's Craggy Shores	MacDowell
Death Nothing Is But Cooling Night	MacDowell
Perpetuum Mobile	Weber
Romance	Schumann
Prelude	Chopin
Berceuse	Chopin
Etude	Chopin
Erlkoenig	Schubert-Liszt

A good sized audience assembled to hear the piano recital given by Miss Grace E. Hodgson, Tuesday afternoon, at the Clavier Piano School. She played the following program:

Gigue	Bach
Sonata	Scarlatti
Mazurka, op. 7	Chopin
Nocturne, op. 32, No. 1	Chopin
Valse, E minor	Chopin
Vogel als Prophet	Schumann
Romance	Rubinstein
Schottentanz	MacDowell
Poéme Erotique	Grieg
Vöglein	Grieg
Novelletten, op. 21	Schumann

One rarely hears such delicacy and beauty of shading from a student. The musical idea was always so clearly portrayed as to show at once the artistic nature and education of Miss Hodgson.

Another great charm was the ease and grace of her execution.

The Chopin numbers are deserving of especial mention. Into these she put a life and feeling that are traits of the born musician.

The audience evidenced a special and increasing interest throughout the program, and she was obliged to respond to two encores.

It was a rare treat to hear this talented pupil of Mr. Virgil.

The pupils and friends of the Clavier Piano School had a social evening in Clavier Hall, Friday, August 9. The evening was very pleasantly passed. There were interspersed several piano numbers by pupils and faculty. Edward Brigham, the basso profundo, contributed several selections, notable among them being Damrosch's setting of "Danny Deever." Light refreshments were served, and the generally pleasant evening was enjoyed by all.

Mrs. Alexander's recital, announced in last week's issue for Monday, August 12, will be changed to Tuesday evening, August 13, in order that the pupils of the school may attend the Kaltenborn concert on Monday evening, as Miss Helen Lawrence, of Chicago, who has been at the school the whole summer season, is to play with the Kaltenborn Orchestra on the evening of Monday, August 12.

BROUNOFF AS CONDUCTOR.—Platon G. Brounoff conducted the concert given by the Amicitia Amateur Band, of New York, at the summer house of the Crescent Athletic Club of Brooklyn, last Thursday. The summer home of the club is beautifully situated in Bay Ridge, overlooking the bay. Following is the program:

March, Invincible Eagle (new)	Sousa
Overture, Si j'étais roi	Adam
Sacred, In the Cathedral (new)	De Chanet
Dolly Gray	Cobb
Grand Fantaisie, Lohengrin	Wagner
Waltz, Adlyn (new)	Hall
Selection, Casino Girl	Englander
A Jolly Round of Songs of the Present Time	Mills
Finale, He Laid Away a Suit of Gray (new)	Jansen

Thousands heard the concert. The grounds surrounding the clubhouse were thronged. Next week the same band and conductor will give a concert at Sea Gate.

ST. NICHOLAS GARDEN, 66th Street, near Columbus Avenue.
KALTENBORN ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS.
Every Evening at 8:15. Admission, 50 cents.
VARIED PROGRAM NIGHTLY. AUTOMATICALLY COOLED. NO DRAFT.

Mr. PLUNKET GREENE, Basso-Cantante,
In America March, April, May, 1902.
All communications regarding Terms and Dates to be addressed to
GEO. MAXWELL, 9 East 17th Street, New York City.

GRACE G. GARDNER,
Concert and Oratorio SOPRANO
Pupil of Blasco, Milan; Schmidt, Berlin; Henschel, London.
Studio: 36 West 25th St., New York.

J. FRED WOLLE, ORGANIST.
Address: THE WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., New York.

BROAD STREET CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC,
GILBERT RAYNOLDS COMBS, Director.
1331 South Broad Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE FREE.

Sara Anderson,
Soprano,
For terms and particulars address
51 East 64th St.,
NEW YORK CITY.

GREZ-SUR-LOING,
SEINE ET MARNE.
August 1, 1901.

THERE is no music in London, and there will be none for nearly three months if we except the promenade concerts which recommence on the 24th of this month. The promenades are a blessing, I suppose, to a very small proportion of the many millions who are compelled to inhabit London at this time of the year; but to those of us who can make our annual escape the absence of any other music is likewise a blessing. Especially is it a good thing for the critics. We were all getting fearfully on each others nerves.

The foyer at Covent Garden has lately been the scene of many bloodless but none the less angry feuds. Here is Brother Baughan, usually calm and sedate, who made the important discovery that all those who liked "Messaline" were "effeminate fools"; Brother Blackburn also, who discovered that poor "J. F. R.," of the Saturday Review, would praise any wretched show so long as it came off on the Continent, but had never a word of approval for anything that took place at Covent Garden. What has happened to the men? I know—it is the result of attending many bad concerts and opera performances while the heat wave enveloped us. The heat has much to answer for. Not only has it killed off many men and women, but I rather fancy it has nearly destroyed at least two critics' reputations. For what is one to think of a critic who, for the purpose of damning an opera—let us for the moment call it "Messaline"—by what might be described as an à priori mode of opera slaughter appeals to his credulous, if minute, public in this way: "Those of us who heard 'The Light of Asia' will find it hard to consider 'Messaline' so noble a work as Mr. De Lara's friends say it is?"—what, I say, is one to think of a critic who takes this line of argument, which is either an ignorant or an ignoble one? For it is many, many years since Lara wrote "The Light of Asia," and between it and "Messaline," his latest achievement, be two other operas, "Amy Robsart,' produced at Covent Garden eight or nine years ago, and "Moina," brought out at Monte Carlo in 1897.

"The Light of Asia" is thin and colorless stuff; "Amy Robsart" is better; in "Moina" there is real grasp and dramatic power; while "Messaline" is what I have described it as being in these columns already. Since the early eighties Lara has steadily developed, and Brother Baughan's argument is as stupid and inept and unskillful as it would be to say: "It is hard to believe 'Tristan and Isolde,' a mighty music drama, coming, as it does, immediately after 'Die Feen.'" Not that I mean to compare Lara with Wagner; but the analogy, allowing for the difference in calibre of the two men, is quite fair. As for "effeminate fools" there is only this to be said, that among those who like "Messaline" there are none known to me who look or are less effeminate than Brother Baughan himself; and I know some who in mind and body are a good deal more masculine.

These private quarrels among the critics have to be mentioned for two reasons. In the first place Brother Baughan's behavior supports my contention that a critic should not ruin his judgment and temper by attending too many concerts in hot weather; in the second place my discussion of the matter may serve to remind the public once again that no critic can escape from his own prepossessions and prejudices any more than he can jump away from his own shadow, and that the public is a fool if it takes its opinions on any work of art from any one newspaper. I wish Baughan would fight on the right side instead of running with the Maitlands and Streahfeilds and other amateur critics. There are too few people fighting on the right side in England; it is too difficult to get the truth told about any new art work, be it good or bad, for us to be able to spare a man of Baughan's capacity. And, I might add, there are too many who lunch and dine at the tables of the professors, and learn there what to say.

Brother Blackburn's remarks simply fill me with amazement. I have damned the Grand Opéra in Paris. I have sometimes damned the Opéra Comique. I have damned Bayreuth with a whole heart; I have uttered bitter things about Hamburg, Frankfort and Brussels. But supposing I had not, would that be any reason for considering Covent Garden good so long as it is not good? There is something bigger than a mere personal difference between Blackburn and myself here. The question is, Is Covent Garden of any use to art at all; is it in the least an artistic institution? If ever it got through an evening with as few mishaps as the Carl Rosa or Manners Company do, then something might be expected of it, and it might be a critic's duty to treat it tenderly and encourage it. But the truth remains that with all its wealth, its splendid band, its long list of the finest singers and conductors in Europe, Covent Garden never quite pulls the thing off, and the mistakes are of the sort that convince one how vain it is to hope for anything wholly or at all artistic from it. Those mistakes I have dealt with again and again, have dealt with until I am tired of repeating them; and all I have to say now is that I believe it would be better for opera in England if the affair could happily smash up. It is in the hands of people who are unsympathetic or antipathetic to art; there is no controlling head or hand in the place; and there is no intention of ever putting a strong and competent man in the place of power. Covent Garden will never be any better; and while doing opera badly it is hindering the development of any scheme by which opera might eventually be done well. If my facts should be doubted I can only say, take the singers, ask the conductors, the band or the choristers. All tell the same tale; only Vernon Blackburn knows better than they do.

If we have no genuine opera in London, at any rate we have a concert season, and every year we have at least something interesting to hear. This season has been an especially bad one for the artists. The aristocracy took advantage of the death of the late queen to give fewer social entertainments than usual, and the few they did give were cut down in respect of pomp and circumstance. The result is that many of the pianists, fiddlers, singers, mandolinists and what not, who give their services at social functions for nothing or next to nothing during the early summer, and then make a little sum by giving concerts in St. James' Hall, have been left. Their services have not been required, and their patrons have failed to see any reason why they should plank down their guineas for concerts which they never dream of attending. Consequently the bottom fell out of the concert season unusually early this year; and I am glad of it. These concerts are a nuisance; they spoil the critics' receptivity for the small number that are really good. Who that has sat out sixty bad concerts in one week is in a state of temper and health to be able to judge fairly whether the sixty-first is good or bad? Personally I could wish every season to be a bad. But then I do not earn my bread by singing at "at homes" and giving concerts to recoup myself. This year the most prominent figures have been Busoni, Ysaye, Paderewski, Bauer, Joachim, Kubelik (I am told), Weingartner and Henry Wood. To what I have said previously about them there is nothing to add.

A few weeks ago the work being done at Downside Abbey by the abbot, the prior, the monks and R. R. Terry director of the choir, was referred to in these columns. On the 20th of last month the abbot gave some of us an opportunity of more accurately gauging the value of that work. There is a school attached to the monastery and July 20 was the breaking up day. In place of the customary concert a recital of the polyphonic church music by English and Italian composers of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries was given in the abbey church. To save trouble in discussing this music I will give the various items of the program:

A Lamentation for five voices.....Tallis
Benedictus, from four-part Mass.....Tallis
Agnus Dei, from six-part Mass.....Christopher Tye
Sanctus and Agnus, from five-part Mass.....Byrd

Elsa Marshall,
. . Soprano.
222 HOSEA AVENUE,
CLIFTON,
CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Madame
CLARA NOVELLO DAVIES
Professor of Voice Production.
Conductor of the Royal Welsh Ladies' Choir.
(Under Royal patronage.)
Madame Davies has a vacancy for two resident lady pupils
For Prospectus and Terms apply to
121 Victoria St., Westminster, LONDON, S. W.

GLENN HALL
TENOR.
Address CHAS. R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building,
or Kimball Hall, Chicago,

The Guilmant Organ School.
(COPYRIGHT.)
PRESIDENT: ALEXANDRE GUILMANT. DIRECTOR: WILLIAM C. CARL.
Reopens October 14.

SCHEDULE OF WORK:

FIRST YEAR.
The Organ—Private lessons, one each week.
Harmony—Class lessons, one each week.
Musical Form—MUSICAL DICTATION and MUSICAL KNOWLEDGE—Class lessons.
Service Playing—CHANTS, HYMN TUNES, ANTHEMS, ETC.—Class lessons.

SECOND YEAR.
The Organ—Private lessons, one each week.
Harmony and Counterpoint—Class lessons, one each week.
Musical Analysis—MUSICAL HISTORY, ORGAN TUNING—Class lessons.
Service Playing—CHANTS, HYMN TUNES, ANTHEMS, ETC.—Class lessons.

STUDENTS' RECITALS OCCUR EACH MONTH.

ADDRESS: THE GUILMANT ORGAN SCHOOL, 34 West 12th St., New York.

Five-part motet, Lacientur Cœli	Byrde
Stabat Mater	Palestrina
Eight-part motet, Surge illuminare	Palestrina
Five-part motet, Hodie Sanctus Benedictus	Peter Philips
Six part anthem, with organ accompaniment, O Thou, the Central Orb	Orlando Gibbons
Quartet, O Sacrum convivium	Ludovico Viadana
Five-part motet, with organ, Salvator Mundi	Blow
Four-part motet, with organ, O vos omnes	Duron
Five-part motet, with organ, Jehova quam multi	Purcell
Four part chorus, Adoremus	Allegri
Chorus, Domine salvum fac	Stadler

This is, indeed, a program for those who love the music of the old world. At present they are few enough that love it, for the sufficient reason that far too few have ever heard it, and the major part of that few have heard it sung wrongly in the manner approved of by the guiding spirits of the Bach Choir. Not merely nine out of every ten musicians one may speak to on the subject, but, I venture to say, ninety-nine out of every 100, will tell you off-hand that Palestrina and Tallis and the rest of the old gang were all well in their way, but that music was then "in its infancy," and the stuff turned out in the old days was stiff, dry and certainly written by rule. The which I term abject nonsense and suggest might well be kept for the text books used in our "great national music schools." It would never be talked at all were not musicians so miserably ignorant of all matters not mentioned in the text books.

I sometimes amuse myself with imagining what some of our college professors would say if one suddenly asked him whether "Macbeth" was written by Milton or Mr. Pinero. Or give him the first line of a Shakespeare or a Milton sonnet and ask him whether Mr. Le Gallienne is not after all superior to all the ancients! I should like to have the entire staff of each of our bigger music schools through my hands to examine as I pleased, and then publish the results. I fancy the Government would interfere, and instead of the professors earning handsome fees by examining students in various subjects we should have the pleasant spectacle of the professors being sent back to school to acquire the rudiments of a general education. The same might be said of some of the critics, who know just as little and talk as much nonsense about music and all the arts as do the professors. Not the meanest journalistic hack who blows his so much a line in cheap Fleet street drinks but would be afraid to call William Watson the superior of Chaucer or to talk about poetry having been at an undeveloped stage in Chaucer's day; no painter, however ignorant, would dare to offer the opinion that sculpture had advanced with giant stride since the time of Michael Angelo. In literature, or the demi-monde of literature, journalism, and in painting the general level of education has risen too high for these things to be permitted. Only in music are they done. Musicians are not only ignorant, but proud of their ignorance, even when the subject of it is music. Although Downside is only a few hours' travel from London, a very small number of musicians turned up for Mr. Terry's recital. I suppose they had lessons to give. Had an analogous thing been done in any other of the arts, the practitioners of that art would have gone by the score to see what they could learn.

There was certainly much to be learned at Downside. No. 1 showed both the powers and the limitations of old Tallis. It revealed him as a smaller master than Byrde, but still a master. No. 2 showed this even more plainly. No. 3, a piece full of pathetic beauty, proved Tye to have been a genuinely creative genius with (as follows night the day) a character of style of his own. Nos. 4 and 5 gave us Byrde as his best: Byrde the equal, or all but the equal, of Palestrina. No. 6 was a little disappointing; but No. 7, for double choir, was magnificent. No. 8 is a quite modern piece in idea, although Philips flourished at the beginning of the seventh century. It has not the glorious sweep and power of Palestrina and Byrde, but is nevertheless a fine bit of music. No. 9 I pass over as quite uninteresting. No. 10 was—well, I can only say that it was all right; and the same may be said of No. 12. No. 11 was a surprise, and an agreeable one; the human note sounds persistently through it, and it is in parts as picturesque and expressive as much written by Purcell. No. 13, a gigantic thing, is of course well known, though not nearly well enough known. A new and faithful edition of it should be made by a competent musician. The only one I know is edited by a Mr.—now, for some reason, Doctor—Cummings, principal of the Guildhall School of Music, which I take to be the worst music school in the world. The last two items are good specimens of the average music given in the Roman Catholic Church to such parts of the service.

But we learned something more than this at Downside, and that was that these old men belonged to fresh, naïve stage of European life and art, the stage before dryness, dullness, formularism and all the rest of the hated crew came in. Bach and Händel, and even Mozart and Beethoven, belonged to the age of rule and formula; but they used the formula to magnificent ends. Still, there is in their stuff nothing like the freedom and freshness—the freshness and freedom of climbing flowers seen on a clear May morning—that we find in Palestrina and Byrde. In these and all oldest men there is nothing like a strict fugue to be found. What we do find are endless melodies, each lovely and expressive, handed about from part to part and twining round each other and producing effects of infinite sweetness. We learned something in addition to that. These early Englishmen—Byrde, Tallis, Tye—did not lay the foundations of an English school of church music. With Purcell they closed one of the most magnificent schools of music the world has known. What is known as the English school is the fruit of an unholy conjugal union between the Handel style and sheer stupidity.

Finally, one word must be said about the performance. It was excellent. Mr. Terry is the one musician known to me who has seen the true and fitting style of interpreting the old musicians; and, backed by the Abbot of Downside and the monks, he has succeeded in teaching his choir to carry out his ideas almost perfectly.

JOHN F. RUNCIMAN.

THE END OF THE LONDON OPERA SEASON.

AN American visitor to London writes:

"The Covent Garden season fizzled out on July 29, the final light up consisting of a series of unusually uninteresting performances. There was lassitude on both sides of the footlights, and even Melba's extraordinary experiments with Puccini's "Bohême" failed to alter the pitch of tedium. But it was a noteworthy performance. Looking for all the world like 'ma tante Aurore,' from the Rue de Provence, Melba did the playful little kitten, skipping about the stage with the ease of a young elephant and singing with a quality of sound which reminded one of a badly negotiated escape of gas. Perhaps a recent accident which kept Nell of Covent Garden confined to her chamber (this is a joke) was partly answerable for the deterioration of a once perfect voice; anyhow, the damage is patent, and, it is to be feared, lasting. When prima donnas of a certain, or rather uncertain, age meet with accidents, it takes them like measles, and there is no knowing what the issue may prove. An accident also befell that very vital and sparkling young lady, Fritzi Scheff, of Vienna, where the schnitzels come from, and its effects seem far reaching.

"The pretty little dear, having sprained one of her eloquent ankles, lost control over her voice, the injury having traveled apparently from the instep to the larynx. Fritzi Scheff is ripe now for vaudeville and for such realms of scenic activity where things can be made to hum. But accidents have been, on the whole very much abroad during the Covent Garden season, the most grievous befalling the distinguished amateurs who deal in opera at Bow street in the shape of a conviction that they should be taken seriously. They are in dead earnest themselves—as far as L. S. D., at least, is concerned—and they expect an attentive universe to take them at their own valuation. There is no denying their readiness of commercial instinct. Lady De Gray sells automobiles and roses on commission, Lord De Gray is advertised wine tester to the Hotel Ritz, in Paris, and Mr. De Higgins makes bricks even with straw. So far so good; but when these amiable folks try to run what should be a great artistic undertaking, according to the canons of their likes and dislikes, then the attentive universe says rudely 'pooh-bah!' For the long and short of Covent Garden engagements is that it matters little whether you have talent or reputation; you have to please Lady De Gray or H. V. Higgins.

"And, then, man or woman, if you play your cards well, you can go on season after season, until you are blue. There is no reason why this state of things should not go on indefinitely, since that unspeakably long suffering and stupidly indiscriminating collectivity known as the British Public lends countenance to it. The sorrows of the sincere opera lover are at an end for this season. May the next, the coronation year, prove less heavy a cross to bear, and may the grace of artistic conscience descend upon the intellects of the Covent Garden Syndicate."

JULIAN PASCAL.—Julian Pascal, the pianist, is passing the summer at his old home in the West Indies. He will return to New York early in the autumn to resume his professional work. During his vacation Mr. Pascal has not been idle. He has given with success a number of piano recitals in Barbados and elsewhere. Touching one of these the Barbados Reporter, of recent date, said:

Pursuant to announcement, Julian Pascal gave his piano recital at the Wilhelmina Hall last night. The hall was filled with a large and appreciative audience, among whom were His Excellency Sir Frederic Hodgson and Lady Hodgson. As was only to be expected, Mr. Pascal fully sustained his reputation as a pianist of the first rank. The audience sat spellbound as his deft fingers manipulated the keyboard, calling forth the grand, soul-stirring melodies of Chopin, Liszt and other great masters, while loud and rapturous applause burst forth at the conclusion of each number. The pièce de résistance was Liszt's concerto, "The Triumph of Hungary," in which the great pianist was accompanied by the Musical Society's orchestra, including several bandsmen of the Leinster Regiment. Mr. Pascal, it is to be hoped, will afford the public another rich musical treat by giving at least one more recital before finally leaving our shores.

NORDICA

Season 1901-1902.

RECITALS ONLY.

SEE LATER ANNOUNCEMENTS.

LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, NEW YORK.

ACCOMPANIST.

F. W. RIESBERG.

INSTRUCTION.

Piano, Organ, Harmony.

With THE MUSICAL COURIER.

Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.

Secretary-Treasurer New York State M. T. A.

Residence-Studio: 954 Eighth Ave., cor. 56th St., NEW YORK.

TELEPHONE: 452 COLUMBUS.

OSCAR SAENGER,

Vocal Instruction,

WILL RESUME TEACHING ON SEPTEMBER 16.

Teacher of Josephine S. Jacoby, Contralto; Elizabeth D. Leonard, Contralto; Madame de Pasquali, Soprano; Sara Anderson, Soprano; Hildegard Hoffmann, Soprano; E. Léon Rains, Basso; Joseph S. Baernstein, Basso; John I. Young, Tenor, and other prominent singers now before the public

STUDIO: 51 East 64th Street, NEW YORK.

Mme. VON KLENNER, Garcia Representative,

HAS OPENED A

Special Summer School at Lake Chautauqua, N. Y.

PARIS EXPOSITION, 1900.

Only Honorable Mention or Distinction of Any Vocal Instructor.

FOR PARTICULARS

Address THE WALDMERE, LAKEWOOD, LAKE CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y.

or 40 STUYVESANT STREET, NEW YORK, Second Avenue and 10th Street.

AFTER OCT. 1, 230 WEST 52d STREET.

VAN YORX Tenor,

6 E. 17 St., NEW YORK.

Under Management of WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., NEW YORK CITY.

2046 Leavenworth Street,
San Francisco, August 5, 1901.

OUR people are slowly coming in from seaside and country resorts, and by September 1 affairs musical will begin to wear something of their old accustomed aspect. Grace Morei Dickman is home again and is already planning her musicales which last year were so popular. Mrs. Norris has not returned, but will open her studio September 1. James Hamilton Howe, whose studio is in the same building, will resume work on the 15th inst. Otto Bendix, of the California Conservatory, is already hard at work, as also are Ferdinand Michaelena and Edward Xavier Rolker. The Beringer Conservatory opened last week, and the San Francisco Conservatory, under the direction of Professor Bonelli, began work on Monday, and will give the opening recital about September 1. H. B. Pasmore has opened his studio after a recent outing with his family, and many are yet to be heard from. The recent hot spell has caused an epidemic of indisposition broadcast in its results, but as the Tivoli has taken the initiative and is fairly launched upon its season of grand opera, it is safe to predict that the rest of our musicians will soon follow suit.

Speaking of the Tivoli, the company this year is giving us a superior cast and the attendance nightly proves the popularity of the house to be on the increase. A very good production of "Rigoletto" was given on Tuesday of last week, alternating during the week with "Aïda," with which the season opened. The familiar faces were given a very flattering welcome, and Russo in his character of the Duke was applauded so repeatedly that he somewhat lost his head and in the "Donna e Mobile," which is always a favorite, he interpolated some cadenzas after his own fashioning, and was in such a state of exaltation over his warm welcome that he gave the third repetition of the solo in a manner so vigorous as to be little short of yelling. Yet Russo can do good work, and when he has calmed down a bit will be as satisfactory as ever. Repetto was all one could desire in the character of Gilda, and Ferrari in the title role of Rigoletto, Politini as Magdalena, Nicolini as Sparafucile, made up a satisfactory list of principals whose work has earned them a lasting reputation among us. The week of August 5 gives us "Il Trovatore," with Palassa, Collamarini, Barbareschi, Castellano and Napoleoni, alternating with "Lucia," for which have been cast Repetto as Lucy, Russo as Edgar, Ashton to be taken by Ferrari and Raymond by Nicolini. Alice, Lucy's companion, will be taken by Sannie Kreuger.

Dr. Stewart's oratorio, "The Nativity," drew a large crowd last Sunday night at Trinity Church. This oratorio, which is very beautiful and has attracted a great deal of attention here, was the means of Dr. Stewart's being called to fill the position of organist in Trinity Church, Boston. The rector, who was here attending the Episcopal convention, heard the oratorio at the first presentation in Trinity Church, San Francisco. He was greatly impressed with Dr. Stewart's work in the choir of Trinity, and said he must have Dr. Stewart to build up the choir of his own church, as there was nobody in Boston who could do the work Dr. Stewart had proved himself capable of. Added to this the chair of organ instructor in the conservatory made an inducement that one would be something more than mortal to refuse. But it is with increasing regret we feel the time approaching when we will lose him "for good," as his place cannot be filled, and by his splendid work among us he has won the lasting admiration and respect of all his contemporaries.

Word comes from far Seattle of a recent recital given in that city by two young musicians who have been studying the piano under Otto Bendix, in this city. Both young ladies are residents of Seattle, and the people turned out in such flattering numbers that it is said there never before had been such an attendance known at a musicale in that town. Miss Hansen and Miss Toklas were assisted by Mr. Bendix, who took orchestral parts upon a second piano. Mr. Bendix is the head of the San Francisco Conservatory of Music, and the two young ladies are among his most promising pupils, having done some creditable public work at the conservatory recitals. As I have heard the numbers presented in this program done by these two clever students, and how well presented they assuredly were, I give the program below:

Sonate, op. 27, No. 1.....Beethoven
Miss Lily Hansen.
Wanderer Fantaisie.....Schubert
Miss Alice B. Toklas.
Mr. Bendix will supply the orchestral parts on a second piano.

Fantaisie, Impromptu.....Chopin
Etude in G flat.....Chopin
Waltz.....Moszkowski
Miss Hansen.
Andante and Variations, for two pianos.....Schumann
Miss Hansen and Miss Toklas.
Etude, op. 25, No. 1.....Chopin
Etude, op. 10, No. 6.....Chopin
Prelude.....Rachmaninoff
Spring Rustle.....Sinding
Miss Toklas.
Concerto in A minor.....Grieg
Miss Hansen.
Mr. Bendix will supply orchestral parts on a second piano.

The Monday night concert by Dr. Stewart at the Mechanics' Pavilion, which, by the way, was through a misprint given last week as the Ladies' Pavilion, drew a larger crowd than the concert of Saturday afternoon. As before, Dr. Stewart introduced Murray M. Harris, the clever builder of the fine instrument upon which the program was rendered. The Grieg numbers and the Fantasia on the "Götterdämmerung" were Dr. Stewart's finest numbers, and were magnificently handled. One felt keenly on this occasion that a sort of musical kindergarten might be started in this town with surprising results, and also the very great need of such an institution, where our good people might go and receive the education necessary to make them not alone appreciate the musical feast served to us in these concerts but educate them also to a point where the rights of their more musical fellows might be understood and respected. A great unsightly mark might be placed on the records against a large proportion of those in attendance at Dr. Stewart's recitals, who had neither brains nor appreciation enough to sit quiet during the reading of the numbers and let others enjoy them at least. Many evidently considered it the occasion for general promenade, and the services of a policeman might not have been out of place. Certainly they would have received the heartfelt gratitude of those of us who wanted to listen, not to the swish of silken petticoats and the squeak of shoe leather, but to the fine program, which is the last public work we shall hear from Dr. Stewart for perhaps years. We are helpless in a matter of this sort, majority generally carries the day, but we can and will enter a vigorous protest whenever it occurs.

Elizabeth Westgate has returned from "Lazycroft," and has taken up her year's work in earnest. One change in her program is the resignation of her position as organist in the First Unitarian Church, Alameda, for a similar position in the Congregational Church in the same town. The change is keenly felt and deeply regretted by the Unitarians, among whom she has done much good work, as both organist and choir master.

"The youngest Juvenile Composer in the United States" is the style and title under which Miss Estelle Baker, a San Francisco girl, aged eighteen, was billed at the Chutes Theatre this week. Her turn consists in writing on a topic given by some one in the audience, a song, words, music, piano part and two violin parts complete, and this she will do in sight of the audience in thirty minutes' time. She is certainly a gifted young woman, and to test her ability I gave her a topic which I considered somewhat difficult and rather unusual, and in twenty minutes by the clock my song was complete, and when rendered in Miss Baker's fresh, pretty soprano proved to be quite an original and

Mme. SCHUMANN-HEINK, Mr. BISPHAM, Sig. CAMPANARI,
And other Members of the MAURICE GRAU OPERA CO.,
Are open for Concerts, Oratorios, Recitals and Musical Festivals during the Season 1901–2.
FOR TERMS AND DATES ADDRESS
ERNEST GOERLITZ, Sole and Exclusive Agent, Metropolitan Opera House, New York City.

Miss ADELE MARGULIES,
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Studios: Nos. 705-6 Carnegie Hall, New York

M. I.
SCHERHEY,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Combined Italian-French-German Method.
CHURCH, CONCERT, ORATORIO, OPERA.
Studio: 780 PARK AVENUE, Cor. 73d St., NEW YORK.
Telephone: Seventy-ninth, 1152.

Mrs. HELEN TRUST
SOPRANO.
Vocal Recitals in English, French, Italian.
33 Grove End Road,
St. John's Wood, London, England.

THIRD AMERICAN TOUR
SEASON 1901-2.
161 Concerts
Last Season.
LEONORA JACKSON
ASSISTED BY Harry J. Fellows,
Tenor.
William Bauer, Pianist.
Direction ERNEST H. JACKSON and A. L. WAKEFIELD.
Address: NEW YORK, 31 Union Square West. CHICAGO, 71 Monroe Street

charming composition. She is a small creature and could easily pass for fourteen, but she is full of ambition and talked quite readily about her plans for a future career. She says she has written 100 songs and she has signed with a company to tour the State, singing her own compositions, after which she has more ambitious plans which she hopes to carry out. It is a wonderfully prolific gift and it is an interesting sight to see her take her subject and entirely, without the aid of piano or any instrument, write it up and whip it into presentable shape, as anyone else would write a letter, the manuscript paper resting on a book in her lap, and her toes reaching for the floor, she is such a diminutive person. The harmonies are good and the melody pleasing in all of her songs that I have heard. It will be a matter of interest to follow her career and watch the unfolding of a talent of so unusual an order.

There is symphony talk in the air again this year which bids fair to materialize into something worth while. I hope to have more to say on this subject ere long.

As an educational preface to the coming Wagner operas Mrs. Henri Fairweather has prepared six lectures, to be delivered at her residence, 2614 Twenty fourth street, during August and September, as follows: "Rheingold," "Walkure," "Siegfried," "Götterdämmerung," "Tristan and Isolde," and "Parsifal."

An invitational recital will be given to-morrow night at the Fairweather residence, in which vocal numbers will be heard by Miss Una Fairweather, Henri Fairweather, and piano numbers by Fred Maurer. The program promises an interesting evening.

MRS. A. WEDMORE JONES.

A GREETING FROM RICHARD BURMEISTER, THE PIANIST, TO THE MUSICAL COURIER.

MME. VON KLENNER VISITS SALAMANCA.

AN able lecture on "The Educational Forces of Music" was delivered by Mme. Evans Von Klenner at Salamanca, N. Y., on August 7. The eminent New York vocal instructor treated her expansive subject in a brilliant and convincing manner, which delighted the numerous and critical audience. Madame Von Klenner illustrated her remarks by giving characteristically original and artistic interpretations of several beautiful songs, including Liszt's "Lorelli"; "Love's Rapture," "Kortheuer; "Les Filles de Cadix," Delibes, and a group of English selections. Her singing made a most favorable impression.

In treating this important theme Madame Von Klenner speaks and sings as one inspired, for the rare advantages of musical education which she has received render her peculiarly conversant with the attendant conditions which prevail on this continent and in the various countries of Europe. Moreover, she now observes in every State in the Union the wonders which have been wrought by her own efforts. Thus it is not surprising to learn that her influence embraces Salamanca, where she is represented by a very successful teacher, Mrs. Minnie Stern. Indeed, those who on this occasion heard the distinguished American exponent of the Viardot-Garcia method of singing were indebted to Mrs. Stern and her pupils for arranging the event.

THE STUDY OF MUSIC.

An Important Branch of a Polite and Liberal Education.

THAT music has become an important department of a polite and liberal education is without controversy, and as far as young men and women are concerned it is one of the most important branches of their studies. Aristotle, the greatest of philosophers, once said, "No man possesses a genius so commanding that he can attain eminence as an orator unless he has music in his soul, which is susceptible to development, and which is the foundation of all great outbursts of oratory."

Recently the industrial editor of the Southern Trade Record has received an unusually large number of inquiries regarding the study of music, and where an educated, ambitious and energetic young man or woman can obtain a thorough musical education. * * *

Regarding musical conservatories, our investigations have been unusually thorough. We have communicated with and have interviewed personally as many as were available of the leading musicians, vocal and instrumental, in the country, and there was a universal consensus of opinion in favor of the National Conservatory of Music in America, located at 128 East Seventeenth street, New York city. It is true there are many other excellent schools and conservatories of music throughout the country, but it would seem that none offer the advantages afforded the ambitious student of music as the National Conservatory of Music.

The institution is presided over by its founder, Mrs. Jeannette M. Thurber, who is ably assisted by a remarkable faculty. The work is carried on in the city of New York, which, after all is said and done, is certainly the greatest musical centre in the United States.

Graduates of the National Conservatory of Music are to be found in every city and musical centre in the country, and certainly are in the foremost rank wherever you find them.

In recommending this college, we wish to state that we have no interest in the college or anyone connected with it. It is not even a subscriber to nor advertiser in this paper.—Southern Trade Record.

HERR KAPELLMEISTER ADOLF GOETTMANN (Berlin, W., Buelowstr, 85A). from whose well-known vocal school during the past year three tenors, one baritone and a coloratura singer were engaged for important German and foreign opera houses, as well as two mezzo sopranos, two altos and one baritone appeared with very good success in concert and in church, will reopen his vocal class on September 16. The experienced voice builder accepts newcomers from September 1, after his return from Marburg, where, upon invitation of the university authorities of that town, he is holding lectures upon the subject of "Education of the Vocal Organ and Speaking Tone Production."

VICTOR HARRIS,
Vocal Training.
The Art of Singing in All Its Branches.
STUDIO: THE ALPINE, 55 West 33d Street, NEW YORK.

RUBY CUTTER,
SOPRANO,
Dramatic and Coloratura.
CONCERT and ORATORIO.
REPERTOIRE.
Under the direction of HENRY WOLFSOHN.
Boston Address: 159 Tremont Street.

HAROLD BAUER,
AMERICAN TOUR, 1902.
Commencing in January with BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
DATES NOW BOOKING.
For all particulars apply to GEO. W. STEWART, 120 Tremont Street, BOSTON, MASS.
General Representative for Europe: ROBERT STRAKOSCH, 56 Rue La Bruyère, PARIS.

RAFAEL JOSEFFY.
Address: Letter Box 38, NORTH TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

CHAUTAUQUA

HOTEL ATHENÆUM,
CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y.,
August 10, 1901.

THE many enthusiasts who, notwithstanding a heavy fall of rain, attended the Sherwood-Marcosson recital in Higgins' Hall last Tuesday afternoon were well repaid by a classic program admirably interpreted. On August 13 the last concert of this series will be given, the numbers consisting of compositions by Schumann, Sarasate, Schubert-Liszt and Mendelssohn-Liszt, with Fantasie on "Don Juan," Mozart, for a final violin and piano "Duo Concertante." The Sherwood-Marcosson recitals have become very important features among Chautauqua's musical events.

Mrs. Sheffield, of Chicago; Miss Carter, of Boston; Mr. Strong, of New York, and Mr. Knowles, of New York, constituting the first quartet which sang here this season, made a very favorable impression, the ensemble being particularly good. These musicians were heard in "In a Persian Garden."

On Wednesday afternoon, August 7, Mrs. Trego, of Chicago; Miss Vesey, of Nashville, Tenn.; Charles Sindlinger, of Chicago, and Gustav Holmquist, of Chicago, concluded their successful vocal engagements at Chautauqua.

The Cecelia Quartet, consisting of four of Madame Von Klenner's promising pupils who are spending the summer at the Chautauqua Assembly, will give a concert at the First Baptist Church, Jamestown, N. Y., on the evening of August 13.

A pupil of William H. Sherwood, Mrs. Arthur Middleton Barnhart, whose playing aroused genuine appreciation here this year, has written several compositions, including a spirited march, "The Archè Club," which has been played with success by the Chicago Marine Band, under the direction of T. P. Brooke.

Among talented young pianists who are studying here with W. H. Sherwood this season may be mentioned Miss Edith Garland, a pupil of Mrs. E. T. Tobey, in Memphis, Tenn.; Miss Bessie Groves, of Selma, Ala.; Miss Florence Huntington, Yonkers, N. Y.; Miss Mary Booth, Rochester, N. Y.; Miss M. Ellen Morgan, Wilkesbarre, Pa.; Miss Elizabeth Stanton, Greenville, Miss., and Miss Annie Kayser, Wapakoneta, Ohio.

During her Chautauqua engagement Miss Minnie C. Vesey, of Nashville, Tenn., introduced to an amphitheatre audience an original boating song, with orchestral accompaniment. The result was an ovation for the Southern mezzo soprano.

Governor Odell has arrived here. He will deliver an address in the amphitheatre this afternoon.

At 7 p. m. Rogers' Band will give a patriotic concert.

This evening Leland Powers, of Lexington, Mass., will present the last of a series of plays, including "Lord Chumley," "The Taming of the Shrew" and "David Garrick." At Chautauqua Mr. Powers is the most popular of visiting dramatic readers. After his appearance tonight in the amphitheatre many literary and artistic people will attend the Chautauqua Press Club's annual reception in Higgins' Hall.

"Religious Conceptions of Shakespeare" was the topic of an able lecture delivered here this season by Prof. R. G. Moulton, who said in part:

"How, then, can we get at the religious conceptions of Shakespeare? Not through the 'Sonnets,' for it is still an open question how far Shakespeare is speaking for himself in the 'Sonnets.' I have my doubts whether Shakespeare, even in his 'Sonnets,' is not a dramatist. In my judgment there is only one way of reaching the religious conceptions of Shakespeare, and that is to look not at what Shakespeare's people say, but to look at what Shakespeare himself does with the people whom he creates. In a word, you will get the religious conceptions of Shakespeare by a study of plot. I always lay down as a principle that the foundation of all dramatic study is a study of plot, if you rightly understand the word plot. Plot is in the world of drama what providence is in the real world."

Dr. William H. Drummond, the Canadian author, gave several readings from his own works during the early part of the assembly's present session.

Across the lake, at Celoron, a vaudeville theatre nightly offers attractions, varied in character. This week the manager is assuring his audiences that next week a vocalist, who is "the leader of Buffalo's 400," will astonish and delight her hearers.

Some of the vocalists who have appeared on Chautauqua's platform this season have been "illuminated fleets." Do you miss the meaning? Listen:

"Illuminated fleets" glided across Chautauqua Lake last night in picturesque array. And thousands of people watched them. The dark waters of the lake reflected, and the hill's beyond—a dull, foreboding background! But then, if the sun had been shining, where would the illuminated fleets have been? No, the sun wasn't shining, and the spectators on shore and on the piazzas and balconies of the Hotel Athenæum were contented. So were the illuminated fleets.

Not that the cases are parallel. They are not, for much of the singing has been excellent this season. It's the contrast that causes the distress. Let's have all sunshine, or else, if must be, just illuminated fleets. M. H.

AMERICAN OPERA IN RHODE ISLAND AND MAINE.—We understand that the American Opera Company has in theatrical parlance "made good" during their recent engagement in Providence, R. I. They made so good, indeed, that they had to extend their time, and we have heard that they have received a call for Portland, Me. It is also rumored that certain Providence people, prominent both musically and financially, are starting a movement to install the company permanently in that town for the winter's opera season.

The success of the company has been due not only to Mr. William G. Stewart but largely to certain of its members who have been pupils of his American School of Opera, of this city. The press has been loud in its praise of Ruth Peebles, Pauline Johnson and Andreas Schneider, and from all appearances it would seem as if we were likely to hear a good deal more of this talented trio in the near future. It is fortunate both for them and for the public that they have their operatic future still before them.

JESSIE SHAY AT GREENWICH.—Miss Jessie Shay played at a musicale on August 2, given at the summer home of Mrs. C. T. Wills, at Belle Haven, Greenwich, Conn. On August 4 Miss Shay gave a recital at the Kent House, Belle Haven. This young pianist will have other summer engagements to fill. Miss Shay will remain at Belle Haven until she returns to New York for the work of the regular musical season.

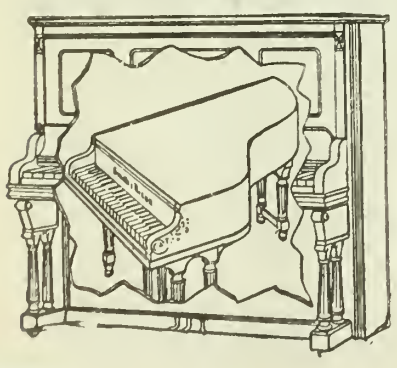
Season 1901-1902

FANNIE BLOOMFIELD ZEISLER

FOR TERMS AND DATES APPLY TO

ALINE B. STORY, 356 La Salle Avenue, CHICAGO.

LAMPERTI SCHOOL OF MUSIC,
TO BE OPENED NOVEMBER 1, 1901.
Quartier Parc Monceau,
Paris.
Temporary Address, 3 rue Gounod.



A Grand Piano
IN AN UPRIGHT CASE.
SMITH & NIXON,
Cincinnati, Ohio,
Manufacture this instrument for
MUSICIANS.

HASLAM,
Professeur de Chant.
POSE, TECHNIQUE, STYLE, RÉPERTOIRE,
OPERA, CONCERT.
☞ Direct Communication with European Managers.
54 rue Faubourg St. Honoré, PARIS.

London Organ School
AND INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.
22 Princes Street, Cavendish Sq., W., London, Eng.
Established 1865. Principal: T. H. Yorke Trotter, M. A., Mus. Doc. Oxon.

At this college Private Lessons are given and classes held in all branches of Music, and in Elocution and Modern Languages.
There is a competent staff of Professors for Piano, Singing, Organ, Violin, Viola, Violoncello, Double Bass, Harp, Guitar and all Wood and Brass Wind Instruments.
A special feature is made of the training of Church and Concert Organists. The school has three 3-manual practice organs and a new grand concert organ, which has been recently completed by the Positive Organ Company on the Casson system.
The full Orchestra meets on Tuesday Evenings. The String Orchestra on Friday Afternoons.
For prospectus and full particulars apply to the office of this paper or to FRANCIS BURGESS, Secretary.

ERICSSON
BUSHNELL.
For Dates, Terms, &c., address
177 Duane Street, NEW YORK.

The American Institute of Applied Music.
(Incorporated 1900.)
EDGAR O. SILVER, President,
212 West 59th Street, New York City.
Departments:
The Metropolitan College of Music.
The Metropolitan Conservatory of Music,
The Synthetic Piano School
The American Institute of Normal Methods.
The Faculty and Examiners: DUDLEY BUCK, A.C.M.; ALBERT ROSS PARSONS, A.C.M.; E. PRESSON MILLER; HARRY ROWE SHELLEY, A.C.M.; PAUL AMBROSE, WILLIAM F. SHERMAN, KATE S. CHITTENDEN, LILLIAN LITTLEHALES and others.
The residence department furnishes a refined and quiet home.
The advantages are unequaled in America.
For information address KATE S. CHITTENDEN, Dean

A CHAT WITH SAINT-SAENS.

PARIS, July 23, 1901.

TO those loving good music there is and always will be a supreme reverence for the old composers like Beethoven, Schumann, Mozart and their fellows, tinged with a profound regret that one lives in an age which can only read of these great masters, and must perforce rely on traditions and tales of their personality for our conception of their characters.

But we have to-day some living composers of the highest rank, who will grant you the glorious privilege of a personal interview, provided they are satisfied of your sincerity, and that your errand is not merely to gratify an idle curiosity. There are as many minds as to the order in which these modern musical giants should be listed as there are individuals. So it seems best to resort to the popular resource of perplexed program makers, who announce their artists alphabetically. Dvorák, D'Indy, Goldmark, Massenet, Puccini, Rimsky-Korsakoff, Saint-Saëns and Richard Strauss are an octet of tone poets strong enough to compel the admiration and respect of millions of music worshipers the world over, and to each one of these millions we allow the personal prerogative of ranking them as he or she elects. Were it possible a vote on this point of priority by musicians throughout the world would be of interest. If compelled to narrow down the above octet to a trio, to the writer's mind it would read Dvorák, Saint-Saëns and Richard Strauss, with again the question of rank left to individual taste.

But our story has to do with the Frenchman of the trio, Camille Saint-Saëns. As it had been our personal and pleasurable experience in fifteen years' association with the Boston Symphony Orchestra to listen to twenty of Saint-Saëns' compositions, which were played a total of forty-six times, it was as an acquaintance rather than as an entire stranger that greetings were exchanged with M. Saint-Saëns.

The eminent musician and composer paid us the personal compliment of calling on us at our hotel. We had been warned before leaving home that we must expect a brusque, impatient manner and a very brief interview. Au contraire, we found a most affable gentleman, somewhere about sixty years of age, short in stature, inclining a bit to embonpoint, and with mustache and beard turned almost entirely gray. And, instead of the prophesied short séance, we had a most interesting chat of nearly an hour. At the very outset M. Saint-Saëns was asked if he had any desire to visit America; and just here it should be stated that while most of the conversation was in French, M. Saint-Saëns lapsed into English quite as often as the writer.

And so in two languages he confessed to much interest in our country, but explained that a chronic throat trouble, which made extreme cold weather fatal to him, would always stand in the way of his crossing the Atlantic. Of course he could come over during the summer, but, as he pertinently suggested, there would be nothing at that season in the way of such music as would interest him. When he was told of the leading orchestras in America in which were included the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, the Pittsburg, Cincinnati and Philadelphia orchestras, he spoke of the Boston Orchestra as being quite famous in Europe, and had a very pleasant word for Theodore Thomas. It was quite amusing to hear M. Saint-Saëns ask how Cincinnati was pronounced, and several repetitions were necessary before he could acquire the vernacular to his satisfaction.

The list of his works which was obtained from his publishers, A. Durand et Fils, 4 Place de la Madeleine, is a most extensive affair, and shows M. Saint-Saëns to be a very prolific composer in almost every possible form of music. For operas there are "Ascanio," "Henry VIII.," "Etienne Marcel" and "Samson et Dalila," although it has to be confessed that scant success has attended all but the last. Then there are two efforts in the direction of opéra comique, three symphonies, several symphonic poems played by every orchestra of note the world over, concertos for piano and violin, with orchestral accompaniment equally familiar, masses, oratorios, songs almost without number, and solos for almost every standard instrument in the field of music. And when the attempt was made to have this indefatigable worker select one of his masterpieces as his particular favorite, he simply smiled and was pleasantly non-committal.

Referring again to the possibility of his coming to America, he pleaded that his throat drove him practically every winter either to the Canary Isles, to Algiers or some other equally salubrious locality. He was assured a royal welcome in every city in America where good music is at once understood, appreciated and encouraged, but to all the arguments and inducements offered his persistent yet regretful reply was that it was too late. As the writer had already sent him a detailed list of his twenty compositions given forty-six times in Boston alone, and already referred to above, and as the other American orchestras have undoubtedly availed themselves generously of his great talent, M. Saint-Saëns knew fairly well the hold he must have on the hearts of concert-goers throughout the country. And when he was told that it was always fairly safe wherever a contralto was engaged to sing with our large orchestras, to assume that one of her selections would be the aria "Mon cœur s'ouvre à ta voix," from the opera "Samson et Dalila," he laughed loudly and long. The offer to mail him the program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra each week during the coming season he welcomed most cordially, and the programs of other leading musical organizations in the United States would undoubtedly prove equally acceptable and would be sure of reception if sent in care of his publishers. He seemed much pleased when assured that the best woodwind players in practically all of our leading orchestras are taken from the ranks of graduates from the famous Paris Conservatoire.

At home M. Saint-Saëns is best known by his concertos for piano and orchestra, the symphonic poems "The Spinning Wheel of Omphale," the "Youth of Hercules" and "The Deluge," and notably by that most bizarre of all compositions the "Danse Macabre," descriptive of the night revel of the skeletons in a graveyard dispelled at the finish by cock crow and the coming of day.

For some time past M. Saint-Saëns has been hard at work on his new opera, "Les Barbares." As the title indicates, the story has to deal with the old Romans, and it was originally intended to give the first performance in the old Roman outdoor amphitheatre in Orange in the South of France. But the composer gave me to understand that he had abandoned this idea, and the première will be given at the Grand Opera House here in Paris in November, with Mesdames Hatto, Heglon and Vaguet and MM. Rousselière, Riddez and Delmos in the cast. The opera will be in three acts, but when, with something of Yankee shrewdness, the attempt was made to discover the plot, with equally characteristic French cunning and a significant smile the master gave me to understand that the only way to get the story was to be in attendance the opening night.

True to the journalistic instinct, a further effort was made to secure the scenario through the publishers, but all the employees frankly confessed that the head of the house alone shared the secret with the composer; so one must wait until next November to learn what "Les Barbares" is all about. And if the work scores the success its publishers confidently predict quite likely we shall hear it in America and given as well if not better than in Paris.

As our interview came to an end, sincere gratitude was expressed to M. Saint-Saëns for his marked courtesy in coming from his comfortable apartments at 61 Faubourg St. Honoré to our somewhat distant hotel, and he left behind him a most ineffaceable impression of one who was at once a musician, master and gentleman.

FRED R. COMEE.

AUGUSTA COTTLOW AT FAR ROCKAWAY.—Augusta Cottlow, the pianist, is passing a pleasant vacation at Far Rockaway, L. I. This young artist has fine prospects ahead for next season. Several important engagements have already been booked for her.

Mr. Loudon G. Charlton, Carnegie Hall, New York,

HAS THE HONOR TO ANNOUNCE

THE CELEBRATED DUTCH PIANIST:

EDUARD ZELDENRUST

First American Tour, 1901-1902, Begins November 15.

"One of the three or four great pianists of the world."—LONDON TIMES.

Already Booked with Leading Orchestras. Recitals in Principal Cities. Entire Tour Now Booking. BALDWIN PIANO USED.

Published by

G. SCHIRMER, NEW YORK.

Collection of Standard Operas.

COMPLETE VOCAL SCORES.

Edition de Luxe, in cloth. $1.00 extra.

Aïda. Verdi. (Italian and English),	$2.00
Amico Fritz. Mascagni. (Italian and English),	2.00
Barber of Seville. Rossini. (Italian and English),	1.50
Cavalleria Rusticana. Mascagni. (Italian and English),	1.50
Carmen. Bizet. (French and English),	2.00
Faust. Gounod. (Italian and English),	1.50
Flying Dutchman. Wagner. (German and English),	1.50
Lohengrin. Wagner. (German and English),	1.50
Lucia di Lammermoor. Donizetti. (Italian and English),	1.00
Mignon. Thomas. (French and English)	2.00
Romeo and Juliet. Gounod. (French and English),	2.00
Samson and Delilah. Saint-Saëns. (English),	2.50
Tannhäuser. Wagner. (German and English),	1.50
La Traviata. Verdi. (Italian and English),	1.00
Il Trovatore. Verdi. (Italian and English),	1.00

☞ Others in preparation.

Send for Catalogue of SCHIRMER'S LIBRARY EDITION of Musical Classics.

JEANNETTE DURNO

CONCERT PIANIST,

3629 Vincennes Avenue, CHICAGO.

Mme. Matja von Niessen-Stone

MEZZO SOPRANO.

VOCAL RECITALS in English, French, German, Italian and Russian.

For terms and dates address ALICE F. JOSEPH, 7a Hanover St., London, W., England.

RARE OLD VIOLINS

Remarkable values in fine old instruments from $50 to $10,000. Largest and finest collection in the world. Send for a copy of our Catalog, just issued, containing Biographies, Fac-simile Labels, Etc. Easy Terms.

LYON & HEALY, 133 Adams Street, CHICAGO

SOUSA AND HIS BAND

Office: Astor Court Building, New York.

Eighteenth Semi-Annual and Fifth Transcontinental Tour.

Sunday, July 7, to Monday, September 2, INCLUSIVE,

MANHATTAN BEACH, NEW YORK CITY.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY
—BY THE—

MUSICAL COURIER COMPANY.

(Incorporated under the laws of the State of New York.)

St. James Building, Broadway and 26th St., New York.

TELEPHONE: 1720 Madison Square.

Cable Address: "Pegujar," New York.

ESTABLISHED JANUARY, 1880.

No. 1116.

MARC A. BLUMENBERG - - EDITOR-IN-CHIEF.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 14, 1901.

LONDON, ENGLAND—
Hotel Cecil, Mr. Montague Chester, General European Representative.

BERLIN, GERMANY (Branch Office)—
Linkstrasse, 17 W., is in charge of Mr. Otto Floersheim.
Single copies for sale at the music store of Ed. Bote & G. Bock, Leipzigerstrasse 39, W.

DRESDEN—
Anna Ingman, Franklinstrasse 20.

LEIPSIC—
Hotel Heutschel, Mr. Alvin Kranich in charge.

PARIS, FRANCE—
Conducted from London Office.
Single copies for sale at Brentano's, 37 Avenue de l'Opera; 37 Rue Marbeuf; Galignani Library, 224 Rue de Rivoli; Shakespeare Library, 75 Avenue des Champs Elysées, Boulevard Klosks.

VIENNA—
Edwin Stewart, correspondent.

ITALY—
5 Via Rondinelli, Florence, Italy, Mr. Joseph Smith in charge.

CHICAGO OFFICE—
Fine Arts Building, Michigan Boulevard, C. A. Daniell in charge.

CANADIAN OFFICE—
In charge of Miss May Hamilton. Address Main Office, New York City.

SAN FRANCISCO—
Mrs. A. Wedmore Jones, 2046 Leavenworth Street.

LOS ANGELES—
F. W. Blanchard, Blanchard Hall.

ST. LOUIS—
Nellie Allen-Hessenbruch, correspondent.

MILWAUKEE—
Controlled by Chicago Office.

INDIANAPOLIS—
Controlled by Chicago Office.

CINCINNATI OFFICE—
J. A. Homan in charge.

BOSTON OFFICE—
17 Beacon Street.

BROOKLYN OFFICE—
Hotel St. George, Clark, corner Henry Street.

BUFFALO OFFICE—
Mrs. Nellie M. Gould, 428 Ashland Avenue.

WASHINGTON OFFICE—
616 Twelfth Street, N. W., Berenice Thompson in charge.

SUBSCRIPTIONS:

Invariably in advance, including postage.
Single copies, Ten Cents.

United States, ...	$5.00
Great Britain, . .	£1 5s.	Austria, . . .	15 fl.
France, . . .	31.25 fr.	Italy, . . .	31.25 fr.
Germany, . . .	25 m.	Russia, . . .	12 r.

SPENCER T. DRIGGS - - BUSINESS MANAGER

Rates for Advertising.

PER INCH ON ADVERTISING PAGES.

Three Months.....	$25.00	Nine months.....	$75.00
Six Months.....	50.00	Twelve Months.....	100.00

ON READING PAGES.

One inch, 3 months.....	$75.00
One inch, 6 months.....	125.00
One inch, 1 year.....	200.00
Special rates for preferred positions.
One page, one insertion.....	$300.00
One-half page, one insertion.....	175.00
One Column.....	100.00

All remittances for subscriptions or advertising must be made by check, draft or money order, payable to THE MUSICAL COURIER Company.

Advertisements for the current week must be handed in by 2 P. M. on Monday.

All changes in advertisements must reach this office by Friday 5 P. M. preceding the issue in which changes are to take effect.

American News Company, New York, General Distributing Agents.
Western News Company, Chicago, Western Distributing Agents.

THE MUSICAL COURIER EXTRA.

Published Every Saturday During the Year.

GREATEST ADVERTISING MEDIUM FOR ALL MUSIC PUBLISHERS AND MANUFACTURERS and IMPORTERS OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS OR PARTS THEREOF. ALSO SPECIALLY DEVOTED TO POPULAR MUSIC and VAUDEVILLE.

For Particulars apply to "Saturday Extra Department."

MILWAUKEE is the next city to have a symphony orchestra of its own. Pledges amounting to $4,500 toward a guarantee fund of $5,000 have already been secured.

A SEEKER after sunshine in musical works will find it in abundance in the compositions of Mendelssohn. Modest pianists who have not tired of the "Songs Without Words" have been impressed with the number written in major keys. In the collection of forty-nine songs in Volume I., eight are in the key of A major, four in the key of E major, five in the key of E flat major, two in A flat major, three in D major, two in G major, two in C major, two in F major and three in B flat major, making a total of thirty-three songs in Volume I. in the major key. The popular favorites in this collection are nearly all in the major key. The "Spring Song," No. 30, in A major; the "Spinning Song," No. 34, in C major; the "Lullaby," No. 36, in E major; the "Hunting Song," No. 3, in A major; "Consolation," No. 9, in E major, and "Confidence," No. 4, in A major.

THE oratorios of Händel and Mendelssohn represent fully the devotional spirit of the English people at certain stages of its history. It is for this reason that they have been dominating forces in festival music for so long a time. The impression has always prevailed that purely religious music is best adapted to festivals, an impression due to the fact that festivals were of religious origin—religious either in the Druidic, Greek, Roman, German or English sense.

CLASSICAL ORATORIOS.

There can be no possible doubt of the ethical beauty and dignity of "The Messiah," or "Judas Maccabæus," or "Israel in Egypt," or of "Elijah," or "St. Paul." The heart is dead indeed to higher feelings of humanity that cannot be stirred by the glorious "We Praise Thee," from "St. Paul," and "He Watching Over Israel," from "Elijah"; and the mind is inactive musically which does not grasp the truth that, quite aside from any consideration of the words, the epic breadth and depth of "The Messiah" and the dramatic dignity of "Judas Maccabæus" make them more appropriate for a cathedral festival than are, for instance, Schumann's "Pilgrimage of the Rose," or Berlioz's "Beatrice and Benedict." There ever has been and ever will be a dividing line between the music desirable for church festivals and that which is desirable for secular festivals. The division is inherent in the nature of things, and cannot be altered so long as religious aspirations form so large a part of the people's mental life. We do not propose to discuss this difference further at the present moment, beyond saying that there is much choral music adapted to religious words which, from its musical levity, its unsteady structure and its unworthy orchestration, is much more unsuited to cathedral festivals than even the decorative choruses of Schumann's works or the burlesque counterpoint in that of Berlioz, and beyond asking if there is any choral music of a high value from any serious musical standpoint which should not be made available for educational purposes or for musical pleasure at any festivals, whether sacred or secular, given in this country. The constant study of different styles of choral music, it is needless to point out, imparts to any chorus greater skill in interpretation. Constant study of the more difficult works imparts finally the power to interpret them.

Glancing along the line of development in choral music we may note the self-evident fact that the greatest masters have been those who have the soundest knowledge of contrapuntal laws and have laid the foundations of their musical work according to the laws of Palestrina and Bach. Händel, who lived at the same period with Bach, walked in a different pathway. He moved along in a comparatively straight and simple line as soon as he found his individual expression in the epic form of oratorio, which he created after many operatic ventures. He shows to those who follow him a clear and open view extending over dark vales and sunny meadows to the for away, immovable hills. His oratorios are more essentially English than German in their nature, and bear the impress of the best English poetry of his time, with which he was thoroughly conversant. He took for the text of his oratorios the emotions of a nation. His choruses, therefore, are infinitely superior to his solos, and his firm and measured rhythms still satisfy the innate desire of the English people for stability and easily understood musical form. It is only when we compare him with Bach that we see his lesser power, his lesser mastery of all complexities of counterpoint, his lesser inspiration in the direction of free flowing and continuous melody. Händel often wrote his choruses like a scholar. Bach always wrote his like a master delighting in the freedom of his work.

Mendelssohn but continued and extended the forms of Bach. He was a vivifying, not a creative influence. He infused the study of Bach with new meaning, and through his own study, which had for its first aim a benefit to others, he was enabled to produce his earlier choral works of antique design, and then, with awakening life and feeling, set forth his more original conceptions of "St. Paul" and "Elijah." In his "Hymn of Praise" we may notice, incidentally, the counterpoint was modeled closely on that of Bach, taking, however, new and individual shape and endowed with fresh and lyric beauty all its own. He seems to have been little influenced by Beethoven, except in so far as he used the sonata form which Beethoven had developed and extended from the sonatas of Haydn and Mozart. Mendelssohn seemed to understand his own limitations. His style was so much more spontaneous and lyric than epic that he did not step forward boldly as Beethoven did to solve the deepest musical problems. Yet he was a necessary guiding light during the Renaissance of music, and the later developments of choral music can scarcely be imagined without his impulse.

By his Titanic grandeur Beethoven, who was nearly forty years old when Mendelssohn was born, has so dwarfed the genius of lesser composers that he seems to stand alone in that period of musical development which culminated with his Choral Symphony. He is the master who marks the fourth climax—that of structure—in the history of choral music. The well-known "Hallelujah," from the "Mount of Olives"; the Missa Solemnis in D major; numerous dramatic choruses; the lovely Choral Fantaisie, are not only the most perfect compositions in structure that had been up to that time brought into existence, but are all informed with the spirit of beauty which justifies their existence. The test of a great work as we regard it to-day is that we cannot imagine it written otherwise, and we find no power left us for analyzing as we are borne upward on the tide of voices in the last movement of the greatest of all symphonies. Beethoven stands on a higher because a later plane of development than Bach. He broke away from conventional forms, asserted the power of special emotions that affected him and took into the conception of his work the dramatic pathos of human life, and he grasped also in its entirety not merely the spirit of a particular nation, but the spirit of humanity as it might be at any time under the sway of certain emotions.

Musically Beethoven, like Bach, felt the tendencies of his own age and the tendencies that would sway a coming age. Musically we are compelled in studying Beethoven to recognize in him the expression of his own time and the consequences that were bound to follow that expression and which were to manifest themselves strongly in the composers of the romantic school. Beethoven was the Dante of music, as Mendelssohn may be called its Tasso.

WE NEED A CHINESE WALL.

WHENEVER, wherever, a nation fails to maintain its national equilibrium, whether it be an equilibrium of politics, an equilibrium of art or literature, or equilibrium of finance, that nation has danger written on its forefront. The Chinese wall, despite the sneers at protection, has been since the beginning of civilization the conservator of national integrity, of national character. The whole tendency of modern culture is to demolish that wall, pierce its thickness with peep holes and ports of ingress and of egress. Cosmopolitanism has been the slogan of latterday thinkers, although men of the Disraeli and Bismarck stamp have sternly opposed its shallowness, its smug amiability.

With a nation's artistic culture, as with a nation's conscience, there are times when letting down the bars to outside influence imperils its very racial quality. We all know what Frederick the Great did for Germany when he put back the hands of the German clock by admitting Voltaire. It took Goethe and his mighty genius to stem the deleterious tide of Gallic influence—an influence fatal to the very genius of the German tongue. Sardou, the French playwright, to-day complains bitterly of Ibsen's and Wagner's power in France, and swears that the northern mists shall shroud French clearness and light.

When the music of a race is sapped by strangers then is the damage greater than that done to painting or to literature. Music is a more sensitive plant and a plant of slower growth. Look at England to-day!

What is English music to-day? Where is there a national school in England? Händel first and Mendelssohn later stamped out entirely the tender bud of Purcell's gifts, and in France we see the same thing when Cherubini assumed the reins of the National Conservatory in Paris. Berlioz was fought out of music into journalism, and who shall say that he gave us his best work? A great, original genius of the orchestra, his music was practically exiled through the intriguing of an Italian, who is almost forgotten to-day, and Berlioz forced to earn a living by his clever pen.

Italy has always overshadowed French music. Always a menace in the eighteenth century, it became in the nineteenth a maleficent force. Gounod went to Rome and returned with his portfolio full of saccharine melodies. Thomas was influenced in similar fashion, and if it had not been for Bizet's individual power and Saint-Säens' rigorous Bach studies both these gifted men would, too, have been swept away. As it was, they fought dearly for recognition, and in Bizet's case it came almost too late.

Germany, being of sturdier stock, fought the intruder, and Cherubini, Spontini, Rossini and the rest gained no abiding foothold in the land of Beethoven. Supposing, however, that Mozart had not outlived his Salieri days—supposing no stern Beethoven would have arisen, no Weber, no Schubert—then Italy would have conquered as she did in France, as she did in England, and as she did for many years in this country.

Poland has its Chopin, Scandinavia its Gade and Grieg, Bohemia its Smetana, its Dvorák, and Russia its Tschaikowsky. Rubinstein, who had great lyric genius, might have represented his country if he had lived there and absorbed its ideals, for it cannot be denied that the great virtuoso had more thematic power than Tschaikowsky. But he preferred to become cosmopolitan and more German than the Germans in his classic predilections.

He does not, therefore, stand as a representative Russian composer, as do Glinka, Tschaikowsky, Borodin and the rest.

America is too young yet to be musically self conscious. We are at the imitative period, though we have a few delicate sprigs of talent just beginning to bourgeon. Shall we send for Saint-Säens or send for Dvorák to stifle, to kill, these talents? Did the residence here of Dvorák hasten apace the cause of American music or the cause of the American composer? Was his so-called American and genuinely Sclavic symphony the forerunner of a joyous burst of native born symphonies?

We think that we may safely negative all these questions. Dvorák's return would mean nothing but mischief. What did he do for our Paines, MacDowells and Chadwicks? What can he do?

America, like a tub, must stand on its own bottom, and do all to foster its racial pride, characteristics and independence. Open the doors forever on the horde of foreign composers, singers and players and one hundred years hence our condition will be infinitely worse and more hopeless than it now is. Let us take warning by England, France and other countries that have lost their musical birthright—not sold, but forcibly filched from them by strangers. Let us build up that Chinese wall, and let them all call us know-nothings and ignoramuses, but we swear to you that it is the only way by which we can foster and conserve American composition. Study all you can from the world's fund of music, but remain American.

In a lesser but no less insidious manner reproductive artists have gained our very musical firesides. Italy swarmed over us for half a century, and to-day is the particular species of black death that threatens many American singers who go to that land to study. If you do not make a firm stand this twentieth century will witness the foreigner—whether German, Polish, Hungarian, French, Italian or Irish—apportioning the musical territory of this land, and then all your fine spun theories about cosmopolitan culture will go sailing into the blue.

Again we proclaim our belief that America is for the Americans!

THE SINGING MANIA.

ANOTHER one of those pathetic cases of mental collapse caused by over-ambition and overwork in seeking a musical career reaches us by way of Salt Lake City. Same story. A young woman with a frail constitution and a slender purse burning the candle at both ends. Four years ago Miss Lilly Snyder Greaves, so goes the report, left Salt Lake City and went to Paris to study vocal music. Fairly successful as a writer for the press, she wrote far into the night to earn the money for tuition and to cover the expenses of living at the French capital. The strain proved too much. A report of Miss Greaves' death in a sanitarium at Liberty, N. Y., was published not long since in the Salt Lake City News.

Young women who hope to become singers cannot trifle with fate. There is a chance for the woman painter or woman pianist, but never for a singer. The purse poor girls who have succeeded in mounting the prima donna ladder were relieved of the necessity of earning their way through loans from relatives or friends. The voice is a sensitive organ, and anyone obliged to work hard or worry cannot sing. There are many women in the community allured by their naturally fine voices and foolish advice of friends who attempted to do what Miss Greaves did, but happily their own good sense asserted itself, and they were saved from a victim's grave. There is a delusion that is common in our time, and that is to fancy that every girl with a sweet voice can become a public singer. The many failures are simply the result of the workings of a natural law. There are other niches for women with sweet voices to fill outside of the footlights. Let the clever wage earning girl with a sweet voice have her voice cultivated for the sake of the accomplishment and the pleasure she can give, but she need not go to Paris to do this. It seems almost childish to state again that the ranks of singers are overcrowded, fearfully so, in this country as well as in Europe.

A young woman with journalistic or literary talent must indeed be misguided if she dreams of resigning such work to enter the fitful musical profession. How one with a grain of philosophy in her thinking could dare to go to Paris without money but what she expects to earn there, and study for the opera or concert is a hard problem for some people to solve. Even should she be blessed with the physique that can endure hardship and self-denial, what is she going to do when she is "finished" with the training? Engagements are not picked up in the street. Looking through rose colored glasses at the few famous singers is one cause of the singing mania among women.

One popular prima donna, when asked why so many women were studying for opera, answered:

"Because they like admiration."

Alas! can it be possible that the army of would-be singers now struggling in the capitals of Europe are inspired by vanity in wanting a career in which hardly one in a thousand can hope to be successful?

THE AMERICAN VOICE.

NO man of real dignity, said Aristotle, could ever be shrill of speech. It is a true saying, and it is one that ought to strike home with peculiar force to the minds of the American people. As a nation Americans are certainly shrill of speech, and they are slowly but surely awakening to a knowledge of the fact. But although an occasional article in newspaper or magazine has of late stimulated thought and promoted social discussion, there has been so far no definite agitation of a subject more important to national comfort and well-being than perhaps appears upon the surface.

To musical people more than to any other class of the community belongs the duty of trying to discover the cause of this serious defect, and of trying to remedy the defect wherever their influence extends.

The cause of our shrill voices has been attributed by many to the climate. But it would seem more seasonable to attribute the cause to the nervous haste and worry which pervade business and social life. We have not yet gained the "power through repose" that comes with settled convictions, with full attainment of our ends, or with the equally satisfactory though pessimistic conviction that the ends were not worth attaining. We are anxiously pursuing fame, the almighty dollar or social position, or all three at once. We are as a whole in a state of restless confusion, scrambling, jostling, pushing in most unmannerly haste to grasp some fancied bauble. All this has an over stimulating effect upon the nerves, and the condition of the nerves has a great deal to do with the voice.

But whatever the real cause of certain defects in speaking may be, there can be no doubt that the voice in general indicates not only the health condition but the personality of the speaker. It is the guide to the general tenor of a life. Like a finger-post, it points the tendency toward good or evil.

We may not go so far as to agree with Grétry, who declared in his "Essays on Music" that a "Good morning" was always sufficient to enable him to appreciate in general the pretensions or simplicity of a man, and who insisted that this "Good day, sir," and "Good morning, my friend"—being an undisguised and natural expression—if put to music with the exact intonations "would show what a power vanity is and how quickly the key changes when its influence ceases to be the ruling one." But we cannot fail to notice the all powerful effect of tone in all relations of life, and to perceive how certain tones express the speaker's individuality. Chomet illustrates the fact that individuality will assert itself through speech by showing that although a man and a woman living constantly together can adopt each other's intonations, these same intonations, creating such surprise in ordinary conversation, will disappear very suddenly if expression is to be given to the passions or any deep emotion. At such times everyone resumes the tone which belongs to him individually. "Nature preserves its originality at all times, under all circumstances."

By musicians this natural tone language is more easily interpreted than by others. Skilled vocal teachers are rarely at fault in detecting the main characteristics of a pupil from his speaking voice. But even those unskilled in interpreting sounds can realize the emotional significance of the tone of voice under the influence of spite, envy, discontent, anger, rage, and can perceive how nearly the sound resembles the hissing of serpents and the snarl and roar of wild beasts. Kircher, who has written a most fascinating folio on the subject, in Latin, carries the analogy of voices between man and beasts to somewhat amusing length. He says that those who have a deep, sonorous voice, like that of a donkey, are indiscreet and quarrelsome; those whose voices are thin and shrill are peevish, ill tempered, passionate, possessing characteristics closely resembling those of a goat. But the good Kircher drew other and less misleading conclusions when he said that a full, abrupt voice denotes a bold, impulsive, strong, enterprising man, and that the voice whose tone is weak, besides being sharp and drawling, gives evidence of a character lacking in energy and firmness.

As the voice assumes animal characteristics under certain adverse influence, so it assumes musical characteristics under the influence of pure thoughts and worthy ambitions, and these musical characteristics may by habit become so fixed that one becomes incapable of uttering an animal sound. This result is often observable among Sisters of Charity, whose voices are in general low, sweet and under admirable control. Their vocal organs, however, it must be noted, are partly trained by the intoning or chanting of the daily prayer or "offices" which are a necessary part of the life in a religious community or convent. But the voices also of many old-fashioned gentlewomen, of nearly all trained nurses, and of many women in all classes of life who do not strive constantly and nervously to make themselves heard above the din and roar of city streets, are also pleasant to the ear, and the voices, too, of many of our great financiers, even in America, and of great generals and leaders of men everywhere, so far as our observation extends, are remarkable for steady, even tones and musical intonation.

In both classes of example the musical quality is mainly due to the habit of self control—the conquering of the ego—which in the former case leads to self abnegation and in the latter toward power over others.

Reasoning in a circle we return to our starting point—that the possession or acquirement of a pleasant musical voice is largely dependent upon the condition of the nerves. This, in turn, is largely dependent upon the manner of living and the amount of self control exercised.

MME. ANITA LLOYD IN THE BERKSHIRES.—Mme. Anita Lloyd will give a concert at Central Hall, Pittsfield, Mass., on August 29, at which the charming singer will be assisted by Miss Giorgiana Smith, violinist; Mr. Francis, baritone, and Mr. Waugh, accompanist. Concerts will also be given at Lenox and Stockbridge during September.

THE PROMISE OF THE HAWTHORN.

Spring sleeps and stirs and trembles with desire
Pure as a babe's that nestles toward the breast.
The world, as yet an all unstricken lyre,
With all its chords alive and all at rest,
Feels not the sun's hand yet, but feels his breath
And yearns for love made perfect. Man and bird,
Thrilled through with hope of life that casts out death,
Wait with a rapturous patience till his word
Speak heaven, and flower by flower and tree by tree
Give back the silent strenuous utterance. Earth,
Alive awhile and joyful as the sea,
Laughs not aloud in joy too deep for mirth,
Presageful of perfection of delight,
Till all the unborn green buds be born in white.

—A. C. SWINBURNE, in Saturday Review.

MR. ROWBOTHAM, of London, once spoke with misplaced feeling of the bursting of the Wagner Bubble. Yes, it has burst, and it continues to burst so beautifully that a grateful world can ill spare the spectacle of its contumacious iridescence, its extravagant beauty, its miracles of scent, shape, hue and its prodigious size. Wagner blew bubbles better than he knew. Gorgeous as was his ego-mania, yet he was not half vain enough. The Wagner Bubble is one of the extraordinary facts in the extraordinary century called the nineteenth. Symphoniste manqué, Richard Wagner finding a mold for his virulent gifts, his tropical talents, fought, despaired, prayed and cursed until he had overflowed the map of music. To-day, like some horrid portent in the sky, some menacing hairy comet, he sprawls over the firmament, obscuring stars of the first magnitude, the glare of his genius threatening the very sun of music—Beethoven. We now know that his humility regarding Beethoven was feigned. Secretly at first he joyed over the notion that he, too, could cover the big canvas; and later almost openly did he smudge the master by his book explaining the Ninth Symphony. It was a case of making a man fit a theory, so poor Beethoven was throttled, and as a mighty square peg was jostled into the little round hole of wrong-headed theory of the arts.

And now, after having compared Wagner to a bubble, a comet, a map disfigurer and several other jumbled images, let me ask if you remember a story by Henry James called "The Next Time"? The hero of the tale is a genius who tries to write down to his public, a very philistine public. Every masterpiece made, he is delighted at its mediocrity, while his friends are in despair because of its perfection and consequent lack of commercial value. Before his death his work actually becomes glorious, the poor fellow all the while rejoicing at its æsthetic deficiencies and therefore probable success in the market. The narrative is delicately ironical and sadly humorous.

Richard Wagner is the reverse of this hero of Mr. James. After the Italian salad of his "Lohengrin" days he started a race with the world, defying it ever to catch up, ever to understand him. "Rheingold" to "Parsifal" is an inclined plane. The air grows rarer and more difficult to breathe as we mount. None but thinkers, and they musicians, may dare the ascent, said Richard, and for a quarter of a century the Wagnerite, the Wagner expounder, crowded the path to the Bayreuth Parnassus, and built on either side formidable hedges of quickset and barbed wire æsthetics, not forgetting to encumber the centre of the road with rocks, fallen trees and quagmires. A few bold spirits like Childe Roland to this Dark Tower came, only to be confronted by the enigmatical figure of Wagner the Metaphysician. Wagner the Musician was nowhere to be seen. Is it odd then that the public, on finding a route for itself, was pleasantly terrified at beholding the real Wagner? Instead of the forbidding fellow depicted by Wagnerites, a monster of intellectual mien and almost blasphemous accomplishments, he turns out to be our old, genial friend, the composer, the typical German musician, whose forefront, plastered as it is by Schopenhauerism, wears the kindly, vague smile of the music maker. Worst of all, Wagner's music is popular. The harder he endeavored to write music for the few the greedier became the million for it. Parts of "Die Walküre" are actually banal. I heard a butcher boy whistle the "Spring Song" the other day, while the "Valkyrie" theme is debased into a night signal for spoony lads and lasses.

The refusal of the world to be imposed upon by the hieratic attitude of Wagner has almost disconcerted Cosima, Queen of Bayreuth. Wagner is no longer a demigod half concealed in the clouds. His love affairs are viewed as dreary, even philistine, while cruel critics say unpleasant things about his deification of masculine continence, as exemplified in "Parsifal." Wagner's vegetarianism, anti-vivisection craze, anarchistic vagaries—he was a limp partner of the great Russian Bakounin—his mad metaphysical nonsense, and his still more insane attempt to synthesize the arts—all these and more are beginning to be recognized as evidences of a badly balanced brain and deterrents rather than aids to the production of healthy art works. I am aware that Nordau talks in this strain, but Nordau is no Newman, and the sanest, most brilliant and capable critic of Wagner to-day is Ernest Newman, of Liverpool, whose "Study of Wagner" I have referred to several times.

Newman is a radical, so is Nordau; but Newman is a critic, Nordau is not. Besides the Englishman has an important advantage over the other—he knows music and he knows Wagner. Nordau knows neither one. In eleven long chapters, crowded with learning and written in pure, transparent English, Newman demolishes the entire Wagner aesthetik. How he does it would take too long to tell here. The Ring is exhaustively harried until all its semblances of logic and proportion vanish. Wagner as poet is laughed out of court, and his librettos called what they are—clumsy comminglings of melodrama and metaphysics. The trail of the man is followed, his growth noted; while the falsity of his views regarding painting, poetry and absolute music is set down unblushingly. "Die Meistersinger" receives lovely tribute, as does "Tristan and Isolde"; but scant courtesy is shown the poems quâ poems. Mr. Newman, too, bursts the Wagner Bubble, yet something remains in this case. Beautiful music, great music, almost divine music; music that maddens, that buffets one's nerves into submission—music that makes very Masochists of its listeners. Powerful seducer, strange hypnotizer, Wagner is not to be denied. When he cannot subdue your imagination he trammels your senses. Wagner the musician, not Wagner the philosopher, this critic exalts above Bach and Beethoven.

It had to come. Despite his abnormal brain, his dual creation of words and music, the real Richard Wagner was bound to emerge naked and triumphant from the nebulous obscurity; the awful verbiage and bondage of his commentators; and among the darkest and most misleading are to be ranked one

Richard Wagner. The sub-title of Mr. Newman's book might be "Being a Lance Couched at the Prose Polemics of R. Wagner." He spares not his hero. Nevertheless after the rout, the critical confusion, the desperate war of the musical worlds, Wagner seems a bigger man. Not in the moral or mental, but in the musical sense. I suspect, too, that despite all this wholesale critical slaughter Wagner went the way appointed for him by his Nornes. If he had avoided the path of fatuity, of grievous sinning against taste and convention, against sense, and even sanity, we should not have had the real Richard Wagner. His music is still blowing bubbles, stupendously sweet bubbles of tone for us, and he is the most popular composer that ever lived. He cannot help it. Read Ernest Newman and wonder at the fillip of fate given to MAXIME GORKI.

(From his latest photograph, hitherto unpublished, and reproduced in the Critic.)

Wagner the thinker. After all said and done, he is voice and nothing more. His music will outlive, has outlived his theoretical doctrines; aye, will outlive his librettos.

Perhaps London may enjoy a repetition of the "Brünnhilde's Deceit" argument in the question raised over a point in "Die Meistersinger." The following appeared in the London Musical Standard:

HANS SACHS' FINESSE.

SIR—Last year in your columns there was much discussion concerning "Brünnhilde's Deceit"; I should be glad to get some enlightenment on Hans Sachs' reasons for allowing Beckmesser to make off with the copy of Walther's song. Sometimes I have had neighbors in Covent Garden hearing "The Mastersingers," who wanted the action explained to them; and this part of the drama I confess I light shy of; I cannot make out how Hans Sachs' conduct is either sensible or straightforward. His assertion that he gives the song, "Dass man von euch nicht übles denkt" is nonsense; besides, the song was not Sachs' to give. Beckmesser takes the song, not for his own use, but as evidence against Sachs; it is only on Sachs' assurances and permission that he proposes to use it. But in fact the whole action here is so tortuous and improbable that it very nearly spoils the music. I am not that the latter, entering in Sachs' absence, would simply steal the song and endeavor to use it himself. This could not be more improbable than the actual course of affairs. But I should be much interested to have your and your readers' opinions.

Yours, &c., R. J. D.

[And so would we all! The point is interesting. But Hans Sachs is not meant to have taken down the music. That is supposed to be speech. Hans Sachs undertakes writing it down from dictation in order to teach Walther the Mastersingers' rules. We are afraid Beckmesser stole the copy of verses, and Hans Sachs allowed him to take them away in order to bring about Beckmesser's funny travesty. —ED.]

Something new in the epitaph line has been dug up in the parish of Bromley-by-Bow. It is printed in Mr. Ashbee's "Survey of London," and is a rather neat way of explaining an early death:

> As nurses strive their babes in bed to lay,
> When they too ly-berally the wantons play,
> Soe to prevente his farther growinge crimes,
> Nature, his nurse, gott him to bed betimes.

Mr. Swinburne quoted these lines a quarter of a century ago in his historically famous prose duel with the late Robert Buchanan—a canny, self-advertising Scotchman of third rate talents.

The present day agitation over whether a woman may or may not say "obey" in the marriage service has met its match in England, says a writer in the Evening Sun. According to the story, the bride objected to the word "obey." "Very well," said the bridegroom, "then I object to the words 'for better or worse'! I'll say 'for better,' but I'll be hanged if I'll tie myself to any woman for 'worse'—especially when she refuses to promise obedience." So strong, however, is the spirit of insubordination in modern woman that the bride in this case declined to yield her preference, and the bridegroom being equally persistent, the match was declared off. This sounds like something from one of Thomas Hardy's novels, but it isn't. A London daily vouches for its truth.

I have read Winston Churchill's "The Crisis," and like it better than his "Richard Carvel." Naturally any comparison with this industrious young man's production and the artistic work of Frank Norris is out of the question. Yet some misguided persons are talking about "epical" in connection with Churchill! As the London Saturday Review says:

"The misleading accident of a name and the rumor of an enormous vogue in the United States afford the only claims of 'The Crisis' to be looked at in this country. The best definition of it may be borowed from Euclid: we have seen no more conspicuous example of length without breadth."

The Academy is more explicit. Here is an extract from its review of the book:

"As an artist of original force and vision he counts not at all. Save that 'Richard Carvel' dealt with the Revolution and 'The Crisis' deals with the Civil War there is no real difference between the two novels. The characters are the same puppets in each; the spirit of every episode is the same. American life and American character are persistently stated in terms of the high class American monthly magazine. One knows those terms. Nothing could be more hackneyed, essentially, than 'The Crisis.' Yet it is a quite readable book—such is Mr. Churchill's virtuosity. It has the advantage of being the very best work of an industrious and highly ingenious man. The historical portraits—of Lincoln, Sherman, Grant—are put in with minute detail; they are perfectly faithful—and lifeless. The whole book is a wonderful imitation of the real thing. In saying that it could not be better and it could not be worse than it is we have no wish to utter a paradox."

And yet what does the author care! He sells—and that settles the situation in America. All other qualities may go begging. The majority rules here—that is to say mediocrity, and the sooner the young writer realizes this and buries his talent in advertisement writing the better will be his butter, the bigger his slice of bread.

The vogue of Maxime Gorki is steadily increasing in Russia. And when the Scribners publish his "Foma Gordeyev" his name will not be an unfamiliar one in America. Edward Garnett, an authority on Russian fiction, has written sympathetically of Gorki in the London Academy, and Christian Brinton devotes several interesting pages to him in a recent number of the Critic. According to Mr. Brinton, the clever young chap is being spoilt by notoriety. His picture is a striking one—perhaps a trifle posed. However, as the novelist is in prison, he may see the error of his ways and once more become the simple delineator of tramps and "powerful uneducated people," as Walt Whitman has it. The second Tolstoy—he is so called by some critics—has contributed an autobiographical sketch to a Russian journal which the Berliner Tageblatt translates. Here it is:

"I was born," he writes, "on March 14, 1868 or 1869, in Nizni-Novgorod, in the family of Vassili Vassilzewitsch Kaschirin, dyer, to his daughter Warwara and Maxim Sawwatjev Pjeschkow, who, according to his sign, was an upholsterer. Thenceforth I have borne honorably and without a stain the title of a member of the guild of artists. I was baptized by the name of Alexei, but in choosing a pseudonym I preferred my father's name, Maxime. My real name is therefore Alexei Maximowitsch Pjeschkow.

"My father died in Astrachan when I was five years old. After the death of my mother my grandfather placed me in a shoe store. I was then nine years old, and my grandfather had taught me to read in the Psalter and Prayer Book. I ran away from my studies and became a draughtsman's apprentice—ran away from him and entered the workshop of a painter of saints' images; then I served on a steamer as a cook's boy; then I became a gardener's assistant. Here I remained till my fifteenth year, spending all my time in zealously reading the classical productions of unknown authors, such as 'Guak; or, Unshakable Fidelity,' 'Andreas Fearnaught,' 'Jaschka the Cutthroat,' &c. While I was serving as cook's boy on the steamboat the cook, Smury, had gained a powerful influence over my development. He persuaded me to read the 'Legends of the Saints,' Eccarthausen, Gogol, Gljeb Uspenski, Dumas Pêre and various books on Freemasonry. Up to that time I had been a sworn enemy of all books and of all printed paper, even including my passport."

"After my fifteenth year I felt a passionate wish to learn, in pursuance of which I betook myself to Kasan, under the impression that knowledge would be imparted free to all who desired it. It turned out, however, that this was not the case; so I went to work in a pretzel bakery, at a salary of 3 rubles a month. Of all the kinds of work I have tried this was the hardest. In Kasan I came into relations with the 'Lost People' and lived long with them. (The German translator says, 'see "Konowalow" and "Lost People."') I worked on the places on the Volga, now as a woodchopper, now as a porter, and during this time read every book I could lay my hands on, which various kind people supplied me with. I got along very badly, and in 1888 even tried to kill myself by shooting a bullet into my body. I lay a long time in the hospital, but finally recovered and went into the apple trade.

"I finally turned my back on inhospitable Kasan, to try my luck in Zarizyn, where I got a job as a railroad attendant. Then I returned to Nizni, where I had to go up for the army. But since they could not make use of fellows with holes in their bodies, I escaped the fate of becoming a soldier, and instead became a Munich beer seller. I soon exchanged this calling for that of a clerk in the office of Lanin, a lawyer of Nizni Novgorod. That was a turning point in my life. Lanin's influence on my development was immeasurably great. I owe this cultivated and great hearted man more than to anyone else. But, however agreeable I found life with Lanin, where my soul could at last find room to breathe, I was again impelled to the life of a tramp. And I have tramped all over Russia. Where have I not been, what have I not seen and suffered, what kind of work have I not done!"

To the idea of becoming a writer Gorki was first brought by a friend, Alexander Mesodjewitsch Kaluschni, to whom also he is under great indebtedness. His first attempt was the story, "Makar Tschudra," which appeared in October, 1892 or 1893, in the Kawkas newspaper. Gorki had then reached Tiflis in his wanderings, where he was at work in a railroad machine shop. He then returned to his home, and began to publish other sketches in the local papers of the Volga cities. A happy chance brought him to Vladimir Korolenko in 1893, who introduced him to real literature. "Korolenko has done very much for me, showed me much, taught me much," says Gorki. The first work of Gorki's that appeared in one of the larger monthly magazines was "Tschelkasch"; it was published by Korolenko in the periodical Russkoje Bogatstwo. This publication decided Gorki's career, and he now is reckoned among the foremost of Russian writers.

Gorki is at present in prison at Nizni-Novgorod as a political suspect. The police, having searched his house, have been unable to obtain evidence against him, however, and his friends are hoping for his speedy release, while all Russia is said to be watching the proceedings in his case with suspense. A letter in the Frankfürter Zeitung says that Gorki is suffering from rheumatism due to the dampness of the prison in which he is confined. His features are pale and he has no desire for work. He takes a daily walk of two hours in the prison courtyard; his wife, Ekaterina Pawlowna, has demanded a medical examination for him on account of the failure of his health. The regard in which he is held by his fellow prisoners, who have made him all manner of little presents such as could be prepared in prison, as well as by the under prison officials, is touching. The police have made special efforts to find the latest sketches by Gorki, "Spring Melodies" and "The Author Who Became Arrogant," both of which are said to deal with the most recent occurrences in Russia. Gorki himself is said to feel deep regret at the fruitlessness of the recent uprisings there. The latest report is that the chief of the Russian police, the Assistant Minister of the Interior, Count Swiatopolk-Mirsky, has arrived at Nizni-Novgorod to investigate his case.

Mr. Brinton quotes at the beginning of his article some words of Goethe's. They run like this:

"Do not be afraid, do not cry out, for life is good. I came from low down, from the cellar of life, where darkness and terror reign; where man is half beast and life is only a fight for bread. It flows slowly there, in dark streams, but even there gleam pearls of courage, of intelligence and of heroism; even there beauty and love exist. Everywhere that man is found good is. In tiny particles and invisible roots—but still it is there. All these roots will not perish; some will grow and flourish and put forth fruits of life. I bought dearly the right to believe this; therefore it is mine, my whole life long. And thus have I won yet another right, the right to demand that you, too, believe as I do, for I am the true voice of that life, the despairing cry of those who have remained below, and who have sent me to herald their pain. They also long to rise to self-respect, to light and freedom."

The late Bishop Mandell Creighton was once asked if he could state the difference between an Oxford man and a Cambridge man. The professor, as he then was, immediately replied: "An Oxford man looks as if the world belonged to him; a Cambridge man as if he didn't care to whom the world belonged."

The other day in London a man went up to what he supposed was an acquaintance and began to talk to him. In the course of conversation he said: "I heard your father make such an excellent speech in the House of Lords." "I am so glad," was the reply; " we lost him about ten years ago, and I am highly gratified to hear that he has gone to so respectable a place."

At a table of German and English students recently one pleasant little German was keen on showing his knowledge of English. Every sentence of his was bound to contain hayve and alretty; a bit of slang was to him as ponderous as the voice of an oracle, and the English th was simply impossible. He commented brokenly on the bewket on the table, and the gaynose in M.'s buttonhole.

But the climax was reached in answer to a question put in good German:

"Are you going to the lecture to-night, Herr B.?"

"Ach, no!" with a wave of his hand; "der ghost is retty, but der meat is feeble."

Then the quiet man straightened out our wrinkled brows by suggesting that possibly he meant "The spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak."

In a recent issue of Longman's Magazine Andrew Lang thus complains of this hurrying age:

"Our condition of gregariousness and futile hurry is the real bane of literature, which needs leisure both in the producer and the consumer. Moreover, the increase in the number of readers has begotten a class of printed trash adapted to the needs of those who can read, but have no converse with great ideas or distinguished expression; no knowledge at all of anything but the present. The trash being handy and omnipresent, we all read it. The educated are like the Japanese suddenly brought acquainted with modernism. Their old leisurely art, their old æsthetic instincts die in presence of Brummagem. I feel sure that a few cargoes of Paris ornaments would have swamped the art of Greece. It is human nature. The Florentines want, it is said, to pull down the Ponte Vecchio, and have a broad new bridge with a tramway. In the same way one buys Dante's 'Inferno' in the Temple edition. There is a prose version in English, the type is good, the book lighter in the hand than a cheap magazine. Nothing could be better. But does one read Dante in a train? Alas! I fear one reads a silly, sensational story, and where is culture? One might be studying the Florentine; one is perusing Captain Kettle, and a very entertaining sixpence worth the captain provides. Is it not so,

'Hypocrite, lecteur, mon semblable, mon frère?'

We are all miserable sinners, intellectually ruined by the fruits of popular education."

GREGORY HAST.—Of Gregory Hast, the eminent English tenor, who will be heard in America for the first time in November and December, under the direction of Loudon G. Charlton, Howard Paul, the well-known English writer, has much that is pleasant to say.

Mr. Paul is stopping in the Isle of Man and writes that he attended a Sunday concert at the Palace at Douglas, and heard a singer new to him, Gregory Hast, who "sings ballads as they have rarely been heard in his time." He says: "Mr. Hast's singing of Moore's 'Oft in the Stilly Night' was perfection of ballad singing, not only by its complete phrasing, charm of expression, entire absence of the detestable vibrato, but every word was delivered clearly and resonantly; few vocalists favor us with such desirable enunciation. The timbre of Hast's voice is also charming."

The National Conservatory of Music of America, 128 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

JEANNETTE M. THURBER, PRESIDENT.

Artistic Faculty, consisting of { RAFAEL JOSEFFY, ADELE MARGULIES, LEOPOLD LICHTENBERG, LEO SCHULZ, HENRY T. FINCK, MAX SPICKER, CHARLES HEINROTH, AND OTHERS.

SUMMER TERM BEGINS IN MAY.

ADMISSION DAILY. . . . . .

EUROPEAN NOTES.

SPEAKING of a recent concert at the watering place Bad-Elster, the Lokal Blatt reports that a phantasie for piano and orchestra, composed by Alvin Kranich, of Leipsic, was given, the composer himself playing the piano part, and afterward an "Albumblatt" and a B flat minor Scherzo. This journal adds: "As a composer Herr Kranich is still in the Sturm und Drang period. The storm roars and rages in violent ff., and one in vain looks for a pause, a moment of quiet. On, on! in boisterous chords, in purling runs, on and away! Occasionally a theme that arouses some interest appears in the piano or orchestral part, but it is not developed, is not worked out. Only the ff. rises, with some tom-tom thumps, to fff., to end without repose or impressiveness. There are people who like such music, and Herr Kranich received applause and floral tributes. All the pieces played make great claims on the performer's endurance and technical ability, and these claims were satisfied in a masterly manner."

On the other hand, the Vogtlandisch Anzeiger of July 26, reporting the same concert, writes: "The Kranich compositions must be declared to be an extremely pleasing appearance in musical literature, for, in the first place, they offer something really new, in the second, in spite of their fantasia shape, they do not abandon entirely musical form, and in the third place, they are pervaded by a wholesome, youthful freshness. The Cadenza, which is within the power of few pianists on account of its enormous difficulties, never, as is too often the case in compositions of this order, falls into the unfortunate condition of being unmusical or meaningless. The 'Albumblatt' and the Scherzo are two very interesting compositions, the former being of charming simplicity, the latter penetrated with power and passion. The pianist deserves all respect for his masterly execution of his very difficult compositions."

One day, writes the Scena Illustrata, Emilio di Marchi, the Italian singer, appeared in "Lohengrin.' Next morning an Italian millionaire called on him and said: "Very pretty, 'Lohengrin'; but too simple, not a bit of coloratura! In fact, very like church music. Could not you introduce something like the Cavatina in 'The Barber'?" "Are you mad?" exclaimed the singer. "No, far from it. What is your salary?" "Five thousand francs a night." "Well, I'll give you 10,000 if ——" "If I profane 'Lohengrin'?" "I'll make it 20,000, 30,000 ——" Next minute the millionaire was in the street.

A brace of week ago I wrote
To the Musik-Direktor Note—
But therewith agreed not he,
He writes Director with a c.
I took the hint. A letter then
I wrote to School-Director Penn.
But he was shocked I learn to-day—
He writes Direktor with a k.
And now my nerves are all astir
I write to the Theatre-Dir.....
Direcktor.....It should do this way—
By no means dusty looks c k.
Methinks I'm from the mess well out—
But then springs up an awful doubt:
The said Direcktor dwells (I whine)
At Köln—or Cöln—or Ckoeln on Rhine!
—German Times.

A foreign exchange says that "Louis Elbel, of South Bend, Ind., created a regular furore at the recent summer concert of the Leipziger Singakademie by his performance of Liszt's E flat major Concerto, so that he had to respond thereto with Rubinstein's A minor Barcarolle. The successes then achieved have already secured him numerous engagements in the Fatherland for the coming season, among others at the fourth Philharmonic concert, at which, if he is lucky, one of our leading conductors may give him the benefit of his power to conduct and control the orchestra."

Marguerite Melville, the talented young American composer, whose quintet was ranked by Otto Floersheim with that of Brahms, is at present at work on a piano concerto.

Mr. and Mrs. Klindworth are staying at the vegetarian colony of Eden, near Oranienburg, where they gave a charming picnic on Friday week as a farewell to their pupils and friends, who were greatly interested in the colony.

Daniel Visanska left for Sassnitz last week for a well-deserved rest. His pupil, Miss White, daughter of the American ambassador, will continue her studies with Mr. Visanska during the summer, as will several of his other pupils, who expect to spend the summer on Rügen.

M. Faure, the finest Mephistopheles the operatic stage has yet produced, says the London Daily News, has just, with M. Carré, the manager, and M. Capoul, the ex-tenor, received the Cross of the Legion of Honor. M. Faure, who is seventy-one, and a man of large fortune, has long since retired from the stage. He was one of the numerous opera singers who sprang from the ranks of the chorus. A choir boy at the Madeleine, he was so wretchedly poor that when his soprano voice broke he borrowed a 'cello, and played at a fivepenny dancing café. When his baritone voice formed, he became a chorister at the Paris Italian Opera at 30 shillings a week. He, however, secured admission to the Conservatoire, carried off the premier prix and within ten years was the greatest baritone in Europe, earning £100 a night. Londoners have seen him as Figaro and as the Count in "Sonnambula," but his greatest parts were Hamlet, Mephistopheles, Iago (in Rossini's opera), Hoël and Don Giovanni. He was one of the very few artists that the late Henry Jarrett, then treasurer of Her Majesty's, took up in the sixties and seventies, the others being Christine Nilsson, Joseph Maas, Zaré Thalberg, and, eventually, Sarah Bernhardt, in whose service Jarrett died. M. Faure collected a valuable gallery of paintings.

Mr. Blumenberg, editor-in-chief of the New York MUSICAL COURIER, met in Italy a few months ago the late Signor Piatti's adopted son. He is a young priest, who invented and built an electrical orchestra, shown at the Como Exhibition. By the way, James Huneker, the brilliant Raconteur of THE MUSICAL COURIER, and the biographer of Chopin, is now passing through London from New York en route for Bayreuth and Munich.—London Daily News.

Amy Murray's Northern Tour.

THE Bridgewater (Nova Scotia) Bulletin of July 30 published a column and a half article signed by "Auld Robin Gray," about Miss Amy Murray, the Scotch recital singer. Miss Murray's tour in the Northern provinces has been most successful. Everywhere she has appeared before most enthusiastic and appreciative audiences. Space will only permit extracts of the extended article published in the Bulletin:

The Gaelic folksongs to the accompaniment of the clarsach, or Celtic harp, were understood by more than one present in both audiences, who had acquaintance with the tongue in which Adam wooed Eve in Eden, and the sweetness of the airs as rendered by Miss Murray swept away any lingering doubts in the minds of others as to Adam being a Scotchman. "Scots, Wha' Hae," and "Annie Laurie" were not on the program, but in response to urgent requests Miss Murray sang these favorites, and gar ilka Scotsman tak' a firm grip o' his seat lest he be carried away with the enthusiasm which she had aroused. This best entertainment that either town has enjoyed for "mony a day" ended with "Caller Herrin'." Miss Murray sang in character, wore the dress and carried the creel of the Newhaven fishwife, and so true to the life was it that her creel been fu', every "fish frae the Forth" would have found a ready purchaser. As it was, all responded to the toast, "Here's tae oors an' oors," and sang "Auld Lang Syne" heartily and in good old fashion.

In Lunenburg a respectable contingent of sons and daughters of those who "cam' frae north o' the Tweed" waited upon Miss Murray after the close, introduced themselves and got a warm shake of the hand. At the request of an elderly gentleman (one born on the sacred soil) we again listened to "Annie Laurie" to the accompaniment of the clarsach. She wad be a verra good nei'bor, this same Miss Murray.

In all Miss Murray has given twenty-five Scottish lecture recitals in the Maritime Provinces. During the month of August she will rest in the Maine woods.

HATTIE SCHOLDER.—Samuel Eppinger, Hattie Scholder's teacher, is in receipt of many congratulatory letters from musicians, who have been charmed by the little girl's playing.

Some of these are given below:

Hattie Scholder is one of the most marvelous piano talents for her age I ever met. I heard her play and am convinced that she will make a sensation and rank as one of the very first of the great artists in a short time.—Emil Paur, Director of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra.

I regard Miss Hattie Scholder as a child of wonderful precocity. Her sense of rhythm, in all the varieties, is keen and accurate. She also has temperament and plays with fire and enthusiasm. Such a combination is rare and warrants the prediction of a very successful artistic career.—William Mason, author, teacher and lecturer.

After hearing Hattie Scholder play such compositions as Bach's Prelude and Fugue in C minor and the great Liszt's Hungarian Fantaisie, I gladly state that I am thoroughly convinced of her unusual talent and much impressed with the excellence of her method of p'aying, which, at this early stage, shows such an amazing degree of perfection. Both teacher and pupil ought to be congratulated.—Dr. Paul Klengel, Director of the German Liederkranz.

It is not uncommon nowadays to hear precocious children play comparatively easy music in a manner to surprise us. At the same time, while in all such cases we find much to admire, we also find more to excuse. But when we hear the great works of the masters rendered as little Hattie Scholder renders them, we have nothing to excuse, but are filled with wonder and admiration at her all-round genius. I wish her and you the great success so richly deserved.—A. K. Virgil, Founder of the Virgil Practice Clavier Company.

Pears'

No other soap in the world is used so much; or so little of it goes so far.

Sold all over the world.

OLIVE MEAD, VIOLINIST.

Appearing during the coming season of 1901-2 with the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA in Boston for the third time. During July and August, please address MISS MEAD personally, West Elm Avenue, Wollaston, Mass.

Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

THE

. ADAMOWSKI TRIO.

MR. T. ADAMOWSKI, Violin.
MISS EDITH THOMPSON, Piano.
MR. JOSEF KELLER, Violoncello.

During the absence for a year in Europe of Mme. Szumska and Mr. Josef Adamowski their places in the Trio will be taken by Miss Thompson and Mr. Keller

Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

ADAMOWSKI QUARTET

Fourteenth Season.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, 1st Violin.
Mr. A. MALDAUER, 2d Violin.
Mr. M. ZACH, Viola.
Mr. J. KELLER, Violoncello.

Members of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

HELEN NIEBUHR, CONTRALTO.

••••

Oratorio and Concert Repertoire.

••••

Exclusive Management

Loudon G. Charlton,

CARNEGIE HALL, NEW YORK.

THE KALTENBORN CONCERTS.

RECORD breaking audiences assembled for the Wagner festival nights at the St. Nicholas Garden last week, and much enthusiasm was showered upon Conductor Kaltenborn and the soloists. Excerpts from the operas and music dramas of Wagner were presented in order of the original production.

The idea was a happy one, and many persons were impressed with the earnest manner in which the young conductor carried out the plan. It took him four hours of one day to arrange the programs for the three nights. These programs were published in THE MUSICAL COURIER last week. Space will not again allow a reproduction, therefore we can but repeat that portions from "Rienzi," "The Flying Dutchman" and "Tannhäuser" were played on last Wednesday night, "Lohengrin," "Tristan and Isolde" and "Die Meistersinger" on Thursday night, and the "Nibelungen Ring" and "Parsifal" on Friday night.

The vocal honors were won by Mrs. Dora Phillips and Miss Mary Mansfield, both sopranos.

On Wednesday evening Mrs. Phillips sang Senta's ballad and in the duet from "The Flying Dutchman" with J. F. Thompson. Her sympathetic voice and temperamental gifts should in time place her in the foremost ranks of American singers. Miss Mansfield's highly dramatic voice, rich and full in all registers, is suited to Wagner. Her interpretation of the master of music is remarkable when it is considered that she has not "coached," as the saying goes, with anyone but herself. The audience compelled Miss Mansfield to repeat "Dich Theure Halle" from "Tannhäuser." Mrs. Phillips, too, was recalled several times, until she sang over again the last part of Senta's ballad. Kaltenborn did surprisingly well with orchestra.

At Thursday night's concert Mr. Kaltenborn played two solos, "Träume," and "The Prize Song," from "Die Meistersinger." The latter he played uncommonly well, as he usually does. The veteran orchestral player, Joseph Eller, gave an illustration of his skill in the solo on the English horn in the introduction to the third act from "Tristan and Isolde." His friends sent him a laurel wreath. Franz Eim, the trombone player, was another soloist of the festival. Friday night soloist, Mr. Kaltenborn himself, who played the "Parsifal Paraphrase."

The Kaltenborn Quartet in two movements from Dvorák's "American Quartet," a quintet for wind instruments, by Onslow, and a violin solo by Master Saul Wolsky were the features of the concert on Sunday night.

By request the orchestra played Schubert's "Unfinished Symphony," for the second time this season, at the concert last night (Tuesday). Two movements from Dvorák's "New World" Symphony were also played at the concert last evening. Leopold Winkler made his fourth appearance at the St. Nicholas Garden this season at the concert last evening. He played the Beethoven G major Concerto.

Following are the programs for the remainder of the week and for Sunday next:

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 14.

Overture, Ungarische Lustspiel.....Keler-Bela
Good Friday Spell, Parsifal.....Wagner
Piano Concerto, E minor (first movement).....Rubinstein
Carl O. Dies.
Selection, Aida.....Verdi
A Summer Garden Chat.....Schueler
(Dedicated to the patrons of the Kaltenborn Concerts.)
Waltz, Ange d'Amour (by request).....Waldteufel
March, Siegesbanner.....Von Blon
Dramatic Prologue.....Human
String Orchestra—
Serenade.....Haydn
Loin du Bal.....Gillet
Valse Caprice.....Rubinstein
Tomerey Galop.....Mayers

THURSDAY, AUGUST 15.

Wagner Night.

Overture, Benvenuto Cellini.....Berlioz
Hungarian Rhapsodie, No. 1, in F.....Liszt
Quartet, op. 17, No. 3.....Rubinstein
The Kaltenborn String Quartet.
Cavatina, Queen of Sheba.....Gounod
Mme. Helene Maigille.
Waltz, Artist's Life.....Strauss
Rondo d'Amour.....Van Westerhout
Centennial March.....Wagner
Overture, Rienzi.....Wagner
Transformation and Closing Scene, Parsifal.....Wagner
Trumpet solo, Elsa's Song, Lohengrin.....Wagner
Albert Bode.
Arrival of Lohengrin, Prayer of the King and Introduction to First Act, Lohengrin.....Wagner
(Concert arrangement by R. Klugescheid.)

FRIDAY, AUGUST 16.

Operatic Night.

Overture, Midsummer Night's Dream.....Mendelssohn
Selection, The Trumpeter of Sackingen.....Nessler
Trumpet solo, Albert Bode.
'Cello solo, Kol Nidrei, op. 47.....Max Bruch
Louis Heine.
Sextet, Lucia.....Donizetti
Page Song, The Huguenots.....Meyerbeer
Miss Minna Van Buren.
Waltz, Vienna Beautics (by request).....Ziehrer
Senegambian Patrol.....Rosey
Overture, Leonore, No. 1.....Beethoven
Selection, Il Trovatore.....Verdi
Finale to William Tell.....Rossini
Sailors' Chorus, The Flying Dutchman.....Wagner

SATURDAY, AUGUST 17.

March, La Victorieuse.....Ganne
Overture, Raymond.....Thomas
Selection, The Wizard of the Nile.....Herbert
Violin solo, Scene de Ballet.....De Beriot
Franz Kaltenborn.
Amra.....H. S. Krouse
Merrymakers' Dance, Nell Gwyn Dances.....German
Waltz, Freuet Euch des Lebens.....Strauss
Intermezzo, Salome.....Loraine
American Fantaisie.....Herbert
Harp solo, Dance of the Sylphs.....Godefroid
Charles Schuetze.
Selection, The Rounders.....Englander
March, Under the Double Eagle.....J. F. Wagner

SUNDAY, AUGUST 18.

Overture, Triumphale.....Rubinstein
Symphonic Poem, Orpheus.....Liszt
Song, Goodby.....Tosti
Mrs. Elizabeth Hazard.
Arrival of Lohengrin, Prayer of the King and Finale to First Act, Lohengrin.....Wagner
(Concert arrangement by R. Klugescheid.)
Hungarian Rhapsodic, No. 1, in F.....Liszt
Waltz, Roses from the South.....Strauss
Serenade.....Moszkowski
Chorale and Fugue.....Bach
Songs—
Pussy Willow.....Mildenberg
So Dear to Dream.....Mildenberg
Ich Liebe Dich.....Mildenberg
Mrs. Elizabeth Hazard.
Accompanied by the composer.
Funeral March (by request).....Chopin
Andante, Symphony No. 7.....Beethoven
Slavic March.....Tschaikowsky

Miss Ida Branth, the violinist, appeared as the soloist at the Symphony concert last Tuesday night (August 6). She played Sarasate's "Zigeunerweisen" with warmth of tone and correct conception of the weird melodies. Miss Branth was enthusiastically received, and her reception by the conductor and the members of the orchestra was especially cordial. Miss Branth will play again at the concerts before the season ends.

Musical Clubs.

Conductor Mendelssohn, of the Mendelssohn Choral Society, of Jersey City, is working to increase the membership of the society.

The German singing societies of the State of Washington and British Columbia united this summer in their annual Saengerfest, held at Whatcom, Wash., last month.

Edwin M. Shonert, the pianist of the Orpheus Club, of Plainfield, N. J., will be one of the soloists at the concerts to be given by the Innes Band, at the Pan-American Exposition.

The Leonardsville (N. Y.) Music Club is another organization that will undertake some good concerts this coming winter, engaging, as heretofore, soloists of reputation from the large cities.

The St. Cecelia Club, of Midland, Mich., Mrs. J. C. Graves president, gave a reception to Miss Emma E. Clark, pianist, of Chicago, Ill., following Miss Clark's lecture recital on Tuesday, July 30.

The Ladies' Musical Literary Club, of Cedar Rapids, Ia., held its first guest meeting at the home of Miss Clara Kocher. The principal speaker was Miss Rowley, who has lately visited the musical centres of Germany.

The Champlain (N. Y.) Choral Union gave a sacred concert at Cliff Haven on Sunday evening, August 11. Rossini's "Stabat Mater" was sung, and the soloists who assisted the union came from Montreal and New York.

The Euterpean Club, of Waco, Tex., has outlined attractive programs for next season. Certain operas are to be discussed and illustrated. "Carmen" is to be the first one, "Lohengrin" the second, and "Tannhäuser" the third.

Mrs. H. C. Taylor entertained recently at her home the members of the Ladies' Musical Club, of Seattle, Wash. Mrs. Taylor is the president of the club. Mrs. R. M. Gottstein, the recording secretary, made a report which showed that the club was making fine progress.

The Music Students' Club, of Catskill, N. Y., gave a good concert last month, with Mrs. Dora Phillips, of Brooklyn, as the soprano soloist. The concert was given in the chapel of the Reformed Church at Catskill. This club is planning an interesting series of meetings for the coming season.

One of the musical events in Minnesota this summer was the concert by the Lyric Choral Club, of Minneapolis, given at Lake Minnetauk. The program included the "Hunting Chorus," from Benedict's "Lily of Killarney," and two choruses from Bennett's "May Queen." The soloists who assisted the club were Misses Frances Miller, Anna MacPhee, Beth Leekley, L. B. Wasserzeiher, M. Benedict Anna Dallagher, Imogene Rookwood, Margaret McDermott, Mesdames Two and La Valley, Messrs. Glanville Richards, Roy McKusick, J. Miller and Crosby Hopps.

MR. BENNETT'S PUPILS.—Another of S. C. Bennett's pupils who has recently come into public favor is Miss Helen Sommers, who has been singing leading roles in the opera company playing a summer engagement at Nortl Adams, Mass. Mrs. Lillian Randolf Hoke, a prominen singer and teacher of Nashville, Tenn., has returned t New York to resume her lessons under Mr. Bennett's in struction. Miss Ruth Peebles continues to be a favorit with the audiences at the Providence Opera House.

THE ONLY "LESCHETIZKY" SCHOOL OF PIANO PLAYING IN AMERICA.
Named after PROF. THEO. LESCHETIZKY, of Vienna, by his special permission.
Mme. DE WIENZKOWSKA, DIRECTRESS AND FOUNDER.
PROF. LESCHETIZKY'S Sole Principal Assistant in this country, formerly in Vienna; also Concert Pianiste.
CARNEGIE HALL. Address Communications: 147 W. Eighty-second St., NEW YORK CITY.
LESCHETIZKY—"Mme. Wienzkowska's success as a piano virtuosa and teacher is eminent."
PADEREWSKI—"Mme. Wienzkowska is a finished pianiste and possesses an extraordinary ability of communicating to others a complete knowledge of her art."
HANS RICHTER—"I consider you an artist of finest esprit and taste, and a representative of a most solid school."

The Carlisle-Carr Concert Bureau and Greater Britain Musical Agency
(The Foreign and Colonial Bureau),
108 New Bond Street, LONDON, W., ENGLAND
Opera, Oratorio, Concerts, At Homes, Garden Parties, Children Parties.
Sole control of the "Artists' Popular Concerts."
Telegraphic Address: "PANDECT," London.

MR. WHITNEY TEW
In America November and December, 1901
The London Press says of Mr. Tew's singing:
Times—"Mr. Tew displayed a magnificent voice and great dignity of style."
Telegraph—"Mr. Tew possesses a fine voice of cultured style; he is a singer of high quality and a musician of broad sympathies and wide research."
Express—"Revealed the possession of a prodigious memory, a sonorous voice and a wealth of vigor."
Daily News—"Manifestly an experienced vocalist, endowed with a powerful voice of agreeable quality. He is a linguist and his artistic taste and judgment demonstrated by his excellent choice of a program."
Musical Courier (London)—"A hearty, straightforward delivery, which was all the more charming because of his admirable diction and pure intonation."
Lady—"His songs were admirably chosen, and the beautiful quality of his voice and his good method were best shown in Brahms' Liebeslieder."
Sunday Times—"Displayed a resonant low baritone voice and a refined method."
Musical Standard—"Eminently successful as an interpretive artist, for he sang with much feeling and intuition into the dramatic and poetic meaning of his text. His voice is a fine organ."
Musical News—"Mr. Tew has a good bass voice which he uses always with finished art and discretion. That he possesses an extensive repertory culled from the best music written for the bass voice was evidenced."
Morning Post—"Mr. Tew's deep bass voice was well suited to the music of the Landgraf." (National Grand Opera Co., in Tannhauser.)
The Stage—"Mr. Tew gave a strong and impressive embodiment of the Cardinal."
The Era—"Mr. Whitney Tew, the author, gave a strikingly characteristic reading of Richelieu, his acting in the downfall scene being especially impressive and touching."
Field—"That fine bass singer, Mr. Whitney Tew, gave the first of his recitals last week. He possesses a powerful voice of beautiful quality which can stand work. He has both voice and brains."
Anglo-American—"Mr. Tew's fine voice was in the best of form. He is to be commended for his persistent fidelity to a really superior class of music."
Sole Representative:
Henry Wolfsohn
131 East 17th Street
NEW YORK

Katherine Ruth Heyman
PIANIST

Nordica
November to March

Gregory Hast
ENGLISH TENOR
November and December Only

Emil Hofmann
BARITONE

George Hamlin
TENOR

Mme. Webb-Gardner
LYRIC SOPRANO

Eduard Zeldenrust
DUTCH PIANIST
November to April

Helen Niebuhr
CONTRALTO

Mme. Katharine Fisk
DRAMATIC CONTRALTO

Leonora Jackson
VIOLINIST

Flavie Van den Hende
VIOLONCELLIST

Mme. Charlotte Maconda
COLORATURA SOPRANO

SEASON 1901-1902

LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, New York.

JOSEFFY AT THE NATIONAL CONSERVATORY.

DESCENT counts for much in matters artistic as well as in the breeding of racehorses. "Tell me who the master is and I will describe for you the pupil," cry some theorists who might be called extremists. How many to-day know the name of Anton Rubinstein's master? Yet the pedagogue Villoing laid the foundation of the great Russian pianist's musical education, an education completed by the genial Franz Liszt. In the case, however, of Rafael Joseffy he was a famous pupil of a famous master. There are some critics who claim that Karl Tausig represents the highest development of piano playing in this century of piano playing heroes. His musical temperament so finely fibred, his muscular system like steel thrice tempered is duplicated in his pupil, who, at an age when boys are gazing at the world across the threshold of Toyland, was an accredited artist, a virtuoso in knee breeches!

Rafael Joseffy stands to-day for all that is exquisite and poetic in the domain of the piano. His touch is original, his manipulation of the mechanism of the instrument unapproachable, a virtuoso among virtuosi, and the beauty of his tone, its velvety, clangorous quality, so free from any suspicion of harshness or brutality, gives him a unique position in the music loving world. There is magic in his attack, magic and moonlight in his playing of a Chopin nocturne, and brilliancy—a meteor-like brilliancy—in his performance of a Liszt concerto.

This rare combination of the virtuoso and the poet places Joseffy apart from the pale of popular pianism. From Tausig he inherited his keen and severe sense of rhythm; from his native country, Hungary, he absorbed brilliancy and color sense. When Joseffy was young he delighted in the exhibition of his fabulous technic, but he has mellowed, he has matured, and superimposed upon the brilliances of his ardent youth are the thoughtful interpretations of the intellectual artist. He is a classical pianist par excellence, and his readings of Bach, Beethoven, Schumann and Brahms are authoritative and final. To the sensitive finish he now unites a breadth of tone and feeling, and you may gauge the catholicity of the man by his love for both Chopin and Brahms.

There you have Joseffy, an interpreter of Brahms and Chopin! No need to expatiate further on his versatility! His style has undergone during the past five years a thorough purification. He has successfully combatted the temptation of excess in color, of the too lusty exuberance in the use of his material, of abuse of the purely decorative side of his art. Touching the finer rim of the issues of his day Joseffy emulates the French poet, Paul Verlaine, in his devotion to the nuance, to the shade within shade that may be expressed on the keyboard of the piano. Yet his jeu never lacks the robust ring, the virile accent. He is no mere pianissimist, striving for effects of the miniaturist; rather in his grasp of the musical content of a composition does he reveal his acuity and fine spiritual temper.

Rafael Joseffy is an impeccable artist in an age of makeshift and confused ideals. He plays the piano superbly, and, strangely enough, is able to impart to his pupils a comprehension of his art, and, if his musical personality is rare, then rarer still is his faculty for teaching!

Mr. Joseffy teaches at the National Conservatory only. Every Tuesday afternoon, beginning September 17, at 2 o'clock, pupils may apply and be examined for membership in his classes.

WAGNER AND NIETZSCHE.

ON August 25, 1900, Friedrich Nietzsche died his second death, the death of the body. Years before Fate had drawn a veil over him, and just at the moment when the world was looking to him came the "passing" of Zarathustra. In December, 1900, the first volume of his collected letters appeared, and although his letters to Hans Von Bülow and Baroness Von Meysenberg are omitted, as well as Nietzsche's letters to Wagner, yet there is much of interesting notice of his relations with the composer.

Nietzsche's first acquaintance with Wagner is recorded in a letter, January 18, 1869, in which he writes: "My life, here and now, is a great change from my earlier life. In the first place I am living in the family of Professor Biedermann—have been introduced to many families, and especially to the circle of Professor Brockhaus, where I had the rare, the unique, pleasure of making the acquaintance of Richard Wagner, the brother of Frau Professor Brockhaus. On that happy evening he read us fragments of his autobiography, played and sang the 'Meistersinger,' and talked with me especially about Schopenhauer, as a warm admirer." He adds that he had received a kind remembrance by letter from Lucerne, and, "if the Gods grant it, I shall after Easter be close to him."

In February, 1869, Nietzsche was appointed professor at Basle, and he writes to a friend that now he has found a man who reveals to him what Schopenhauer meant by Genius, that is, Richard Wagner. "No one knows him, no one can judge him, because all the world stands on another foundation and breathes another atmosphere. In him rules such an unlimited ideality, such deep humanity, such a lofty life-seriousness that I feel myself in the neighborhood of the Divine." Then, after speaking of the happy days he spent on the Lake of the Four Cantons with this wonderful, ever new, inexhaustible nature, he says: "I read yesterday a manuscript on 'The State and Religion,' intended to explain to his young friend, the little King of Bavaria, his views on the state and religion. Never was a king addressed in a more dignified and philosophical style. I was elevated and staggered by this ideality, which seemed thoroughly derived from the spirit of Schopenhauer." A day or two afterwards he wrote: "He is the living illustration of what Schopenhauer calls 'a Genius.'"

He spent the Christmas of 1869 with "his noble friend of genius, R. W., in his lovely dwelling at Tribschen, near Lucerne," and in March, 1870, writes to his friend Gersdorff that "the incredible earnestness and the German depth of Wagner's view of the world and of art, which wells from every tone, is to most men of our days a horror, like Schopenhauer's 'Askesis' and 'Denial of the Will.' By our Jews—you know how wide the term is—the idealism of Wagner is especially hated—that glowing, high souled struggle till the 'day of the noble ones,' the day of chivalry comes, which is as far as possible contradictory to our plebeian political squabbles." Nietzsche naïvely remarks that in superior natures there is a kind of indifference, as if "a thorough study, a special endeavor to understand this or that artist or this or that art was unnecessary. How glad I am that you have studied opera and drama," and adds, "if you would write to R. W. a long letter after the first performance of 'The Meistersinger' it will give great pleasure, and they will know better who the writer of this letter is. It is understood that when you visit me you will come to Tribschen. It is an infinite enrichment of life to really know such a genius. For me all that is best and most beautiful is bound up in the names of Schopenhauer and Wagner, and I am proud and happy to be, thereby, of like opinion as my nearest friend." One may conjecture from some of these expressions that there was already a "little rift within the lute" of the friendship between the two, which only needed time to widen till it became a breach. Wagner seems to have been very kind and sent to Gersdorff tickets for the first "Meistersinger" performance in Berlin. "See how they honor my friends," he adds. Again he writes: "I have good news from Tribschen; Wagner and Frau send you their best wishes. (Do you know that the marriage took place in August? I was invited to be a witness, but could not appear, as I was then in France.) Wagner a couple of days ago sent me a marvelous manuscript, entitled 'Beethoven.' Here we have a profound philosophy of music in the strictest accord with Schopenhauer." On December 12, 1870, Nietzsche sends to his friend a copy of Wagner's "Beethoven" as a symbol of the intimate "community of our striving and thought under one flag, under the same flag which Wagner in this work points out as the only one that leads to the goal. There are deep mysteries therein, beautiful and terrible, as Music reveals herself in her highest utterances." In this letter he includes a photograph of Wagner, with a postscript from Frau Wagner "to the philosophic champion who bravely fulfills his task."

In June, 1871, Nietzsche refers his friend to the Norddeutsche Allgemeine for the Bayreuth plans, and in a letter about Christmas time he speaks of the hopes of the Bayreuthers for a new railroad. He did not visit Tribschen as he was too busy, and his first work, "The Birth of Tragedy from the Spirit of Music," had appeared. He writes on January 10, 1872, from Basle to tell Gersdorff of the impression the book made at Tribschen. "Wagner wrote to me: 'I have never read anything more beautiful than your book! All is grand! I write to you hurriedly because the perusal has excited me beyond measure and I must wait for a return of reason to read it properly. Does not this please you?" All this time he had written at the urgent request of Wagner a long letter to the King of Bavaria about the Bayreuth enterprise. In January of the same year, when Wagner visited Berlin, he wrote: "You will be astonished to see him so soon. I conjure you to do, see, feel all that can be of service to him in such an important moment. Act as if you were myself," and a few days later he writes: "Think, then, that we both are called to fight and work for a development of culture which, perhaps, will extend to the next generation, perhaps still later to greatest numbers. Let this be our pride, let this encourage us; for the rest I have the belief that we are not born to be happy, but to do our duty, and blessed are we when we know where our duty is."

(To be continued.)

GREGORY HAST.
IN AMERICA ONLY NOVEMBER AND DECEMBER, 1901.

Mr. Gregory
Hast
Famous English Tenor.

Of the St. James, Hall Popular, London Ballad, Queen's Hall Oratorio, Crystal Palace Saturday and Royal Albert Hall Concerts.

Sole Direction:
Loudon G. Charlton,
Carnegie Hall, New York.

JOS. S. BAERNSTEIN
BASSO

51 EAST 64TH STREET,
NEW YORK CITY.

MINNE
HUMPHRYES
Soprano. Concert and Oratorio.

FOR TERMS, DATES, ETC., ADDRESS
Care MUSICAL COURIER, 1135 Broadway, or 407 First Street, Brooklyn, New York

BAILEY

THIS IS TO { MUSICAL CLUBS / MUSICAL SOCIETIES / MUSICAL MANAGERS and Speculators in Musical Attraction

If you want to please your people, fill your houses and make money, then engage ARTISTS THAT DRAW—artists that the public REALLY want to hear.

Young WM. WORTH BAILEY,
the Blind Violinist, is TRULY a GREAT artist.

ELIZABETH NORTHROP, Soprano
EDWIN M. SHONERT, Pianist
} Assisting Artists.

A Season of 50 Concerts is being arranged by
R. E. JOHNSTON,
SUMMER ADDRESS, 257 West 92d Street, New York City,

Whom you should write for particulars. NOTE—Send for Booklet and Souvenir.

EVERETT PIANO USED EXCLUSIVELY.

MARY MUNCHHOFF.

More European Press Notices.

HERE are more of the European press notices of the gifted artist Mary Münchhoff. Her beautiful soprano voice has charmed all the critics in Europe, and she has made a decided sensation wherever she has appeared:

"The new 'Patti' of the concert hall is what the youthful Mary Munchhoff, who is charming everybody, and, above all, the admirers of bel canto, is called wherever she consents to display her vocal art. From Omaha, across the seas, she has come to us. In Berlin her rare talent was put on a firm basis by diligent study, and the foundation laid to her artistic fame. In Paris, with Marchesi, the greatest living vocal teacher, the gifts which nature had lavishly bestowed on her were matured to perfection. Her first concerts in Berlin were decided triumphs. The critics, one and all, praised unreservedly her flexible, bright, pure soprano voice, ranging upward to high C, and declared that she was a natural born coloratura singer, who had acquired the power, by careful cultivation of her voice, of performing remarkable vocal feats. Her extraordinary technical ability mastered the greatest difficulties with ease and grace. But it is not the technical brilliancy of her staccato nor the steadiness of her trill, nor the fine cantabile which distinguishes her pre-eminently, but the melodious sweetness and deep feeling which she imparts to her rendering of German songs. And so the admiration which her marvelous technic arouses in overcoming every difficulty with ease, is transformed into deep emotion felt for her simple, heartfelt rendering of songs. Technic is to her only a means to the end; she seems completely enwrapped in the accomplishment of her artistic task. A poetical fragrance penetrates through her songs, and her listeners are thrilled with the emotion which her soul pours forth. It is therefore a triumphal march that Mary Munchhoff is making through the musical cities of Germany."—The Bazar, Berlin, January 29, 1900.

"Mary Münchhoff, of Omaha, has given a concert in the Singakademie. If one were called upon to reproach Miss Munchhoff at the beginning, it would be because she gives us so little opportunity of hearing her sing. That rarely heard expression 'Sold out' was therefore the cause of sending many away from this concert. What a brilliant success swept through our dignified Singakademie! What deep pleasure this finely cultivated, youthful, sympathetic voice gave everyone! Her pure soprano was equal to all technical and vocal difficulties which a perfect rendering demands. She sang an aria from Mozart's 'Il re pastore,' with violin obligato; Rosina's cavatine from 'Barber of Seville,' an aria from Gounod's 'Philemon and Baucis' and songs by Schubert, Schumann, Grieg, Taubert and Bizet, with piano accompaniment. Miss Münchhoff proved herself to be the first coloratura singer at the present time in all selections on her program, whether German, French or Italian, classical or modern. In simple, purely lyric compositions the melodious quality and charm of voice which she offers is possessed by her alone. Her phenomenal vocal skill is, of course, the most marvelous; the runs ripple lightly, the staccato is graceful and accurate, the trill round and clear, as far as the third octave. Her encore, 'The Nightingale,' by Alabieff, electrified the audience. It was a masterpiece in technic with its chains of trills."—Neues Frauenblatt, Berlin, February 14, 1901.

Colell and Winkler Life Savers.

E. H. COLELL, of the Brooklyn house of Wissner, and Leopold Winkler, the pianist, saved the life of Jeanne Franko, the violinist, at Arverne on Saturday. They were bathing in the surf when Miss Franko was seized with cramps. Mr. Colell is a powerful swimmer, and he and Mr. Winkler were just in the nick of time to save her. Mr. Winkler was announced to play the Beethoven G major Piano Concerto at the Kaltenborn concert last night.

TELEPHONE, 4013 GERRARD. TELEGRAMS, HUGONOTAS, LONDON

119, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON. W.

Aug. 1. 1901.

Dear Chester

Since there seems to be some controversy about my arrangements with Herr Kubelik I wish to inform you that I am now sole agent and manager for Kubelik in Europe & the United States. Mr. Daniel Frohman, a friend of mine for twenty two years is my partner in the American business.

Yours sincerely Hugo Görlitz

THE above is a reproduction of a letter addressed to Montague Chester, our European representative. It effectually settles the question of Kubelik's management.—ED. MUSICAL COURIER.

LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, New York,

Has the Honor to Announce an Extended Tour of

Katherine Ruth HEYMAN Distinguished American Pianist

Tour—October to April—Now Booking. Steinway Piano Used.

MRS.

WEBB GARDNER

SOPRANO.

FIRST SEASON IN AMERICA.

ORATORIO, CONCERT, RECITAL.

Sole direction, LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, New York.

If you love your children buy them a

"KINDER" Adjustable Foot Rest.

Don't be cruel and make them practice at the piano from one to four hours a day with their feet dangling in the air.

Send for Booklet. All first-class piano houses or

W. MARKS,

WITHOUT. 568 Jefferson Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y. WITH.

REBECCA MACKENZIE

SOPRANO.

Available for Concert, Oratorio and Song Recitals.

Address FRED O. RENARD, Manager,
444 Central Park West, NEW YORK CITY

VICTOR BAILLARD,

Basso-Baritone.

ORATORIO AND SONG RECITAL.

Address: 146 FIFTH AVE., NEW YORK.

Elizabeth Hazard

SOPRANO

Drawing Room Concerts Song Recitals | Direction Emile Levy 141 Fifth Ave.

Western New York Office THE MUSICAL COURIER,
749 NORWOOD AVENUE,
BUFFALO, N. Y., August 9, 1901.

CAPTAIN GUILLERMO M. TOMAS is the conductor of the Havana Municipal Police Band, which has been sent to the Pan-American Exposition by the Municipality of Havana as a special compliment to the people of the United States. He is drawing great crowds to the Esplanade stand, and he has arranged a series of concerts, the music representing the different nationalities.

One night it is Cuba Night, the next Italian, next French; to-night is German; Saturday will be given Pan-American Night, "Stars and Stripes Forever," followed by the Chilean national air, that of San Salvador and melodies from Cuba, Mexico, Porto Rico and others. When Captain Tomas conducts the music goes with a swing and unity, as well as with virility and power, which proves his magnetic influence over the men. His movements are sharp and nervous, although never awkward or angular. There is no ostentation or display, no beating the air for effect; every movement is in direct and full significance to the men for their guidance.

The following is a clipping from an article by Miss Mary Howard, music critic of the Buffalo Express:

A year and a half ago the organization of the Havana band was completed, and in twenty-two days from its start it made its first public appearance. Since that time Captain Tomas has not changed one of his sixty-eight men, which fact speaks volumes for his tactful management, and explains in part the splendid unity and sympathy with which they play.

CHARLES GALLOWAY.

The makeup of this band is quite unlike that of the brass organizations of this country. The wood-wind is somewhat stronger, the clarinets alone numbering twelve. Then, besides the eight saxophones, there are French horns, cornophones and sarruxophones, an instrument practically unknown here. It has a mouthpiece like a bassoon, and is used everywhere in Spain. The men practice no less than three hours daily. In order to secure perfect balance, and to put each man in the place best fitted to him, Captain Tomas changes them about, taking a man from the cornet forces and assigning him to the trombones, for example, until the result is satisfactory. Such methods are very unusual, but they are certainly effective, for the distinct excellence of the band is acknowledged by all listeners. Besides standard selections, the Cubans play several characteristic native airs. One of them, called "El Beso," or "The Kiss," is already so much of a favorite with the exposition audiences that it is always encored. "El Beso" is of unknown authorship, but it is essentially a Cuban melody.

CAPTAIN G. M. TOMAS.

Miss Annie Peat, of Racine, Wis., one of the most famous organists in the Northwest, was honored by being chosen organist of Wisconsin Day at the Pan-American. She has had an unusual career for so young a musician. She is a pupil of Middelschulte and Harrison Wild, of Chicago, and played at the World's Fair when only fourteen years old. Her playing is characterized by poetic and sympathetic qualities of expression, sustained power and brilliancy. The registration and pedaling were perfect and showed the artist's fine ability to get interesting effects out of the large organ. Her services are in great demand for concerts, for she is also a good pianist. Her selections were the Toccata and Fugue in D minor, by Bach, and Guilmant's First Sonata. Capt. Guillermo M. Tomas, conductor of the Cuban band, a thoroughly skilled musician, remarked to me: "She will some day reach the pinnacle o fame and be classed with the leading organists of th country."

ANNIE PEAT.

Charles Galloway, from St. Louis, was one of the mo famous organists we have heard here. He studied orga piano and theory for four years with Alex. Guilmant, an has composed some popular songs. One of the mo important concert engagements he has had occurred whe Mr. Galloway appeared in solo work at the world fame Trocadero, where Guilmant has given concerts for twen years. His chief characteristics as a virtuoso are gre technical ability. He is a musician whose natural tale developed by broad musical and intellectual culture plac him among the foremost organists. He gave three co certs. A critic of the Buffalo Courier says: "Mr. Gallow and Harrison Wild, of Chicago, divide the honors as t best two that have been here yet," to which I would li to add a third, I. V. Flagler, of Chautauqua Assembly.

The assistant at Mr. Galloway's concert was Mrs. Ke shaw-Thompson, soprano. She is Canada's gifted sing holding the important position of soloist of Western Co gregational Church, Toronto. From all through Cana where she is best known, people are paying her glowi tributes. The Winnipeg Town Topics say of her: "M Kershaw-Thompson gave a very dramatic rendering Molloy's 'Carnival.'" She sang at a patriotic concert und the patronage of Lieutenant-Governor Patterson and M Hugh Macdonald, and her singing was the feature of t entertainment. The Toronto Globe, Guelph Advoca Brandon Times all speak in terms of highest praise. H

Mme. Charlotte MACONDA

Most Versatile and Brillian American Soprano.

Re-engaged for New England Festivals

(THIRD CONSECUTIVE SEASON).

Scored a Succession of Sensational Triumphs last Season in New York, Boston, Washington, St. Louis and other leading cities.

Oratorio, Festival, Concert and Recital Engagements now Booking.

Sole.... Management, LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall NEW YORK.

selections here were "Lord of the World," Stephen Adams, and "Good Bye," Tosti, which she sang with perfect expression She has a beautiful voice, as clear as a bell, and possesses strong dramatic power. Mrs. Thompson has filled the position as soloist in prominent church choirs in New York and Eastern Canada. She is booked for some concert engagements. She is a pupil of Emilio Agramonte in New York.

W. H. Hewlett from London Ont., gave an enjoyable concert at the Temple. We hear a general desire expressed that he will play again, when I will be glad to make annotations of his program.

Mrs. Kershaw-Thompson.

August 1 to 3 Hamlin H. Hunt, Minneapolis, gave three fine concerts, which were highly appreciated.

A. Ray Tyler, of Brooklyn, gave two concerts, August 7 and 8. He is a graceful player, good coloring being predominant, and he had an excellent program. Among them one number by himself, "Melody Finale," which was heartily applauded. Mrs. Katherine Riesberg.

Henri Marteau.

THIS accomplished young artist will give two concerts at Berlin (with the Philharmonic Orchestra), October 17 and 19, where he will play three unknown manuscript concertos dedicated to him:

Concerto No. 2, D minor.....Christian Sinding
Concerto No. 3, C minor..Tor Aulin, Swedish violinist and composer
Concerto, C minor.....Jaques Dalcroze

Marteau will also make a tour in Sweden with Risler, the celebrated pianist.

The concerto by E. Jaques Dalcroze was interpreted by Henri Marteau at the festival of Swiss musicians at Geneva on June 24, of which the press notices were very favorable:

The greatest success of the evening was gained by the new violin Concerto in C minor, by E. Jaques Daleroze, which, like his string quartet, revealed a rich fancy, full of color, and an extraordinary light and sure hand. In Henri Marteau the author found an incomparable interpreter, who rendered with charming poetic feeling the songful larghetto, and in the finale overcame all difficulties with a lightness and grace as if it were all spontaneous. Neue Zurcher Zeitung, June 23, 1901.

A concerto for violin and orchestra by Jaques Daleroze contains interesting music. Henri Marteau played this colossal piece in a wonderful style, with astounding technic, and a really rare grandeur of tone, which in fitting passages was allied with extraordinarily sweet softness and touching inwardness. The success of the work and the execution was enormous. Otto Lessmann, Allgemeine Musikzeitung, June 28, 1901.

The most typical novelty of the festival seemed to me to be the Concerto in C minor of Jaques Dalcroze. The work is singularly brilliant, and will have a speedy, triumphant career. It was played by Henri Marteau with exquisite ease and perfection. Marteau is positively at this moment one of the French masters of the violin.—De Fourcaud, Le Gaulois, Paris, June 27.

This work requires extraordinary execution. This the composer enjoyed for the part of the principal violin, which Henri Marteau (to whom the concerto is dedicated) played like a master, penetrated with the spirit and the intentions of the composer, bringing into relief his slightest intentions and holding the public under the charm of his great violinism. Journal de Geneve, June 26, 1901.

A NEW AMERICAN OPERA.

CONTRACTS were signed yesterday for early production of an American grand opera composed by Francisco Fanciulli, leader of the 71st Regiment Band. The opera boasts a double title, "Priscilla, the Maid of Plymouth: or, the Courtship of Miles Standish," and is, of course, founded on the famous poem of Henry W. Longfellow The libretto is by Isaac F. Eaton, of Plymouth, a lineal descendant of the minister who accompanied the Puritans from England in the Mayflower.

This opera has been selected by Colonel William A. Thompson, manager of the Rose Cecilia Shay Grand Opera Company, for the coming début of Miss Shay. Miss Shay is a Cincinnati girl, the daughter of Colonel Thomas F. Shay, one of the Queen City's most prominent lawyers. Her early musical education was under the direction of American teachers, and this was supplemented by a two years' course of study abroad. Miss Shay has recently returned to America, and her father decided to equip an opera company for her, under Colonel Thompson's direction. The members of the cast who will support her are all American, both principals and chorus.

The first performance will be given in Washington on November 4, and the tour of the company will include the principal cities in the East. The opera will be produced with the personal assistance of Mr. Fanciulli, who for five years was the leader of the Marine Band at the national capital. New York Tribune, August 13.

The John Church Company's Music in London.

THE John Church Company's music has been used very extensively in London lately. Here is a partial list of composers whose songs have been sung there during the month of June, with date, places and names of singer:

My Redeemer and My Lord.....Dudley Buck
Miss Monica Stone (9th).....Streatham
Miss Monica Stone (23d).....Clapham

Glover's de la Warr Orchestra played "Cotton Blossoms," "King Cotton," "Stars and Stripes" and "Concert Polka" on the 8th and 9th at the Kursaal, Bexhill.

Love Is a Sickness.....Horatio Parker
Miss Monica Stone (20th).....Bayswater

Where the Bee Sucks.....De Koven
Mme. Alice Esty (24th).....St. James' Hall

Free Portraits of Famous Musicians

Fine prints of Wagner, Bach, Beethoven, Mozart, Schubert and Mendelssohn given with our Descriptive Circulars A and B of 50c. and $1.00 books of songs and piano music. Each book contains 20 or more compositions. Music same as in sheet-music edition. More than 100 different books. The best works of famous old, modern and contemporary composers. Music of all publishers. Musical Instruments of every description.

Oliver Ditson Company, Boston
Chas. H. Ditson & Co., New York
J. E. Ditson & Co., Philadelphia

A392

American School of Opera

Berkeley Lyceum
23 West 44th Street

WM. G. STEWART, Director. LAIRD EASTON, Secretary and Treasurer.

For prospectus and all information apply to Secretary.

Mr. William G. Stewart, Director American School of Opera, Berkeley Lyceum, New York City:

New York, June 4, 1901.

My Dear Mr. Stewart—We take this opportunity of complimenting you on the splendid practical results accomplished by your School of Opera during the first year of its existence and gladly bear testimony to its advantages as a training school for those desirous of following a professional career in opera.

We are more than pleased with the graduates of your institution who have become members of the Bostonians and will gladly avail ourselves in the future of the opportunity for engaging singers who have pursued a course of study under your direction. With best wishes always, Yours very sincerely.

W. H. MacDonald

JEAN GERARDY

December, 1901, to May, 1902.

WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU,
131 East 17th St., New York.

FRITZ KREISLER

JANUARY to MAY, 1902.

Wolfsohn Musical Bureau,
131 EAST 17th ST.,
NEW YORK.

CARL ARMBRUSTER.

Wagner Lecture Recitals.

VOCAL ILLUSTRATIONS:
Miss Pauline Cramer.

Stereopticon Views of Bayreuth and the Principal Scenes of the Wagner Music Dramas.

Address WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th Street, NEW YORK.

Kindergarten Music Building.

The Original and Standard System of Kindergarten Music.

Kina K. Darlington

1069 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.

ALICE E. JOSEPH,

Late Private Secretary to Sir Augustus Harris.

THE OPERA AND CONCERT AGENCY,
7a Hanover Street, Regent Street, LONDON, England,
Authorized to represent all the Best Artists in the World!
ADVICE GRATIS

HERBERT WITHERSPOON

Opera, Oratorio, Concert, Recitals.

BASS.

For Terms, Dates, &c., address
Residence Studio: 202 West 78th St., New York.

SYMPHONIC DRAMA.

THE future of music-drama is a subject which has been much discussed—indeed, it has received too much word consideration, for many entering the lists have been armored in the rust of that mere theory which has so often in the past been brought to the dust by the chivalrous lance of practicability. But not yet have these pseudo-champions been confronted with a solid art work which shall upset their conflicting and false notions, and indicate the infallible path which, once thronged with undergrowth and weeds, has been to a great extent cleared and certainly absolutely defined by Wagner. Why do we wander and pause, irresolute and wondering? This attitude might have been defensible in the pre-Wagnerians. They were awaiting the human borne lantern which should extricate them from the slough into which the will-o'-the-wisps had led them; but now that our guide has arrived and so clearly demonstrated the truth of his artistic tendencies—now that we are not (returning to the earlier metaphor) beset by thistles and briars at every step, it seems more than curious that the majority of these theorists have not chosen to calculate from his basis, but have either stepped back into the old swamp (or thicket), or, walking in the road of reformed art very, very timidly, have feared to cast their glances at the certain goal, and preferred to linger lovingly over the beauties at their feet. These latter worthier folk are, I fear me, in a considerable minority.

Apart from the principal reason of existence in so far as the individual work is concerned, the actual result of music drama, it is fairly evident, has been to endeavor a combination of the arts which shall be (more or less) consistent; but that this union means the limitation of one or more of them is also perfectly clear. Wagner doubles his joys in the wedding, and halves his sorrows; his disciples, as frequently as not, the reverse. But which of these arts is to be lord? So entire a musician as a Mozart or a Beethoven sings naturally and his tones fetter his action. So dramatic an instinct as that of the early Wagner demands a saner treatment of the story, while so intense a musician as that of the later Wagner yet frequently chooses (despite his own theories) to stay the progress of his tale and use that art which will express subtleties conveyable by no dramatic gesture nor other palpable means. This last fact is surely of no small prophetic significance.

Let us consider very briefly each art concerned as it appeals to its own sense.

First, there is the art of action, appealing solely to the eye, the quickest and most intelligent of the higher senses; apart from its object of attainment this does not bear in any way upon our feelings. Then, the art of speech, appealing to the ear and in a small degree to the emotions—only so far as the vocal inflection is concerned; the sense of hearing, be it observed, is speedily received by the brain, though not in the same practically instantaneous manner as that of the sight, for the reason that its language is not so readily acquired. These obvious points must be pardoned for the sake of clearness. Lastly, the art of ideal sound, also directed to the ear and in a very large degree to the emotions, so compensating for the fact that the meaning of its diction is least easy to comprehend.

These three living arts, combined with scenic accessories, which by reason of their lack of vitality are no especial tax upon the eye, are the constituents from which the composer interweaves his music-drama; but that a fair balance between them has not yet been adjusted is quite clear if only by reason of the fact that the quickest sense has the least to absorb, while the ear bears the double burden of perceiving that portion of the music which cannot be simply felt (this harder portion being almost invariably also the better), and of realizing the language of the poem also. How many of us could honestly say upon hearing such a work as "Tristan," for instance, for the first time, that the strain upon the ear caused by the poem had not prevented us from realizing the music?

How this is to be remedied is clear. All of the poems upon which the greatest music-dramas have been based contain much that might be left for expression entirely to the arts of action and ideal sound. Why, if the tones sing of love, must the lover himself be compelled to it? Why should the words tell of strife when it is depicted in every movement on the stage? This strain is no fancied matter, if—if the music is to be grasped.

Drama in its integrity may call upon her sister arts in a limited measure, but does not thereby violate her primary object as literature. A symphony may be based upon the most obvious program, but cannot on that account forego the responsibility of being judged purely from the musical standpoint. So in symphonic drama—thereby indicating that music is to be the principal consideration—although the form of the story must mold the composer's work, there is not the slightest reason for his creation to be fettered in the telling—by the method, the poem. That a free treatment of the formal symphonic outline is quite adequate for the purpose may be seen particularly clearly in "Die Meistersinger."—Rutland Boughton, in the Musical Standard.

(To be continued.)

SOUSA'S BAND.

HAVING made a successful invasion of Continental Europe, making a five months' tour through France, Germany, Belgium and Holland, John Philip Sousa and his band will next visit Great Britain. The engagement at Manhattan Beach will close September 2, and immediately the band will go to Pittsburg to play for two weeks at the Exposition in that city.

At the close of the concert last Sunday afternoon Mr. Sousa was visited in his dressing room in the rear of the auditorium and asked about his plans.

"Last year, as you know," said he, "the band made a five months' tour of the Continental countries, but did not play in England or Scotland. We were importuned to extend our tour so as to take in Great Britain, but that was impossible owing to our engagements on this side of the ocean.

"Our purpose is to leave New York about the 25th of next month. We shall give our first concert at the Royal Albert Hall, 4th, and follow it up with two other concerts the 5th and 6th. Then we shall proceed to Glasgow, Scotland, to remain four weeks, playing daily at the Exposition. Following this engagement, the band will make a five weeks' tour through England and Scotland.

"We are backed by a syndicate of which Philip York, the manager of the Palace Theatre of London, is the president. They had a director over there while we were giving our winter concerts who heard the band and fell very much in love with it; and so they made us a proposition to handle our finances which was satisfactory, and we signed a contract with them, securing guarantees right through. We are guaranteed that our receipts will never be below a certain amount, and we get a percentage over that; so we are not risking anything, as we did on the former tour.

"You will give your last concert here September 2?"

"Yes, and then we go to Pittsburg, and will sail from New York about September 25."

"Then you will defer your return trip to Germany until some future time?"

"Well, we have had offers from all the managers who were associated with us last year in Germany, France, Holland, and they want us to go back, and we will consider that very carefully. I am a little bit in favor of a rest. Whether I will take it or not I don't know."

"When will you begin your American tour?"

"About January 14."

"Will you go to Cuba and Mexico?"

"I don't know whether we are booked down there or not. I think we will go as far south as Mexico, however."

"Are you going to Charleston to the Exposition?"

"I don't know anything about it. We won't be back until around Christmas anyway, and we will need rest."

"Have you ever been in London?"

"Oh, yes, often, and the band was in London last year, and we spent four days there and had a good time, but didn't play."

Mme. OGDEN CRANE.

The Art of Singing.

Special attention given to tone production. Founded on the pure Italian method. Sole teacher of Hattie Diamond Nathan, Edith Hutchins, Lillian Le Roy, Lillian Spitz and many others.

SUMMER SCHOOL:
Post Office Building, Asbury Park, N. J.,
From June 24 to September 14.
In New York Studio Thursdays,
3 East 14th Street,
Cor. Fifth Avenue, NEW YORK.

LOUISE B. VOIGT,

SOPRANO.

ORATORIO, CONCERT AND SONG RECITALS.

Address RICHARD BYRON, Manager,
301 West 139th Street, NEW YORK.

THIS SPACE IS TO BE DEVOTED TO THE INSERTION OF

PORTRAITS OF SUCCESSFUL BOWMAN PUPILS

Mr. BOWMAN is assigning LESSON HOURS for next season. Early application is suggested. He may be addressed until SEPT. 5th at HIS SUMMER HOME, Grand View Cottage, SQUIRREL ISLAND, COAST OF MAINE

E. M. BOWMAN. Piano and Theory Studio: Steinway Hall, New York

Organist and Conductor Baptist Temple Choir, Brooklyn.

Paris.

SCHOOL FOR ACTING.
EMIL BERTIN,
1er Régisseur de la Scène de l'Opera Comique.
Stage Practice. In Cast.
41 rue des Martyrs, Paris.

PROFESSOR OF FRENCH,
Special Method for Foreigners.
MLLE. MARIE FOURNAISE,
American reference. 29 Boulevard de Batignolles.

Mme. FLORENZA d'ARONA,
VOCAL PROFESSEUR,
5 rue Bassano, Paris.
Special sessions during the summer in REPERTOIRE AND INTERPRETATION.

LA VILLA VIOLETTE
TROCADERO,
22 Rue Raynouard. Mme. Fiessinger.
Assortment of rooms. Excellent table. Gardens. All facilities of 'bus and tram.

MISS JULIA KLUMPKÉ,
VIOLINISTE.
Pupil of MM. Eugene Ysaye and G. Rémy.
Concerts, Musicales, Lessons, Violin and Accompaniment. 10 rue Froidevaux, Paris.

THE FRENCH LANGUAGE
Rapidly, easily and correctly acquired by KIMON'S PRACTICAL SYSTEM.
(3 francs, post free.)
Private lessons by M. D. Kimon,
10 rue Cambon, Paris.

MLLE. GRACE LEE HESS SCHOOL.
Supplementary Education.
French Language Obligatory.
145 Avenue Victor Hugo, Paris.

INSTITUT MOZART.
Language. Complete Musical Education. Singing, Diction by best professors. Board and residence for pupils' comfort; quiet, convenient.
Apply to manager, MISS HEGEMANN,
7 rue du Commandant Riviere.

Mme. ROGER-MICLOS,
PIANO—PARIS.
Elementary and Superior Class and Private Public Pupils' Concerts.
(l'Etoile.) 27 Avenue MacMahon.

FRENCH SCHOOL
M. DUMARTHERAY,
From Sounds to Literature, Pronunciation, Accent, Conversation.
(Opera.) 14 rue Taitbout.

DELLE SEDIE, Paris.
Pure Italian Method. Complete course. Stage practice. Voice, lyric, declamation, languages, solfége, ensemble music, mise-en-scène.
Class and single lessons.
Regular course, three years. Terms moderate.
30 rue St. Petersbourg.

MLLE. MARTINI,
Artiste Opéra, Opéra Comique, Théâtre Lyrique, Professor of "Mime."
Silent Interpretation, Stage Business, Gesture, Pantomime, &c.
87 rue St. Lazare, Paris.

MLLE. NILANDE,
Authorized Teacher of the Yersin Phono-Rhythmic Method. French Diction. French Language.
(Av. Marceau). 37 rue de Chaillot.

MLLE. KIKINA,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
Ancienne Elève de MARCHESI,
100 Avenue de Villiers, Paris.

BALDELLI,
ITALIAN BARITONE.
Théâtre Royal, Madrid. Professeur de Chant.
(Champs Elysées). 6 rue Euler, Paris.

MME. MARIE ROZE,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT,
37 rue Joubert.
Chaussée d'Antin, Paris.
Mise-en-scène. Ensemble practice in cast. on stage.

MME. J. VIEUXTEMPS,
VOCAL PROFESSOR.
Classes and Private Lessons. Placing and Mending of Tones. 25 rue de Tocqueville (Monceau)

MME. ROBINSON DUFF,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
4 rue de la Renaissance l'Alma, Paris.

MME. IDA LURIG,
PROFESSEUR DE CHANT.
French—Italian—German.
Specialty of German Songs and Oratorio.
(Trocadero) 5 rue Petrarque, Paris.

Mme. ROSINE LABORDE,
PROF. DE CHANT.
62 rue de Ponthien, Paris.

LEIPSIC. DRESDEN
Mrs. SKENE-GIPSER.
Only opportunity in Leipsic to study the Leschetizky Method.
ONCE A WEEK IN DRESDEN.
Best recommendations by Leschetizky, Nikisch Hans Sitt and others.
Piano Lessons given in English or German.
STUDIO: 39b. Mitzer Strasse, LEIPSIC

OF THE
UNIVERSITY of ILLINOIS.

MUSICAL COURIER.

A WEEKLY JOURNAL DEVOTED TO MUSIC AND THE MUSIC TRADES.

Twenty-Second Year. Price 10 Cents. Subscription, $5.00. Foreign $6.00.—Annually.

VOL. XLIII—NO. 8. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 21, 1901. WHOLE NO. 1117

Photo by Barraud, London.

GREGORY HAST

New York.

MRS. RATCLIFFE CAPERTON,

Representative and assistant of LAMPERTI.
New York, 138 Fifth Avenue; Philadelphia, 408 South 18th Street. Summer residence, Dresden, Germany.
"Mrs. Ratcliffe Caperton is my only representative, and I advise all pupils desiring to study with me to be prepared by her."
Dresden, Sedanstrasse 17. G. B. LAMPERTI.

ALBERTO LAURENCE,

155 East 18th Street, New York.
The voice formed and developed; the art of singing taught; method after the purest Italian schools; a bad voice made good, true and beautiful.

HENRY T. FLECK,

Conductor Haarlem Philharmonic Society of the City of New York.
Address: Normal College, New York.

MISS NORA MAYNARD GREEN,

VOCAL TEACHER.
Studio: 303 Fifth Avenue, New York.

MAX KNITEL-TREUMANN,

BARITONE.
Voice Culture—Art of Singing.
Carnegie Hall, Room 837.
Mail address: 15 Washington Terrace, New York.

GEORGE M. GREENE,

Voice Culture and Artistic Singing.
Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.
Studio: 489 Fifth Ave., Mondays and Thursdays.
Residence and address:
424 West 23d Street, New York.

MR. C. WHITNEY COOMBS,

(Church of the Holy Communion). Organ lessons and practice given on one of Roosevelt's finest instruments. Special advantages for the study of church music and the training of boys' voices.
Address: 49 West 20th Street, New York.

TOM KARL,

Concerts, Recitals and Vocal Instruction.
Studio: Carnegie Hall.
Residence: 18 West 75th Street, New York.

MISS MARY FIDÉLIA BURT.

Author of Original Methods in Sight Singing, Ear Training, Musical Stenography. All materials copyrighted. No authorized teachers in Greater New York.
Address: 48 Lefferts Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.

E. H. LOCKHART, Bass-Baritone.

Studios: 121 East Twenty-third street, New York. Voices quickly placed and developed. Special work given for breath control. The Art of Singing taught by method used in the old Italian schools. Oratorio, Church, Concert, Opera.

DUDLEY BUCK, JR.,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Song Lecture Recitals.
810 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

HOWARD BROCKWAY,

COMPOSER-PIANIST.
Pupils received in Composition, Harmony, Piano and Song Interpretation.
Studio: 817-818 Carnegie Hall, New York.

WALTER HENRY HALL,

Conductor Oratorio Society, Brooklyn, N. Y. Organist and Choirmaster St. James' Church, New York.
For terms for conducting, address St. James' Church, Madison Ave. and 71st St., New York.

MME. LOUISE FINKEL,

SCHOOL OF VOCAL MUSIC.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.

EUGENE A. BERNSTEIN,

PIANIST.
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Studio: 160 East 70th Street, New York.

LUCILLE SMITH MORRIS,

PIANIST. INSTRUCTION, Concerts, Recitals.
Pupil of Wm. Sherwood and Mrs. A. K. Virgil.
Certified teacher of Virgil Clavier Method.
Studio: 201 West 81st Street, New York.

RICHARD ARNOLD,

Concertmaster Philharmonic Society.
INSTRUCTION.
208 East 61st Street, New York.

MR. FRANCIS STUART,

TEACHER OF SINGING.
First season in New York. Ten years in San Francisco. Pupil of Lamperti, the elder.
Being in full possession of my method of singing, he has the ability to form great artists.—FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
Reception hours, Mondays and Thursdays, 2 to 3.
Studio: 86 Madison Ave., near Twenty-eighth St.

LILLIE D'ANGELO BERGH

SCHOOL OF SINGING.
Operatic course. Teachers' special course, all departments. Famous specialists. Prospectus. The Albany Broadway and 52d Street, New York.

ROSETTA WIENER,

PIANO, SIGHT READING and New York School of Accompanying.
Carnegie Hall, 301-2.

MR. CHARLES LEE TRACY,

PIANOFORTE INSTRUCTION.
Certificated Teacher of the LESCHETIZKY METHOD.
Studio: Carnegie Hall, New York City.

MAX BENDHEIM,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
332 West 56th Street, New York City.

PAUL TIDDEN,

PIANIST.
314 East 15th Street, New York.
Will accept a limited number of pupils.

HERBERT HEMINGWAY JOY,

Voice Culture and Singing.
Italian School.
Studio: 116 Carnegie Hall, New York.

GUSTAV L. BECKER,

CONCERT PIANIST and TEACHER of PIANO and COMPOSITION.
Address: 1 West 104th Street, New York.

SIGNOR FILOTEO GRECO,

THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio: 51 West 35th Street, New York.

M. THEODOR BJORKSTEN AND MME. TORPADIE BJORKSTEN,

INSTRUCTORS IN SINGING.
New Studios: Carnegie Hall, New York.

PERRY AVERILL—BARITONE,

OPERA—ORATORIO—CONCERT AND VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
220 Central Park South, New York.

J. ARMOUR GALLOWAY,

Voice Culture and the Art of Singing,
Studio: Rooms 43 and 44 Y. M. C. A. Building, 318 West 57th Street, New York.

MARIE SEYMOUR BISSELL,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Pupils prepared for Church, Concert and Oratorio.
Studio: 135 East 16th Street, New York.

MRS. MARY HISSEM DE MOSS,

SOPRANO,
106 West 90th Street,
New York City.

SAMUEL B. MOYLE,

BASSO CANTANTE.
Oratorio, Concert, Musicales, Voice Culture—Italian Method. Tone Placing and Reparation a specialty. Studio: 136 Fifth Avenue, New York.

GEORGE SWEET,

OPERA, ORATORIO, CONCERT.
304 West 72d Street, New York.

J. HARRY WHEELER,

Voice Production and the Art of Singing.
Voices educated strictly in the Italian School.
Studio: 81 Fifth Ave., corner 16th St., New York.
July and August at Chautauqua Assembly.

MR. EDMUND SEVERN,
Violin, Composition, Ensemble.
MRS. EDMUND SEVERN,
Piano and Voice.
Studio: 131 West 56th Street, New York.
"Severn Trio."

ENRICO DUZENSI,

OPERA TENOR.
Will accept pupils for Voice Culture; good voice cultivated per contract; Italian method.
145 East 83d Street, near Lexington Ave.

CARL C. MÜLLER,

Translator of "Sechter's Fundamental Harmonies."
Author of "Tables for Harmonic Exercises."
Teacher of Piano, Harmony, Counterpoint and Composition. 1291 Lexington Ave., New York.

MME. HELENE MAIGILLE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION, REPERTOIRE.
Studio and residence: 1211-15 Carnegie Hall, New York.
Summer course.

MR. EMILIO AGRAMONTE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
251 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Summer Course.

WALTER JOHN HALL.

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Studio: 410 Carnegie Hall, New York.

J. WARREN ANDREWS,

CONCERT ORGANIST and TEACHER.
Send for list of Pupils holding positions.
Address: Church of the Divine Paternity, 76th St. and Eighth Ave., New York City.

THE NEW YORK INSTITUTE FOR VIOLIN PLAYING AND SCHOOL FOR PIANO AND VOCAL CULTURE.

230 East 62d Street

Complete musical education given to students from the beginning to the highest perfection.
F. & H. CARRI, Directors.

MME. LUISA CAPPIANI,

VOICE CULTURE, SKILL OF SINGING.
"The Loucila," 159 West 45th Street, New York.

RICHARD T. PERCY,

Concert Organist and Accompanist.
Organ Lessons at Marble Collegiate Church, corner Fifth Avenue, and 29th Street.
Studio: 1402 Broadway, New York.

MISS MARGARET GOETZ,

CONTRALTO (mezzo range).
Concerts, Song Recitals, Vocal Instruction.
Address: 36 Gramercy Park, New York.

THE ARENS VOCAL STUDIO

(affiliated with the American School of Opera).
Coaching a specialty.
Normal courses for Voice Teachers.
261 West Fifty-fourth Street, New York.
For circulars address Miss Lucie May Benedict, 25 West Sixty-fifth Street.
Reception hour, 2 p. m., Wednesdays excepted.
Fall term begins September 20.

HENRY HOLDEN HUSS,

Instruction in Piano and Theory of Music.
Studio for non-resident pupils: Steinway Hall.
Personal address: 318 East 150th Street, New York.

FRANCIS FISCHER POWERS,

VOICE CULTURE AND THE ART OF SINGING.
Studio (and invariable address): Carnegie Hall, New York. New York season, October 20 to May 1; Kansas City, Mo., season, Pepper Building. May 15 to August 1; Los Angeles, Cal., season, Westminster Hotel, August 10 to October 10.

MRS. HADDEN-ALEXANDER,

PIANIST.
Powers-Alexander Studios,
Carnegie Hall, New York.

HENRY SCHRADIECK'S

VIOLIN SCHOOL.
Violin, Piano, Theory and Ensemble Playing.
Residence and Studio:
535 Washington Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

WILLIAM H. BARBER,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
Studio: Steinway Hall, New York.

F. W. RIESBERG,

ACCOMPANIST.
Instruction—Piano, Organ, Harmony.
With THE MUSICAL COURIER.
Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.
Secretary-Treasurer New York State M. T. A.
Residence Studio:
954 8th Ave., corner 56th Street, New York.

S. C. BENNETT,

Instructor in Voice Building and the Art of Singing.
Teacher of Mme. Genevra Johnstone-Bishop and many other talented vocalists.
Studio: 836 Carnegie Hall, New York.

MME. EMMA RODERICK,

Rapid Development and Complete Education of the Voice. 118 West 44th Street, New York.

MRS. GRENVILLE SNELLING,

SOPRANO.
Concerts, Recitals, Musicals, Oratorio.
Address: 111 Fifth Avenue, New York.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF MUSIC,

179 East 64th Street, New York.
WM. M. SEMNACHER, Director.
I regard Mr. Semnacher as the greatest teacher of piano in this country.
Henry T. Fleck, Director of Music, Normal College, New York City.

MRS. HENRY SMOCK BOICE,

VOICE CULTURE.
Musical Art Department of Adelphi College.
Residence-Studio, 127 McDonough St., B'klyn, N.Y.
Pupils prepared for Church, Concert, Oratorio.
138 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Monday and Thursday Afternoons.

SERRANO VOCAL INSTITUTE,

323 East 14th Street, New York.

Conducted by EMILIA BENIE DE SERRANO and CARLOS A. DE SERRANO.

Teachers of Charlotte Maconda, Fannie Francisca.

KATHERINE RUTH HEYMAN,

Concert Pianiste.
145 East 23d Street, New York.

GUY DORÉ LATTA, OPERA TENOR

Voice Culture and Singing.
Tone production, placing and development a specialty. Guarantees to increase range and make any voice strong and beautiful. Summer rates.
372 West 120th Street, New York.

JOSEPH PIZZARELLO,

VOCAL INSTRUCTOR.
Voice Developed—Style—Opera.
43 West 34th Street, New York.

ALICE GARRIGUE MOTT,

VOCAL CULTURE.
Carnegie Hall, New York.

MR. AND MRS. THEO. J. TOEDT,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Home Studio: 151 East 62d Street, New York.

LENA DORIA DEVINE,

VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Representative Teacher of the methods of the famous master, FRANCESCO LAMPERTI.
136 Fifth Avenue, New York.

MISS FANNIE HIRSCH,

CONCERT AND ORATORIO.
DRAMATIC SOPRANO. Steinway Hall, or 170 East 61st St., New York.

MISS EMMA HOWSON,

PRIMA DONNA.
Royal Italian and English Opera Company.
Lamperti Method Absolutely Taught.
Tuesdays and Fridays, 96 Fifth Ave., New York.

EMMA THURSBY,

SOPRANO.
Will receive a limited number of pupils.
Residence-Studio: 34 Gramercy Park, New York.

ISIDORE LUCKSTONE,

The Accompanist and Musical Director.
STYLE, REPERTOIRE, FINISH, VOCAL CULTURE.
836 Lexington Ave., or address MUSICAL COURIER.

ARTHUR VOORHIS,

CONCERT PIANIST—INSTRUCTION.
100 Clifton Place, Jersey City, N. J.
Care MUSICAL COURIER, New York.

MME. ADELE LEWING

CONCERT PIANIST.
Authorized Teacher of the Leschetizky Method.
Special terms to out of town teachers.
Concerts. Recitals. Musicales.
Address: Care Steinway Hall, or 127 East 73d Street, New York.

MISS GENEVIEVE BISBEE,

PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Leschetizky Method. Summer courses.
1109-1110 Carnegie Hall, New York City.

KATHARINE PELTON,

Mezzo Soprano.
Sole Direction HENRY WOLFSOHN,
131 East 17th Street, New York.

CHARLOTTE A. BABCOCK,

Certificated Pupil of Dr. William Mason.
Pianoforte Instruction.
Studios: 810-14 Carnegie Hall, New York.
Summer season, Bernardsville, N. J.

SIGNOR A. CARBONE,

Member several years Metropolitan Grand Opera Company.
VOICE CULTURE. OPERA SCHOOL.
Summer Course.
Studio: 240 Fifth Ave., New York.

JOSEPH P. DONNELLY.

VOICE, ORGAN, PIANO.
Organist-Director All Saints,
Madison Avenue and 129th Street, New York.
Residence-Studio: 2033 Madison Avenue.
Brooklyn Studio: The Pouch Gallery.

CARL VENTH,

VIOLIN SCHOOL,
14 Seventh Avenue,
Brooklyn, N. Y.

STELLA PRINCE STOCKER.

COMPOSER-DIRECTOR.
Recital-Lectures, ARTHUR STOCKER, boy soprano, assisting. For season 1901-1902.
Address: Care MUSICAL COURIER, New York.

McCALL LANHAM, BARITONE.

Opera, Oratorio, Concert, Vocal Instruction.
Open for engagements. Address
Care American School of Applied Music,
212 West 59th Street, New York.

HUGO TROETSCHEL,

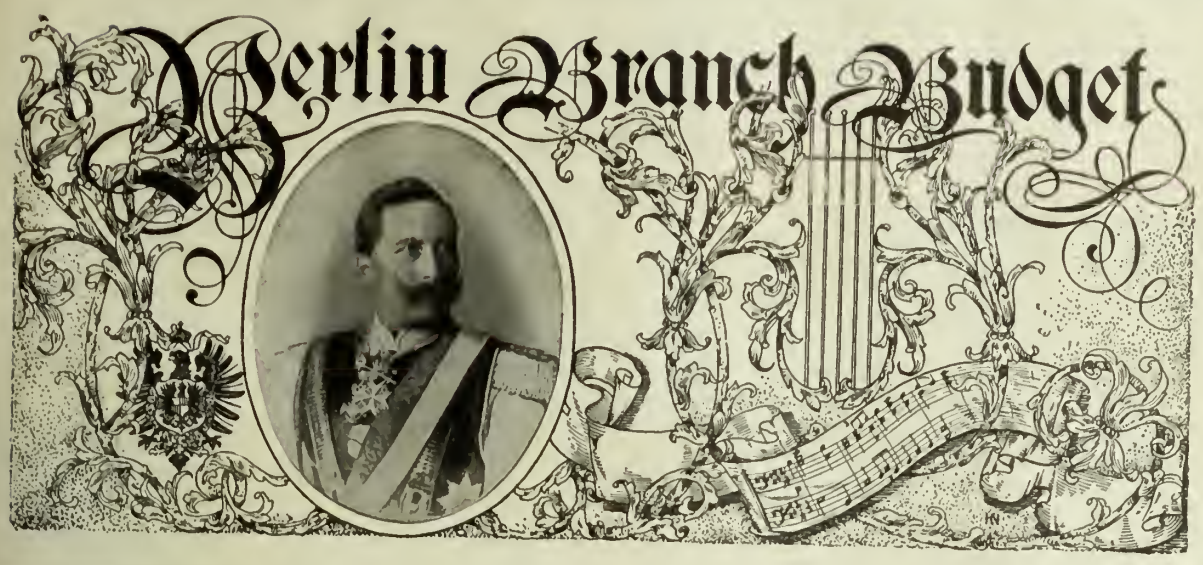
Organist Schermerhorn St. Evangelical Church.
Instruction: Piano—Organ—Theory.
Organ Lessons given on large three-manual Roosevelt Organ.
Residence: 384 Bainbridge St., Brooklyn, N. Y

Mr. & Mrs. WALTER H. ROBINSON,

TENOR AND CONTRALTO SOLOISTS
Oratorio, Concerts and Musicales.
Voice Production and Répertoire.
Studio: 405 Carnegie Hall, New York.

A. J. GOODRICH,

Personal or Correspondence Lessons in Harmony, Counterpoint, Composition, Orchestration and Practical Musicianship.
Author of "Analytical Harmony," "Theory of Interpretation," "Complete Music Analysis," "Synthetic Counterpoint," "Guide to a Practical Musicianship."
Glens Falls, N. Y.



GERMAN HEADQUARTERS OF THE MUSICAL COURIER,
BERLIN, W., LINKSTRASSE 17.

August 3, 1901

TO-DAY at the hospitable table of my American dentist, the chairs around which are of course much more comfortable, or at least more pleasant to be seated upon than are the ones in the other room, I was asked by another American, a casual visitor, "What music can a fellow hear in Berlin at the present moment?"

The easiest and most veracious reply would have been "None," but as the questioner to whom I was introduced on this occasion is one of the best amateurs of Birmingham, Ala., and a man who shows his interest in music not merely in words, but also by footing the bills and seeing to the deficits, if there be any, of the Oratorio, Boston Symphony or any other concerts he arranges for the benefit of and to awaken an interest in music in his rapidly growing town, I felt it incumbent upon myself to rack what little amount of brain nature has endowed me with, and which little during these hot days seems to be melting away quicker than the piece of ice they serve with the butter in a Berlin restaurant. The result of the racking was not much superior in size to the Latin ridiculous mouse of which the laboring mountain is reported to have been delivered.

We have, I said, at present in Germany a sort of Koster & Bial craze which was begotten by one Ernst von Wolzogen, and everything that is not Bayreuth to-day is Ueberbrett. If you want a taste of the latter and see what it is like, why all you have to do is to go to the Theater des Westens and there you will be initiated. It is true that the only number that might be called really musical upon the entire program is a solo furnished by an American girl, Miss May Hammacker, who is the possessor of one of those high coloratura voices which seem to grow now especially or almost exclusively in God's own country, and to hear which you would not need to travel from Alabama thirty-one hours to New York and thence seven days across the ocean and another twenty-four hours to Berlin; but at least it is music, and, by Jingo or no Jingo! it is the only music in the "Charivari" program..

"But, then, there are the 'Lebende Lieder,' the amiable dentist apologetically suggested, and, in fact, there is such a thing going on in Berlin at the miniature Trianon concert room of the New Royal Opera House, formerly Kroll's. It is a novelty, too, this setting in tableaux vivants of the contents of a more or less well-known Lied, while it is being sung to a piano, and the dripping accompaniment of the perspiration rolling down from the few individuals who on a hot evening like those we are now enduring will venture into the stuffy, close little hall. Æsthetic is the idea which prompted these Living Songs, but musically their value is not enhanced by means of the corporeal representation of, for instance, "The Little Wild Rose" of Goethe's immortal poem and Schubert's equally immortal melody. It is only mildly exciting, my dear Booth carpenter, like your iced tea, very pleasing and sweet, but also, like your iced tea, it makes you perspire all the more after partaking of it.

"Well, at least, you have summer opera?" inquired the music searching gentleman from Alabama. "Yes," I replied, "we have even had two enterprises of the sort this year, but one of them, which I should rather designate as summer trouble—if you will pardon this soft word—than as summer opera, has given up the ghost." It was chiefly dependent upon the drawing capacity of the Hamburg tenor Boettel, and as these have in course of time diminished as much as did his own voice, which has grown as diminutive as his person, and as in consequence nobody cared to hear once more and for the so and so manieth time his Lionel or his Maurico, which are his chief and perennial roles, this summer opera undertaking went quickly into the hands of the undertaker. It was indeed a "grave" case, as my old friend C. F. Daniels, an inveterate punster, used to say.

As for the other summer opera, the one of Director Morwitz, it is flourishing—at least as far as the trumpets are concerned—at the Berliner Theater, and if you want to have some fun, more fun indeed than music, why you go there to-night and attend a performance of "Les Huguenots." If it happens to be a copy of the one I witnessed there a few nights ago you will feel like jumping out of your seat to the rescue of the conductor, who has a hard time in keeping his orchestra together with the soloists or among themselves and a worse but vain wrestle with the chorus. Also the soloists will interest you to a certain extent, and you will unquestionably come to the same question that I put to myself: Is the music there for the tenors, or were tenors created for the sake of singing the music? One may think of the music of Meyerbeer chef d'œuvre what one wants; Saltus used to rave over it, Finck hates it, Krehbiel pretends to like it, and I don't dislike it except in a few episodes—it was certainly not composed for the sole purpose of a tenor's displaying his high notes in it. And yet Werner Alberti, another tenor with a big opinion of himself, seems to think differently. He at least has some high notes left, and he gives out a chest C and even a D flat which made the house ring—with applause; but he also clings to his high C like a seasick person to the railing upon the high sea, and this habit is nauseating to persons of musical taste. There is a lack of discretion and discrimination in this obtrusive style of singing high notes, regardless of the rhythm or dynamic force required at the moment, which makes such singers, almost without exception tenors, seem even more unmusical than they are proverbially reported to be.

Of the other male soloists in the cast I can praise Mr. Halper's Marcel, while Mr. Schmiedek as St. Bris was neither in voice nor in delivery equal to the demands of that rather difficult baritone part. He spoiled the great ensemble of the fourth act, in which the young conductor, Mr. Moerike, whom I saw for the first time on this occasion, had his hands full in order to be able to pull through without coming to a dead stop. Disaster, however, was averted, and altogether Mr. Moerike showed considerable circumspection and ability.

Superior to the male solo personnel were the ladies, notably Miss Margarete Koenig, who, in the part of Valentine, evinced considerable dramatic verve. Miss Paren was acceptable as the Queen, especially as far as coloratura technic was concerned, while for the remainder of her role her voice was lacking in color and musical charm. The latter quality, on the other hand, was the distinguishing feature of Miss Kaethe Meyer's singing of the well-known aria of Urbino.

Worse than the "Huguenot" was the "Tell" performance, albeit the tenor, Werner Alberti, was in excellent voice and brought down the house—not a very large or overcrowded one—with his luscious high C. But, then, in "Tell" the tenor part is not the principal one and the aforementioned Schmiedek was not at all fitted for the great requirements of a histrionic and vocal nature of the baritone title part. Really ludicrous was Mr. Rettschlag as Walther Fuerst. He also acts as stage manager at this summer opera, and ought to be satisfied to appear, or rather not to appear, but merely to act in that capacity. His singing and his voice are alike dreadful. Miss Larenis, evidently a very young lady, sang Mathilda with coloratura, but without expression. Gemmi's name, that is, the name of the impersonator of Tell's courageous little son, did not appear on the house bill, but deserved a mention, while the lady who sang Tell's wife might have remained unknown to fame without damage to the present generation or posterity. Chorus and partially also the orchestra behaved as badly as if the opera had been put on without a single rehearsal.

In my report of the first of this year's Bayreuth performances I indicated that secret fears existed in the Wagnerian camp regarding the influence of the proposed Munich Prince Regent Theatre performances, which are considered in the light of a rival establishment, instead of being hailed as a promoter of the Wagnerian cause.

The Allgemeiner Wagner Verein has since come out flat-footed in its recent publication in the Bayreuther Blaetter against the said undertaking, in which everything is denounced and the worst of motives are insinuated even as regards the proposed free ticket arrangement for worthy but poor musicians, which Wagner intended to introduce at Bayreuth, but which his heirs did not live up to to any appreciable degree, while the "deadheads" are to figure quite largely on the lists for admission to the new Munich Wagner Opera House. The renewed very strong interest shown, especially in Germany, in these Wagner model performances, and the consequent flocking to Bayreuth of multitudes who come away from there full of enthusiasm, and vowing a return on the next preferred occasion, shows how far the Wagner bubble is from bursting. And they are clever people there at the helm in Bayreuth. They intend to strike the iron while it is hot. Partially in all probability for the latter reason and partially also to meet the rivalry of the new Munich enterprise, the Bayreuth régime has announced its lately decided upon intention of giving performances also during the coming summer, instead of the usual biennial ones.

The operas named for representation at Bayreuth next summer are "Parsifal," of course; furthermore "The Flying Dutchman," "Tristan" and "Tannhäuser." This is surely an attractive repertory. Meanwhile a petition list has been opened at Bayreuth and has been signed by Albert Niemann, Engelbert Humperdinck and Professor Thoma as promoters, while it is fast being covered with the names of visitors to the festival performances, petitioning the Government to create special legislation in favor of "Parsifal," the rights for which will in due course expire in 1913, viz., thirty years after Wagner's death, while these people and of course the Wagner heirs want an extension of twenty years for the exclusive rights of performance. I doubt very much whether the Government, if it would be willing to father such a bill, would find a majority for it in the German Parliament. There are ever so many millions of people in the world who cannot afford a trip to Bayreuth, and who yet wish to hear a performance of "Parsifal," that their rights must be considered just as much as the wishes of the Wagner heirs.

The expiration of the privilege for Bayreuth would also in my opinion not interfere with the pilgrimage to Bayreuth, for certainly no other work of Wagner's will draw the people thither, as Wagner himself knew very well, when he desired and willed that his swan song should be held for thirty years at Bayreuth. In no other opera house, which in contrast to the Bayreuth Weihfestpiel would have to be called a secular one, will "Parsifal" ever be performed in the spirit and style as they are held sacred there by tradition and by the wishes of Wagner. But this fact will not prevent other opera houses, including those of the United States, from performing or, if you want to call it so, from profaning "Parsifal" after March 13, 1913.

Only recently an announcement was made to the effect that Berlin will have a Scala theatre and concert hall, at which composers of operas and operettas can have their musico-dramatic works brought out, or their symphonies and other compositions performed in first-class style by good artists of all sorts and descriptions—if they, the composers, will pay for the costs of production. The orchestra to be used in this new and quite novel undertaking is mentioned as the Berliner Tonkuenstler Orchestra, which was organized only last year, and of whose concerts, as you may or may not remember, I took notice repeatedly. Now the same body of musicians is out with a new and somewhat surprising announcement, viz., that they will give six subscription concerts at New Royal Opera House (Kroll's) during the course of the winter. The number of the executants is to be increased to 110, and the concerts are to be conducted by no less important a musical personage than Richard Strauss. This name alone seems sufficient guarantee for the worth of the proposed concerts, but whether they will or can prove a financial success is an entirely different question. An enterprising New York manager found out to his sorrow two seasons ago that, no matter how attractive the programs and the soloists, he could not get people to walk out to Kroll's Garden in the winter time. Aside from this question of inconvenient locality, the overcrowding of the Berlin concert season has already taken on such dimensions that, as was repeatedly shown last season, even the strongest sort of attractions lost their drawing power. We have ten symphony soirées of the Royal Orcestra under Weingartner and ten subscription concerts of the Philharmonic Orchestra under Nikisch, besides almost countless soloists' concerts with or without orchestra. What need therefore of giving any further subscription concerts, and where is the public to be drawn from that is to patronize them?

At the last sacred concert of the Royal Opera Chorus on Repentance Day the police interfered with the program, though it contained nothing secular, and although the concert was to be given at the Royal Opera House and for a charitable purpose, simply because an old police law decreed that only performances of an entire oratorio were permissible on that day, which the Government has officially designated as a day of repentance. You may remember that the program contained excerpts from "Parsifal" and from an oratorio by Haydn. Now this antiquated law has been changed to suit the purposes of such organizations as the above mentioned without giving cause for interference by the police, for it now reads: "Only performances of sacred music in churches and in the rooms of such concert or theatrical undertakings are permitted whose purpose it is to arrange representations in which higher art interests are taken care of." The verbiage is a little bit complicated, but the sense is clear and the purpose a good one.

An evil star seems to shine over male chorus competitions, especially when prizes offered by the Emperor are to be gained. As was the case at Brooklyn, it now happened in Cologne that the decision of the judges caused considerable irritation and no end of howling, charges and countercharges. The Cologne competition was an international one and so was the jury. Among the latter were some foreigners who rated the singing of the societies of their own nationality so highly that the first prize, donated by the Emperor, had to be awarded to a Hollandish male chorus, although the general opinion of the public and the other judges coincided as to the superior merits of some of the German and Belgian societies who were awarded the next prizes and who refused to accept them. The Aachen, Krefeld and Verviers socicties couched a protest against the decision of the prize jury, and thus the carefully planned and brilliantly carried through contest ended with a harsh dissonance, for which, as it looks at present, it will be hard to find a solution.

Cosima Wagner was indisposed through the excitement of the first two weeks of the Bayreuth public festival performances and the exacting duties which the tremendous number of all sorts of callers devolved upon her. Consequently the indefatigable woman had to retire for a few days and remained in bed until she was completely restored to health, which as I am informed by letter of a mutual friend, happened yesterday.

Nicolaus Rothmuehl, the ex-tenor of the Stuttgart Royal Court Opera, is made the defendant in a libel suit entered by the public prosecutor against him for alleged gross insults committed against concert opera singer Miss Sutter. There seems to be a law even for tenors, at least, in Wurtemberg.

Another engagement may also possibly interest you, although it runs the other way, for it takes an artist from America to Europe, instead of vice versa. I just learn that Johannes Werschinger, the well-known New York male chorus conductor, has been engaged as first chorusmaster of the Dresden Liedertafel, a society which numbers among its active members many soloists of note from the Royal Saxonian Court Opera personnel.

Wally Schauseil, the eminent Rhenish concert and oratorio singer, has been enrolled among the list of teachers of the Crefeld Conservatory, which, under the energetic guidance of Director Gottlieb Noren, is rapidly gaining in attendance and artistic importance.

Among the recent callers at this office were Ossip Gabrilowitsch on his passage from Carlsbad, where he visited Leschetizky, to his home in St. Petersburg; 'Squire Coop, from Salt Lake City, who is at present taking piano finishing lessons from no less a pedagogue than Leopold Godowsky; Mr. and Mrs. Henniot Levy, who since sailed for New York and will thence proceed to Halifax, N. S., where the gifted and modest young master will assume a position as first teacher of piano and composition; Eugene A. Bernstein, pianist, from New York, and his brother, Michel Bernstein, violinist, from Brussels.

O. F.

HERR TH. HABELMANN.—Herr Th. Habelmann, the famous European director of grand opera, will arrive from Breslau at the end of August, to become head of the operatic department of the American School of Opera.

During the winter the school will give a number of the standard grand operas and a series of new musical tableaux, arranged by Herr Habelmann, at Oscar Hammerstein's Theatre Republic.

The opera company, which is composed of members of the school and which is now on a successful tour, will be continued through the winter.

The full work of the school will begin the first part of September.

NEW MUSIC HALL FOR YALE.—Yale University at New Haven is to have a new music hall. The building is to be of marble and the preliminary plans fix the dimensions as 80x140 feet. The structure is to be four stories high, and the architects promise a handsome design.

WAGNER AND NIETZSCHE.

(Continued.)

IN the spring of 1872 Wagner left Tribschen and took up his abode in Bayreuth, and Nietzsche writes: "Tribschen has ceased to be. We walk about in mere ruins; emotion lies over everything, the sky, the clouds; the dog will not eat, the servants are sobbing continuously. We packed up the letters, manuscripts and books—ah, it was so sad." These words at once recall Launce's: "Our maid howling, our cat wringing her hands and all our house in a great perplexity," and make us wonder if Nietzsche found any representative of the "cruel hearted cur that did not shed one tear." Was Richard Wagner "the stone, the very pebble stone, who had no more pity in him than a dog"? He seems to have been stony to Nietzsche, who continues in this letter to confess that during the three years he had been near Tribschen he had made only twenty-three visits to it, that is about once in six weeks. If so, there cannot have been much mutual attraction between the composer and the philosopher. The latter writes: "I am glad that I have petrified that Tribschen world in my book." His enthusiasm, however, still continues, and on June 24, 1872, he writes from Basel:

"To-day is
St. John's day, St. John's day,
Flowers and ribbons bright and gay!

"MY DEAR FRIEND—I solemnly inform you hereby that I shall go to Munich for the performance of 'Tristan.' So we shall meet again; it is grand! Only I do not know when the general rehearsal or the first performance takes place. The Wochenblatt says 'Tristan' will be performed on the 28th. I shall telegraph at once to Bülow." Then a few days later he writes: "Quick, quick, my friend. Start at once. Friday evening first performance of 'Tristan'; Sunday, second performance. We must hear the work twice. Bülow telegraphed: 'Very glad you are coming.'"

Two doses of "Tristan" made Nietzsche long for another, and on July 20 he mentions a report that Bülow was to be general intendant at Munich, with Perfall as master of ceremonies. "Most fortunate news, provided they are true. If they are true, what hopes of ours depend on them. We must again see together 'Lohengrin,' the 'Hollander' and 'Tristan.' I think with rapture of a third draught of 'Tristan'; it is the best drink I know." In October he had received a letter from Frau Wagner, who was sick in bed, and "expecting a visit from Liszt," to which words he adds: "Der Schlund wird festgemuert," and on December 12 he reports to Gersdorff that he had spent two days with the Wagners at Strassburg, but he did not visit Wahnfried at Christmas. In February, 1873, he announces to Gersdorff that he had received very kind letters from the Wagners, who had been grieved at his absence on New Year's Day, and adds: "God knows how often I gave offense to the master. I wonder about it again and again, and cannot discover what it really was. So much the happier am I now that peace is made * * * Tell me your opinion about my repeated offenses. I cannot imagine anyone being more loyal to Wagner in all important matters than I am, but in petty, subordinate things, and in a certain—for me sanitarily necessary—abstinence from more frequent personal intercourse I must preserve my freedom in order to keep that loyalty in a

SHERWOOD,
Greatest American Pianist.
ESTHER FEÉ,
Violinist.
(Paris—In America Nov. 1.)
BRUNO STEINDEL,
The Noted 'Cellist.
CLARA MURRAY,
Harpist.
LEONE LANGDON KEY,
Organist.
KATHERINE HOFMANN,
Regular Accompanist.

CHARLES R. BAKER,
MANAGER OF
High Class and Distinguished MUSICAL ARTISTS,
Fine Arts Building,
CHICAGO.

ELECTA GIFFORD,
Soprano.
(Late of Royal Opera, Amsterdam.)
MABELLE CRAWFORD,
Contralto.
GLENN HALL,
Tenor.
SYDNEY LLOYD WRIGHTSON,
The English Baritone.
MASTER LLOYD SIMONSON,
The Famous Boy Soprano.

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

MARY WOOD CHASE, PIANO VIRTUOSA.
For Terms, Dates, &c., address HANNAH & HAMLIN, Managers.
514 Kimball Hall, CHICAGO.
Personal address: 3031 Prairie Avenue.

Mr. & Mrs. BICKNELL YOUNG,
67 Kimball Hall,
CHICAGO, ILL.

EDWARD MEEK,
BARITONE.
Pupils accepted.
924 Fine Arts Building, Chicago.

NINETEENTH YEAR.
1899-1900.
MRS. REGINA WATSON'S SCHOOL
for the
HIGHER ART OF PIANO PLAYING.
297 Indiana Street, Chicago, Ill.

HELEN BUCKLEY, SOPRANO.
Vocal Instruction.
ORATORIO, CONCERTS, RECITALS.
5316 MADISON AVENUE, CHICAGO.

THE SPIERING QUARTET
708 Fine Arts Building, Michigan Boulevard, CHICAGO.

MAURICE ARONSON PIANIST.
Concerts, Recitals, Musicales, Lecture
Auditorium Building (Tower, 1406) Chicago
For the past four years chief assistant to Leopold Godowsky. Four Competent Assistants. Write for circula

W. C. E. SEEBOECK, PIANIST,
Just returned from Europe, where he made very successfu appearances.
Studio 727 FINE ARTS BUILDING. CHICAGO. IL

Mrs. GEORGE A. COE,
(BARTH and MOSZKOWSKI)
Pianist and Lecturer.
640 University Place, EVANSTON, IL

higher sense. I never thought for a moment of having given offense on this occasion. Tell me your opinion, dearest friend."

The tone of this letter seems to indicate that Nietzsche's mind was beginning to be affected, for in April he writes again about his absence at Christmas, and hopes that a visit to Bayreuth will put things to rights, while he thanks Gersdorff for his advice, which had opened his eyes and banished the gnats and flies from which he suffered. A very different tone is seen in a letter of September: "I have received a cheerful letter from R. W. In reference to the Straussiad he wrote, 'I have read it again, and swear to you by God that I regard you as the only man who knows what I mean'"—a sentence evidently designed to quiet the morbid sensitiveness of poor Nietzsche.

Death of a Veteran Musician.

CAPTAIN ALEXANDER SCOTT, a veteran of the Civil War, and one of Rochester's prominent musicians, died at his home in that city on August 7. In 1852 Mr. Scott organized Scott's Band, which later became the band of the Fifty-fourth Regiment.

At the outbreak of the Civil War Mr. Scott enlisted in the Thirteenth Cavalry, New York Volunteers, and later joined the Twenty-seventh Regiment. At the close of the four years' service he held the position of captain. He was a life member of Rochester Lodge 660, F. and A. M.

Captain Scott is survived by his widow and two married daughters, Mrs. Peter Sheridan and Mrs. George Metz.

WANTED—A first-class bass or tenor, who has some experience as a teacher, to take charge of the vocal department of Norfolk Conservatory of Music; none but first class need apply. Address Norfolk Conservatory of Music, Norfolk, Va.

ESTABLISHED 1867.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, President.

The Largest and Most Complete Institution of Musical Learning in America.

COLLEGE BUILDING, 202 MICHIGAN BLVD.

The finest structure in existence devoted exclusively to a Musical College.

SCHOOL OF ACTING, MUSIC ELOCUTION, ORATORY, LANGUAGES.

BOARD OF MUSICAL DIRECTORS.

DR. F. ZIEGFELD, DR. LOUIS FALK,
HANS VON SCHILLER, WILLIAM CASTLE,
BERNARD LISTEMANN, S. E. JACOBSOHN,
RUDOLPH GANZ, CHARLES GAUTHIER.
HERMAN DEVRIES,

HART CONWAY, Director School of Acting.

Catalogue Mailed Free.

Music in Canada.

THE following summary of official announcements which THE MUSICAL COURIER has received regarding the concert and operatic season of 1901-1902 in Toronto indicates that the "Queen City of the West" will not be lacking in musical attractions: The forthcoming musical season promises to be the most interesting and opulent of any yet known in the annals of Toronto, and already the trustees of Massey Music Hall have arranged a large number of engagements. An auspicious opening will be the performance of grand opera early in October, at the time of the visit of the Duke and Duchess of York. Never will opera have been produced in Canada under more distinguished auspices furnished by the presence of the royal party. Mr. Grau has promised that all his leading soloists will appear in the cast on the evening of the royal attendance, and the list will include Sembrich, as well as Calvé and Eames. A complete stage will be built, and a superstructure erected capable of carrying all the scenic effects which will be brought from the Metropolitan Opera House, New York. Thousands of dollars will be spent on decorations, Massey Hall being transformed into a bower illustrative of the floral and other natural products of Canada. The royal box will be in the centre of the front rows of the first gallery and the first three rows of seats will be altered into a row of loges.

Nordica, who is a great favorite in Toronto, will be heard here in concert on November 21.

Early in November an engagement of special interest will be that of William Worth Bailey, the wonderful blind violinist, who makes his first American tour after a long period of study abroad. Shvinski, the Polish pianist, who created so marked an impression here on his appearance with the Leipsic Orchestra, will be welcomed with great pleasure. Scottish vocalist Mme. Annie Grey will give one or more of her descriptive song recitals, and Mme. Lilli Lehmann will probably be heard here during the second week in January. A fortnight later will come the New York Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Emil Paur, who created the most profound enthusiasm in this Canadian city two years ago.

The public will hail with considerable delight the announcement that Plunket Greene returns after an absence of three years to give recitals in Canada. H. Whitney Tew is another interpreter who has gained great fame in England, and who will be heard in recital. The above list, brilliant as it is, is not as yet complete. If Clara Butt comes to America she will be heard at Massey Hall this coming season, and Mr. Houston is also in communication with Paderewski.

PUPILS AT THE VON KLENNER SUMMER SCHOOL.

PROMINENT among vocalists who have taken advantage of Mme. Evans Von Klenner's Summer School of Singing at Lakewood, Lake Chautauqua, N. Y., is Miss Lulu A. Potter, mezzo-soprano, of Altoona, Pa. Miss Potter, having studied the Viardot-Garcia method for several years under Madame Von Klenner's competent and inspiring instruction, is now one of its most enthusiastic exponents. She directs several choirs in Altoona, frequently appears as soloist, and in the capacity of instructor is likewise meeting with most gratifying results. The Cecelia Quartet, which she directs, interprets exacting numbers very creditably.

In addition to Miss Potter the members of the organization are Maude Lafferty, soprano; Mabelle Hughes, contralto, and Lenetta Heilman, contralto. All of these young musicians are now attending the Von Klenner Summer School at Lakewood, where their voices and powers of interpretation have developed remarkably. Compositions which the quartet includes in its repertory are: "Little Red Lark," Baier; "Night," Schubert; "The Lost Chord," Sullivan-Anderson; "The Lament of Mi Yen," Hayes, and many other selections. The admirable results accomplished by Miss Potter in Altoona forcibly illustrate that Madame Von Klenner is able to impart the mysteries and exalted purposes of teaching, as well as the art of singing. A representative of THE MUSICAL COURIER who recently attended an afternoon session of her summer school was so fortunate as to hear the Cecelia Quartet and several other promising vocalists, including Miss Gonzella Byrne, of Selma, Ala., and Miss Wyllie Du Pre, of Fort Deposit, Ala.

HERR KAPELLMEISTER ADOLF GOETTMANN (Berlin, W., Buelowstr, 85A), from whose well-known vocal school during the past year three tenors, one baritone and a coloratura singer were engaged for important German and foreign opera houses, as well as two mezzo sopranos, two altos and one baritone appeared with very good success in concert and in church, will reopen his vocal class on September 16. The experienced voice builder accepts newcomers from September 1, after his return from Marburg, where, upon invitation of the university authorities of that town, he is holding lectures upon the subject of "Education of the Vocal Organ and Speaking Tone Production."

CHICAGO ADVERTISEMENTS.

MISS ESTHER FEE, VIOLINISTE.

(PARIS—IN AMERICA NOVEMBER 1st)

Exclusive Management CHARLES R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

HARRISON M. WILD, CONCERT ORGANIST.

Studio 6, .. 241 .. Wabash Ave., CHICAGO.

Piano and Organ Instruction.

D. A. CLIPPINGER,
THE ART OF SINGING.
Conductor.
410 Kimball Hall, Chicago, Ill.

EARL R. DRAKE,
VIOLIN VIRTUOSO.
Teacher.
Studio: Kimball Hall, Chicago.

VICTOR GARWOOD,
Kimball Hall, Chicago.

William A. WILLETT, BARITONE.
Address, Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.

ALLEN SPENCER,
PIANIST. Concerts, Recitals.
Address: KIMBALL HALL, CHICAGO.

KARLETON HACKETT,
Teacher of Singing,
Kimball Hall, Chicago.

MARY PECK THOMSON,
SOPRANO,
620 Fine Arts Building, CHICAGO.

CAROLYN LOUISE WILLARD,
CONCERT PIANIST. Instruction.
Pupil of Ernst Jedliczka, Bloomfield-Zeisler.
For terms and dates address
4164 Lake Avenue, Chicago.

FREDERICK WARREN,
BARITONE,
Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.

MUSICAL KINDERGARTEN FOR THE PIANOFORTE.
BY FANNIE CHURCH PARSONS.
For full information concerning normal instruction or children's class work, address . . .
MRS. PARSONS' NORMAL TRAINING SCHOOL,
Handel Hall, CHICAGO, ILL.

Mrs. THEODORE WORCESTER, Pianist.
(GODOWSKY.)
Concerts, Recitals and Salon Musicales. Recitals from Russian Composers.
ADDRESS: 1402 Auditorium Tower, CHICAGO.

R. CAPOUL CUTTRISS WARDE,
SINGING MASTER.
The teacher of many prominent artists now before the public. Send for list.
STUDIO: No. 911 Cable Building, Cor. Jackson and Wabash, CHICAGO.

MINNIE CRUDUP VESEY, MEZZO CONTRALTO.
CONCERTS, RECITALS, VOCAL TEACHER, COACHING.
Address HANNNH & HAMLIN, 514 Kimball Hall, CHICAGO.

Chicago Auditorium Conservatory
FREDERIC GRANT GLEASON, Director. ROY ARTHUR HUNT, Manager.
FALL TERM OPENS SEPT. 9. Catalogue free.

ROWDON Basso-Cantante,
623 Fine Arts Building,
CHICAGO, ILL.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY,
JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, Director, Kimball Building, 243 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO.
ALL BRANCHES OF MUSIC. DRAMATIC ART. TEACHERS' TRAINING DEPARTMENT.
JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, VICTOR GARWOOD, ALLEN H. SPENCER, GERTRUDE MURDOUGH, GLENN DILLARD GUNN, HOWARD WELLS, Piano; KARLETON HACKETT, NOYES B. MINER, HOLMES COWPER, GLENN HALL, RAGNA LINNE, MABEL GOODWIN, LOUISE BLISH, Singing; WILHELM MIDDELSCHULTE, Organ; JAN VAN OORDT, Violin; ADOLPH WEIDIG, Composition; JAN KALAS, Violoncello, and thirty other superior instructors.
Catalogue mailed free. 243 Wabash Avenue, care of American Conservatory.

Gottschalk Lyric School. Musical and Dramatic.
CATALOGUE MAILED ON APPLICATION.
L. G. GOTTSCHALK, Director. KIMBALL HALL, 243-253 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO.

JEAN GERARDY IN AUSTRALIA.

FROM far away Australia come the most enthusiastic reports of the wonderful success of the well known 'cellist, Jean Gerardy, in that country. As has already been announced Gerardy will make another tour of the United States this season. The criticisms in the Australian papers are long, and therefore it is only possible to give the subjoined extracts:

FIRST CONCERT.

Before M. Gerardy had been playing a minute to the large audience which welcomed him with hearty acclamation in the Town Hall last night it was evident to every one that a supreme artist was being heard. Anything nearer perfection in instrumental music can hardly be met with anywhere. M. Gerardy is not only a peerless executant on the 'cello, he is also a musician gifted with the keenest poetic insight and the faultless taste which is a constant element in the quality of genius. To enlarge on M. Gerardy's technical command of bow and finger, double-stopping, harmonics, and so on, would be merely to catalogue every device of which the 'cello is capable, and declaring emphatically that this player can do them all with a masterful ease and unfailing dexterity.

The quality of tone produced is truly nothing less than marvelous. On the C string, for instance, the volume of sound is often as rich and sonorous as the bourdon on an organ, while, with an almost incredibly long down bow, a delicate film, the merest thread of sound, is prolonged with an unsurpassable delicacy and purity of effect. M. Gerardy's energy and fire, when required, are equal to his tender treatment of the simplest bit of melody. All through the evening there was never a quarter-tone of doubtful intonation, never a wrongly punctuated bit of phrasing, and—highest praise of all—never the slightest tendency to abuse great mechanical skill in the direction of exaggeration. Much was expected of M. Gerardy, but it must be admitted that expectations were more than fulfilled.

An interesting concerto of Saint-Saëns was the violoncellist's first piece. It is practically in three movements welded into one whole; an opening allegro, a kind of scherzo intermezzo in B flat and a final allegro. The work abounds, of course, in effective tours de force, octave passages, and so on, and is also full of melodic charm. The contrasted shades of feeling in the number were brought out with taking picturesqueness and thoughtful knowledge. A sonata of Boccherini was given with an alternate daintiness and strength which captivated the audience, and as an encore was played with exquisite smoothness a dreamy cantabile piece of Saint-Saëns, "The Swan." The variations of Servais on the valse, said to be by Schubert, "Le Desir," was the evening's example of bravura playing, and, although it is perhaps curious of Servais to treat the theme "à la Polacca," yet M. Gerardy electrified his hearers by a display of skill in every kind of brilliant ornamentation possible, and good-naturedly gave as another encore Chopin's E flat nocturne. At the end Schumann's "Evening Song" was, as it were, just "breathed" out of the 'cello, and the well-known air of Bach from the Suite in D received a dignified treatment, coupled with the minutest finish, which was altogether admirable. Popper's showy trifle, the "Spinning Song," finished the evening's work of an artist who must be put down as one of the most distinguished who has ever visited Australia.—Melbourne Argus.

JEAN GERARDY CREATES A GREAT SENSATION.

The habitual concert goer has long been trained to appreciate the violoncello as a solo instrument, thanks to one or two artists whom it has been our good fortune to retain here, and to this fact much of the interest manifested in the first appearance of the Belgian 'cellist, M. Jean Gerardy, is only justly to be ascribed. The large audience that assembled in the Town Hall last night was expectant of good things. The young European artist had brought with him a reputation that ranks him among the famous masters of the 'cello, and in this respect people were not disappointed. It was clearly an occasion of brilliant promise carried out to an equally brilliant realization. The player was inspiring, and his listeners were in complete sympathy, applauding him at every pause.

This result was inevitable. M. Gerardy's tone is assuredly remarkable for its breadth and purity, while his technical facility and certainty, which may fairly be described as faultless, enable him to play with ease such concert bravura pieces as the Schubert-Servais Variations and Popper's "Spinnerlied," figuring on yesterday's program. But he equally succeeds by the warmth and fervor of his expression, wherein the intimate qualities of the 'cello afford such great scope. For example, nothing pleased the audience better than the simple, but beautiful, Bach air from the Suite in D. This was played with such tender feeling as to create a furore, and the repetition of the favorite melody could not be escaped, though placed in the middle of a group. Doubtless M. Gerardy's twenty-three years precludes the idea that he has reached the full measure of his powers, either in tone or musical expression; yet one could scarcely wish for more perfect 'cello playing than he so magically accomplishes. The sensuous charm of his tone would haunt the memory of any hearer, while the æsthetic symmetry, grace and strength of his playing can scarcely less appeal to the general concert goer, as well as to the trained musician, who was so largely in evidence last night.

Saint-Saëns, with whom we are slowly but surely becoming familiarized, chiefly by the "Poèmes Symphoniques," headed an exceptionally interesting program. The work of the eminent French composer selected was the 'cello concerto, new to Sydney, and therefore possessing the charm of novelty. Its form, unfettered by precedents, is constructed on the "ex parvo multum" principle, the leading themes by a process of evolution and metamorphosis, welding the concerto into an organic whole—impressive, strenuous, emotional. M. Gerardy gave a particularly free and rubato performance of the rhapsodical work, in conjunction with Herr Edouard Scharff at the piano, and the audience testified its pleasure with unstinted applause. A sonata by the prolific eighteenth century composer Boccherini followed. The rhythmical contours and melodic grace of the Italian composition called, perhaps, for a more reposeful style, but M. Gerardy's playing captivated the listeners, and the artist, unable to avoid an encore, gave the exquisite "Swan" melody from Saint-Saëns' "Carnival of the Animals" for piano. The Servais Variations, familiarized to Sydney concert-goers by Herr Vollmar, and already referred to, proved the tour de force of the evening. The extra given here, Popper's "Papillon" sketch, was played with amazing velocity, only to be surpassed by the prestissimo execution of the same composer's "Spinnerlied," which sensational feat brought the concert to a brilliant close.—Daily Telegraph, Sydney, July 10.

THE JEAN GERARDY CONCERTS.

The Viennese critic who dubbed M. Jean Gerardy "the Sarasate of the violoncello" so generally summed up his marvelous attainments that the repetition of the felicitous phrase forms the most forcible introduction to a review of his art that can be employed. The début of this famous player at the Sydney Town Hall last night proved indeed an occasion of the loftiest interest. The audience was no doubt prepared to hear a great executant in M. Gerardy, whose lightning-like rapidity in brilliant passages certainly rivals that of the Spanish violinist on the smaller instrument. But there was yet room for surprise in the elevation and breadth of the young artist's style, in his evident preference for the finest classic music, and in the consistently elevated level upon which he maintained his program from the first number to the last—or, rather, to be strictly accurate, from the first number to the last but one.

It is impossible wholly to judge any great player from one or even two performances. M. Gerardy, who in reality maintains evenness in a style that is always at an altitude, seemed to new listeners to grow better and better at each remove, and it was in the penultimate piece just referred to that enthusiasm reached its height. The 'cellist at that point rendered an aria from Bach's Suite in D—our old friend Bach's Air for G String—with such an immense volume of pure tone and with such perfect taste that the general enthusiasm broke all bounds. The artist accepted the encore, and repeated the noble aria, one of the most soul-satisfying pieces of music ever written. The Bach number had been preceded by Schumann's beautiful "Abendlied," rendered with the pure and heart-reaching tone the Belgian 'cellist achieves in legato music, and it was followed by the last number of the evening, the familiar "Spinnerlied" of Popper. M. Gerardy's marvelous celerity in this bright and dainty trifle, taken at a positively alarming presto, made the audience almost delirious with delight. The recalls were overwhelming, and then everybody left the hall laughing and congratulating one another upon their good fortune in hearing a tour de force of such an astonishing character.

The concert was opened with Saint-Saëns' Concerto for 'Cello in A minor—the only one the composer has written for the instrument, and heard here for the first time. The two allegros rendered last night were remarkable for the alternation of brilliant passages for the soloist, with brief lapses into plaintive phrases, which were played with exquisite tenderness. Herr Eduard Scharff, who as pianist supplied the orchestral accompaniment, rendered lightly and charmingly a dainty introduction to a captivating theme for 'cello, in which M. Gerardy employed all his art in expressing the poetry of the music, and in so putting in the delicate shakes as to make them an intrinsic part of the theme instead of a mere ornament. Some passages of colossal difficulty near the close were given with immense energy, dash and precision. Boccherini is another composer who has written just one sonata for the 'cello. This is the famous Sonata in A, which so often figures on the programs of the Saturday and Monday "Pops" in London. Boccherini was himself a 'cellist, so that one would have expected him to write more for the instrument. Two movements—the andante and allegro—were given last night. The andante provides a pure stream of melody, which flows on steadily through interpolated grace phrases like a rivulet over pebbles. The charm of M. Gerardy's interpretation consisted in the finished ease with which he executed these deviations from the melody, still preserving the onward march and rhythm of the whole. The allegro, with its many quaint harmonic effects, was also perfectly played, and the 'cellist was recalled again and again. At last he added as encore "The Swan," by Saint-Saëns. Later in the evening this truly great artist rendered F. Servais' Variations on Schubert's touching theme, "Le Desir," a piece of almost formidable dimensions. The encore was Popper's "Papillon," so played as to suggest the light fluttering of the restless wings.—Sydney Herald, July 10.

AN ARTISTIC TRIUMPH.

Heralded by no flourish of trumpets has Gerardy come among us. A fortnight ago hardly a soul in Melbourne knew he was coming, and only the few who endeavor, with what success they may, at this end of the world to keep themselves au courant with what is doing at the other had heard of his name. A bare summary of the young 'cellist's life and career has appeared in the newspapers—beyond that, nothing; and the arts of the concert entrepreneur, which are supposed to be so important in launching a new artistic "venture," have not been exercised at all. Yet Gerardy can truly declare that he has taken Melbourne by storm; he has come, has played and has conquered. As fully and unreservedly under the Southern Cross as beneath his own northern skies can he proudly claim to rank with the famous artists in the musical world of to-day.

When such a man comes among us it is less a question of what he does than of how he does it. Despite the admitted paucity of genuine solos for the 'cello, enough has been written or adapted for the instrument to obviate all necessity—such as would beset a solo flautist, for example—of "filling up" with trash; and, rather than play trash, we can well believe that Gerardy would prefer to keep silent. A tone, full, rich and resonant, an intonation faultless almost to a hair's breadth, a broad and dignified phrasing, and an execution that laughs at difficulties—these are among the qualifications which have raised Jean Gerardy, at the age of twenty-three years, literally to the top of the artistic tree. With such an exponent of the 'cello available, there is no need to inquire on whose shoulders the mantle of Piatti, now verging on four score years, may worthily fall. There may be others as good as Gerardy, though we frankly admit we have not heard of them; but he at least is good enough to fill the shoes of even the great Bergamasco 'cellist himself. In cantabile passages he literally makes the instrument "sing," and sing in those rich, warm tones that we read about in connection with the 'cello far more often than we hear them; there is none (or next to none) of the "scoop" in a long "slide," which is so often disagreeably prominent with even expert performers. And the treatment of the more showy and difficult passages is almost superb in its faultless accuracy, while in the most rapid work the tone is always pure and round. Gerardy is the kind of player of whom men yet young—if they have had the good fortune to hear him—will talk rapturously to their grandchildren. They will not be believed, of course—no "laudator temporis acti" ever is—and of course brave men may live after Agamemnon. But Gerardy is about as "brave" a 'cellist as any of us living are likely to hear for the rest of our lives; and those who omit to profit by his almost accidental presence in Melbourne- and his stay is to be very brief—will miss an artistic treat that is not likely to be presented again for their acceptance.

The actual program may be dismissed in a few words. It was one in all respects worthy of the performer's great repute, comprising as it did the fine concerto in A minor by Saint-Saëns, the second subject in the opening movement of which work was alone worth going miles to hear as Gerardy expounded it to us; an interesting and rarely heard sonata by Boccherini, the clever and effective variations by Servais on Schubert's "Le Desir," Bach's noble Air for the G String, as it is called when played on the violin, but for which a new name yet to be devised becomes necessary if 'cellists generally are going to include it in their repertory; Schumann's "Abendlied" and a trickily intricate "Spinnerlied" by Popper. No special reference is needed to these separate samples of his almost matchless skill. It will suffice to say that the audience sat as if spellbound while Gerardy played, and almost roared at him to come back and play again as soon as he had finished.—Melbourne Argus.

IN MOZART'S HOME.

[SPECIAL TO THE MUSICAL COURIER.]

SALZBURG, August 6, 1901.

THE musical festival under the auspices of the Mozarteum was opened to-day at 11 a. m. with a festival concert directed by Josef Hellmesberger, with the Vienna Philharmonic. In the audience of over 1,000 occupying the Aula Academia there were many English and American enthusiasts, and the "protector" of the festival, Archduke Eugen, who resides at Innsbruck, was prominent among the distinguished visitors.

Works of Mozart only were performed, the soloists Petschnikoff, violinist, and Frau Wedekind, of Dresden, participating.

At 7:30 this evening "Don Juan" was produced at the theatre, Ritter singing the title role, Heschz being cast for Leporello. Lilli Lehmann was the Donna Anna, Edith Walker the Elvira, Wedekind the Zerlina; Schaezle, of Stuttgart, the Mazetto; Aranyi, of Budapest, the Ottavio, and Klöpfer, of Munich, the Commandant. Director Hummel, of the Mozarteum, occupied the function of conductor.

The festival continues with concerts to-morrow and Thursday, and "Don Juan" is to be repeated that night.

B.

A Successful Pupil of Mme. De Wienzkowska.

WILLIAM BAUER, the pianist, who is to tour with Leonora Jackson this season, gave a successful concert at the Ridgefield Club, Ridgefield, Conn., on July 27, at which he was assisted by Henry Schmitt, violinist, and Herman Riedrich, 'cellist, both members of the New York Philharmonic Society. Ridgefield is exclusively a summer place, and in the season is filled with many wealthy and fashionable New Yorkers. The audience which greeted Mr. Bauer and Messrs. Schmitt and Riedrich was a representative one. Mr. Bauer's playing was received with enthusiasm. As solos he played works by Rubinstein and Moszkowski, and the ensemble numbers of the evening were the Schubert Trio, op. 99, and the Grieg Trio, op. 112, for piano, violin and 'cello.

A report of the concert in the Ridgefield Press of August 1 referred as follows to Mr. Bauer:

Mr. Bauer showed his skill and proficiency. He is a sympathetic performer, entering into the spirit of the theme and interpreting the meaning of the composer with rare power. His technic was perfect, and the difficult composition was rendered so well that the audience demanded an encore, to which he gracefully responded, giving Moszkowski's "Etincelles." * * *

This is probably the last time Ridgefield people will have the opportunity of listening to Mr. Bauer in concert. He has resigned his position as organist at St. Stephen's, and this fall begins a concert tour through the United States with Miss Leonora Jackson, the violinist, who is well known in Ridgefield, and who gave such a successful concert here last season. Mr. Bauer's friends will wish him a full measure of success in this new undertaking, and knowing his ability have no fears but that he will achieve it.

Mr. Bauer is a pupil of Madame De Wienzkowska, founder and directress of the Leschetizky School of Piano Playing at Carnegie Hall.

Mr. Bauer is to give before the end of the summer a recital at Greenwich, Conn., where there is a large colony of music lovers, spending the vacation months.

ST. LOUIS ADVERTISEMENTS.

HOMER MOORE, BARITONE.
The Odeon, St. Louis, Mo.

MRS. STELLA KELLOGG HAINES,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION:
101, 102, 103 Vista Building, Cor. Grand and Franklin, ST. LOUIS, MO.

ALEXANDER HENNEMAN,
VOCAL CULTURE.
Opera. Oratorio.
Coaching.
Henneman Hall, 2723 Olive St., ST. LOUIS.

GREGORY HAST.

IN the approaching brief tournée of Gregory Hast, the renowned English tenor whom Manager Loudon G. Charlton will introduce to American audiences this winter, there is every reason to expect one of the important artistic and musical events of the coming season.

For Mr. Hast's fame has preceded him that he is emphatically the vogue in England. The place accorded him on the Continent, as well as in England, is unquestionably proof of his right to be considered an artist of very high rank, while the most conservative critics abroad credit him with a real, pure tenor voice that is singularly rich and musical in quality, beautiful in tone, and of wide compass.

In adition to this rare natural gift, Mr. Hast has exceptional artistic style, his interpretation is cultivated, refined and sympathetic, and not the least of his fine qualities are his linguistic versatility and clear enunciation, which enable him to interpret Italian, French, German and English songs with equal facility and fidelity, and of which he has a vast and varied repertory.

Mr. Hast began his musical career as boy soloist at St. Peter's, Vauxhall, where he received his first musical education under Alfred Ayre, the noted organist. Of late years Mr. Hast, in addition to his concert work, has held some of the important church appointments in London.

On the retirement of Edward Lloyd he accepted the appointment of principal tenor at the London ballad concerts of Boosey & Co. Aside from his appearances at these concerts, Mr. Hast has appeared with conspicuous success and distinction at the Royal Albert Hall concerts, the Patti concerts, the St. James' Hall "Pops," the Crystal Palace Saturday concerts, London, and at the Richter concerts at Manchester and the leading music festivals in Great Britain.

In the Queen's Hall oratorio concerts Mr. Hast has also figured prominently, proving himself as capable and scholarly an interpreter of the serious sacred music as of the ballad and lieder. It is worthy of note that he studied oratorio with the veteran Sims Reeves and his repertory includes between sixty and seventy oratorios and cantatas.

Mr. Hast was the original Chibiabos, and the beautiful tenor song in "Hiawatha's Wedding Feast," "Onaway, Awake Beloved," was written for him by the composer, Coleridge Taylor, who accompanied Mr. Hast when the latter sang the song at one of his Queen's Hall recitals.

Mr. Hast can give but November and December to America, as he is booked for an early autumnal tour abroad, and in January and February and March, 1902, he has other foreign dates to fill.

Although a stranger on this side of the water, there is a strong demand for his appearances in oratorio and recital, and his tour, though brief, will be brilliant, as indicated by his long list of bookings.

Here is what the London critics say of Mr. Hast:

Emphatically, among the gems of the concert must be placed the contributions of Gregory Hast. * * * His art is of a most delicate order. His minute finish is remarkable, but it has never a vestige of the artificial. It is always solely employed as a means to an end—as a means of revealing the subtle beauties of a composition, and of giving appropriate expression to the feeling and the poetry of the music. Mr. Hast is one of those singers whose first aim is to get at the very heart of the words as well as the music of a song. He treats the verse as an elocutionist would, and the music, not as the dominating partner, but as an integral part of the work as a whole—as a sensitively beautiful means of expression. To this end he unites with his polished vocalization an unstrained clearness of enunciation that scores of singers would do well to imitate. In other words, he sings in unaffected English. Mr. Hast is one of the few singers who can take a quaint old folksong, and, while preserving all its native simplicity, can idealize it into a work of art. He did so with the old Sussex folksong, "The Week Before Easter." A higher flight still was taken in "How Deep the Slumber of the Floods." One of Mr. Hast's gifts is that of achieving intensity without volume of tone. With never a touch of exaggeration, he can breathe a world of intensity into a whisper. Here his whispered ejaculation, "How deep the slumber of the floods," had a profundity of meaning. In its subdued polished phrases the song was a masterpiece of simple but fervent feeling, while the manner in which the voice lingered on the closing words, "My soul shall find repose," and finally melted away into silence, was nothing short of exquisite. Another gem of unaffected pathos was the encore song, "O Mary Dear." Here again the closing words were a triumph. They were just "O Mary dear, that you were here" words that might have been made a mere empty jingle, but into which Mr. Hast breathed an infinitude of heartfelt yearning and pathos, governed by a sweet mellowed spirit of resignation. Daily Telegraph.

The singer's lovely tenor voice, perfectly finished method, and delightful musicianship were exhibited in a variety of songs Italian, French, German and English—and his command of all four languages is not the least satisfactory of his good qualities. Times.

A tenor singer of great taste and refinement, and his rendering of an unhackneyed series of songs was remarkable for finish, expressiveness and clearness of articulation. Standard.

It is rarely that one is able to record so splendid an achievement both in voice and style as must be placed to the credit of Mr. Hast. Morning Leader.

Gregory Hast has a charming tenor voice, which he employed with great taste in Italian, German and English songs. Era.

Gregory Hast sang by special request "Mainacht," one of the most inspired of all Brahms' songs, which, when sung as it was the other evening, would bring immortality to its composer had he never written anything besides. MUSICAL COURIER.

There are not many among the vast multitude of oratorio singers who have the purity of style and the distinction, the charm of expression and the artistic perception of Mr. Hast. Globe.

Mr. Hast has remarkable qualifications as a soloist, for he owns a well trained and expressive tenor voice, and sings with notable culture and refinement.—Lady's Pictorial.

Nordica.

A LETTER from Bad Boll in the Black Forest, Germany, tells of the ideal rustic life Madame Nordica is enjoying in her summer home there, preparatory to her transcontinental recital tour in this country this winter under direction of Loudon G. Charlton. Madame Nordica takes long tramps in heavy boots and short skirts, studying every living thing she sees as only those do who have a genuine love for nature; she gathers wild flowers with which she adorns her drawing room, and otherwise is she enjoying the charm of quiet and peace and rest.

It is not all dolce far niente, however, for Madame Nordica devotes a certain number of hours daily to serious, earnest work in preparing, with infinite care as to every detail, an extensive repertory for her recital programs and the roles of Isolde and Elsa, with which she is to open the new Prince Regent Theatre in Munich next month, just prior to her departure for America. Her voice is in superb condition and she is looking forward with enthusiastic pleasure to her coming season's tour.

Musicale by Summer Pupils.

AN informal musicale, given Monday evening, August 12, at the School of Applied Music by some of the summer pupils, assisted by a few invited musicians, was greatly enjoyed by those fortunate enough to be in attendance. Miss Lytton, of Taylor, Tex., gave Godard's "Cavalier Fantastique" in a charming manner. Her tone is pure and clear. Mr. Ely, a young violonist from Athens, Ohio, played two delightful numbers. Mr. Keith, a former student in the college, gave much pleasure to his hearers in his rendition of Brownell's "Four Leaf Clover," and Gaynor's "Because She Kissed It." Miss Soulè, of Portland, Ore., gave Seeling's "Lorelei" in a highly artistic manner. Mrs. Phister, of Athens, Ohio, a pupil of Mr. Lanham's, sang two songs of Hawley's—"I Long for You" and "When Love Is Gone." This lady has a beautiful voice, and she is learning how to use it, too. Mr. Brawley, who has just returned from abroad, finished the evening's program with two piano solos.

HADDEN-ALEXANDER PIANO RECITAL.

MRS. STELLA HADDEN-ALEXANDER gave her second in the series of faculty recitals at the Clavier Piano School last Tuesday evening (August 13), but THE MUSICAL COURIER's representative assigned to report the recital considered Mrs. Alexander's playing from the artistic rather than from the teacher point of view. Imagination, intellectuality, power and a well rounded and beautiful technic all combined to impress the listeners and arouse in them the appreciation of an unusual and delightful musical evening. The program, an ideal one for a summer night, follows:

Sonata, op. 36, for 'cello and piano.....Grieg
Charles Russell and Mrs. Alexander.
Two Songs (Liszt's transcription).....Schumann
Frühlingsnacht.
Widmung.
The Elf.....Schumann
Reconnaissance, from Carnival, op. 9.....Schumann
Romance, B flat.....Schumann
Scherzo, B flat minor.....Chopin
The Eagle.....MacDowell
To a Water Lily.....MacDowell
Idyl, op. 28, No. 4.....MacDowell
Polonaise, op. 46.....MacDowell
The Music Box.....Liadow
Rhapsodie Hongroise, No. 12.....Liszt

Every trained musician has a reverence for Bach and Beethoven; nevertheless, it is a relief once in a while to attend a piano recital that does not open with a Bach prelude or a Beethoven sonata. A study of Mrs. Alexander's program shows her modern and up to date understanding. However, those familiar with the training and work of this artist know that she is equally well schooled in the classics. Her leaning toward the romantic composers is what commends her playing to the awakened minds in this age. It is long since this writer enjoyed a program more than that given by Mrs. Alexander last Tuesday evening. There was something irresistible in the groups by Schumann and MacDowell as Mrs. Alexander played them. She has grasped in Schumann's compositions what the Germans describe as das innerliche. The pianist truly sang on the notes in "Frühlingsnacht" and "Widmung," and the playing of the graceful "Elf," the number from "The Carnival," and the enchanting little Romance was all thoroughly Schumannesque. Only someone who has experienced a happy union of heart and soul can ever hope to interpret Schumann as Mrs. Alexander interprets him.

In "The Eagle" MacDowell depicts the stanza by Tennyson, in which the proud bird falls like a "thunderbolt" from the mountain, and in this characteristic little piece, as well as the favorite, "To a Water Lily," and the poetic "Idyl," Mrs. Alexander infused the warmth and charm that are needed to perform MacDowell's smaller compositions. Correct conception also marked her playing of the MacDowell Polonaise, a broad and masterful score, surely. The Chopin Scherzo revealed certain latent powers of the pianist. "The Music Box," by Liadow, showed again the singing quality as well as finish of the performer's technic. While recalled again and again after other numbers, the audience insisted on a second performance of "The Music Box."

The Grieg Sonata for 'cello and piano, played by Charles Russell and Mrs. Alexander, is remarkable for the rugged themes, thoroughly true to the country of the composer. As a piece of chamber music writing it is more symmetrical than most of his ensemble music. As performed by Mr. Russell and Mrs. Alexander the discriminating musician was compelled to grant what Grieg admirers claim for their idol. Mr. Russell's technic is ample, and moreover he was in hearty sympathy with the pianist. Mrs. Alexander closed her recital with a brilliant performance of the Twelfth Hungarian Rhapsody by Liszt.

The summer term at the Clavier Piano School closed last Friday. As a leading member of the faculty, Mrs. Alexander contributed her part to the remarkable success of the session. Above her own signature Mrs. Alexander

AUGUSTA COTTLOW,
THE DISTINGUISHED YOUNG AMERICAN PIANISTE.
Management: HENRY WOLFSOHN, 131 East 17th St., New York, and
THE HAMLIN CO., Kimball Building, Chicago, Ill.

MRS.
Carl Alves
Has Resumed Vocal Instruction at her Home Studio:
1146 Park Ave. near 91st Street, New York.

LOUIS V. SAAR
PIANO and COMPOSITION.
REPERTOIRE and SONG INTERPRETATION.
Will resume teaching on September 16.
Early application for instruction is suggested.
126 East 83d Street, - - NEW YORK CITY.

ARTHUR
BERESFORD,
BASSO-BARITONE.
STEINERT HALL, BOSTON, MASS.

HENRI G. SCOTT,
BASSO.
ORATORIO, CONCERT, RECITALS.
ADDRESS: 14 E. 42d Street, NEW YORK.
2117 N. 20th Street, PHILADELPHIA.

MISS
MONTEFIORE
VOICE.
Private Studio and Address:
THE ORMONDE,
2030 Broadway, corner 70th St., New York.

ETHEL L. ROBINSON,
(LONDON CONCERT DIRECTION)
Telegrams: "Musikchor, London."
122 Beaufort St., S. W.,
LONDON, ENGLAND.

has added her tribute to the wonderful work of A. K. Virgil, the director of the school and, as the whole musical world must know to-day, one of the most remarkable teachers of his time. Having received one side of her education through Mr. Virgil's teaching and influence, Mrs. Alexander is one of many bright minds who have recognized the results of a thorough mastery of the principles underlying Mr. Virgil's teaching methods. Individuality has ever been his aim, and his pupils in various parts of the world attest their loyality by guiding others in the way opened by him.

COMPOSITIONS OF SEBASTIAN B. SCHLESINGER.

Op. 30.—Give Me My Own Again. Song for tenor, with organ accompaniment (ad libitum), published by A. P. Schmidt, Boston and Leipsic.

Op. 31.—Seven Songs, published by A. P. Schmidt.
- To a Flower, for contralto or baritone.
- The Maid of Marlivale, for soprano.
- Once and Now, for mezzo soprano or baritone.
- The Sweet May, for soprano.
- My Wedding Day, for soprano or tenor.
- Only a Baby Small, for mezzo soprano.
- Mother and Child, for mezzo soprano.

Op. 32.—Schilflieder (Reed Songs). For mezzo soprano, published by Novello, Ewer & Co., New York and London.

Op. 33.—The Skylark. For soprano or tenor, published by Augener & Co., Newgate street, London, E. C.

Op. 34.—Album of Children's Songs. For mezzo soprano, published by Boosey & Co., Regent street, London.
- The Sleepy Little Sister.
- Work While You Work.
- The Song in the Night.
- The Woodcock and the Sparrow.
- My Little Sister.
- Seven.
- Wake, Darling, Wake!
- My Fairest Child.

Op. 35.—Nine Songs. Complete, published by E. Ascherberg & Co., London.
- Echoes, for soprano.
- Awake in Heaven, for mezzo soprano.
- Oh! Cease, Sweet Music, for mezzo soprano.
- Cradle Song, for mezzo soprano.
- The Ferry Boat, for mezzo soprano.
- We Have Been Friends, for mezzo soprano.
- The Evening Star, for mezzo soprano.
- Love Is Waking, for soprano.
- Who'd 'a' Thought It, for mezzo soprano.
- Love Is Waking, in F, separately, published by E. Ascherberg & Co. and E. Schuberth & Co., New York.

Op. 36.—A Bird's Farewell. For mixed chorus, published by A. P. Schmidt, Boston and Leipsic.

Op. 37.—The Sweetest of Lasses. For baritone, published by Chappell & Co., 50 New Bond street, W., London.

GERMAN ORCHESTRA PLAYS MRS. STOCKER'S COMPOSITIONS.—The orchestral program at Warnemunde, Germany, on August 1, included the overture to "Raoul," by Mrs. Stella Prince Stocker. The Kur Orchestra, conducted by Heinrich Schulz, is one of the best in Germany, and the concerts at Warnemund always attract the fashionable and exclusive guests. As before announced in THE MUSICAL COURIER, Mrs. Stocker gave several lecture-recitals at the above charming resort. Accompanied by her son, Master Arthur Stocker, Mrs. Stocker expects to arrive in this country this week. Before resuming her work in New York she will spend a fortnight at Ocean Grove.

Musical . . People.

Miss Katherine Ricker, a Maine contralto, is spending the summer at Silver Springs, Col.

Miss Hulda Kreher, a violinist of Tampa, Fla., has been playing with success at Southern resorts.

Eugene Cowles, the operatic basso, gave a recital at the First Baptist Church at Olean, N. Y., on July 31.

Arthur Shepherd, a Salt Lake City pianist and composer, expects to locate in Boston this coming autumn.

Miss Anna Glenn Thompson gave a piano recital on July 30 at Moore's Hall, Avondale, near Birmingham, Ala.

F. Edwin Lane, a pupil of A. Ceruelos, and one of the young pianists of Troy, N. Y., is giving recitals at Maine summer resorts.

Mrs. Maud Banton, a New York soprano, appeared as soloist at a concert given on August 4 at Congress Spring Park, Saratoga.

Miss Olive Annette Wheat, soprano, and her sister, Miss Genevieve Wheat, contralto, are singing in the Western Chautauqua assemblies.

O. E. Tiede, a professor in Sedalia College of Music, at Sedalia, Mo., is planning to give a series of important concerts this fall and winter.

Miss Estelle Solon, a young singer of the Northwest, gave concerts during the month of July at Duluth, Minn., and Superior, in the same State.

Miss Minnie Fish Griffin, another Western singer of promise, will be one of the soloists at a concert to be given in the near future at Grand Haven, Mich.

Mrs. Julia Dills Maddox, who has studied in New York with Oscar Saenger, gave a song recital on July 30 in the chapel of the Christian Church at Tamsville, Tex.

Miss Mabel Crowley, soprano soloist in the choir of the Roman Catholic Church of SS. Peter and Paul at Detroit, Mich., is reputed to be one of the coming singers in the West.

Miss Margaret Shear, a pupil of Dr. Carl Dufft, assisted by her distinguished teacher and other artists, gave a concert at Skaneateles, N. Y., on August 5, and at Cazenovia on August 6.

Miss Emily Monserratt Bradley, of New York, assisted by Miss Bessie McCall, violinist, and Winnie McCall, pianist, gave a song recital on August 14 at the Hotel Ontario, Rochester, N. Y.

Miss Abbie Clarkson Totten, soprano, and members of her concert company are giving concerts at the Long Island and other summer resorts. Miss Totten has been very successful in her work.

Mrs. Anna Latour, of New Orleans, gave a musicale at her residence a fortnight ago, in honor of her pupils. The hostess was assisted by her sister, Mrs. Robert Labarre, Jr., and her friend, Miss Carmel Sarky.

Miss Margaret M. Leverich, a Brooklyn (N. Y.) contralto; Edward Gray, a New York tenor, with Mrs. Gray as pianist, appeared together at a concert given August 6 at the Vermont House, Saratoga Springs.

Miss Eunice Berkling, of Cincinnati, has been very successful as teacher of vocal music at Centenary College, Cleveland, Tenn. Centenary is a seminary for girls and young women, directed by the Methodist denomination.

The latest musical organization recently formed in New Jersey is the Bluestone Quartet, of Montclair, with the following members: Thomas Corcoran, first tenor; Nicholas Nead, second tenor; Frank O'Keefe, baritone, and James Eagan, basso.

The second annual festival of the Rockingham County (N. H.) Musical Association was opened on August 19 in the Convention Hall at Hampton Beach. Henry G. Blaisdell is the conductor. The festival will conclude on Friday of this week, August 23.

Mrs. Ada Lawrence Harrington, a soprano, of Worcester, Mass.; Noble W. Krieder, a pianist of Indianapolis, Ind., and Charles Furber, member of the class of 1902 of Dartmouth College, appeared at a pleasant musicale given at the Lakeview, at Enfield, N. H.

A musicale in connection with a floral exhibition at Penn Yan, N. Y., attracted a large number of musical people. The artists included one of the leading quartets of Rochester, consisting of Mrs. Grace Body Schrader, soprano soloist First Baptist Church; Miss Marie Whiting, contralto soloist Park Avenue Baptist Church; Harry J. Jackson, tenor soloist St. Paul's Episcopal Church; Edward Andreanson, late director and baritone soloist Lake Avenue Baptist Church.

The twenty-third festival of the Sullivan Musical Association, of Newport, N. H., was opened at the opera house in that place, on Monday, August 19, and will continue until Saturday. The following artists have been engaged for the occasion: Emil Mollenhauer, of Boston, conductor; Clarence Dana Mooney, pianist; Anita Rio, of New York, soprano; Mary Porter Mitchell, of Boston, contralto; Glenn Hall, of New York, tenor; Gwilym Miles, of New York, baritone, and solo members of the Boston Festival Orchestra.

The musicians of Cambridge, Md., recently held a meeting at the home of W. T. Stevens, for the purpose of consolidating the two orchestras of the place. This was done and the following elected as officers: L. W. Andrews, president; Philip Geoghegan, secretary and treasurer; W. T. Stevens, business manager; W. B. Johnson, director; A. J. Steiner, leader. The personnel of the new orchestra is as follows: A. J. Steiner, Geo. R. Schroeder, Otto Hoege, first violins; Murray Hutchinson, Fred Gerlach, Herbert Hoege, second violins; Walter Warrington, viola; L. W. Andrews, first cornet; Philip Geoghegan, second cornet; W. T. Stevens, first clarionet; W. B. Johnson, second clarionet; C. M. Paul, trombone; H. H. Johnson, bass; Mrs. W. T. Stevens, piano.

Miss Lotta Mills a Bride.

MRS. HARRIET HALL MILLS announces the marriage of her daughter, Lotta Mills, to Williston Hough. The bride is one of the young and successful pianists of this country. After November 1 Mr. and Mrs. Hough will be "at home" in Florence, Italy. The ceremony took place on August 8. This nuptial event is the third this summer among the artists managed last season by Mr. Charlton. The other brides are Miss Louise B. Voigt, the soprano, who married Mr. Overstreet, and Miss Grace Preston, the contralto, who married Dr. Naylor, of Hatford, Conn.

HARRY J. FELLOWS' POPULARITY.—The tenor Harry J. Fellows, who is to tour with Leonora Jackson this season, is an uncommonly gifted chorus conductor, as well as distinguished soloist. Wherever he goes, whether to serve as soloist or director, he makes a host of friends. Mr. Fellows has had charge of the music department and large chorus at the new Chautauqua Assembly at Urbana, Ohio, the past few weeks. The following lines from the Daily Times Citizen tell of his popularity:

"Too much cannot be said of Mr. Fellows and his work with the chorus. He is a master, a musical director of wonderful ability. * * * His solos captured the audience."

E. PRESSON MILLER,
VOICE CULTURE.
601-602 Carnegie Hall, New York.

Carlos N. Sanchez
OPERATIC TENOR, TEACHER OF SINGING.
Voice Building a Specialty. Repertory: Church, Oratorio and Opera.
Studios: 138 Fifth Ave., New York.
Monday, Wednesday, Thursday and Saturday
RESIDENCE: 758 WEST END AVENUE, Corner 97th Street.

JOSEPHINE S. JACOBY,
CONTRALTO.
Address: 104 West 58th Street, NEW YORK

1901 ANNUAL TOUR OF 1902
PAUR SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
EMIL PAUR, Conductor.
Conductor New York Philharmonic.
Formerly Conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra
WISSNER PIANO USED.
Miss ANNA MILLAR, Manager, 540 Fulton St. Brooklyn, N. Y

FLORENZA D'ARONA ON ART AND NATIONALITY.

IS it possible to sing French without a shade of foreign accent? Some claim that it is, but the more truthful know, and will admit, that it is rarely heard pure from the lips of a foreigner. Then why insist upon a foreigner singing in French? The French do not; the foreigner's French is inflicted upon them by the singing teacher. The English accent is intolerable to the French people, and, what is more, they will not accept it.

Have the English or Americans ever heard a Frenchman or a German speak English without a trifling accent? Never! They may speak correctly and write it perfectly, but one's nationality will invariably intrude itself in a greater or lesser degree. What, then, do we do? Force the foreigner to sing oratorio, or "Home, Sweet Home," and exact a perfect pronunciation of a foreign tongue; or do we, like other nations (excepting the French), permit the foreign singer to sing in the language he prefers?

The latter of course.

But France does not lend herself to any such condescension. While the German and Italian languages are at times permitted, if a foreign pupil expects success, or the French stamp of approval, he must sing in French and without a foreign accent.

It makes no difference how well the artist may sing or what the would-be débutant may have achieved in his art, he must sing his operatic roles in French, and if a suspicion of a foreign accent cling to his words it is all up with him.

Nor is that all.

The French do not approve of substituting the foreign singer for one of their own nationality. The French money is for the French subject. This characteristic is not alone noticeable in the vocal career, but in all other pursuits of life. The preference is given to the French always, not alone because he is French, but because they veritably believe that there is no nation on the face of the earth that can approach them in anything. This idea has come down from generation to generation, and while in the far past there was reason for this, they have for the last fifty years rested too much upon their former laurels and stood still basking in the remnants of their glory while other nations have progressed.

To-day there are many cities as beautiful as Paris and preferable to reside in, but as the French are not travelers, and openly declare they would be foolish to spend money and time to see what can always be found right here in Paris, there is no such thing as rooting up their prejudices.

To the American vocal student this is disastrous. He comes to Paris, is forced by his vocal teacher to study his repertory in French, to learn French diction, with the understanding that his début shall be made at the Opéra Comique—even the Grand Opera is held out as bait for the unsophisticated believer. With what result? Someone in authority is approached, and professional courtesy gains for that pupil a hearing. Compliments to the teacher and pupil follow, but the fulfillment of that pupil's hopes for the last year or two's hard study (fighting with the language more than anything else)—the début! What is said about that? Nothing. The pupil discouraged and heartsick goes to Italy or Germany, and then sometimes we hear of him. There artistic worth is appreciated if it exists. Many more lessons are sometimes necessary, but they at least hold out hope that has some foundation to build upon.

In Paris the wretched accent of the peasant is even heard upon the Grand Opera stage, but it is unmistakably French in its faultiness, therefore it meets with indulgence, where the foreign accent of the lady or gentleman who is crowned with superior ability and artistic merit is vetoed and excluded.

But how is it, some may ask, that our Americans have sung at the Opéra Comique, and even at the Grand Opera? In reply I need merely to state that in addition to giving his services without pay, the débutant must pull every available wire, submit to every trial of competition with the French artist upon French soil; indifference, intrigue, disappointment, and when at last procuring a chance to appear he must endure and fight through a prejudice as unyielding as it is possible to imagine, so that nine times out of ten he can rarely do himself justice.

Nor is that all. The French will tolerate him but a short time. The subscribers soon send in a request for the withdrawal of the American. And yet these self-same American singers in many respects are so far ahead of their French colleagues that it is almost a compliment not to be admired by a nation which in its conceit will actually applaud its own incompetency.

But the poor young artist does not think this and goes through a discouragement that is pitiful and sometimes fatal to his career.

The truth of the matter is that the sentimental and morbid taste of the French is a standard by which they judge artistic ability. Strange as it may appear they are a cold people, excitable, passionate and full of sickly sentiment, but without heart or reasoning powers. The noble sentiments expressed by the German in his music and in his renditions do not appeal to the average Frenchman as warm, full of feeling and soul. A pure conception and reading tire him. The whines and maudlin tremolos heard by their so-called great artists at the opera, with exaggerated situations, are unreasonably inartistic from the truest sense of the word. American students here soon realize this state of affairs, and while admitting that the Opera has a number of phenomenally beautiful voices, are forced to acknowledge that these singers do not know how to use them.

At a dinner on Christmas Day one of the few French savants of singing said to me that he never went to the opera nowadays, as there were nothing but shrieks and howls to be heard; such so-called singing offended his ideas of music, so he preferred to spend his time and money in going to orchestral concerts.

This was a great admission for a Frenchman to make, but he had heard my views and no doubt realized there was nothing to be gained by holding back his own.

The Parisians have but one world and that is the Paris world. There are thousands and thousands of Americans spending thousands and thousands of hard earned American dollars to study from French singing teachers, who delude them with promises of a début or a season in Paris opera. How many Americans out of these thousands do we hear of who have "got there," or have really succeeded when all was said and done? If vocal achievement is not the barrier the foreign accent is, and when the time arrives for a fulfillment of all the promises held out to the young American, there is invariably a well thought out excuse based generally upon the foreign accent, and, as said before, the singer seeks another country wherein to make his début. Our American students work more in day to acquire the French language than the average French bookkeeper works in a week. And for what? If he by luck and chance gets before a French public he can remain but a few weeks at most, and must seek other fields of exploit. Then he finds the French language is almost unnecessary and gives place to German and Italian; yes, even English I am happy to say. While a singer had better know as many languages as possible, German is assuredly the operatic language of the future in spite of its so-called "gutturals." It is, however, one of the most difficult things imaginable to open the eyes of the Parisians to the virtues of any other nation in any one thing, particularly to the abilities of the American singer. I do not look upon this as a misfortune for the American singer, for there is no money for him to make in Paris engagements. It is in other countries he finds a substantial proof of his ability, and all that success means to him.

In advising my French pupils to study languages, one and all show disinclination. Paris, said one young girl, is "la nie" for a French singer; she would want a tremendous recompense to be induced to leave it, she said. Paris is their world; other countries an occasional necessary endurance—that is all.

This love for one's country, one's people, one's language, is the mainspring of the success of France. They ridiculously overdo and look at everything through French glasses, and this makes them unjust to other nations; but there is no mistaking it, the down with the foreigner is up with the French. Why does not America take a stand and teach France a well deserved and tardy lesson? Where art exists there is no such thing as nationality.

THE MUSICAL COURIER has commenced a good fight and I hope I shall live to see the day when, in America at least, American singers may meet with the justice they so well merit.

FLORENZA D'ARONA,
5 Rue de Bassano, Paris.

RANGE OF THE SINGING VOICE.

NEW ORLEANS, La., August 4, 1901.

Editors The Musical Courier:

I herewith repeat a statement that I lately made in the presence of several musicians—and I was "called down." There is a young lady studying singing in New Orleans whose voice has a range of over three octaves, viz., low E flat to high E natural. Please state in your paper the range of Madame Patti, also how many singers have had such a range, and also who among the present singers has such a range.

SUBSCRIBER.

WE do not believe that Adelina Patti ever consented to have her voice measured by a yard stick. It is reasonably certain that Patti never sang down to low E flat. In her prime she did not sing to high F. Patti has preserved the velvety quality of her medium register because she never stretched her voice in either direction, and never attempted to sing music unsuited to her voice. Lilli Lehmann, on the other hand, has a frightful hole in her voice—right in the middle. Her high notes are yet endurable and her chest register will pass, but the medium is all gone. Authorities do not seem to agree on the compass of singers' voices. One biographer states that Nilsson's voice in its prime had a range of two octaves and a half; we should say from A to C sharp. There have been a few wonderful dramatic sopranos who boasted of three octaves, but truly there was no need for such boasts, since no vocal composition that we ever heard of has been writtenten requiring a voice of three octaves. The voices of prime donne past and present are not gauged by the range but by the timbre. We once heard a singer, now notorious, who claims to have a voice of phenomenal range. Well, this woman's high tones recalled nothing more soothing than a tin whistle piped out of tune, and her low notes (heaven save the mark!)—they resembled the bellows in a village blacksmith shop. Let the New Orleans young lady of whom "Subscriber" writes decline to be led astray by the quacks who say the range of her voice is over three octaves. The human voice is sometimes capable of making noises in four octaves, but a competent critic would not call the exercise singing.

ALMA WEBSTER POWELL HOME.—Mrs. Alma Webster Powell, the coloratura soprano, returned from Europe last week, and is now at her home in Brooklyn. The singer expects to remain here but a few weeks, as she is booked for a concert tour through Russia.

ST. NICHOLAS GARDEN, 66th Street, near Columbus Avenue.
KALTENBORN ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS.
Every Evening at 8:15. Admission, 50 cents.
VARIED PROGRAM NIGHTLY. AUTOMATICALLY COOLED. NO DRAFT.

Mr. PLUNKET GREENE, Basso-Cantante,
In America March, April, May, 1902.
All communications regarding Terms and Dates to be addressed to
GEO. MAXWELL, 9 East 17th Street, New York City.

GRACE G. GARDNER,
Concert and Oratorio
SOPRANO.
Pupil of Blasco, Milan; Schmidt, Berlin; Henschel, London.
Studio: 36 West 25th St., New York.

J. FRED WOLLE,
ORGANIST.
Address: THE WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., New York.

BROAD STREET CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC,
GILBERT RAYNOLDS COMBS, Director.
1331 South Broad Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE FREE.

Sara Anderson,
Soprano,
For terms and particulars address
51 East 64th St.,
NEW YORK CITY.

CHAUTAUQUA

HOTEL ATHENÆUM,
CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y.,
August 12, 1901.

DR. H. R. PALMER, of New York, has conducted the Chautauqua choir for the past fourteen years, the works given under his magnetic baton including "The Creation," "The Messiah," "Stabat Mater," Max Bruch's "Fair Ellen," "The Feast of Adonis," Jensen; "The Dream," Sir Michael Costa; "The Transient and the Eternal," Romberg, and "The Holy City." Dr. Palmer is a prolific composer, his list of publications consisting very largely of hymns and anthems, while many thousands of copies of his interesting work on musical theory have been circulated throughout the United States.

Under the direction of Dr. Palmer a performance of Händel's "Messiah" was given in the amphitheatre on the evening of August 10. Considering the limited number of rehearsals, the work of chorus and orchestra was very creditable, the chorus excelling in several of the most brilliant contrapuntal numbers. I. V. Flagler and Henry B. Vincent, respectively, presided at organ and piano, giving valuable support, and Sol. Marcosson's services in assisting the first violins in the orchestra were effective. Of the soloists Dr. Carl E. Dufft, the New York basso, was the most noteworthy, his resonant voice and impressive style being in accord with the sacred lines and noble music of "The Messiah." Ben Franklin, tenor, of Troy, N. Y., displayed considerable musical ability, singing intelligently and with feeling. But the efforts of Madame Schultze Wichmann and Madame Lowe Wichmann, the soprano and contralto soloists of the occasion, indicated that their forte is not oratorio. An enormous audience was present and a responsive atmosphere prevailed.

Henry B. Vincent, the Chautauqua pianist, has composed an oratorio, "The Prodigal Son." This is a satisfactory announcement, for one of Mr. Vincent's creations, played here last year, was somewhat trivial in character. THE MUSICAL COURIER must repeat the claim that Chautauqua's standard of musical composition should not be inferior to its far famed literary and scientific productions.

Miss Edith Garland, Mrs. E. T. Tobey's pupil in Memphis, Tenn., "possesses great talent," says William H. Sherwood, with whom she has been studying here this summer. Miss Garland is the accompanist at the Sherwood-Marcosson recitals. Recently Mr. Sherwood spoke to a representative of THE MUSICAL COURIER in very high terms concerning several other pianists whom he is teaching here at the present time. Their names include Miss Bessie Groves, Miss Florence Huntington, Miss Elizabeth Stanton, Miss Mary Booth and Miss Annie Kayser; while among his most prominent pupils are Mrs. J. Harry Wheeler, of New York, and Mrs. Arthur Middleton Barnhart, of Chicago.

Students of classical music learn with regret that the admirable series of Sherwood-Marcosson recitals will come to a conclusion on August 13. It is to be hoped that these two well-known artists will arrange to give similar concerts next season.

On Monday afternoon, August 5, George B. Wick, who is studying with J. Harry Wheeler, sang "Eliland" very artistically. Mrs. J. Harry Wheeler was the efficient accompanist.

A welcome visitor here this year, and one who thoroughly appreciates Mr. Sherwood's classes in interpretation, is Miss C. E. Lay, formerly of Toronto, Canada, and now the successful musical director of Stonewall Jackson Institute in Virginia. As her pupils' recitals continue to forcibly ilustrate, Miss Lay secures excellent results in teaching the arts of singing and piano playing.

Ad. M. Foerster, the Pittsburg composer, with his family, is visiting Chautauqua. Miss M. E. Johnson, violinist, of Converse College, Spartanburg, S. C., also is here.

It is interesting to learn that more than 260,000 students and 50,000 graduates have taken advantage of the Chautauqua reading courses.

Chautauqua's "Old First Night," celebrated in the Amphitheatre on August 6, was once more notable for many short and clever speeches, Dr. George Vincent acting as chairman.

"The Pilgrims Who Did Not Come Over in the Mayflower" was the subject of a lecture delivered here this season by Dr. Amory H. Bradford, who said in part: "It is now even claimed and with a great deal of reason that Buddhists from the Orient visited this continent a thousand years before Columbus; but the Pilgrims were the real founders of empire. If the Buddhists did come they left no enduring impression; they made the beginning of no civilization. The Pilgrims first brought the principles which have determined the destinies of the republic. If one would understand America, and enter into the secret of her commanding supremacy, he needs only to visit the Plymouth of to-day. The United States in the twentieth century contrasts strangely with the Plymouth of 1620; but the Plymouth of 1620 was the acorn out of which has grown the nation of 1901."

Among the many other addresses which have been heard here this season the following may well be mentioned: "Bible Considered as Literature," Prof. E. G. Frazier; "The Unseen Universe," Dr. Amory H. Bradford; "The Conception of God," Dr. Amory H. Bradford; "Economic and Educational Awakening," Prof. Ernest A. Smith; "The Manchu Conquest," Prof. Frederick W. Williams, of Yale University; "Coming of the Europeans," Prof. Frederick W. Williams; "Early Italian Art," A. T. Van Laer; "True Glory," J. F. B. Tinling; "Woman, Old and New," Mrs. Ormiston Chant; "The Science of Good Cheer," Rev. T. Dewitt Talmage; "Savonarola," President Crawford; "Longfellow's Relation to German Literature," Prof. M. D. Learned, and "Grumblers," Dr. P. S. Henson.

An extract from the last named treatise will be read with interest by musicians. Referring to grumblers who attend church services, Dr. Henson said:

"They not only grumble about the preacher, but about the choir. Did you ever hear of the like of that? You see, everybody knows how it ought to be done except the poor wretches who are struggling with it. A man with no idea of music is apt to consider himself competent to criticise the choir. I have sometimes been tempted to sympathize with the complainants, and have felt as if these sons of Asaph and daughters of Korah took too much on them. I was preaching at a fashionable church in New York city, and the choirmaster sent word that I would not need to select the hymns; that he always did that himself. I sent word to his serene highness to kindly send me a list of the stuff he would sing and I would try to adapt my sermon to the singing; and he came around to see what in earth was the matter with me. I think there is a good deal of improvement in singing since I can first remember, when an old deacon with a long nose and a cracked voice over in the "amen corner" used to raise the tune, usually long meter, and the people came in like a flock of wild geese at all sorts of intervals."

The Chautauqua season closes on the evening of August 29, when Miss Gay Zenola MacLaran will give a dramatic reading of Wilson Barrett's "Sign of the Cross," in the Amphitheatre.

MUSIC

Our stock includes the musical publications of all publishers. The latest popular hit, imported novelties, opera and orchestra scores. Music for every occasion and music for all instruments. Our own publications sent for examination. Catalogs free. Send for MUSIC by MAIL circular, giving special mail order prices on music.

Oliver Ditson Company, Boston
C. H. Ditson & Co. New York
J. E. Ditson & Co. Philadelphia

A249

Elsa Marshall,
. . Soprano.
222 HOSEA AVENUE, CLIFTON,
CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Madame
CLARA NOVELLO DAVIES
Professor of Voice Production.
Conductor of the Royal Welsh Ladies' Choir.
(Under Royal patronage.)
Madame Davies has a vacancy for two resident lady pupils
For Prospectus and Terms apply to
121 Victoria St., Westminster, LONDON, S. W.

GLENN HALL
TENOR.
Address CHAS. R. BAKER, Fine Arts Building, or Kimball Hall, Chicago.

The Guilmant Organ School.
(COPYRIGHT.)
PRESIDENT: ALEXANDRE GUILMANT. DIRECTOR: WILLIAM C. CARL.
Reopens October 14.

SCHEDULE OF WORK:

FIRST YEAR.
The Organ—Private lessons, one each week.
Harmony—Class lessons, one each week.
Musical Form—MUSICAL DICTATION and MUSICAL KNOWLEDGE—Class lessons.
Service Playing—CHANTS, HYMN TUNES, ANTHEMS, ETC.—Class lessons.

SECOND YEAR.
The Organ—Private lessons, one each week.
Harmony and Counterpoint—Class lessons, one each week
Musical Analysis—MUSICAL HISTORY, ORGAN TUNING—Class lessons.
Service Playing—CHANTS, HYMN TUNES, ANTHEMS, ETC.—Class lessons.

STUDENTS' RECITALS OCCUR EACH MONTH.

ADDRESS: THE GUILMANT ORGAN SCHOOL, 34 West 12th St., New York.

THE KALTENBORN CONCERTS.

THE regular season of thirteen weeks of the Kaltenborn Orchestra at the St. Nicholas Garden will close on Saturday evening, August 31, and the last week of the season will be crowded with interesting events. Mr. Kaltenborn is to have a benefit on Tuesday evening, August 27. There will be a long program and special artists. Details are not complete at this writing and so unfortunately they cannot be announced. Wednesday, Thursday and Friday nights of the last week, August 28, 29 and 30, are to be devoted to Wagner, with a repetition of the interesting programs presented at the recent festival.

Last week the largest audiences assembled as usual on Symphony night (Tuesday), Wagner night (Thursday) and Sunday night. Leopold Winkler played the G major Piano Concerto, by Beethoven, on Tuesday night. The Beethoven playing of this artist is truly polished and refined, and this has already been stated by us. Winkler is one of the few pianists who have appeared at the St. Nicholas Garden over whom the public waxes highly enthusiastic, and his last appearance aroused the same hearty and prolonged applause.

At the Monday evening concert (August 12) Miss Helen B. Lawrence, a Western pupil of A. K. Virgil and also a pupil of Mrs. Gertrude Murdough, of Chicago, who by the way also studied with Mr. Virgil, played with the orchestra the Scherzo from the Fourth Concerto of Litolff. Miss Lawrence proved herself a brilliant performer indeed, and with a manner absolutely free from the affectations of early youth. For an encore Miss Lawrence played "Hark, Hark, the Lark," the Liszt transcription of Schubert's song.

Mme. Helene Maigille was the soloist on Thursday night, and she captured the audience completely by her method, style and sympathetic voice. With orchestral accompaniment she sang the Cavatina from Gounod's "Queen of Sheba," and everyone in the large audience understanding French blessed her for the clear enunciation of the text. With many singers the diction counts for little, but Madame Maigille, herself a teacher, has evidently recognized the importance of the words in a song or aria.

Madame Maigille gave some thrilling high notes, and her medium tones, too, were remarkable for warmth and richness. As an encore Madame Maigille sang "I Wait For Thee," by Hawley, her piano accompaniment being played by Carl O. Deis, the regular accompanist of the concerts. The Kaltenborn Quartet appeared again on Thursday night, and the members of the organization reached a fine ensemble and thorough musical quality in two movements of the Rubinstein String Quartet No. 3, in op. 17. Albert Bode, the trumpet player, appeared as soloist at three concerts during the week—Monday, Thursday and Friday. Louis Heine, 'cellist, and Miss Minna von Buren, soprano, were the other soloists at the Friday concert. Mr. Kaltenborn and the harpist of the orchestra, Mr. Schuetze, were the soloists at the "Popular" concert Saturday night.

Mrs. Elizabeth Hazard was the soloist on Sunday night last, and her well cultivated voice was never heard to better advantage. This charming artist has wisely decided to confine herself to ballad singing, and for the coming season a number of excellent recitals and musicales have already been booked for her. As vocal soloist at chamber music concerts she will also be in demand. For her first selection on Sunday Mrs. Hazard sang Tosti's "Good-Bye," and as an encore "Coming Thro' the Rye." After the intermission she sang three songs by Albert Mildenberger, the composer playing the piano accompaniments in his best musical style. The first of the songs, "Pussy Willow," still in manuscript, has been dedicated by the composer to Miss Louisa Adams Ceballos, the young daughter of Mr. Ceballos, one of the directors of the St. Nicholas Skating and Ice Company.

The other Mildenberg songs sung by Mrs. Hazard, "So Dear to Dream" and "Ich Liebe Dich" (Heine's poem), have won deserved popularity, and indeed they are superior to many songs that are written in these days. Another point worthy of especial comment made by Mrs. Hazard in her singing was her distinct enunciation. Both she and Mr. Mildenberg were received enthusiastically by the large audience, and Mrs. Hazard was presented with a bunch of American Beauty roses prettily arranged with ferns.

Special Wagner programs will be given to-night and to-morrow night as follows:

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 21.

March, Tannhäuser.....Wagner
Overture, Rienzi.....Wagner
Siegfried Idyl.....Wagner
Prelude, Parsifal.....Wagner
Arrival of Lohengrin, Prayer of the King and Finale to Act I., Lohengrin.....Wagner
Concert arrangement by R. Klugescheid.
Bacchanale, Tannhauser.....Wagner
Violin solo, Prize Song, Die Meistersinger.....Wagner
Franz Kaltenborn.
Introduction to Act III., Lohengrin.....Wagner
Wotan's Farewell and Magic Fire Scene.....Wagner

THURSDAY, AUGUST 22.

Overture, Tannhäuser.....Wagner
Bridal Procession, Lohengrin.....Wagner
Violin solo, Paraphrase, Parsifal.....Wagner
Franz Kaltenborn.
Tristan's Vision, Tristan and Isolde.....Wagner
Prelude and Liebestod, Tristan and Isolde.....Wagner
Eine Faust Overture.....Wagner
Trombone solo, song, The Evening Star, Tannhauser.....Wagner
Franz Eim.
Good Friday Spell, Parsifal.....Wagner
Kaiser March.....Wagner

The programs for the remainder of the week and Sunday next follow:

FRIDAY, AUGUST 23.

Overture, William Tell.....Rossini
Prologue, Pagliacci.....Leoncavallo
Aria, Ah fors e' lui, La Traviata.....Verdi
Miss Sabery d'Orsell.
Selection, Faust.....Gounod
Trumpet solo, Inflammatus.....Rossini
Albert Bode.
Waltz, Kiss.....Strauss
Ballet music, Coppelia.....Delibes
Song, Le Perle du Bresil.....David
Miss Sabery d'Orsell.
Flute obligato, Charles Kurth.
Ballet music, Sylvia.....Delibes

SATURDAY, AUGUST 24.

Overture, Die Schone Galathe.....Souppé
Selection, Florodora.....Stuart
String Orchestra—
Evening Song.....Schumann
Mice Around the Trap.....Kochler
Harp soli—
The Patrol.....Hasselmans
Spring Song.....Mendelssohn
Charles Schuetze.
Rhapsodie No. 1, in F.....Liszt
Waltz, Freuet Euch des Lebens.....Strauss
Aubade Printaniere.....Lacombe
American Fantaisie.....Herbert
Amra.....Krouse
Intermezzo, Salome.....Loraine
Selection, Mikado.....Sullivan
March, La Victorieuse.....

SUNDAY, AUGUST 25.

Overture, 1812.....Tschaikowsky
Good Friday Spell, Parsifal.....Wagner
Violin solo, Polonaise Brillante in D major.....Wieniawsky
Miss Ida Branth.
Symphonic Poem, Orpheus.....Liszt
Octet, A major, op. 3.....Svendsen
Song, Heaven Hath a Tear.....Kucken
Mrs. Frederick Dean.
'Cello obligato, Louis Heine.
Waltz, Artistic Life.....Strauss
Overture, Midsummer Night's Dream.....Mendelssohn
Scandinavian Songs.
Last Night.....Kjerulf
Synnove's Song.....Kjerulf
Ich liebe dich.....Grieg
Mrs. Frederick Dean.
Larghetto, Symphony No. 2.....Beethoven
March, La Reine de Saba.....Gounod

The above programs are subject to changes. THE MUSICAL COURIER publishes the lists from the advanced sheets, and sometimes the conductor substitutes other works for those published in advance by us. This statement is made because this paper aims to be accurate in all of its information.

At the last symphony night of the regular season (last night) Mendelssohn's Scotch Symphony was played.

A MUSICAL CYCLOPÆDIA.

VIENNA.

MUSICAL circles will be interested to hear that shortly a large collective edition in uniform bindings of the chief classical music will be published at Vienna. It will contain all the leading works for singing, the organ and violin, and the work will bear the title of the "Universal Edition." Several famous modern masters, such as Bruckner, Goldmark, Liszt, Smetana, Johann Strauss and others will be represented in the undertaking, which is under the patronage of the Government, and all volumes, so far as opera and oratorio are concerned, will contain the text in three languages—German, English and French. The music and text will be revised entirely from the original manuscripts of the composers. The classical chamber music will for the first time contain the most important signs and notices as to the manner of playing in public as approved by the most distinguished performers in the Vienna Opera House. In preparing this universal edition the professors of the Vienna Conservatory and other prominent musicians and composers will collaborate, also some well-known men in Hungary, Germany and France.—London Telegraph, August 7.

TIDDEN RECITAL.—Paul Tidden gave a piano recital at Glen Summit, Pa., on August 10. He played the following interesting program:

Sonata Appassionata, op. 57.....Beethoven
Caprice on Ballet Airs from Alceste.....Gluck-Saint-Saëns
Nachtstuck.....Schumann
Meditation.....Tschaikowsky
Le Depart (from Chants du Rhin).....Bizet
Melodie Italienne.....Moszkowski
Au Printemps.....Grieg
Capriccio.....Hutcheson
Scherzo, in C sharp minor.....Chopin
Nocturne, in D flat major.....Chopin
Two Etudes, from op. 25.....Chopin
Hungarian Rhapsody, No. 2.....Liszt

NORDICA

Season 1901-1902.

RECITALS ONLY.

SEE LATER
ANNOUNCEMENTS.

LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, NEW YORK.

OSCAR SAENGER,

Vocal Instruction,

WILL RESUME TEACHING ON SEPTEMBER 16.

Teacher of Josephine S. Jacoby, Contralto; Elizabeth D. Leonard, Contralto; Madame de Pasquali, Soprano; Sara Anderson, Soprano; Hildegard Hoffmann, Soprano; E. Léon Rains, Basso; Joseph S. Baernstein, Basso; John I. Young, Tenor, and other prominent singers now before the public

STUDIO: 51 East 64th Street, NEW YORK.

ACCOMPANIST.

F. W. RIESBERG.

INSTRUCTION.

Piano, Organ, Harmony.

With THE MUSICAL COURIER.
Organist Roseville Avenue Presbyterian Church, Newark.
Secretary-Treasurer New York State M. T. A.
Residence-Studio: 954 Eighth Ave., cor. 56th St., NEW YORK.
TELEPHONE: 452 COLUMBUS.

Mme. VON KLENNER, Garcia Representative,

HAS OPENED A

Special Summer School at Lake Chautauqua, N. Y.

PARIS EXPOSITION, 1900.
Only Honorable Mention or Distinction of Any Vocal Instructor.

FOR PARTICULARS
Address THE WALDMERF, LAKEWOOD, LAKE CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y.
or 40 STUYVESANT STREET, NEW YORK, Second Avenue and 10th Street.
AFTER OCT. 1, 230 WEST 52d STREET.

VAN YORX

Tenor,
6 E. 17 St.,
NEW YORK.

Under Management of WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 131 East 17th St., NEW YORK CITY.

EUROPEAN NOTES.

Alf. R. Bachrens, a pupil of M. Alex. Guilmant, has been appointed organist of the American Church in Paris.

In the year 1849 the landlady of a little tavern in the Planen'she Grund, near Dresden, heard some musket shots, and saw some of the insurgents in full flight pursued by Prussian soldiers. Suddenly there rushed in a young fellow in the insurgent uniform of grey with green facings, and a Tyrolean hat, with his face and hands blackened with powder. "For God's sake," he exclaimed, "some water to wash my hands and some cold meat. Any moment may bring me death." The landlady did so; he said he had not a penny in his pockets, but would certainly pay her. She gave him a bottle of beer and sent her son to show him the way through the forest to Freiberg. In 1863 the same landlady saw an elegantly dressed gentleman enter the tavern with the air of one who knew it well. "Good morning," he said, "I have come to pay my debt. It is an old affair," he continued, "and you have forgotten me. But I have not forgotten your services on May 9, 1849. "What," she replied, "the little blackened fellow who could not pay for his breakfast?" The stranger held out his hand. "Here I pay my debt of which I have often thought. You did good service to the ex-capellmeister of your King, whose name is Richard Wagner and who has been exiled till now."

M. Schiller, the husband of Yvette Guilbert, has organized a series of fourteen concerts to be given in fifteen days at the Vaudeville, Paris. The conductors promised are Messager, Taffaenel, Luigini, Richter, Wemgartner, Strauss, Muck, Zump, Sembach, Panzaer, Mottl, Nikisch and Muller.

The Schiller Theatre, at Berlin, is crowded to hear the tenor Rostel, who is said to have a magnificent voice. Like Wachtel, he was, before he became famous, a hack driver at Hamburg, and adores the "Postillion de Longjumeau."

"Quo Vadis" has inspired an Italian musican named Sandron to write a symphonic poem, which has been performed with success at Palermo. It comprises four movements—Lydia, Orgy, Burning of Rome and Death of Nero. There are threats that the Polish romance will be turned into an opera, with a grand ballet. What will Boïto say to such competition?

More news of Boïto's "Nero." According to the very last reports Boïto has been very busy lately, and has nearly finished his work. In two months it will be ready for the engraver, and will assuredly be produced at La Scala in the season of 1902-1903. All the old lyric material which the author worked at in early years is rejected. The present work was written without a break (de jet) in the last two or three years, and will reveal absolutely new and personal lyric forms. Those who live long enough may hear it.

The Sultan of Turkey has met with a rival in the field of music, and is no longer the only Moslem artist. At a late concert at Cairo a waltz written by the young Khedive was performed by an orchestra of Arab musicians.

Mascagni's tour in America will, it is said, be delayed till his hair can grow. His managers insist on his appearing with locks after the fashion of the late lamented Absalom, or now adored Paderewski.

The French are in a state of virtuous indignation at a Leipsic publisher who has issued a waltz song that bears the title of "The Leipsic Smash," and makes jokes about the financial failures there. "This," they cry, "is very bad taste; nay, a bad action; to mock at national disasters. The Germans must not talk of French morality after this."

Meyerbeer is still popular in France. The opera that brought into the box office the largest receipts was "The Huguenots," with 23,000 francs to its credit.

SLIVINSKI.—Among the great pianists now before the public Slivinski holds a position by virtue of his technic, musicianship, poetic nature and artistic temperament. Slivinski, although spirituelle in appearance and romantic in his make-up, is, nevertheless, virile and broad. Slivinski is a poet of the piano. His very bearing is aristocratic and his manners are those of a prince.

On both his father's and mother's side Slivinski's family belonged to the aristocracy. This pianist is not only a broadly cultivated musician and a phenomenal pianist, but he is a most accomplished gentleman as well.

Last year during his all too short sojourn in this country Slivinski repeated his brilliant successes. Whenever he appeared he was greeted by a large audience, and his playing created a furore. There was a general demand that he should return to the United States this season.

Manager Robert E. Johnston opened negotiations with him and outgeneraled several managers who were anxious to secure the Polish pianist. Slivinski is easily the greatest pianist who will visit America next season. The indications point to a most successful tour.

FRITZ KREISLER.—Fritz Kreisler, the Austrian violinist, who won fame for himself in this country last winter by his brilliant playing, is to return again in January under the management of Henry Wolfsohn. He will open his tour in Chicago on January 10, when he will play with the Thomas Orchestra. Kreisler is now in Paris, where he is giving much of his time to the working up of a new repertory for his coming tour.

OBITUARY.

Edmond Audran.

PARIS, August 19.—Edmond Audran, the French composer, is dead.

Edmond Audran, the French composer, was born at Lyons, April 11, 1842. He was the son of Morius Audran, the singer, who died in 1877. He entered the Niedermeyer School in 1856, where he obtained several prizes.

In 1861 he followed his father to Marseilles, where he became choirmaster at the Church of St. Joseph. About that time he composed several comic operas, among them "The Bear and the Pascha," adapted from a vaudeville by Scribe, 1862; "La Chercheuse d'Esprit," 1864; "Nivernaise," 1866, and "The Little Poucet," 1868.

In 1881 he went to Paris and wrote the music for several comic operas. Chival and Duru became collaborators with him about that time, and together they produced "La Mascotte" and "Olivette," which became so popular in this country. "The Great Mogul" was composed in 1883; "The Paradise of Mahomet," 1887, and several others were produced by the trio. Audran also composed the music for "Miss Helyett," an opera in three acts. In 1893 he composed an elaborate mass, which was sung at Marseilles and at Paris.

THE TRAVELERS

INSURANCE COMPANY of Hartford, Conn.

Chartered 1863. (Stock.) Life, Accident and Employers Liability Insurance.

JAMES G. BATTERSON, President.

PAID-UP CAPITAL, $1,000,000.00

JULY 1, 1901.

Total Assets, (Accident premiums in the hands of Agents not included.)	$32,198,504.44
TOTAL LIABILITIES (including Reserves),	27,499,719.25
EXCESS SECURITY to Policy-holders,	$4,698,785.19
Paid to Policy-holders since 1864,	$44,469,462.48
Total Insurance in Force,	$199,260,653.00

GAINS: 6 months, January to July, 1901.

IN ASSETS,	$1,270,172.92
IN INSURANCE IN FORCE (Life Department Only),	4,739,635 00
INCREASE IN RESERVES (both Departments),	1,165,244.44
PREMIUMS, INTEREST and RENTS, 6 Months,	4,538,683.18

SYLVESTER C. DUNHAM, Vice-President.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Secretary,
J. B. LEWIS, M. D., Medical Director and Adjuster.
EDWARD V. PRESTON, General Manager of Agencies.
HIRAM J. MESSENGER, Actuary.

Mme. SCHUMANN-HEINK, Mr. BISPHAM, Sig. CAMPANARI,
And other Members of the MAURICE GRAU OPERA CO.,
Are open for Concerts, Oratorios, Recitals and Musical Festivals during the Season 1901–2.
FOR TERMS AND DATES ADDRESS
ERNEST GOERLITZ, Sole and Exclusive Agent, Metropolitan Opera House, New York City.

Miss ADELE MARGULIES
PIANO INSTRUCTION.
Studios: Nos. 705-6 Carnegie Hall, New York

M. I.
SCHERHEY,
VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Combined Italian-French-German Method.
CHURCH, CONCERT, ORATORIO, OPERA.
Studio: 780 PARK AVENUE, Cor. 73d St., NEW YORK.
Telephone: Seventy-ninth, 1152.

Mrs. HELEN TRUST
SOPRANO.
Vocal Recitals in English, French, Italian.
33 Grove End Road,
St. John's Wood, London, England.

THIRD AMERICAN TOUR
SEASON 1901-2.
161 Concerts Last Season.
LEONORA JACKSON
ASSISTED BY Harry J. Fellows
Tenor.
William Bauer, Pianist.
Direction ERNEST H. JACKSON and A. L. WAKEFIELD.
Address: NEW YORK, 31 Union Square West. CHICAGO, 71 Monroe Stree

2046 Leavenworth Street,
San Francisco, August 12, 1901.

GRAND opera at the Tivoli Opera House, on Eddy street, is so far the only musical entertainment we are having, but so popular is this resort that the advance sale of seats is enormous, and people are being turned away from the doors. Almost the entire company this year is Italian, and for once there is not the usual incongruity of passionate address in Italian with scornful response in guttural German, flippant French or cold English, that must even to the most hardened theatregoer seem the acme of ridiculousness. At least if one does not understand a word of the text, the opera done in one language presents a consistent whole.

The favorite old "Trovatore," alternating with the no less popular "Lucia," have been the order of the week past, under Paul Steindorff's baton, and here be it said that seldom has the Tivoli had so intelligent a director, as the work of principals, orchestra and chorus this season is ample testimony.

If there is one thing the people of 'Frisco do appreciate it is an opera well staged and sung, and the director whose musical intelligence goes to hold a company well together never fails to come in for his due meed of praise. There is one thing about "Lucia" that never fails to excite my risibles whenever I hear the opera, tuneful and pathetic though its theme is all through, and that is in the opening chorus, where a whole clan of brawny Scots appear in "Hieland" costume, kilt, plaid and a', and in place of the native burr, the soft, poetical Italian trips easily from their tongues. It is undeniably funny, and in a measure reminds one of Verdi's American (?) opera, "I Puritani," in which figures a "Count de Boston"! Repetto outdid herself in the title role of Lucia, and was recalled many times. She has proven herself not alone a singer of merit, with an intelligent brain power behind a sweet and well trained voice, but she has undeniably the true artistic temperament, and her performance is a thoroughly satisfactory one from every standpoint. Rusod did a very natural bit of acting in the last act, where he expires on Lucia's grave, and his voice was better controlled than in "Rigoletto," for which there is the excuse of the latter being his first reappearance, and the vociferous welcome he received naturally somewhat exhilarated him, and some of the exhilaration got into his voice. We are to have "Favorita" and "Otello" this week, in the former Agostini and the latter Salassa. Seats are at a premium and many will be disappointed.

Pacific Grove, Monterey, the favorite summer resort of this part of the coast, seems to be having a musical time this season. I hear the oratorio "Elijah" was recently given there with good success by the San José Oratorio Society, under the direction of James Hamilton Howe, the solos being taken by Mrs. Mary Weaver McCauley, soprano; Miss Alice McMillin, contralto; Walter B. Anthony (San Francisco), tenor; S. Homer Henley (San Francisco), bass. Prof. Wilbur McCall was the pianist and Misses Ethel Katherine Holladay, Victoria Merle Francis and Helen Norris Simons assisted with violins. There was a strong chorus, and it is said to have been a really fine production of the oratorio.

St. Mary the Virgin's Church yesterday celebrated high mass with Concone's Mass in F, and at Vespers, 4 o'clock p. m., Mrs. Wallace Wheaton Briggs sang Saint-Saëns' "Ave Maria" in A. St. Mary's is, by the way, an Episcopal church in name, but any of our Roman brethren might easily be deceived into the idea that he had gotten into his own native sanctuary should he inadvertently stumble inside the doors of St. Mary's, since nothing of the attributes of the Roman Church are here lacking, even to incense and confessional. The music is undeniably beautiful, but for the Episcopal Church——!

The symphony movement has again taken to itself the "wings of the morning" and flown. It seems we have not enough musicians in this town who for music's own sake will be generous enough to help build up this most beautiful of all arts among us, but, as usual, the wide world over, the old saw, "every man for himself and deil tak' the hindmost," prevails.

Either every man wants to be first violin or first something, or he is not satisfied to play for what salary is possible to a movement yet in its infancy and so help it to grow till it is able to stand alone, but he must have exorbitant pay, he must be first, and with all first violins pray where would be our harmonies? We have those among us who are able to lead and lead well, but as I said the instruments all clamor for first place and impossible pay, so San Francisco talent will be out of it.

Byron Mauzy takes the initiative for the coming season by announcing that he is already making up his list of concerts to be given in Byron Mauzy Hall, and expects to announce the first concert ere long.

The California Conservatory of Music has opened with prospects for a busy season. The first day of Mr. Bendy's return he was beseiged with applicants and began work at once. Mme. Julie Rosewald has returned to us and has taken up her residence at the Granada. She has been one of our most successful teachers and is a welcome accessory to our musical roster.

As a friend once remarked, "Tempus is fugit-ing," and it will not be long now till I have something newsy and interesting to write you.

Mrs. A. Wedmore Jones.

Burmeister Engaged.

RICHARD BURMEISTER, the pianist, has been engaged for the Worcester (Mass.) music festival, which will be given in September.

Flavie Van den Hende.—Miss Flavie Van den Hende, the young Belgian 'cellist who concluded a successful season in the spring with a recital at the Waldorf-Astoria, is now enjoying the warm weather in the mountains of Virginia.

Miss Van den Hende has her valuable 'cello with her, and spends a number of hours each day hard at work. The instrument, which is a Maggini, made in 1625 and worth $6,000, was the gift of a millionaire Belgian collector, who, when he heard the young artist play, was so impressed with her exceptional talent that he invited her to see his collection of instruments, and, after she had tried several, he asked her preference. Miss Van den Hende named the Maggini, which was promptly bestowed upon her.

Her manager, Loudon G. Charlton, already announces bookings for Miss Van den Hende which insure another busy season commencing early in the fall.

Breitkopf & Hartel.—John George Boehme has been appointed as the new manager of Breitkopf & Härtel in their New York house. Mr. Boehme assumed his duties last week.

VICTOR HARRIS,
Vocal Training.
The Art of Singing in All Its Branches.
STUDIO: THE ALPINE, 55 West 33d Street, NEW YORK.

RUBY CUTTER,
SOPRANO,
Dramatic and Coloratura.
CONCERT and ORATORIO.
REPERTOIRE.
Under the direction of HENRY WOLFSOHN.
Boston Address: 159 Tremont Street.

HAROLD BAUER,
AMERICAN TOUR, 1902.
Commencing in January with BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
DATES NOW BOOKING.
For all particulars apply to GEO. W. STEWART, 120 Tremont Street, BOSTON, MASS.
General Representative for Europe: ROBERT STRAKOSCH, 56 Rue La Bruyère, PARIS.

RAFAEL JOSEFFY.
Address: Letter Box 38, NORTH TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

EMILIO DE MARCHI.

THIS artist, one of Italy's great tenors, will make his initial bow to the American public within the next few months.

Originally intended for the profession of arms, Emilio de Marchi served his country in a cavalry regiment, but the opportunities of a glorious voice and an artistic temperament proved too tempting, and so after a short and brilliant career he left the army. Then followed a period of hard study and discipline wherein the budding artist's former experience stood him in good stead. It would be profitless to catalogue here Emilio de Marchi's début, and it will be sufficient to state that his success was instantaneous—a gratifying element which never forsook him wherever he sang. Nor could it be otherwise, given the man's qualifications: a voice of great beauty and range and endowed with peculiar charm; capital notions of histrionic possibilities in every part he interprets, an innate capacity for expressing emotion and that kind of spontaneity in vocal utterance which seems the appanage of the race to which he belongs.

Small wonder if with such qualifications Emilio de Marchi jumped at one bound into the favor of a fastidious Covent Garden audience. He had not sung half a dozen bars in "Tosca" before all were convinced they were in the presence of one who commands admiration, and by the time the glorious voice had rung out the B flat in "Tosca dei tu" Covent Garden was ringing with applause. Then he delighted everybody with the intensity of his acting, taking the audience quite by surprise through the realism of the death scene. One remembers that Mario Cavaradossi (the character he interprets) is shot; as a rule, tenors are satisfied here with falling down all of a heap as if they had been banged on the head. De Marchi, simultaneously with the volley, throws up his arms, jumps in the air and then falls on his face, enacting thus the reflex movements of a living body under such gruesome conditions. The whole business takes barely a few seconds, but from this case of a single detail may be gathered the alertness of the artist to study a part in toto.

Emilio de Marchi's Covent Garden début will remain a pleasing memory to all. The audiences had witnessed such a procession of vocal cripples in tenor parts, such a panorama of mediocrity, that the appearance of a new tenor, the eighth or tenth since the beginning of the season, was viewed with apprehension, if not with a kind of resigned consternation.

"What is this new infliction and where is he coming from?" were questions flying about the house before the curtain rose on "Tosca"; for with typical mental ignorance of things operatic the Covent Garden patron had not heard of the man whose fame is a household word throughout the theatrical world. Well, as was said above, it was not long after the rise of the curtain that De Marchi stood revealed on that memorable evening of June 22, and his second appearance in "The Huguenots" raised him still higher in the estimation of the public and the press. Very unfortunately he could not be secured for more performances. In point of fact his début in London was a mere accident. He came on a visit to some friends, and his presence became somehow known to Mr. Gran, who hastened to secure so valuable a prize for his American season and advised the Covent Garden syndicate to avail themselves of the remarkable chance as well. And so it happened that the fluke of a holiday trip resulted to both managers in a profitable operatic transaction and to the public in becoming acquainted with such an artist.

EMILO DE MARCHI.

AN OLD CRITIC PASSES AWAY.—Walter Moody Lancaster, formerly dramatic and music critic on the New York Times, died last Friday after a brief illness. Mr. Lancaster graduated from Harvard University with the class of 1879, and then devoted himself to writing for the papers in New England. He was associated with the Lowell Mail, and later became an editor on the Worcester Spy.

MACONDA.—Mme. Charlotte Maconda's bookings already point to a season that will surpass the last in activity and popularity. For the third successive year she has been secured for soprano soloist at the New England festivals, and one of the latest dates closed for her by Manager Charlton is that of a concert with the Mendelssohn Club, Chicago, December 17.

FABIAN PIANO RECITAL.

Closing of the Summer Session at the Clavier Piano School.

THE closing recital of the summer session at the Clavier Piano School was given by S. M. Fabian, a leading member of the faculty, who has become immensely popular since coming to New York. As an interpretative artist Mr. Fabian is at the top with a few other Americans, but as comparisons are never safe it remains for each listener to settle with himself (or herself) who is greatest. Certainly Fabian is an artist of remarkable gifts, virile, direct and yet never lacking on the poetic and imaginative side.

The closing recital of what has been a very successful term of earnest study was given at Clavier Hall last Friday evening. The program played by Mr. Fabian follows:

Mazurka in B minor	Chopin
Nocturne, F sharp major	Chopin
Valse, G flat major	Chopin
Chant Polonaise (Liszt transcription)	Chopin
Etude, C minor	Chopin
Ballade, G minor	Chopin
Berceuse	Grieg
Danse Caprice	Grieg
Etude	Henselt
Andante e Rondo Capriccioso	Mendelssohn
Soirées de Vienne, No. 6 (Liszt transcription)	Schubert
Gnomenreigen	Liszt
Danse Macabre (Liszt transcription)	Saint-Saëns

The writer has often marveled at the feats of memory of great pianists. To think of all the notes, say, in the group of Chopin's compositions played by Mr. Fabian, is in itself an astonishing achievement; each one different and affording contrast and variety. Mr. Fabian gave that broad and healthful reading to the pieces by the Polish composer that appeals to well ordered minds. The valse he played daintily, and the "Chant Polonaise," which proved the graceful and characteristic song "Maiden's Wish," transcribed by Liszt, was performed archly and with the rhythms nicely executed.

The tender Berceuse by Grieg, the "Danse Caprice," by the same composer, the beautiful Henselt study and the Mendelssohn Andante and Rondo were played as a second group, and throughout Mr. Fabian compelled rapt attention, and at the conclusion prolonged applause. As an encore he gave a Minuet by Bouvy. "The Soirées de Vienne," by Schubert; "Gnomenreigen," by Liszt, and Liszt's transcription of Saint-Saëns' "Danse Macabre" were performed as the closing group, and the latter was given with all the orchestral effects needed to emphasize the weirdness and yet beauty of the modern Frenchman's strange conceit. The audience insisted on another number, and Mr. Fabian returned to the stage again and played in joyous style the appropriate selection the Wedding March from Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream."

The summer session at the Clavier Piano School was closed with classes on Saturday morning. A splendid record has been made by Mr. Virgil and corps of accomplished teachers who labored with him during the term. This week Mr. Virgil started on a tour which is to include some of the cities where his ideas as an edu

Season 1901-1902

FANNIE BLOOMFIELD ZEISLER

FOR TERMS AND DATES APPLY TO

ALINE B. STORY, 356 La Salle Avenue, CHICAGO.

LAMPERTI SCHOOL OF MUSIC

TO BE OPENED NOVEMBER 1, 1901.

Quartier Parc Monceau,
Paris.

Temporary Address, 3 rue Gounod.

HASLAM,

Professeur de Chant.

POSE, TECHNIQUE, STYLE, RÉPERTOIRE, OPERA, CONCERT.

☞ Direct Communication with European Managers.

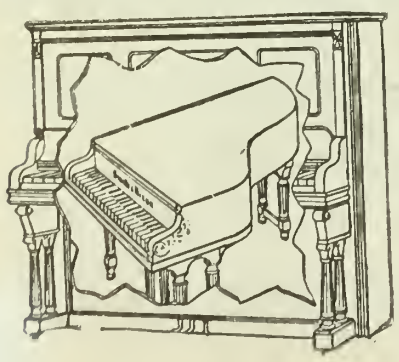
54 rue Faubourg St. Honoré, PARIS.

ERICSSON

BUSHNELL.

For Dates, Terms, &c., address

177 Duane Street, NEW YORK



A Grand Piano IN AN UPRIGHT CASE.

SMITH & NIXON,

Cincinnati, Ohio,

Manufacture this instrument for

MUSICIANS.

London Organ School

AND INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

22 Princes Street, Cavendish Sq., W., London, Eng.

Established 1865. Principal: T. H. Yorke Trotter, M. A., Mus. Doc. Oxon.

At this college Private Lessons are given and classes held in all branches of Music, and in Elocution and Modern Languages.

There is a competent staff of Professors for Piano, Singing, Organ, Violin, Viola, Violoncello, Double Bass, Harp, Guitar and all Wood and Brass Wind Instruments.

A special feature is made of the training of Church and Concert Organists. The school has three 3-manual practice organs and a new grand concert organ, which has been recently completed by the Positive Organ Company on the Casson system.

The full Orchestra meets on Tuesday Evenings. The String Orchestra on Friday Afternoons.

For prospectus and full particulars apply to the office of this paper or to FRANCIS BURGESS, Secretary.

Mme. OGDEN CRANE

The Art of Singing.

Special attention given to tone production
Founded on the pure Italian method.
Sole teacher of Hattie Diamond Nathan, Edith Hutchins, Lillian Le Roy, Lillian Spencer and many others.

SUMMER SCHOOL:

Post Office Building, Asbury Park, N. J.
From June 24 to September 14.

In New York Studio Thursdays,

3 East 14th Street,
Cor. Fifth Avenue, NEW YORK

cator are being faithfully and successfully carried out. The autumn term at the Clavier Piano School will open early in October.

FANCIULLI'S OPERA.

It Will Be Produced by the Rose Cecilia Shay Opera Company.

"PRISCILLA, the Maid of Plymouth," is the name of a grand opera which will be produced for the first time November 1. The music is by Francesco Fanciulli, the bandmaster, and the book is by C. A. Eaton, a well-known librettist.

Col. William Thompson was instrumental in purchasing the opera for the Rose Cecilia Shay Opera Company, which will give the initial presentation of the work November 1 in Norfolk. The following night it will be repeated in Richmond, and then it will be transferred to Washington, where it will have a week's run. The company will visit several cities on its way to Cincinnati, where a week's engagement will be filled.

FRANCESCO FANCIULLI.

Fanciulli wrote this opera some years ago, but never was able to have it produced. At the instance of a number of music critics, who had examined the score of the opera, Colonel Thompson, in behalf of Miss Shay, opened negotiations with the composer.

"Priscilla, the Maid of Plymouth," is based upon Longfellow's poem, "The Courtship of Miles Standish." Miss Shay will sing the title role. The opera is replete with songs which, if sung by capable singers, may prove effective. It contains several beautiful arias for Priscilla, whose voice is a mezzo-soprano. The story is an idyllic one, and the entire work is grand opera. There is no comedy element in it, but it is strongly dramatic.

C. A. Eaton, the librettist, is a lineal descendant of one of the Mayflower's passengers. He owns and will introduce in the second act of the opera, a full set of furniture that came across the ocean in the Mayflower.

The orchestration is anything but commonplace. It is very florid and modern. This opera shows Fanciulli in a new light, and it will doubtless do much to enhance his reputation as a capable and painstaking musician.

Vilhelm Stenhammar.

ONE evening in March, a few years since, a symphony concert was given in the opera house in Stockholm, Sweden, on which occasion a young man, together with the members of the orchestra, stepped upon the platform. The man was Vilhelm Stenhammar, who then, for the first time, performed his now famous piano concerto with orchestra, since played in Berlin under Nikisch with immense success.

Carl Vilhelm Eugene Stenhammar was born on February 7, 1871, in Stockholm, Sweden, the son of an architect. Vilhelm's musical talent was inherited from his father, who composed the oratorio of "David and Saul"; an uncle was a well-known tenor. Oskar Frederick Stenhammar, while his grandfather was Kristian Stenhammar, who obtained the degree of Doctor of Theology, and who was also a botanist and entomologist.

As a performer, as well as composer, Vilhelm Stenhammar has met with success abroad. Together with Tor Aulin he made tours to Copenhagen, where his playing has won him many triumphs, and indeed, there is an undeniable charm about the man's playing, as there is about the man himself. He seems the artist; when he plays he is lost in his work, and his expression seems to show that for the time being, at least, Vilhelm Stenhammar no longer exists, except in so far as he puts himself into the interpretation of his music.

The writer had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Stenhammar this summer under attractive circumstances. About 5 miles from the city of Stockholm is a place called Saljobaden, which means "salt sea bath." This is a large lake, dotted with picturesque and tree covered islands. Finally arriving at our destination, we found Stenhammar with a broad brimmed straw hat and no coat playing with his little children as though he had never a care in the world.

Stenhammar has published, as well as the piano concerto referred to above, many songs, string quartets, ballads, a cantata which was sung on the occasion of the opening of the Stockholm Exposition of 1900, and also two operas. He is conductor of the Philharmonic Society of Stockholm. It is to be hoped that the American public may have an opportunity of seeing and hearing this gifted musician before long.

HENRY L. MASON.

Harold Bauer.

Harold Bauer, the pianist, who played for the first time in America last season, will return to America for a second tour early in January, 1902. Mr. Bauer is at present in Europe, having played in England during this present season with immense success. Mr. Bauer has been engaged as soloist for the great Liverpool and Manchester festivals, England, in the early autumn.

MR. LOUDON G. CHARLTON, CARNEGIE HALL, NEW YORK,

HAS THE HONOR TO ANNOUNCE

THE CELEBRATED DUTCH PIANIST:

EDUARD ZELDENRUST

First American Tour, 1901-1902, Begins November 15.

"One of the three or four great pianists of the world."—LONDON TIMES.

Already Booked with Leading Orchestras. Recitals in Principal Cities. Entire Tour Now Booking.

BALDWIN PIANO USED.

Just Published by

G. SCHIRMER, NEW YORK.

For Piano Solo.

GRIEG ALBUM. 45 pieces. Edited by L. OESTERLE. 2 vols., each, 75 cents. In cloth, 2 vols, in one, $2.50

JENSEN ALBUM. 25 pieces. Edited by A. SPANUTH. 2 vols., each, 75 cents. In cloth, 2 vols. in one, $2.50

LISZT ALBUM. 25 pieces. Edited by A. SPANUTH. 2 vols , each, 75 cents. In cloth, 2 vols. in one, $2.50

MOSZKOWSKI ALBUM. 24 pieces. 2 vols., each, 75 cents. In cloth, 2 vols. in one, . . . $2.50

SEND FOR

A SYSTEMATIC COURSE OF STUDIES FOR PIANOFORTE.

By ALEX. LAMBERT.

In 3 vols., each, $1.00.

JEANNETTE DURNO

CONCERT PIANIST,

3629 Vincennes Avenue, CHICAGO.

Mme. Matja von Niessen-Stone

MEZZO SOPRANO.

VOCAL RECITALS in English, French, German, Italian and Russian.

For terms and dates address ALICE E. JOSEPH, 7a Hanover St., London, W., England.

RARE OLD VIOLINS

Remarkable values in fine old instruments from $50 to $10,000. Largest and finest collection in the world. Send for a copy of our Catalog, just issued, containing Biographies, Fac-simile Labels, Etc. Easy Terms.

LYON & HEALY, 133 Adams Street, CHICAGO

SOUSA AND HIS BAND

Office: Astor Court Building, New York.

Eighteenth Semi-Annual and Fifth Transcontinental Tour.

Sunday, July 7, to Monday, September 2, INCLUSIVE.

MANHATTAN BEACH, NEW YORK CITY.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY
—BY THE—
MUSICAL COURIER COMPANY.

(Copyrighted by The Musical Courier Company, 1901.)
(Incorporated under the laws of the State of New York.)

St. James Building, Broadway and 26th St., New York.
TELEPHONE: 1720 Madison Square.
Cable Address: "Pegujar," New York.

ESTABLISHED JANUARY, 1880.
No. 1117.

MARC A. BLUMENBERG - - EDITOR-IN-CHIEF.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 21, 1901.

LONDON, ENGLAND—
Hotel Cecil, Mr. Montague Chester, General European Representative.

BERLIN, GERMANY (Branch Office)—
Linkstrasse, 17 W., is in charge of Mr. Otto Floersheim.
Single copies for sale at the music store of Ed. Bote & G. Bock, Leipzigerstrasse 39, W.

DRESDEN—
Anna Ingman, Franklinstrasse 20.

LEIPSIC—
Hotel Hentschel, Mr. Alvin Kranich in charge.

PARIS, FRANCE—
Conducted from London Office.
Single copies for sale at Brentano's, 37 Avenue de l'Opera; 37 Rue Marbeuf; Galignani Library, 224 Rue de Rivoli; Shakespeare Library, 75 Avenue des Champs Elysées, Boulevard Kiosks.

VIENNA—
Edwin Stewart, correspondent.

ITALY—
5 Via Rondinelli, Florence, Italy, Mr. Joseph Smith in charge.

CHICAGO OFFICE—
Fine Arts Building, Michigan Boulevard, C. A. Daniell in charge.

CANADIAN OFFICE—
In charge of Miss May Hamilton. Address Main Office, New York City.

SAN FRANCISCO—
Mrs. A. Wedmore Jones, 2046 Leavenworth Street.

LOS ANGELES—
F. W. Blanchard, Blanchard Hall.

ST. LOUIS—
Nellie Allen-Hessenbruch, correspondent.

MILWAUKEE—
Controlled by Chicago Office.

INDIANAPOLIS—
Controlled by Chicago Office.

CINCINNATI OFFICE—
J. A. Homan in charge.

BOSTON OFFICE—
17 Beacon Street.

BROOKLYN OFFICE—
Hotel St. George, Clark, corner Henry Street.

BUFFALO OFFICE—
Mrs. Nellie M. Gould, 428 Ashland Avenue.

WASHINGTON OFFICE—
616 Twelfth Street, N. W., Berenice Thompson in charge.

SUBSCRIPTIONS:

Invariably in advance, including postage.
Single copies, Ten Cents.

United States, ...	$5.00
Great Britain, . .	£1 5s.	Austria, . . .	15 fl.
France, . . .	31.25 fr.	Italy, . . .	31.25 fr.
Germany, . . .	25 m.	Russia, . . .	12 r.

SPENCER T. DRIGGS - - BUSINESS MANAGER

Rates for Advertising.

PER INCH ON ADVERTISING PAGES.

Three Months.....	$25.00	Nine months.....	$75.00
Six Months.....	50.00	Twelve Months.....	100.00

ON READING PAGES.

One inch, 3 months.....	$75.00
One inch, 6 months.....	125.00
One inch, 1 year.....	200.00

Special rates for preferred positions.

One page, one insertion.....	$300.00
One-half page, one insertion.....	175.00
One Column.....	100.00

All remittances for subscriptions or advertising must be made by check, draft or money order, payable to THE MUSICAL COURIER Company.

Advertisements for the current week must be handed in by 2 P. M. on Monday.

All changes in advertisements must reach this office by Friday 5 P. M. preceding the issue in which changes are to take effect.

American News Company, New York, General Distributing Agents.
Western News Company, Chicago, Western Distributing Agents.

THE MUSICAL COURIER EXTRA.

Published Every Saturday During the Year.

GREATEST ADVERTISING MEDIUM FOR ALL MUSIC PUBLISHERS AND MANUFACTURERS and IMPORTERS OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS OR PARTS THEREOF. ALSO SPECIALLY DEVOTED TO POPULAR MUSIC and VAUDEVILLE.

For Particulars apply to "Saturday Extra Department."

EMPEROR WILLIAM has made the French composer Charles Camille Saint-Saëns a Foreign Knight of the Order Pour le Merite, and this is but another proof of His Majesty's friendliness toward France and Frenchmen.

WE witness again "that westward the flight of empire takes its way." Chicago has come out squarely against the "coon song" at concerts in the public parks. John Hand is the name of the conductor who has raised his voice in behalf of better music for the masses. The Park Board of Chicago is becoming convinced, too, that Mr. Hand's objections are worth considering.

ACCORDING to an article in the New York Sun Walter Damrosch has received a letter from Mr. Grau, asking whether "Manru" could be gotten ready for production here next season. Mr. Damrosch has the score and is to communicate with Grau.

It is to be hoped that Paderewski will not permit Mr. Grau to present the opera except under a competent conductor who can do justice to the score.

ISN'T it high time for the members of the musical profession to eliminate the overworked and unclassical term "professor"? With Coney Island ventriloquists and palmists all advertised as "professors," no self-respecting musician can desire to claim the title. In dear old America nothing can endure. Down South they are making an effort to reduce the number of colonels in private life. Poor Kentucky! What is to become of her greatness?

EDMOND AUDRAN, the composer of "La Mascotte," died rather prematurely as longevity is recorded in these days. He was only fifty-nine. As a writer of light and comic opera music he became famous many years ago, and the best part of it was his fame was deserved. The unutterable rubbish of the so-called comic operas of these degenerate times only tends to emphasize the real talents of Audran and composers of his school. "La Mascotte" is not great, but it is genuine comic opera, and not the imitative drivel which is now accepted as "comic" opera by amiable Americans and English audiences. In the music for "Miss Helyett" Audran duplicated his success in "La Mascotte." The deceased was a popular and industrious musician.

THE ROOT OF THE EVIL.

A FEW weeks ago the New York Sun published a number of letters in reply to one which regretted the character of the programs of public or popular concerts, and which lamented the fact that the late P. S. Gilmore was no more. The letter also asserted that there was too much German music played and sung, and suggested that we should return to the days of Gilmore. The replies published were equally limited in scope and contrasted in view, but the whole controversy illustrated that the prevailing ideas about music and its relation to the people are subverted, false and based on misconceptions.

The first question is whether our children, the youth of the land, are properly reared in music. Never mind the present generation, for its musical faults and misdirection cannot be cured. The very fact that a great wave of rag-time and coon song recently swept over the United States and achieved an unprecedented popularity illustrates the trend of the present generation. Had the late Patrick Gilmore lived he would certainly have utilized this to extend his popularity still more, and the wave would have hovered still longer. What the next musical attraction will be in the shape of popular song is hard to predict, but it cannot, from the nature of the culture imbibed, be far from the coon song. Therefore we had better, for the present, drop any hopes of reforming the present generation.

The youth of the land is receiving its education in music in the public schools, and the public school systems of nearly all the States are controlled by the political parties as they happen to be in power. That alone is sufficient to condemn, at once, the whole system. Under it a peculiar class of musicians has arisen, a class of teachers who do not mingle with the professional musician as he is generally known. These public school teachers of music are, as a rule, not recognized by the general musicians, and do not figure in any of the musical events of the period.

They do not attend classical concerts. They are not interested in Bach, Mozart, Beethoven. They do not cultivate Schubert, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Chopin or Wagner. They are not acquainted with this musical literature. They pursue vocal studies, chiefly of the choral, and they follow a series of musical precepts formulated for the purpose of teaching young children in public schools to sing in chorus, generally in unisono, and to instill them with the mathematical relations of intervals, with note values, with the staff and its keys, and, as a result, when a young boy or girl leaves the public school he or she has forgotten all about it unless the parents have, in the meantime, given the child a private teacher to study music at home.

The so-called public school musical instruction generally prepares the children to accept and absorb at once any drivel that comes from the press of a music publisher and that finds favor with audiences that patronize the variety theatre. They drift at once into this channel and the book of good music—not necessarily always classical—remains closed to them forever. So far in the history of music in this country, about a century old, not one person starting with musical education in the public schools has ever been heard of in music. Not one.

The whole system in all States should be eliminated, for it is not only useless but harmful. Music schools under the supervision of the State could be established here and there with musicians as a faculty, but even then the plan would become futile as long as the public school teacher depends upon political pull.

And thus the rag-time and coon song and their successors will continue to flourish with us, just as the anvil chorus with firemen at the anvils and cannon on the outside fired simultaneously with the striking of the anvils, as Patrick Gilmore of blessed memory devised it, flourished in that day.

The habit of resenting the theory that music is a serious art must cease here in the United States, and the principle that it is merely an amusement must be replaced by a healthier conception of music as music. The youth must be taught that music is a living and essential element of culture, and that it mirrors the highest culture of the present century, representing in our day what sculpture and architecture meant for the Greeks. It is a means of popular expression, and if we express ourselves in rag-time we are vulgarites, for it is ordinary and common and debauching. The instruction in music in our public schools does not inculcate the children with any musical idea that leads toward the classics; it prepares them for the rhythms of the rag-time or the coon song which is not the true negro melody, but a travesty and an exaggeration of the plantation song.

In addition to all this comes the unfortunate habit of the American in his oblique vision regarding the purpose or object of music—of the music his children study at home. He looks upon it as an accomplishment when it should be treated as a part of the intellectual structure and as a means of broadening the mind, preparing it for a better and truer conception of all art. It must not be forgotten that the culture of music exercises a refining and poetic influence upon our natures, and softens the harsh outlines of contact, preparing us the better to assimilate the gentleness necessary for a true conception of proper living. Musical instruction under favorable auspices should be the first rule for the education of our children; not in the public schools by teachers who instruct en gros, but by competent pedagogues who make thoroughness of the work at the very outset the first principle. Then we will soon put an end to rag-time and to music with fireworks.

THE ROMANTIC ORATORIOS.

BERLIOZ, speaking of the adagio cantabile in the Ninth Symphony, refers to the lack of unity, in that there are two distinct airs—the first theme, however, finally and in the most subtle manner dominating the first air. "So great, so supreme," he says, "is the beauty of the melodies, so wonderful the variety, charm, power and grace of the work done, that it rivals that of the greatest poet who ever lived, and if the law of unities is broken so much the worse—for the law." Here is a marked example of the inner feeling of romanticism voiced in Beethoven's music and in Berlioz's appreciation.

The definite breaking away from classic forms of musical expression was, we know, in the first place the result of that revival in literature and art which we call the Renaissance, the attempt to come closer to humanity, to imbue all literature and art with natural human feeling. The natural human feeling is always to rebel at too straight lines. The natural human feeling of a genius is to break away into a new pathway for himself—to walk over the old formulas only so far as is necessary to keep his footing; he must add some new beauty of form or expression to what has already been established. Mendelssohn is called the first of the romanticists, but, as we have before pointed out, there can be no such hard and fast line drawn in musical development; the tendency toward what we call Romanticism began with Palestrina, was indicated by the original humanizing melodies of Bach in his Passion Music, and received its first decided manifestation in Beethoven. Thereafter the development was rapid, its most powerful exponents being Berlioz, Schumann, Rubinstein and finally Wagner.

Berlioz broke very far away from classical restraint. He was the musical culmination of the stormy period in which he lived. He can never be thoroughly understood without a knowledge of his time. He was imbued with the revolutionary spirit, and his art in its strongest aspect was the art of turmoil, of fear, of unrest. The wild ride of Faust and Mephistopheles to the abyss, the mocking "Chorus of Devils" in "Faust," and, on a higher plane, the agony of the "Lacrymosa" in the "Te Deum" are superior, in intensity of feeling and splendor of orchestration pervade all of Berlioz's in modern music. And this intensity of feeling and splendor of orchestration pervades all of Berlioz's compositions; but, because of his mental limitations, he could never portray with equal power, however much he desired to, the calmness, the profound self-control, of true religious feeling. Berlioz thought that he reached the point of sublimity in his "Requiem" and in his "Te Deum," but he only really touched it in the Sanctus of the former and in the magnificent final chorus of the latter. His weakness in counterpoint is generally noticeable, although the weakness is often concealed by the rich orchestration. He had not the fine sense of reticence which held him back from extravagance and musical absurdity in those attempts which he made to reach the sublime in choral music. He had the aberrations that often accompany genius. Musically his choral works are seldom firm of structure, but they are magnificent in rhythm and modulation. They are terrible, melancholy and humorous by turns.

Much of what we have briefly said of Berlioz, as applied to his choral music, applies also to Rubinstein; for, although Rubinstein adheres in the main to classical forms and shows somewhat the influence of Mendelssohn, especially in his earlier works, his fervor, the curious cross rhythms and cross accents and certain peculiarities of orchestration remind one strongly of Berlioz. "The Maccabees," the "Demon," the "Tower of Babel" and the biblical opera of "Sulamith" are especially valuable for interpretation; for, notwithstanding many long winded passages, the solos and choruses are most of them beautiful, and many of them delightful studies in Oriental coloring. "The Maccabees" presents, it will be recalled, the interesting peculiarity of unfolding two distinct styles representing the Greek and Hebrew elements.

But it is by "Christus," which Rubinstein himself calls the work of his life, that the composer must be judged as a writer of choral music. How far did he meet the anticipations of the musical world? How far was he able to carry out his own conceptions? There has been so little study of this great sacred opera in this country that few will feel themselves capable of answering these questions. The performance abroad and the analyses that have been published and a consideration of the score will, however, convince any musician that the agitated music descriptive of those turbulent times preceding Christ's advent; the lurid harmonies, veritable Satanic chords in the "Temptation in the Wilderness," chords dominated finally by clear major chords; the scene before Pilate and the Crucifixion scene, which illustrate the struggle between good and evil, all represent the climax of Rubinstein's power in orchestration, while the Messiah "idea," as he himself calls it, the four opening bars lento give his conception of sublimity in theme, and the lovely strains of the "Sermon on the Mount," the chorale of the angel's message and song of the heavenly host, give his conception of spirituality in music. But it is exactly in these latter elements of a sacred opera that he fails to reach the highest point possible. The listener may be momentarily transported, but he is not translated. On the other hand, the vigorous "Song of the Northern King" and St. Paul's bold words cannot be imagined in any more adequate form. As a whole the sacred opera is fitly characterized as "a series of moving pictures set to appropriate music," and it is surely far more worthy study for the purpose of musical development than are many of the monotonous compositions of the English school, which have so long dominated our church festivals and so often, too often, controlled our secular festivals.

In this progressive day music of the old-time English school should only be offered occasionally at secular festivals, as illustrating a certain period of choral music and a certain legitimate style which has had its worthy influence, but which cannot be assumed as the only correct model to be placed before the people.

Schumann, the "champion of romanticism," has left on record his indebtedness to Bach. He writes in 1840: "Mozart and Haydn had only a partial and imperfect knowledge of Bach, and we can have no idea how Bach, had they known him in all his greatness, would have affected their creative powers. I myself confess my sins daily to that Mighty One and endeavor to purify and strengthen myself through him." One of the gigues which Schumann wrote is an almost perfect imitation of Bach. But he soon sought out his own artistic form of expression, even in his counterpoint. He did not develop his counterpoint according to classic models from a classically constructed melody, but he composed his theme in the romantic spirit, and allowed this theme to develop itself in novel and original harmonies, and he endeavored at the same time to bring his own musical views into harmony with the general system of ancient counterpoint. And although he studied Bach carefully, he gained his knowledge of form by instinct, by his fine sense of artistic proportion. His polyphonic piano style served him in good purpose when he began to write his more serious choral works, and his early following of Schubert prevented him in great measure from overshadowing the vocal parts of his choral works by too rich orchestration. The only fault of his orchestral technic seems to be sometimes a lack of clearness and simplicity in his purely instrumental music. But in his best choral works even his faults has its value.

He understands better than Bach how to make the voice stand out distinctly against harmonic masses. He can present exquisitely what has been called "the lyric isolation of a detached emotion." This charm is apparent in the solos of that exquisite romantic oratorio, "Paradise and the Peri," which Schumann himself calls an oratorio "not for the conventicle, but for a bright and happy people." Besides the songs of the Peri, so varied, yet so characteristic—exultant, as in "Let This Be My Gift"; sorrowful, as in the dirge; triumphant, as in the final hymn; such choruses as "Come Forth From the Waters" and "Wreath Ye the Steps," the lightness and beauty of the whole composition, the unity in its atmosphere, if not in its actual structure, place it beside the greatest sacred oratorios. Schumann's energy was sustained throughout this lovely labyrinthine maze of harmony. The whole cantata or, more properly, romantic oratorio, is clothed in light, the light and life of an Indian clime and the light of Paradise.

In intensity it equals Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust," and it was the point of departure for many later dramatic cantatas. Many of these almost equally deserve attention. But they must be left at this moment untouched, since it is only our purpose in this present article to indicate a few high lights in the great oratorio picture painted by Time.

OPERA IN ENGLISH

UNDER the below title the London Times of August 10 publishes the following letter from Hamish MacCunn, the Scotch-English composer and conductor, and our readers will observe in it how THE MUSICAL COURIER theories have penetrated the Anglo-Saxon mind. It is the old MUSICAL COURIER platform, although it never could have been its platform unless it had first been an integral part of the Anglo-Saxon demand for a fair show.

The prevailing prejudices against the English language as a text for song or operatic aria must be removed, and will be as soon as we compel the foreigner to sing in English just as he has compelled us to sing in Italian, French and German. We must recognize the good it has done us to have been obliged by prejudice to become polyglots in singing, and we must now return the compliment by insisting that the foreign singer must in England and America sing in the English language. That is the very first step as always proposed in these columns. But the letter speaks for itself:

OPERA IN ENGLISH.

To the Editor of the Times:

SIR—The close of the season at Covent Garden suggests some comment on the operatic conditions obtaining here and abroad. At Dresden, for instance, the King of Saxony grants £24,000 a year as subsidy, the orchestra, in addition, being supported from his Majesty's purse.

In England opera is certainly without subsidy or endowment. Moreover, opera is presented before the German, French or Italian people in their native languages, while at Covent Garden any European language other than English is invariably used.

To emphasize this remarkable contrast more strongly, it may be added that opera flourishes more strongly in many German towns besides Dresden, under equally fortunate circumstances; whereas outside of London, in the provinces of England, Scotland and Ireland, no operas are to be heard, in English or otherwise, except those given during flying visits of a week or fortnight's duration by touring English companies. In short, there is no adequate opera in English in this country.

This subject is an interesting one to all opera-goers; but to the members of a profession which already is much overstocked and glutted by the apathetic and aimless annual output of our semi-national music teaching institutions it is more than interesting. To them it is little less than a matter of life or death.

The opera house anywhere on the Continent is one of the largest employers of skilled musical labor of all kinds. Orchestral players, conductors, principal singers, chorus singers, répétiteurs, prompters, stage managers with musical training, ballet directors, &c., go to make up a large proportion of the entire musical profession there. Here there is neither such employment to be found, nor is there any form of so advanced and inspiring a continuance of musical education.

For experience of operatic work is in itself a liberal musical education. Barred out from it as are our students and our musical public, it is almost pathetic to observe the eagerness with which any operatic excerpt in an orchestral concert program is listened to. Indeed, it may be said our most popular programs are now nearly altogether made up of extracted portions of operas—principally Wagnerian operas—with an occasional leaven added in the form of a Beethoven symphony. The contrast is always unfortunate. The listener is puzzled when asked to attend intelligently to, say, the Pastoral symphony, sandwiched between the "Walkürenritt" and the "Vorspiel und Liebestod" from "Tristan und Isolde." It is not in human nature, certainly least of all in enthusiastic student human nature, to dwell on the formal and colder beauties of the symphony. The strenuous passions and kaleidoscopic splendors of the dramatic music will quite monopolize the attention, and in this way our lack of national opera loses us more than is at first sight evident. Our appreciation of so-called "abstract" music is alarmingly on the decline, hindered, as it inevitably must be, by the increasingly frequent presence in our concert programs of (also so-called) "theatre" music. The public demands the excitements of opera. In the concert room alone, frequently without the necessary vocal parts, and always without scenery or context, can they get it, in this homœopathic form. For the student and general public there exists no opera at all. From that fertile source of imaginative education and remunerative employment our students, "finished" or unfinished, are totally excluded. The prices of seats to hear music-drama (I mean to hear it effectively) at Covent Garden are far beyond the means of most students. Indeed, the number of musicians, of all sorts and conditions, who go to the opera in London more than a few times in the course of the season is surprisingly small. Abroad musicians go to the opera constantly.

So far as this want of opera in English is concerned, the cause of our deprivation is on the surface. We are not likely to support or encourage anything we do not appreciate, nor to appreciate what we imperfectly understand. It will never be possible for us to understand the significance of music-drama until it is properly presented before us in our native language. The recent "boom" in comic operatic extravaganza is partially due to the fact that the words, often very witty and droll, are in English. Had grand opera always been presented in Germany, Italy or France in an alien tongue, it is as likely as not that their appreciation and support of it, even to this day, would amount to as little as ours. I repeat that a comparison of opera in German in Germany with opera in English in England shows, virtually, that all popular performances in Germany are in German, and that none in England is in English. This contrast applies, with some minor exceptions, equally to France, Russia or Italy, as compared with Great Britain.

It is not difficult to understand why we were in this position many years ago. Then most of our music and musicians were imported from abroad. But nowadays, when there exist among us so many excellent English, American or colonial born singers, and so many experienced translators of foreign libretti into English, it is incomprehensible. Has the English born, English speaking and English thinking "man in the street" any decided preference for music-drama in a language other than his own? Does the abstract fact of listening to German, French or Italian words wedded to music give him a keener enjoyment than if the words were English? If he does not understand the language, is the very mystery of it comfortable to his imagination? If he does happen to understand, is that amount of his delight so much the less? There may be some grain of truth in this suggestion, for our insular worship of anything from "foreign parts" is very characteristic of us in other connections than those musical.

It has sometimes been said that English is a difficult or ineffective language in which to sing. So far from this being the case, it is one of the most fluently beautiful, and for lyrical or dramatic purposes one of the most readily "painted" by the infinitely varied resources of musical inflection and emphasis. Even if the hackneyed foreign sneer were true, which it is not, that the English cannot act, surely it would be possible for foreign singers to learn English versions for use in this country on their visits here to demonstrate their vocal and histrionic superiority.

They are not to be blamed for coming. The immense sums which they are paid enable them to afford to perform in their own state aided opera houses at a reasonably modest remuneration. It has, I think, been pointed out before that in this oblique manner we are very obligingly helping to subsidize foreign opera houses.

Let the singers be of any nationality whatever, we should surely have at least one national opera house at which all performances are in English. I know this has been said before, and it will probably be repeated yet again and again, while enterprise and capital are being diverted and devoted, with misguided zeal, to the establishment in London of German or French—and possibly Japanese—theatres. The reiterated parrot cry that art has no nationality is as irrelevant in this connection as it is mischievous when universally applied. Bread has no nationality, yet the Germans prefer to call it Brod and the French pain. We call it bread.

Without doubt we are a theatregoing people. And it is well worth noticing that we are partial to a running orchestral accompaniment to the more energetic climaxes, or the extra pathetic episodes, of our spoken plays. I allude to what the programs call "incidental," and the profession knows as "dramatic" music. Its application at the proper moment is quite a little art by itself. Here, at least, are the elements of an instinctive desire for music with drama, if not for music drama. But there are not wanting signs that the public taste is still further advanced.

In the provinces, and in London, performances by touring companies of opera in English (Wagnerian opera especially) have often evoked the greatest enthusiasm, even when given under the most disadvantageous and discounted conditions. "Tristan and Isolde," "The Flying Dutchman," "Tannhäuser" and "Lohengrin" have been received (principally "Tristan and Isolde") with the wildest demonstrations of delight. Having produced and conducted all these operas, for two separate companies, in London and in the provinces, I can vouch for the truth of this.

That infinitely better performances are easily possible, with the material which is now ready to our hand, no one could question who has any acquaintance with the subject. We have a plentiful supply of accomplished singers of opera in English. We have orchestral players second to none in the world. There are excellent English translations of all the best operas. We have native conductors who have reason to know their business, and opportunity and practical experience are all that is necessary to give us more of these. A bright, good-looking, intelligent and young voiced chorus is very readily mustered. We have many suitable theatres, and experienced stage managers, and, it but remains to add, a sympathetic public patiently waiting for us to begin.

I say begin, for, excepting perhaps some performances of Sullivan's "Ivanhoe" in the ill fated opera house which the late Mr. Carte inexplicably attempted to establish on the run of one opera, no performances of opera in English, in or out of London, have been half so good as they could have been.

The old Carl Rosa Company, good as their representations were in the troupe's best days, have been and are like all existing touring companies at the present day, hampered by the want of anything approaching a really adequate orchestra.

And yet the performances of those companies were and are enthusiastically welcomed, again and again, by delighted and grateful audiences. But it will be necessary for this question of the orchestra to be taken in hand seriously by any manager who hopes to keep pace with the times.

A competent orchestra—both in quality and quantity—is of the first necessity, even if some rows of stalls must be sacrificed for its accommodation. And in the light of what I have seen, in one company in particular, it should be said that it is foolish, or worse, to suppose that quality can be secured otherwise than by paying adequately, if reasonably, for it.

It is quite possible to make opera in English pay its own way, even without subsidy or endowment, and certainly without approaching the starvation or sweating of anyone.

Few would venture to deny the existence of a widespread and urgent demand in London and in the provinces for opera in English.

Are we then, only for the want of organization and co-operation, to let matters drift along as they are?

Or have we any reason to hope confidently for a time to come soon when opera at a moderate price, adequately but not extravagantly supported, shall be regularly performed before English audiences in the beautiful and expressive language of this land? I am, sir, yours faithfully,

August 2. Hamish MacCunn.

IN another column of this issue our readers will find an interesting article reproduced in part from the New York World of last Sunday, which relates the merry war over a conductor for the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra. "Prof." W. Damrosch, of Willow Grove, was beaten in a fair fight waged by the fairest of women, and Fritz Scheel, the graceful and skillful, won hands down. While admitting that "Prof." Damrosch is a musician, he is not the man fitted by nature to aspire to the position of conductor of a symphony orchestra. Wielding the baton at the unimportant summer concerts at Willow Grove is one thing, and conducting great works before discriminating audiences in the regular musical season is quite another thing, and fortunately the cultured people of Philadelphia have demonstrated that they know "who's who."

FRITZ SCHEEL'S TRIUMPH.

IT is a curious fact in the modern history of art that music was so long denied access to our universities on the same or even approximate footing with the other arts. Even in the infancy of its evolution as an art its value as an educational factor was recognized by the most highly civilized nations of antiquity. And the truth of most of the moral, educational and sociological theories of Egypt, India and Greece we latter-day nations have been obliged to accept. But in music, though as to theory we may move in admirable circles, how many astonishing tangents have we described in practice!

UNITY OF THE ARTS.

Music is even now looked upon by many in the same light as dancing. And we know that dancing, even that most poetic phase known as Greek posturing, would not for a moment be tolerated as a serious study by the grave and reverend seigniors of Oxford, Cambridge, Columbia or Yale. Music is still looked upon by many a worthy Presbyterian and Puritan as having its origin in the devices of the Evil One. And a really moral musician is regarded as a brand mysteriously snatched from the burning. Music is still far from holding its own with the other arts. It is regarded by many musicians even as sensuous and demoralizing per se.

Yet when we look at the arts together, consider them as they appear standing side by side and moving down the centuries in constantly varying paces—not keeping step by any means—we are compelled to see that they spring alike from the same primal impulse, and have all reached their present complex state through the operation of the same regular laws. All springs, according to the best reasoning of scientists and metaphysicians, from the play impulse, the spielend of Kant, the free and spontaneous activity of Herbert Spencer. A primitive man, after gratifying his actual every-day needs, acquired some superfluous energy, engendered by the excitement of battle or of the chase he described on returning to his companions, by mimicry, by gesture and movement, the scenes he had passed through. In these two ways seems to have been accumulated all the raw material of art—that material which under the influence of the principle of order finally reaches artistic expression in what are known as our five great arts—poetry, painting, sculpture, architecture and music, the being the relative order in which they appear of interest to humanity.

These arts have all arisen from the necessity of satisfying a certain desire inherent in man's nature—a desire for artistic satisfaction. This need for artistic satisfaction increases with expression. As the power of expression increases with culture, with intellectual development as restrained by reason.

These arts, moreover, are all linked together by the fact that each forms—in somewhat technical phraseology—an aggregate of parts arranged in accordance with certain mathematical relationships. Each art, it must be remembered, has for its ultimate aim the expression of some essential feature of things in such manner as to give artistic pleasure. And all these arts are alike in that they may give impersonal pleasure—a pleasure that is satisfied by observing or listening, and is independent of any sense of possession or of use. It is for this reason that the real pleasure in any art is disassociated from utility, that it may be called in its highest evolution disinterested or playful. Art, to repeat in meaning, if not in words, is the ideal manifestation of energy, and is evolved from crude material sources. On the lower plane of life we have simply play, free energy, surplus of vigor, which—to use the reasonable classification most generally received and which is tabulated concisely by Prof. G. Baldwin Brown, of the University of Edinburgh—gives the bird's song, the mimic gesture, construction from motives of pleasure or display; these are common to man and animal alike.

On a higher plane of life, along which man alone can move, we have rhythmical movement and utterances, song and music with time added, adornment with feeling for pattern, decoration in form and color, construction with sense of proportion. Art thus in its highest form has its impulse in a state of ideal excitement.

There are many interesting points of similarity between the arts, and the attempt to puzzle these out and classify them gives fruitful occupation to the leisure hour of many theorists, who are often fantastic in their views; or scientists, who are always sober in their deductions, although their deductions are variable and subject to change. This resemblance among the arts is a fascinating study, but one with which we cannot, save for a moment, concern ourselves. It is only well to note, as bearing on our aim, that architecture was the first of the arts to reach a high stage of development, and music the last. The order of development in the history of art has been architecture, sculpture, drama, painting, music. Three of these arts are directly imitative. A statue represents man himself, a painting delineates man (for landscape painting is a modern phase of painting), the drama sets forth characters.

Music resembles these three arts in that sound is analogous to human speech—to the human cry expressing emotions and agitations of a living, sensitive being. Architecture resembles these three arts in that it is based upon the same underlying laws of construction. But architecture, the first of the arts to reach approximate perfection, and music, the last, have the most striking points of resemblance—a truth long ago recognized by one who said that architecture was frozen music. That was a poetic expression, but one which might be more justly reversed by saying that music is living architecture, form animated by soul, spirit, feeling, mind, whichever term may be preferred.

Both music and architecture are strikingly alike in that each bodies forth some one dominant characteristic of nature or man. Strength, elegance, grotesqueness, simplicity, severity, serenity, are expressed in architectural lines; we are brought to see the dominant meaning and appreciate it according as we have before us a Greek temple, a mediæval cathedral, a highland castle or a little Trianon. And as architecture combines materials in such proportions as to show the character aimed at, so from the number of sounds forming the scale and from the relationship of chords the musician consciously selects those which will best present his idea of joy or sorrow, of love or hate, of turmoil or serenity.

ON MUSIC.

BY WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR.

Many love music but for music's sake;
Many because her touches can awake
Thoughts that repose within the breast half dead,
And rise to follow where she loves to lead.
What various feelings come from days gone by!
What tears from far off sources dim the eye!
Few, when light fingers with sweet voices play,
And melodies swell, pause, and melt away,
Mind how at every touch, at every tone,
A spark of life hath glistened and hath gone.

DID you ever read what Georges Bizet wrote of himself as composer? "I am an eclectic. I lived three years in Italy, and I have been influenced, not by the shameful proceedings of that country, but by the temperament of some of its composers. My sensual nature is gripped by that fluent, lazy, amorous, lascivious, passionate music. By convictions I am a German, heart and soul. I put Beethoven above the greatest, the most renowned. Only one man was known to make music quasi-improvisée, or at least music that seems so—and he is Chopin, a strange and charming personality, inimitable, not be imitated. Mendelssohn, among other faults, treats sometimes his symphonic andantes as songs without words. I have always noticed that the compositions the least well rounded are always the dearest at the moment of hatching."

Constance Bache tells a good story of Sir Julius Benedict:

Every music professor, she writes, has gone through that awful half hour directly after lunch, when the first pupil has begun her lesson, while the balmy summer air, and the hum of the bees through the open French window, steal soothingly upon the senses, and put to flight those severer and harsher tones which the well worn school piano is giving forth in its customary labored manner—so customary, in fact, that it only serves to intensify the few moments of oblivion, which overtakes the weary brain—(after lunch).

It was in waking from such a moment of beatific peace that Sir Julius collected himself sufficiently to say, "No, Miss Smith, you did not play that right."

"Oh, I am not Miss Smith," she said, "I am the next pupil!"

Havelock Ellis has spent some years in tabulating the references to colors in literature. Yellow is rarely mentioned in the Bible, and blue not at all. Blue is not mentioned in Homer; red rarely, but he mentions yellow twenty-one times in a hundred. Since the Christian era red and yellow are mentioned most frequently, but blue is referred to twice as often since the sixteenth century as before. Poe mentions yellow twice as often and blue about one-quarter as often as any of his contemporaries in the list. That the color sense is a late development is shown by the fact that the natives of South Africa can distinguish only white and black (which are not colors at all) and red. Blue they call black, and yellow red. Green they cannot distinguish at all, confusing it with yellow and red both.

A performance of "The Barber" was being given in honor of Rossini in the local theatre. While the overture was in full swing he noticed a huge trumpet in the orchestra, manifestly blown with remarkable force and continuity by a member of the band, but not a sound in the least akin to the tone of that instrument could he hear. At the close of the performance he interviewed the conductor and asked him to explain the purpose of the noiseless trumpet. He answered: "Maestro, in this town there is not a living soul who can play the trumpet, therefore I especially engaged an artist to hold one up to his lips, binding him by oath not to blow into it, for it looks well to have a trumpet in an operatic orchestra." Rossini's answer is not recorded.

Sophie, the late Duchess d'Alençon, daughter of the Archduke Maximilian, was a remarkable woman. Born in 1847, she was at the age of nineteen the most beautiful woman at the Bavarian court. Like her sister, the late Empress of Austria, she had a magnificent figure, dark eyes and black hair. At this time Ludwig II. was King of Bavaria, being then twenty-one years of age. The King was of a romantic character. He was ambitious and idealistic, a great lover of art, and one of Wagner's most enthusiastic admirers and protectors. His love of Wagner music amounted to a passion. In this the Princess Sophie sympathized with the King. The common interest in music attracted them to each other, and soon the King became the constant companion of his cousin. It was not long before the court perceived that the King was deeply attached to Sophie, and that she seemed to reciprocate his affection. The enthusiastic nature of the King manifested itself in these days of his first love. He was extremely happy, and wrote to his fiancée letters of the deepest tenderness and affection. The Princess was in the habit of turning these letters over to her father, and through his carelessness they fell into the hands of unscrupulous courtiers. One of them was addressed To My Dearest Elsa, and signed Lohengrin.

Great was the preparation made for the royal nuptials. It was the ambition of the King to make it the greatest royal wedding of modern times. He was, during all his life, most lavish in his expenditures and a great lover of display. His castles are monuments of prodigality. All Munich was to celebrate the wedding, and the crowned heads of Europe were to lend pomp to the occasion by their presence. While the preparations were proceeding on a great scale, the King, without a word of warning, suddenly left Munich, and, accompanied by two servants, went to his castle on Starenberg Lake. Soon afterward it was announced that the King had broken the engagement. At that time but few knew the true reason for the King's action, and these few are so nearly concerned in the shipwreck of royal love that they were most careful to guard the secret. The wedding had been set for August 25, 1867, the date which was also the birthday of the King. Ludwig, however, forbade any celebration of the anniversary, and spent the entire day in the solitude of the Bavarian Alps. Only a few days before he had written to the Princess Sophie: "I thought I had your heart, but I know I never possessed it. You wish my hand, but you care nothing for my heart. She who is to be my Queen must love me truly. Farewell!"

The rumors which were first whispered as to the cause of this love tragedy at the Bavarian court have since the death of the King been proved historical facts. While the King paid his devotion to the Princess, and while she simulated affection for him, she secretly maintained a desperate flirtation with a handsome young officer named Hanfstaengl. The officer was a son of the Councillor Hanfstaengl, one of the most versatile artists of Bavaria. So deep was the love of Sophie for Hanfstaengl that she gave him some of her most costly jewels, and the discovery of these gifts led to the disclosure of her unfaithfulness. She was obliged to leave the court. Soon afterward she married the Duke d'Alençon. King Ludwig became a woman hater. He had lost all faith in the sex.

On June 16, 1886, he committed suicide in Starenberg Lake. The death of her cousin deeply affected Sophie. She became mentally unbalanced, and spent a number of years in an asylum at Graz, in Austria.

The late John P. Jackson, who was at one time music editor of the World, told me the other side of the story. It was a fit case for Havelock Ellis and other psychologists of the morbid. It was also very sad, very dreary. Ludwig, for all, was a great monarch, a true idealist, a man who realized his dreams. D'Annunzio writes very wonderfully of him.

"Bless my soul!" cried the shade, as he entered the golden gates, and they gave him a trumpet; "I never learned to play this thing!" "That's the reason you're here," remarked St. Peter. Perhaps this was the ghost of the mock-trumpeter Rossini tells about.

Hervé, the French composer, whose opera "Le Petit Faust" was once the rage in Paris, began his musical career as an organist. When a boy he strolled into church one day and persuaded the blower to let him try the organ after service. He then improvised something wonderfully sweet and strange. The priest happened to hear it, strolled in and was amazed. "Where did you learn to play the organ, my boy?" he asked. "This is the first time I have played it, Father," was the reply. "Well you had better apply for the post of organist here," said the priest; "there is a vacancy next week." The boy applied and was accepted.

I don't believe the story. It takes a year at the very least to master the mere mechanical side of the instrument. By this I mean learning the names and functions of the stops, the manuals and the pedals. To manipulate them properly takes years. To play music is another and more difficult story. Yet we are to believe that something intangible we call "genius" could reveal all these mysteries to a young man, make flexible his fingers, musical his brain! What nonsense! It takes time even for genius to limber up and find itself. The young Hervé was having fun with the reverend sir. And that vacancy the next week! Oh, the long arm of coincidence!

Left alone in this ebb tide of realism, says Edmund Gosse of Zola, a sort of roughly hewn rock giant on the sand, M. Zola finds himself misunderstood, insulted, abandoned. And in his isolation he is grander; he is an object of more genuine sympathy than ever he was in the days of his overwhelming prosperity. Adversity—a very relative adversity, which does not affect the enormous bulk of his sales and his royalties—has been salutary to M. Zola; it has acted on him as an astringent. It has made him pull himself together and practice his pectoral muscles. It has even had a favorable effect upon his style, which seems more direct, less burdened with repetitions, less choked with words than it usually is. Zola is very angry, and wrath is becoming to him. He seizes his club and glares around upon us. The effect is distinctly tremendous; he looks like Hercules, and sometimes a little like Polyphemus.

To be serious, the reaction against Zola has certainly proceeded too far. It has become a shield behind which all manners of effeminacies have concealed themselves, and, if he were the devil, it is time he should have his due. And nothing could be less like the devil than Zola. He is a strenuous, conscientious bourgeois, rather sentimental, very romantic, with a theory of life which has ridden away with him and makes him believe he ought to be squalid and obscene wherever existence is obscene and squalid. But the heart of him is a heart of gold, and any candid person who carefully reads him will see how unaffectedly the author is on the side of the angels. His very faults are virtues turned inside out.

When a Hebrew financier of London was spoken to the other day about the Zionistic scheme for restoring the Jews to Palestine, he said: "I would rather be Jew of the Kings in London than King of the Jews in Jerusalem." I fancy that it was Zangwill who turned that neat epigram.

Monkey musicians some 3 or 4 inches high, imitations of the old Dresden make, are plentiful, but when you have the real thing these little figures have their value. At a recent sale in London one grand orchestra of monkeys, sixteen in number, of real old Dresden, brought about $1,000. The Wedgwood Barberini vase, one of the fifty made by permission of the Duchess of Portland, brought 87 guineas.

Now here is a chance for the comparatively easy acquisition of a permanent orchestra—a well behaved one at that.

In a review of T. B. Saunders' recent volume on Schopenhauer, a writer in the London News agrees with the author that Schopenhauer "put more faith in the artist than in the philosopher."

It may be added that he himself was much more of an artist than a philosopher. The great popularity of his pessimistic philosophy with the world chiefly consists in the fact that in reading him the average man has the satisfaction of telling himself that he is plunging into the most portentous depths of philosophy, while he has also the pleasure of reading a most brisk and entertaining author. But Schopenhauer's finest passages are purely rhetorical. At the end of his essay on "The Metaphysics of Love" he describes how amid all the strife and agony of life two lovers look at each other. "But why so secretly, timidly and stealthily? Because these lovers are the traitors secretly endeavoring to perpetuate all this distress and drudgery, that otherwise would reach a timely end." A more dramatic touch in the literary sense it would be difficult to imagine; it has all the energy of some scripture of the devil. But if Schopenhauer asked any sane man to believe that this really was the reason of the shyness of lovers, he was a man simply devoid of any conception of the meaning of the fact or falsehood. Schopenhauer was a poet, and he had all the advantages of that position. The poet may only see a fraction of the universe, but at least it will be a fraction of the real universe, the universe of passion and experience. A philosopher may live in a mere phantom universe, a universe of symbols and generalizations, as painted as the scenery of a pantomime. His stars and spaces are often more artificial, more the work of his own hands, than the elflands of the artist. All this advantage of the realism of poetry Schopenhauer has.

Englishmen are proverbial in remembering the sense of puns and in forgetting the words, so that their attempted repetitions of them frequently require explanations before the humor is perceived. Here is a characteristic one sent us by a San Diego reader of the Argonaut: "There is a strained feeling between the two aspiring cities of the south—Los Angeles and San Diego—and the disesteem of the former for the latter found expression lately in a story told at a public banquet. This is how an Englishman, laying down a Los Angeles newspaper in a San Diego club in a burst of laughter, proceeded to tell the cause of his mirth: 'This paper says that at that banquet a fellar told a minstrel story about one fellar saying that he didn't like Los Angeles; her streets were crooked; they weren't as straight as the streets in San Diego, and the other fellar got back at him by saying that when Los Angeles had been dead as long as San Diego her streets would be as straight.' This was followed by a fresh burst of laughter from the story teller amid the calm speculation of his hearers. One of them, picking up the newspaper and reading, enabled the rest of the company to share in the gaiety, when it appeared that the retort was that 'when Los Angeles has been dead as long as San Diego she'll be as well laid out.'"

J. L. Toole once gave a supper to eighty of his friends and wrote a note to each of them privately beforehand, asking him whether he would be so good as to say grace, as no clergyman would be present. It is said that the faces of those eighty men as they rose in a body when Toole tapped on the table as a signal for grace was a sight which will never be forgotten.

The following suggestion, which is at least ingenious, is made by Harold Littledale in the London Athenæum as to the meaning of the mysterious "Vllorxa" in "Timon of Athens," which has puzzled many commentators: "My theory, at least, is that the word as it stands is nothing more than a running together by the printer of four words—two being numerals and one a contraction—into the mystic crux Vllorxa. Let us divide it—VII-or-X-a. The only question is as to the a. This I take to stand for or—other. Thus the folio makes Timon say to his faithful steward:

> Go, bid all my Friends againe,
> Lucius, Lucullus, and Sempronius Vllorxa: All
> He once more feast the rascals.

What Shakespeare meant Timon to say was this:

> Go, bid all my friends again,
> Lucius, Lucullus, and Sempronius:
> Seven or ten other: All!
> I'll once more feast the rascals.

As the printer could not make out the (probably close written) numerals and contraction he printed quite faithfully what he took to be a Greek name. The contraction or for other is still in common use, and, written carelessly, closely resembles the loosely written Elizabethan a, in which the stroke often stood out from the o, though joined at the top."

Helen C. Candee in the Literary Era writes of the author of "David Harum," and relates an anecdote concerning Mr. Westcott:

He was fond of telling of an occasion on which he was invited to sing at a concert in one of the smaller towns of Western New York. On this perfunctory jaunt—which was quite without interest to the fastidious Mr. Westcott—he was saved from such a hotel as that which insulted John Lenox by the hospitality of the man who organized the concert, a person of much local importance. The musical affair passed off satisfactorily with the help of the neighborhood talent, assisted by Mr. Westcott's rare voice. As Mr. Westcott was about to retire his host came timidly to his room, carrying two long paper boxes. "I leave the house so early in the morning to go to my factory," the man explained, "that I'm afraid I may not see you; but I want to give you something for your singing to-night. Now, here's two pair of the very best whale boned corsets that our factory turns out, and I want you to take them home with you." When Mr. Westcott found he could not even protest effectually, his sense of humor came to his relief, and the fastidious man of cultivated extravagances stalked home laughing, the next day, with two pair of useless corsets in exchange for his matchless songs.

The author of "David Harum" is said to have possessed an excellent baritone voice.

W. C. Brownell's appreciation of Matthew Arnold published in the July Scribner's, is a sound and beautiful piece of critical work. He touches on the technical side of Arnold's poetry in the following passage:

"On its æsthetic side its reliances are few. In the mass it is unmusical—at least in the sense of being independent of music as a reliance. It is absurd to find it cacophonous, as is sometimes asserted, and to maintain that its author had no ear—though, perhaps, had his ear been more sensitive he would not have cited Keats' 'peaceful citadel' as 'quiet citadel.' There are metres which he handled with instinctive felicity—witness 'Heine's Grave,' 'Rugby Chapel,' 'A Forsaken Merman.' But they are not, so to say, musical metres. His repugnance to balladry, his recoil from sing-song, his partisanship for the hexameter, are significant. His feeling for the slower vibrations of rhythm in the citations he holds up as models almost indicates a preference for intonation to song. Quoting Gray's statement that 'the style he aimed at was extreme conciseness of expression, yet pure, perspicuous and musical,' he says that Gray is 'alone or almost alone (for Collins has something of the like merit) in his age.' Compare with this the celebration of Collins by Mr. Swinburne, who is a master of music in poetry, whose verse is often music et proctereа nihil: 'There was but one man in the time of Collins who had in him a note of pure lyric song, a pulse of inborn music irresistible and indubitable; and that he was that man he could not open his lips without giving positive and instant proof. The Muse gave birth to Collins; she did but give suck to Gray.' An examination of Arnold's poetry would show many musical lines, sometimes a happy note like a sudden bird call, a thrilling dactyl, a tetrasyllable of liquid cadence enforced by appositeness recalling Keats himself. But at the same time these are elbowed by awkwardness of scansion, eccentricities of ictus, and now and then a positive cessation of lyric tone, as though in obedience to the rubric 'spoken.'

An Evening Post London correspondent—"P. A. H."—prints some very interesting views about Ibsen's poetry. He says:

One of the features of the literary journals has been the publication of a sheaf of translations of Ibsen's poetry into English. Some of them have peculiar personal interest. Thus, it will be remembered, that, in the course of a public address delivered by Ibsen to a body of students who fêted him after his recall to Norway, he said: "I have never made my private concerns of any kind the subject of a literary work. These private facts and feelings seemed to me in earlier and harder times less important than I have since very often been able to understand. When the eiderduck's nest has been plundered once, twice, thrice, it has been robbed of many illusions and great hopes in life." The reference is to the poem which English readers have been presented with the following translation:

THE EIDERDUCK.

The Eiderduck dwells in the Northman's Land,
Where the gray waves wash the frozen strand.

She plucks the tender down from her breast
To make a lining warm for her nest.

The fisher recks naught of her loving care.
He climbs to the nest and plucks it bare.

But what though the fisher her store hath ta'en;
She strips her bosom yet once again.

Once more he robs her, and yet once more
She lines her nest from her bounteous store.

The third time, the last time her nest is laid bare,
Then she spreads her wings to the warm spring air.

With bleeding bosom she cleaves the night,
To the south, to the south, to the land of light!

One other poetical allegory, included in the present translations, which, it should be added, are published in to-day's Outlook, may be quoted here:

THE MINER.

Break in thunder, wall of rock,
At my hammer's tempest-shock;
Myriad voices of the mine
Call me to its inmost shrine.

Glistening spirits beckon me
To their sunless treasury,
Veinèd gold all burning bright,
Diamond and chrysolite.

In the mountain's gloomy breast
Silence dwells and endless rest;
Break a pathway, hammer mine,
To the mountain's inmost shrine!

Once I loved the earth so fair,
Sun and stars and boundless air,
Childlike gayly wandering
Down the flowery path of spring.

But I have forgot the light
In the gloom of endless night,
And the forest's hymn divine
In the cloisters of the mine.

Here I came in guileless youth
Eager in my search for truth,
Here an answer thought to find
To the doubts that rack my mind.

All is silence, all is gloom
In the mountain's living tomb;
Not a voice my soul to clear,
Not a ray my path to cheer.

Have I failed then? Does the way
Lead not to the upper day?
Yet I know the heaven's light
Would but blind my dazzled sight.

Deeper must I break my way.
There is peace enthroned for aye;
Cleave a pathway, hammer mine,
To the mountain's inmost shrine.

What though darkness be my lot,
Strike, my hammer, falter not;
What though every hope be vain,
Strike, my hammer, strike amain.

Americans Give Musicale in Florence.

MR. AND MRS. EDMUND SEVERN, Francis Walker and Miss Augusta Galbraith, a vocal pupil of Mrs. Severn, appeared at a musicale given several weeks ago at the handsome villa of Madame Stefani, in Florence, Italy. A number of distinguished people were among the guests, and especially worthy of mention was the singing of Miss Galbraith. Her number was an aria from "Robert the Devil." The hostess and guests overwhelmed the young American by their congratulations.

Mr. and Mrs. Severn, Mr. Walker and their American pupils, who have so profitably passed the summer at Mr. Walker's school in Florence, expect to sail from Genoa for New York on September 2.

JEANNETTE M. THURBER

ON MUSICAL EDUCATION.

THE MUSICAL COURIER has asked of Mrs. Jeannette M. Thurber, the founder and president of the National Conservatory of Music of America, some interesting questions pertaining to the musical education of young people seeking the life of a teacher, as well as the more ambitious career of the concert and the operatic world.

We glean for our readers the following views of a woman whose experience has been wide, and one who takes the subject very much to heart. "You cannot begin too early," thinks Mrs. Thurber, who originated the idea of children's concerts, under Theodore Thomas, in the old days, and of children's examination day for piano and violin at the National Conservatory of Music. "At five or six girls should begin, for they usually exhibit aptitude for music earlier than boys. Let the earnest parent or guardian place his child in the care of a capable teacher. No teacher can be too competent, as the brain in childhood is tender and plastic and earliest impressions are the most lasting, even though unconsciously absorbed." The institution over which Mrs. Thurber presides has many tiny pupils, and it has been this lady's experience that a good beginning greatly smooths the way.

"The course should not be too strenuous at the start, and for the aspirant to vocal honors and for the teacher it should be thorough. The teacher need not execute so brilliantly either with the voice or at the keyboard, but she must be mistress of the art of interpretation, the art of imparting of her knowledge, which consists not so much in filling the pupil with bald theoretical facts, as quietly and persistently educing from the student her talent." Mrs. Thurber can point with pride to hundreds of men and women all over the country, former pupils of the National Conservatory, who are to-day earning in an honorable manner their own livelihood on the concert stage and in the classroom.

The plan pursued by Mrs. Thurber at the National Conservatory regarding the formation of teachers is a singularly apt instance of her close study of the subject. By a system, of what might be called musical apprenticeship, the pupils desirous of embracing the arduous career of teaching, begin a sort of post-graduate course by teaching in the preparatory classes. As time passes they are promoted to a higher grade, and so you may find in the faculty teachers who prove capable and valuable aids to their masters. The value of this is obvious. A unity of method is obtained, and there is no necessity of breaking in raw recruits. The work of promotion goes on steadily, silently, and thus the National Conservatory not only makes excellent pupils, but actually creates teachers and gives them pupils to teach.

It would be difficult to give off-hand the exact figures of the average earnings of music teachers. So much depends upon native ability, a good start, dogged perseverance and stability of character. To those who persist the reward is certain; not only a very comfortable living, but in some cases affluence. There is really more money made in music than in any other artistic profession. Mrs. Thurber believes in a complete course of violin or piano playing, if the latter instrument is contemplated; not only for ground work, but the attainment of a fair degree of executive proficiency. With the masters of the instruments in New York city there is no need of a trip abroad except for recreation and as a means of securing general culture. It is imperative that the study of the violin should be begun at an early age. With the voice the greatest care should be exercised to start on the right lines, and as study can never be said to end, no exact point can be indicated at which a teacher should stop. With the pupil who desires public honors the case is different. Her teacher should tell her when she is ready, and public experience and criticism should do the rest. Mrs. Thurber considers that piano study should be obligatory for all music pupils. It develops the harmonic sense.

Retired singers do not always make the best teachers. The good teacher is born as well as made, yet there are many instances in which professional artists have abandoned public life to become capital instructors. Indeed, constant public appearances give an artist an equipoise that can be gained nowhere else. Repose and experience tell heavily in the classroom. Naturally, an artist with the faculty of imparting knowledge is superior to the routine teacher. The subject is too large to be easily discussed, although Mrs. Thurber sides with those artists who have tasted of artistic success and whose experience has been varied. The parochial teacher may never hope to vie with her public rival in certain phases of her art, especially in

The National Conservatory of Music of America, 128 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

JEANNETTE M. THURBER, PRESIDENT.

Artistic Faculty, consisting of { RAFAEL JOSEFFY, ADELE MARGULIES, LEOPOLD LICHTENBERG, LEO SCHULZ, HENRY T. FINCK, MAX SPICKER, CHARLES HEINROTH, AND OTHERS.

The seventeenth scholastic year begins September 3 and ends May 1. Annual entrance examinations: Piano and Organ—Sept. 17, 10 A. M. to 12 M. and 2 to 4 P. M. Violin, Viola, 'Cello, Contrabass, Harp and All Other Orchestral Instruments—September 18, 10 A. M. to 12 M. and 2 to 4 P. M. Singing—September 19, from 10 A. M. to 12 M.; 2 to 4 P. M. and 8 to 10 P. M. Children's Day—September 21, Piano and Violin—10 A. M to 12 M.; 2 to 4 P. M.

those branches which pertain to stage deportment, diction and dramatic characterization. As for the much discussed problem of studying at home or abroad, Mrs. Thurber is an American of the Americans. She has proved that in the National Conservatory, an institution free from any taint of commercialism, one may enjoy and profit better by a musical education there than by going to Paris, Berlin or Vienna. A high order of instruction is maintained and the perils of a residence abroad, perilous for most young persons, is avoided. And the results prove the wisdom of this undertaking, for on the authority of Mrs. Thurber America is full of talented young folks who have received their sole education in America.

Not all children should be made to study music, although it never can harm them, arousing as it does the rhythmic nature and being generally refining in its influence. But in many cases it is a waste of time and sheer cruelty to force a child to the piano when the same child may have talents in other directions.

No age can be set when one may be assured of success, for the wonder child, the precocious boy or girl, upset all preconceived notions on the subject. The average is between twenty and thirty for instrumentalists. Singers usually win honors earlier and easier.

The first quality necessary for a musical career is of course marked talent—a talent that does not hide itself under a bushel; the next quality, a most needful one, is perseverance in the face of obstacles. Without dogged patience nothing can be attained.

There is but one course to pursue to obtain the highest honors in musical art—the course of undaunted industry. Sound musical training backed up by talent and energy will practically accomplish anything. There is no royal road to success, artistic or pecuniary. Chance, good luck, as it is called, is an element not to be despised; but it must be noted that every artist who has attained eminence has acknowledged that good hard work is the principal means of conquering obstacles of all sorts. The main quality besides musical talent that is most contributory to success is sound, common sense; in other words, a clear head which is not confused by either failure or success, the latter usually being the most unsettling. A good head is generally the result of a good heart, a clear conscience. Without principle one may become an artist, but a great artist never.

Faelten Pianoforte School.

THE music teachers who are attending the summer session of the Faelten Pianoforte School listened to an exhibition by several pupils of the juvenile department last Thursday, in Faelten Hall, Boston. They expressed themselves as highly pleased with the results of the Faelten system of instruction, particularly in its development of the musical intelligence and appreciation of the pupils. No special preparation had been made for this exhibition, some of the pupils having not been seen by the teachers since the close of the regular session ten weeks ago.

The following program was performed from memory:

Sonatina, op. 55, No. 1.....Kuhlau
Anna Pumphrey.
Sonatina, op. 42, No. 1.....Alban Forster
Mary Pumphrey.
Nos. 27, 21, 52 and 57, from the Staff Reader.....Faelten
Myrtle Morse.
Minuet, F major; Allegro, D major; Andante, C major.....Haydn
Robert Gibb.
Sonatina, op. 42, No. 3.....Forster
Gladys Copeland.
March, Horseback Ride and Etude, from op. 75.....Raff
Elizabeth James.
Catch Me if You Can and Goblin's Dance.....Henriques
Rondo, La Matinee.....Dussek
Ruth Rapoport.

RICH WOMEN AT WAR OVER AN ORCHESTRA.

Philadelphia Society Rent by Strife Between Mrs. Cassatt and Mrs. Robinson.

FIGHT ON TWO SEASONS.

Mrs. Cassatt Finally Routs Her Enemy by Successful Formation of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

BIG FUND HAS BEEN RAISED.

Faction that Wanted Walter Damrosch as Conductor Now Sings Praises of Fritz Scheel.

PHILADELPHIA, August 17.—Two wealthy society women of the Quaker City who have been striving against each other for the past two years for the establishment of a permanent symphony orchestra have finally fought a decisive social battle, which resulted in a victory for the faction of which Mrs. A. J. Cassatt is the leader. The opposing force has deserted Mrs. W. H. H. Robinson, its leader, and gone over to the camp of the victor.

The result is that Fritz Scheel is the conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra instead of Walter Damrosch, who was being championed by Mrs. W. H. H. Robinson. Not that Mrs. Cassatt does not admire the young American conductor and composer, and might at one time most willingly have co-operated in his selection, but for the reason that Mrs. W. H. H. Robinson forgot to invite Mrs. A. J. Cassatt to be a member of a certain committee which the former had named for the purpose of raising a fund to endow a proposed orchestra, of which Mr. Damrosch was to be the leader.

Both the contending parties have in turn been president of the Eurydice Club, an ultra-social amateur female chorus. The late Michael H. Cross was the original conductor of the Eurydice, and for the past two seasons it has been directed by Frank Damrosch. It was in the management of this society and in the selection of a conductor to succeed Mr. Cross that the ladies first crossed foils, but no open warfare was declared until Mrs. Cassatt was ignored by Mrs. Robinson.

BOTH PROMINENT IN SOCIETY.

Mrs. Cassatt, the wife of the president of the Pennsylvania Railway, has long been a patron of music and is a close student of all that is classical, while Mrs. W. H. H. Robinson is an enthusiast among musical enthusiasts.

One success after another followed in the management of everything Mrs. Robinson attempted, from the guarantee for the Damrosch opera season to the concert of 1899 given for the Manila heroes. At this the "Te Deum" of Walter Damrosch was sung under his direction. Her favorite singers were the soloists, and Mr. Damrosch, during the program, was presented with a silver service by a group of his admirers.

It was here, at the heyday of her musical popularity, when she was president of the Eurydice, the head and front of a series of morning musicales and concerts for nurseries, hospitals and boys' homes, and the controlling interest in the operatic subscription list, that she instituted a campaign to raise a $250,000 fund as a guarantee for a permanent orchestra, and it was here that Mrs. A. J. Cassatt was ignored.

MRS. CASSATT IGNORED.

Meeting after meeting was held at the handsome residence of Mrs. W. H. H. Robinson on Locust street, and all the important society women of the city, with the exception of Mrs. Cassatt, might be seen there. The Harrisons, Masons, Drexels, Lippincotts, Child-Drexels, Biddles, Moore-Robinsons, Cadwaladers, Cadwalader-Joneses and Jones-Cadwaladers could be found in consultation on orchestral affairs under the guidance of the hostess. A sum approximating $60,000 was said to have been ultimately guaranteed, but just around the corner, on Rittenhouse square, was a beautiful, wealthy and strong minded woman, who had received no invitation to participate prominently in this musical scheme. This was Mrs. A. J. Cassatt.

A conductor unknown to this city came here to give concerts in an unknown park. He was Fritz Scheel, an associate of Hans von Bülow before coming to America. He made a hit with the local musicians, and was induced to remain during the winter season as conductor of Mrs. A. J. Cassatt's opera class and other amateur organizations.

MRS. CASSATT WINS.

In contradistinction to the Manila concert held the preceding year and in the spring of 1900 two symphony concerts were given in the Academy for the benefit of the Sailors' and Soldiers' Fund. A professional orchestra, Fritz Scheel, conductor; De Pachmann and Edouard de Reszké, soloists, were what Mrs. A. J. Cassatt proffered as an offset to the Manila "Te Deum" concert of the preceding year, and she presented herself for the approval of the multitude in the Academy, surrounded by distinguished admirals and generals in a box draped in bunting and flags, while her musical rival relegated herself to a back seat and remained there to criticise.

The success of these concerts was overwhelming, and resulted in the establishment of a working committee, which succeeded in giving six symphony concerts last season, and these proved to be the nucleus of the Philadelphia Orchestra, with Fritz Scheel as conductor, which now announces twenty public rehearsals and twenty concerts during the coming season on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings in the Academy of Music.

MRS. ROBINSON IS OVERLOOKED.

The gloved hand of diplomacy now agitates Philadelphia, for Philadelphia musicians and Philadelphia money for the support of a permanent Philadelphia organization. The $60,000 fund raised for the Damrosch Orchestra by Mrs. W. H. H. Robinson is not a part of the present scheme. The names of neither Mrs. W. H. H. Robinson nor Andrew Wheeler, Jr., appear among those of the committee having charge of the affairs of the successful orchestra, and this is possibly the first time that these names have been omitted from such a list in the history of recent musical events.—The World, August 18, 1901.

Edgar Stillman Kelley.

EDGAR STILLMAN KELLEY, who has recently been appointed professor of music for the coming year at Yale College during the absence of Horatio W. Parker, is well known as a composer and musician. Mr. Kelley is a native of Sparta, Wis., having been born at that place in 1857. After some years of study in this country he went to Stuttgart, Germany, and became a pupil of Kruger, afterward studying the piano with Speidell, and the organ with Finck, and composition and orchestration with Seifritz.

Returning from abroad in 1880, Mr. Kelley went to San Francisco, where he soon gained distinction as a teacher and critic, his first ambitious composition being the melodramatic music for "Macbeth." Not long after this he composed the music for the opera "Puritania," a work which, though an unequivocal artistic success, was perhaps above the heads of the general public. In a way "Puritania" was ahead of its time, and among the cognoscenti there was a feeling that this opera, if produced to-day, would receive its just success.

THE ONLY "LESCHETIZKY" SCHOOL OF PIANO PLAYING IN AMERICA.
Named after PROF. THEO. LESCHETIZKY, of Vienna, by his special permission.
Mme. DE WIENZKOWSKA, DIRECTRESS AND FOUNDER.
PROF. LESCHETIZKY'S Sole Principal Assistant in this country, formerly in Vienna; also Concert Pianiste.
CARNEGIE HALL. Address Communications: 147 W. Eighty-second St., NEW YORK CITY.
LESCHETIZKY—"Mme. Wienzkowska's success as a piano virtuosa and teacher is eminent."
PADEREWSKI—"Mme. Wienzkowska is a finished pianiste and possesses an extraordinary ability of communicating to others a complete knowledge of her art."
HANS RICHTER—"I consider you an artist of finest esprit and taste, and a representative of a most solid school."

The Carlisle-Carr Concert Bureau and Greater Britain Musical Agency
(The Foreign and Colonial Bureau),
108 New Bond Street, LONDON, W., ENGLAND
Opera, Oratorio, Concerts, At Homes, Garden Parties, Children Parties
Sole control of the "Artists' Popular Concerts."
Telegraphic Address: "PANDECT," London

MR. WHITNEY TEW
In America
November and December, 1901
The London Press says of Mr. Tew's singing:
Times—"Mr. Tew displayed a magnificent voice and great dignity of style."
Telegraph—"Mr. Tew possesses a fine voice of cultured style; he is a singer of high quality and a musician of broad sympathies and wide research."
Express—"Revealed the possession of a prodigious memory, a sonorous voice and a wealth of vigor."
Daily News—"Manifestly an experienced vocalist, endowed with a powerful voice of agreeable quality. He is a linguist and his artistic taste and judgment demonstrated by his excellent choice of a program."
Musical Courier (London)—"A hearty, straightforward delivery, which was all the more charming because of his admirable diction and pure intonation."
Lady—"His songs were admirably chosen, and the beautiful quality of his voice and his good method were best shown in Brahms' Liebeslieder."
Sunday Times—"Displayed a resonant low baritone voice and a refined method."
Musical Standard—"Eminently successful as an interpretive artist, for he sang with much feeling and intuition into the dramatic and poetic meaning of his text. His voice is a fine organ."
Musical News—"Mr. Tew has a good bass voice which he uses always with finished art and discretion. That he possesses an extensive repertory culled from the best music written for the bass voice was evidenced."
Morning Post—"Mr. Tew's deep bass voice was well suited to the music of the Landgraf." (National Grand Opera Co., in Tannhauser.)
The Stage—"Mr. Tew gave a strong and impressive embodiment of the Cardinal."
The Era—"Mr. Whitney Tew, the author, gave a strikingly characteristic reading of Richelieu, his acting in the downfall scene being especially impressive and touching."
Field—"That fine bass singer, Mr. Whitney Tew, gave the first of his recitals last week. He possesses a powerful voice of beautiful quality which can stand work. He has both voice and brains."
Anglo-American—"Mr. Tew's fine voice was in the best of form. He is to be commended for his persistent fidelity to a really superior class of music."
Sole Representative:
Henry Wolfsohn
131 East 17th Street
NEW YORK

BUFFALO MUSIC.

BUFFALO, August 9, 1901.

ASIDE from the numerous concerts at the Pan American, the city is favored during the summer with some noteworthy musical events. An interesting and profitable forenoon, especially to teachers, was that spent in listening to the lecture of Mrs. Evelyn Fletcher-Copp on the "Fletcher Music Method."

The Fletcher method aims to reduce the difficulties which the study of music formerly presented to children and to give a fundamental, systematic and logical musical education that shall also bring pleasure to the child and develop her physically, mentally and artistically. The method gives a complete knowledge of notation, chords, scales, intervals, keyboard, time and rhythm, and a course in memorizing, analysis, ear training, a knowledge of musical instruments, &c.

Mrs. Fletcher-Copp has been in the city for some time instructing a large normal class of teachers from the South and West, as well as New York State. Hereafter the Fletcher method will be taught in the city.

If the representatives can acquire the energy and tact and pleasing manner of the originator of the method they will surely be successful and the children studying it will find only pleasure in music. Mrs. Fletcher-Copp will soon make another European trip to illustrate and teach her method, and then will probably make a journey to the Pacific Coast to introduce it there.

A large audience listened to A. F. Howell's evening with "David Harum" at the Twentieth Century Club. The musical numbers upon the program added much to the pleasure of the listeners.

Mr. Penn gave a baritone solo which showed to advantage his mellow, rich voice. Mr. Ball contributed a violin solo with good effect. Mrs. Hibler, soprano, sang "In Maytime" (Buck) and "Summer Evening" (Lassen), showing herself to be the possessor of a clear, powerful voice of wide range and under good control, her high notes being particularly beautiful. Mrs. Nellie M. Gould and Lawrence H. Montague were the accompanists.

Miss Emma L. Maynard, the former Buffalonian who is to give organ recitals at the Pan-American Exposition August 21 and 22, has been spending the summer in the city. Her achievements are the more noteworthy as since infancy she has been afflicted with paralysis of the optic nerves.

Since the age of three Miss Maynard has played with remarkable intelligence, and aided by a wonderful memory and great perseverance has become an accomplished organist and pianist, and acquired a good education in other branches.

Miss Maynard is a graduate of the State School for the Blind at Batavia, and has been an organ pupil of Wm. Kaffenberger, of Buffalo, and is now director of music at the South Dakota School for the Blind.

Miss Maynard's programs will consist of selections from Mendelssohn, Tours, Dubois and celebrated American composers, and will include one of her own compositions.

Her recitals will be listened to with much interest, as while the other seventy-four organists have the advantage of sight, Miss Maynard depends solely upon memory as her guide to the intricacies of the four manual organ at the Temple of Music.

The Teck Theatre is drawing crowds to its wonderful productions of "Constantinople"—the finest spectacular entertainment ever presented in America. The company includes 500, and the choruses, orchestra and ballet are fine and the costumes magnificent. The music, composed by Paolo Giorza and conducted by himself and Joseph Hartfeur, is very beautiful and never savors of the commonplace. The "Ave Maria" is the gem of the musical program, although the music for the "May Pole" dance and the "Spanish Dances" is very bright and pleasing.

Besides the production every week day evening of "Constantinople" the Teck will soon be open Sunday evenings for orchestra concerts, under the direction of Mr. Hartfeur.

Mrs. Alice Merritt-Cochran, soprano of the First M. E. Church, New York city, has been spending part of her vacation in Buffalo and Springville, N. Y. While at the latter place Mrs. Cochran kindly gave a solo at the Presbyterian Church last Sunday evening, and Tuesday evening charmed many invited guests at the home of Miss Chaffee by her beautiful voice.

In addition to Mrs. Merritt-Cochran's selections, a contralto solo was well rendered by Miss Elanore Meyers, and several pleasing readings were given by Miss Coss.

The pupils of Frank Shearer's School of Music, Lockport, gave their closing recitals at the home of Mr. and Mrs. P. H. Lindsey since my last letter. Two evenings were devoted to these recitals, and the interesting programs consisted of piano, violin, vocal and mandolin numbers by a large class of well trained pupils.

Among the out of town soloists for church services recently were E. P. Russell, of Providence, R. I., who sang at the Delaware Avenue M. E. Church; John C. Dempsey, of New York, formerly of Buffalo, who rendered a selection from Handel's "Messiah," at St. Luke's Episcopal Church, and Miss Florence Rockwell, of New York, who gave soprano solos at the Church of the Ascension.

An organ recital was recently given by C. Rupprecht, of St. Louis, Mo., assisted by Mrs. John Neuman, soprano, and Oscar Frankenstein, baritone, at the German Evangelical Lutheran Trinity Church in Michigan street, near Genesee, under the auspices of the L. Y. M. A.

N. M. G.

F. A. Mollenhauer a Trolley Victim.

THE deadly trolley has killed another member of the musical fraternity, Frederick A. Mollenhauer, of the well-known family of musicians and sugar refiners. The accident occurred on Tuesday evening, August 13, at the corner of Church and Cortlandt streets. Mr. Mollenhauer, his two sons, a nephew and a friend had been dining at a downtown restaurant. The party separated, and Mr. Mollenhauer, who was alone on his way to the Jersey City ferry, was struck by a north bound car of the Sixth avenue line. He was instantly killed. The motorman, who was arrested, declares the accident was not his fault. Mr. Mollenhauer conducted a conservatory in Jersey City. Besides the sons, a widow survives him.

Philharmonic Society Dates.

THE dates of the concerts of the New York Philharmonic Society at Carnegie Hall for the coming season are November 15 and 16; December 6, 7, 20 and 21; January 10, 11 and 31; February 1, 14 and 15; March 14 and 15; April 4 and 15.

These dates include eight public rehearsals on Friday afternoons and eight concerts on Saturday evenings.

Boston Music Notes.

HOTEL BELLEVUE,
17 BEACON STREET,
BOSTON, August 17, 1901.

MRS. CHARLES R. ADAMS, having decided to reside permanently in Boston, has taken a studio at 372 Boylston street, and will begin teaching there early in September. This addition to the ranks of teachers of vocal music in this city will be a welcome one to her many friends throughout the country who wish to continue the study of singing by the method so well exemplified by the late Charles R. Adams during his many years of teaching in Boston. Mrs. Adams' association with her husband in his work was particularly close; she studied with him for a number of years and latterly taught with him during the winter, so that her knowledge of his method is a practical one and indorsed by Mr. Adams himself. Everyone will wish her success in her work and extend "the right hand of fellowship."

During the summer Mrs. Adams has been at her home, "Pinecroft," on Cape Cod, but returns to Boston in the course of a few weeks to take up her work.

Frederic L. Martin, who was one of the soloists at the recent New Hampshire Music Teachers' Festival at The Weirs, was immediately re-engaged for next year by the new president, E. G. Hood, of Nashua. Mr. Martin sang at the Thursday evening concert, being heard in solos and "Fair Ellen." He also was the bass soloist in "The Messiah" on the closing evening, and came in for a large share of the applause, which he certainly deserved.

Miss Gertrude Walker, of Salem, has been singing at the summer school in Fryeberg, Me., and at several of the summer resorts in Portland Harbor. Later she will go to the mountains to fill other engagements.

Although eighty-one years old L. O. Emerson, the veteran musical composer and conductor, has been at work a great deal of his time recently upon a new mass which nears completion. He celebrated his birthday recently by coming into Boston early in the morning from Hyde Park and spending the remainder of the day with his daughter. In the year 1857 Mr. Emerson formed a connection with the Oliver Ditson Company as author and publisher which has continued to the present time.

Bernard Colburn, for nearly thirty years organist of the Universalist church at Norwood, has been spending his summer vacation at Alameda, Cal., visiting his brother, F. D. Colburn, who resides there with his family. Mr. Colburn was invited by Miss Westgate, the organist of the Unitarian church, to play a solo at the vesper service, which is so marked a feature of the regular Sunday meeting. However, as Mr. Colburn was taking a holiday, he declined.

BOARD and residence with family of a celebrated Italian vocal teacher in New York; exceptional opportunity for refined lady to study the perfect art of singing and practice Italian. Address "Vocalist," 240 Fifth avenue, New York city.

OLIVE MEAD, VIOLINIST.

Appearing during the coming season of 1901-2 with the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA in Boston for the third time. During July and August, please address MISS MEAD personally, West Elm Avenue, Wollaston, Mass.

Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

THE
T. ADAMOWSKI TRIO.

MR. T. ADAMOWSKI, Violin.
MISS EDITH THOMPSON, Piano.
MR. JOSEF KELLER, Violoncello.

During the absence for a year in Europe of Mme. Szumowska and Mr. Josef Adamowski their places in the Trio will be taken by Miss Thompson and Mr. Keller.

Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

ADAMOWSKI QUARTET

Fourteenth Season.

Mr. T. ADAMOWSKI, 1st Violin.
Mr. A. MALDAUER, 2d Violin.
Mr. M. ZACH, Viola.
Mr. J. KELLER, Violoncello.

Members of the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Under the Sole Management of FRED. R. COMEE, Symphony Hall, BOSTON, MASS.

HELEN NIEBUHR, CONTRALTO.

Oratorio and Concert Repertoire.

Exclusive Management
Loudon G. Charlton,
CARNEGIE HALL, NEW YORK.

AN INTERNATIONAL MONUMENT TO VERDI.

AN organization of Boston citizens has been formed for the purpose of raising funds for the erection of an international monument at Milan to the memory of Giuseppe Verdi. The following extract is from the published circular:

DEAR SIR—Our fellow-citizen, the eminent musician Augusto Rotoli, is in receipt of an appeal from Italy to promote efforts in Boston to secure funds for the erection of an international monument in Milan to the memory of Giuseppe Verdi. A similar appeal has been received by representative citizens of other large cities of the United States.

The appeal is signed by the Mayor of Milan, by municipal officials, by Le Duc Guido Visconti di Modrone, Arrigo Boito and Le Comte L. Pullé, representing the proprietors of La Scala, by the director of the Conservatory of Milan, by G. Ricordi and E. Sonzogno, and by representatives of the Lombard Society of Journalists.

An organization of Boston citizens has been formed as a result of this appeal, consisting of officers, an executive committee and a general committee. The officers are as follows:

President, Charles Eliot Norton, Esq.; vice-president, Augusto Rotoli, Esq.; treasurer, J. Montgomery Sears, Esq.; secretary, Henry L. Mason, Esq.

The executive committee includes the officers and eleven other prominent Bostonians, and the general committee is made up of sixty odd men, also prominent in musical, literary, educational and philanthropic circles.

An international monument to the late Italian composer is a matter that should appeal to all.

Henri Marteau.

LAST week space was given to the reprinting of some press notices recording the big success of Henri Marteau, the violinist, in Europe. The following additional ones have just been received:

The violin concerto of Jaques Dalcroze was played by the young but already far-famed Parisian, or, rather, Genevese violinist, Henri Marteau, with a perfection which is astonishing. It is a great enjoyment to listen to the young artist who so lightly and elegantly overcomes the greatest difficulties and yet enters deeply ino all its delicate refinements.—Allgemeine Schweiterzeitung, Basel, June 26, 1901.

Marteau played a violin concerto of Jaques Dalcroze. At the very first movement one could have laughed heartily. We have heard little music in which a certain droll style of humor is characterized with such clearness by instrumental music alone, and Marteau expressed this in a masterly way. We remember especially one passage where the violinist with great pathos squirms about on the G string, but we also mark that Jaques did not mean it seriously. The Largo speaks another, more serious language. It begins with a wonderfully beautiful melody in folksong style. Marteau played all with equal mastery. He knows no difficulties of technic, and penetrates into the deepest recesses of the soul of the musician whom he interprets. Geneva can wish all good fortune to such an artist.—Der Bund, Berne, June 25, 1901.

The interpreter of this work, which will enrich notably the repertory of the violin, was Henri Marteau. This young artist, who shares with Jaques Thibaut the first place in French violinism, has been for some time professor at the Conservatory of Geneva. It seems as if the teaching and meditation of art, which must be supposed in such richly endowed natures as his, had ripened and increased his perception of art. The charming violinist has developed into the interpreter. He has conviction, breadth, persuasive emotion. It is with justice that he partook in the exceptional success of the concerto, and that his name will remain attached to it.—M. Lindenlaub, Le Temps, Paris, July 3, 1901.

It was a rare pleasure to associate in the one and the same triumph two artists so well made to understand each other as Jaques Dalcroze and Henri Marteau, the author and interpreter of this great work, and the enthusiastic ovations which the crowd tendered them were for both of them precious testimonials of admiring sympathy. If we have the right to be proud of possessing among us an artist of the power of Henri Marteau, in whom are revived all the traditions of the greatest masters of the violin, and whose talents associate to a marvelous technic the most absolute perfection of style and all the qualities of a virtuoso, Geneva can equally be proud of the advance in the artistic career of our friend, Jaques Dalcroze. We do not fear to call his work one of genius, to which Henri Marteau gave an interpretation all the more admirable as it is one of extreme difficulty of interpretation.—Courrier de Genéve, June 27, 1901.

It remains to speak of the execution of Henri Marteau, which was splendid. At the risk of seeming dithyrambic we must speak again of this admirable artist, who appropriates to himself all styles while retaining his personality, and who played again the other evening with a fancy, a verve, a poetry and a grandeur beyond compare. A thundering ovation greeted the end of the concerto, which marks a glorious stage in Swiss art.—La Suisse, June 25, 1901.

M. Marteau played the concerto of Jaques Dalcroze as perhaps he alone is capable of doing, because he is perhaps the only living violinist capable of feeling all its beauties.—Semaine littéraire (Genéve), June 29, 1901.

Henri Marteau, whom our conservatory has the honor of reckoning in the number of its professors, did not disdain the task of learning the new concerto of Jaques Dalcroze. He was recompensed by the triumphant success of the work and of the interpreter. Impossible to phrase more broadly and with more feeling the beautiful phrases of the Largo or to bring out more delicately the arabesques of the Finale, a movement of incredible freedom of motion and of life.—Tribune de Genéve, June 21, 1901.

SYMPHONIC DRAMA.

(Continued from last week.)

Thus we have to hand a perfect and tried form, a perfect and tried means, and (given a suitable story) there can be no difficulty in clearly perceiving the destined result of music drama.

After "Parsifal," a work deserving of the name which shall be merely a source of amusement is an impossibility. As we begin to emerge from the haze of the past and realize what art is the conviction is forced home to us that, whatever the absurdities Tolstoi has deduced from his root idea, the theory of "religious perception" is indeed correct. Art is no longer only a plaything, but a serious matter for an appreciable lightening of the life-burden—a real link with the infinite. Maybe the charge of "mysticism" could be brought against this. Let it be. You who will, will understand.

Given, then, a suitable subject, the great care of the poet shall be that words are reduced to a minimum: Action (of a broad and dignified character only, nothing melodramatic) supplying the eye with actual facts; music conveying the subtleties, and dominating the whole. With regard to this last, the chief and most suitable factor for expression in this art-idea, it must be not merely ostensibly continuous—but actually so. Those short, sharp, barking phrases, where music gives way to the dramatic situation occasionally, even in Wagner's work, must be abolished, and where vocal phrases are necessary, with or without other colors from the orchestral palette, they must be of such a nature as will sound equally well divested of their surroundings, and this can certainly be done without detracting one iota from their dramatic significance.

That the composer shall be supplied by another mind in the matter of his "book" I cannot conceive, for only he himself will understand the outline and proportions of this tableaued symphony.

Scarcely need it be observed that there exists at present not an overwhelming audience for the endurance of a drama wherein music is to be not merely the chief but (after the main idea, the purpose) the sole object in view. That cannot be helped. One must be made.—RUTLAND BOUGHTON, in the Musical Standard.

THE CHASE AND BROWER PIANO RECITALS IN CLAVIER HALL.

ONE of the most pleasing recitals of the Clavier Piano School was given Wednesday evening by Miss Jennie Wells Chase to an interested audience. This was the program:

Prelude and Fugue, C sharp major	Bach
Impromptu in B flat	Schubert
An den Frühling	Grieg
Humoreske	Grieg
Improvisation	MacDowell
Berceuse	Iljinsky
Rondo	Field
Preludes	Chopin
Valse	Chopin
Etude	Chopin
Fantaisie Impromptu	Chopin
Rhapsodie Hongroise No. 6	Liszt

Miss Chase has been a pupil of A. K. Virgil for the past two years; also a pupil of S. M. Fabian, teacher of interpretation. Much interest has been felt in her advancement. Her playing displayed power, velocity, beautiful musical effects and contrasts in tone, which could not have been obtained in so short a period of study with any but scientific training. Miss Chase's performance of so difficult a program is proof of the progress she has made in the study of masterly compositions. The entire program was given with artistic taste and admirable ease and composure, which compelled close attention. Several of her numbers called forth a burst of enthusiasm, and she was obliged to respond to an encore.

Miss Harriette Brower gave her second recital at Clavier Hall on Thursday evening, August 15. The program, which showed artistic arrangement, was as follows:

Intermezzo, op. 116, No. 4	Brahms
Capriccio, op. 76, No. 2	Brahms
Rhapsodic, op. 79, No. 2	Brahms
Hungarian Dance	Brahms
Nocturne, F major	Chopin
Mazurka, A flat major	Chopin
Impromptu, F sharp major	Chopin
Fantaisie, F minor	Chopin
Liebestraum	Liszt
Valse, Allemagne	Rubinstein

In her two recitals the pianist has given a number of interesting compositions, being the only one to play Mozart and Brahms at these concerts. Miss Brower's excellent technic, beautiful singing tone and musicianly phrasing proved the power of the artist and stamped the recitals as among the best given. Her interpretation of Brahms unfolded a highly developed understanding of the compositions, founded on thorough study and ability, while her Chopin playing reveals deep sympathy with the ideal and spiritual. The selections from Liszt and Rubinstein were given with delicacy and finish.

The reports of the Hadden-Alexander and Fabian recitals will be found elsewhere.

GREGORY HAST.
IN AMERICA ONLY NOVEMBER AND DECEMBER, 1901.

Mr. Gregory
Hast
Famous English Tenor.

Of the St. James, Hall Popular, London Ballad, Queen's Hall Oratorio, Crystal Palace Saturday and Royal Albert Hall Concerts.

Sole Direction:
Loudon G. Charlton,
Carnegie Hall, New York.

JOS. S. BAERNSTEIN
BASSO

51 EAST 64TH STREET,
NEW YORK CITY.

MINNE
HUMPHRYES
Soprano. Concert and Oratorio.

FOR TERMS, DATES, ETC., ADDRESS
Care MUSICAL COURIER, 1135 Broadway, or 407 First Street, Brooklyn, New York

BAILEY

THIS IS TO { MUSICAL CLUBS / MUSICAL SOCIETIES / MUSICAL MANAGERS and Speculators in Musical Attractions

If you want to please your people, fill your houses and make money, then engage ARTISTS THAT DRAW—artists that the public REALLY want to hear.

Young WM. WORTH BAILEY,
the Blind Violinist, is TRULY a GREAT artist.

ELIZABETH NORTHROP, Soprano
EDWIN M. SHONERT, Pianist
} Assisting Artists.

A Season of 50 Concerts is being arranged by
R. E. JOHNSTON,
SUMMER ADDRESS, 257 West 92d Street, New York City,

Whom you should write for particulars. NOTE—Send for Booklet and Souvenir.

EVERETT PIANO USED EXCLUSIVELY.

SINGING IN GIRLS' SCHOOLS.

THE women of Germany who are engaged in teaching in the girls' schools are demanding a greater share of the musical instruction in these institutions, and the musical section of the General Society of Female Teachers has given a prominent place on its program to the co-operation of female teachers of singing, and declares that the defects in the school singing lessons, which are seen and known by all professionals, must naturally strike with greater force those engaged in elementary instruction. A resolution respecting girls' schools in Prussia, May 31, 1894, says: "Girls and women have always been the protectors called to preserve the poetic good in folksong. It should then be the duty of the Government to acknowledge women's work in this field of musical education. How comes it, then, that there where the educational influence of music is felt most widely, namely in school singing, the co-operation of women is as good as excluded?"

Luisa Müller, of Darmstadt, censures the teachers for the slight interest they have expressed on the matter, but now they have seen that the assistance of woman in this field is one of the imperative demands of the times. With Teutonic thoroughness she lays down the following theses:

(1) The object of vocal teaching in schools is to form and improve the sense of hearing as an organ which exercises incalculable influence on the emotions, actions and expressions of the inner being.

(2) The musical ear is trained most surely by one or more voiced à capella singing, dictation, solfeggio, choral practice, &c.

(3) Naturally a woman must be at the head of such training, for the female voice both in pitch and quality is nearest to the child voice, and is therefore fittest to be its model.

(4) Good results can only be reached when instruction is given by teachers examined by the state in a uniform prescribed plan.

There is nothing new in these propositions. More interesting is the opinion expressed by a uniform plan of tuition; singers could be turned out in eight school years who could, note sure and time sure, dispense with the support of instruments. This last point is especially insisted on. The piano and the harmonium by this tempered system of tuning are not adapted to convey pure intervals to the ear of children. Only the study of one and more voiced à capella singing can develop the ear of the pupil. And such singing can only be taught by the instructress, who, vocally and musically well trained, can serve by her voice as a direct example. She can be the best leader of the child chorus, as her organ blends easily with the children's voices. The masculine teacher whose voice is an octave lower or more must have an instrument to give the notes. But an instrument can never be an example, it lacks the most essential factor of voice development, the element of speech by which the voice organ is made playable (spielbar). Hence the defects in teaching and attainment; the living example which is indispensable is absent.

The German Female Teachers' Society is preparing a petition to the Government to institute careful examinations of the teachers in girls' schools. It demands that the instructors not only dispense with the piano and harmonium, but shall have a knowledge of voice building and tone building in a uniform method, and also possess a knowledge of the development of the speaking elements in the pronunciation of the language. Such a knowledge would not only prepare the way for a reform of spelling, but would impart to the pupils an artistic and economic use of the breath, an art which will be prized by all who have to use their voices.

We fear that these enthusiastic ladies are asking too much. Let them insist on à capella singing and denounce the piano as a corrupting invention, but do not let them start a system that will rob us of our negro and Bowery dialects.

Eduard Zeldenrust.

KEEN interest is manifested in Eduard Zeldenrust, the Dutch pianist, who will be heard in America for the first time this coming season under direction of Manager Loudon G. Charlton. Zeldenrust's fame has, however, preceded him across the water, and the reports have been so authoritative and corroborative that they are entirely convincing. Appended is a letter, written from Scheveningen, near The Hague, by the New York Times correspondent in that place, and printed in the issue of July 28. It speaks for itself and in no uncertain terms:

SCHEVENINGEN, July 5, 1901.

"This year many persons have taken up their abode in Scheveningen for reasons of study, musicians being numerous. Artists are here as well as students, such as Eduard Zeldenrust, who is booked for the coming season in New York. Mr. Zeldenrust is a second Anton Rubinstein in 'emotional force.' He holds his listeners astounded, as Rubinstein held them, by his immense tone, rough at times as was that of the great Russian master, but he never fails to carry the enthusiasm he feels, as did Rubinstein, away from the audience and along with him.

"In Bach one hears a strength without pedal assistance that makes the air resound with Bach, and under Mr. Zeldenrust's hand Wagner arrangements become the dramas Wagner meant them to be. I have heard the 'Ride of the Valkyries' attempted many times by pianists, but Wagner's meaning was never entirely there. In Tausig's arrangement of the 'Walkure' Mr. Zeldenrust makes good the loss of the orchestra, and a wild rush of those wild beings seems to surround one, but it is a troupe of roaring lions that Wotan's daughters have mounted, and they rush on the wind to conquer space.

"As a worker no more enthusiastic can be found than Mr. Zeldenrust, and he has conquered his art. He has a pleasant social tact, with a conversation other than all music. With all the feeling for the happiness of life, loving cheerfulness and simplicity, one yet feels it the strongest when listening to him in the late hours, in the quiet of one's home; then Zeldenrust plays out to you through Bach, Beethoven, Schumann, Chopin and Wagner the same words that, in 'Wilhelm Meister,' Goethe's harpist sang:

"'Wer nie sein Brod mit Thränen ass,
Wer nie die Kummervollen Nächte
Auf seinem Bette weinend sass,
Der kennt euch nicht, ihr himmlischen Mächte!'

"MEVROUW HANKEN PARKER."

Otto Floersheim.

THE well-known musical writer and composer, Otto Floersheim, has just celebrated his twenty-five years jubilee as a critic. THE MUSICAL COURIER, of which he has been the representative for many years, devotes to him a long article in which it traces his career, and brings prominently forward his services to the musical life of New York. Many of his compositions are known in Germany. Floersheim has lived for a long time in Berlin; a good comrade to his colleagues, who all wish prosperity on his jubilee.—Berliner Tageblatt, July 23, 1901.

The well-known writer and composer Otto Floersheim celebrated lately his twenty-five years jubilee as a music critic. In America, whither he went very young, he labored as a writer and teacher, and was one of the first champions of Richard Wagner in the United States. He has liver for a long time in Berlin. Floersheim has repeatedly appeared as a composer with success.—Der Tag, July 26, 1901.

The John Church Company's Music in London.

THE John Church Company's music has been used very extensively in London lately. Here is a partial list of composers whose songs have been sung there recently, with dates, places and names of singer:

Eyes of Blue.....Oley Speaks
Miss Jenkins Colyer (3d).....City
Miss F. Dewhurst (4th).....Victoria Street
Miss A. Burnand (7th).....Regent's Park
Miss F. Dewhurst (12th).....Kensington
Miss F. Dewhurst (15th).....Farrington
Miss F. Dewhurst (15th).....The Kursaal, Bexhill-on-Sea
Miss F. Dewhurst (17th).....Egerton Gardens
Miss F. Dewhurst (19th).....Surbiton
Miss A. Burnand (21st).....Regent's Park
Stanley Hill's Choir (22d).....Biggleswade
Miss F. Dewhurst (27th).....Richmond

It Was a Lover.....De Koven
Miss F. Dewhurst (12th).....Kensington
Miss F. Dewhurst (17th).....Egerton Gardens
Miss F. Dewhurst (19th).....Surbiton
Miss F. Dewhurst (27th).....Richmond
Master R. Leonard (22d).....Biggleswade

O Swallow, Swallow.....Sullivan
Mme. Alice Esty (24th).....St. James' Hall

A Dream.....Maude V. White
Miss Esther Palliser (28th).....At her recital

Tears, Idle Tears.....Sullivan
Miss Florence Lee (28th).....Wisbeach

Rose Fable.....C. B. Hawley
Miss Florence Lee (28th).....Wisbeach

The American Institute of Applied Music.
METROPOLITAN COLLEGE OF MUSIC,
212 WEST 59TH ST., NEW YORK.
The Faculty and Examiners include ALBERT ROSS PARSONS, A.C.M.; TOM KARL; HARRY ROWE SHELLEY, A.C.M.; PAUL AMBROSE, WILLIAM F. SHERMAN, KATE S. CHITTENDEN, LILLIAN LITTLEHALES.
Voice Department in charge of TOM KARL.
The residence department furnishes a refined and quiet home.
For information address KATE S. CHITTENDEN, Dean.

LOUDON G: CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, New York,
Has the Honor to Announce an Extended Tour of
Katherine Ruth HEYMAN Distinguished American Pianist
Tour—October to April—Now Booking. Steinway Piano Used.

MRS.
WEBB GARDNER
SOPRANO.
FIRST SEASON IN AMERICA.
ORATORIO, CONCERT, RECITAL.
Sole direction, LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, New York.

LOUISE B.
VOIGT
SOPRANO.
Oratorio, Concert and Song Recitals.
Address
RICHARD BYRON
Manager.
301 West 139th Street, NEW YORK

VICTOR BAILLARD,
Basso-Baritone.
ORATORIO AND SONG RECITAL.
Address: 146 FIFTH AVE., NEW YORK.

Elizabeth
Hazard
SOPRANO
Drawing Room Concerts
Song Recitals
Direction Emile Levy
141 Fifth Ave.

TROUBADOURS.

ONE of the most celebrated of that interesting class of wandering minstrels, and whose history has lately excited the attention of the curious, was Le Chatelain de Courcy, who flourished during the reign of our Richard Cœur de Lion. He was as distinguished a poet as he was a musician. Throughout the verses purporting to be his there runs a tone of sentiment and melancholy, which renders them more interesting than belongs to the compositions of the greater part of his contemporaries; which latter "harped" upon the same subjects; viz., springtime, flowers and meadows, mingled with descriptions of some adventure with a young shepherdess or threadbare addresses to their mistress; and in the succeeding spring they renewed the same appeal. In some of his songs De Courcy ridiculed this fashion of writing; nevertheless he himself at times would fall into the customary laudations of spring and its flowers.

He quitted France to fight in the Holy War, and fell with St. Jean d'Acre. His historians relate that, being mortally wounded, he charged his squire to carry his heart after death to the lady of his affection, Dame Fayel. "When the knight was dead (says the chronicle, 1380), the squire opened the body, took out the heart, preserved it in salt and spices, and placed it in a casket. Having returned to his native country, he proceeded to fulfill the last command of his lord. He remained for some time concealed in the woods near the Chateau Fayel, watching an opportunity to communicate with the lady. Unfortunately the husband surprised him, and having demanded the subject of his errand, he answered tremblingly that he was charged with a letter from De Courcy, which he had promised him to deliver to the Lady Fayel herself. The husband read it, took the heart, and so contrived that his wife should eat it; who, when she was apprised of the horrible deception, made a vow that she would never more take nourishment, and so died hunger starved." This anecdote, although well known, has been doubted by so-called historians; the same adventure being attributed by the provençals to the Troubadour Cabestaing; by the Italians to a Prince of Salermo (it forms one of Boccaccio's tales), and by the Spaniards to a Marquis of Astorga.

Thibault, Earl of Champagne and King of Navarre, was one of the best poets of his time. Thibault sprang from a race of kings; placed originally upon the first steps of a throne, and latterly the possessor of a crown; superior to all his contemporaries by his genius, and the results of a superior education, is, notwithstandinmg all these advantages, known as little else than one of the "Metre ballad mongers." As a politician he was light and versatile; as a warrior, his conduct in the East has left but a slight opinion of his courage and military talents. His poems alone have preserved his name in amber.

In general the airs of all the songs of this period vary but little from the simple, plain song. They are written in square notes, upon four lines and without measure. The Gregorian notation, still used in the Catholic service, is of the same character; the words, not the music, are divided into bars. The movement and the embellishments of the air depended upon the skill of the singer. It was not till the close of the reign of St. Louis that a fifth line was added to the staff.

After the thirteenth century the art of song writing was less cultivated and fostered than in the two succeeding centuries. Jean Froissard, a canon, historian and poet; Guillaume Machaud, valet de chambre to Philippe-le-bel; the Duke d'Orleans, father of Louis XII., were the only persons who sustained the reputation of the art in France. In the fifteenth century, however, it revived, when a crowd of minstrels succeeded who excelled in this agreeable class of composition.

Blondel, or Blondiaux de Neele, renowned for his attachment to his master, Richard Cœur de Lion, was the author of thirty chansons, which are said still to exist in manuscript.

Gace Brulés, the author of eighty compositions, all in existence, was one of the most amiable men, the best poet and purest writer of his day.

Colin Muset was a very celebrated jongleur. He has the reputation of being the inventor of the bagpipe, the hurdy-gurdy, of the vaudeville, and round or dance song. —From the Musical World of 1836.

VON KLENNER SUMMER CONCERTS.

SOME of the pupils who have been studying with Mme. Evans von Klenner at Lakewood, N. J., this summer were heard at a concert on August 13, given in the First Baptist Church at Jamestown, N. Y. The following interesting program was given. It is referred to elsewhere in this issue:

Little Red Lark.....Baier
Night.....Schubert
Cecelia Quartet.
The Lark Now Leaves His Watery Nest.....Parker
The Quest.....Smith
Miss Hughes.
Two Nightingales.....Hackel
Misses Lafferty and Heilman.
The Lost Chord.....Sullivan-Anderson
Cecelia Quartet.
Giunse al Fin (Figaro).....Mozart
My Darling Was So Fair.....Taubert
Miss Potter.
Parting Without Sorrow, op. 32, No. 4.....Dvorák
Forsaken, op. 32, No. 6.....Dvorák
Misses Lafferty and Heilman.
The Lament of Mi Yen.....Hayes
Cecelia Quartet.

The Jamestown Journal of August 14 published a long report of the concert and commended the voices and singing of the Cecelia Quartet, composed as follows: Miss Maude Lafferty, Miss Lulu Potter, sopranos; Miss Mabelle Hughes, Miss Lenetta Heilman, altos.

Thursday evening, August 15, Von Klenner pupils sang again at a concert in the United Congregational Church at Lakewood, and on this occasion Madame Von Klenner herself appeared as a soloist. The program for this concert follows:

Night.....Schubert
Cecelia Quartet.
Violin solo, Cavatina.....Bohm
Miss Pearl Mabry.
Bass solo, Beloved, It Is Morn.....Aylward
Robert Kent Parker.
Soprano soli—
Rose Fable.....Hawley
Love's Rapture.....Kortheuer
Mme. Evans Von Klenner.
Piano solo, Valse Caprice, Man lebt nur einmal.....Strauss-Tausig
Miss Edith Garland.
Bass solo (selected).....
Robert Kent Parker.
Violin solo, Berceuse.....Godard
Miss Pearl Mabry.
Soprano solo, Bolero, from Sicilian Vespers.....Verdi
Mme. Evans Von Klenner.
The Lost Chord.....Anderson-Sullivan
Cecelia Quartet.

In its report of the Thursday night concert, the Jamestown Journal of Friday, August 16, referred to Madame Von Klenner's part in the concert, of which the subjoined lines is an extract:

Probably the greatest musical treat ever enjoyed at Lakewood was the grand concert given Thursday evening under the direction of Mme. Evans Von Klenner, of New York city. The appearance on the announcements of several well-known names had led the audience to expect something excellent, but the program surpassed expectation. Robert Kent Parker delighted his many friends and was twice compelled to respond to encores. Miss Pearl Mabry's violin solos were executed with rare skill. For one so young Miss Mabry possesses a wonderfully sympathetic touch. Both of Madame Von Klenner's numbers displayed her voice to good advantage and she was forced to respond to encores. Miss Edith Garland in her piano solo displayed a mastery of technic and won well deserved applause.

Madame Maigille in Atlantic City.

MME. HELENE MAIGILLE, the singer and teacher, is a guest at The Dennis, Atlantic City. Later she expects to go to Cape May, where she will remain until she reopens her studio at Carnegie Hall.

TITIANO.—Marie Titiano, the coloratura soprano, has been engaged for an American tour beginning next November.

S. G. PRATT'S PUPILS APPEAR IN CONCERT.—Mr. Pratt's talented pupil, Master Ernest L. Thibault, has been giving piano recitals at Tappan Zee Hotel, South Nyack, with such success that he has been engaged to remain two weeks longer. Miss Lulu Eggleston, another of Mr. Pratt's pupils, whose début at Knabe Hall last spring was favorably commented on in this paper, played at the great Auditorium in Ocean Grove recently with marked success.

The Conservatory of Vienna has produced a young pianist, Bruno Eisner, whom it considers the greatest talent that it has turned out for the last quarter of a century. He won all the prizes and a piano worth 3,000 francs, presented by a manufacturer to the best pupil.

REBECCA MACKENZIE
SOPRANO.
Available for Concert, Oratorio and Song Recitals.
Address FRED O. RENARD, Manager,
444 Central Park West, NEW YORK CITY

American School of Opera
Berkeley Lyceum
23 West 44th Street
WM. G. STEWART, Director. LAIRD EASTON, Secretary and Treasurer.
HERR TH. HABELMANN, Grand Opera Director.
For prospectus and all information apply to Secretary.
PUBLIC PERFORMANCES IN OSCAR HAMMERSTEIN'S THEATRE REPUBLIC.

NEW YORK, June 4, 1901.

MR. WILLIAM G. STEWART, Director American School of Opera,
Berkeley Lyceum, New York City:

My Dear Mr. Stewart—We take this opportunity of complimenting you on the splendid practical results accomplished by your School of Opera during the first year of its existence and gladly bear testimony to its advantages as a training school for those desirous of following a professional career in opera.

We are more than pleased with the graduates of your institution who have become members of the Bostonian and will gladly avail ourselves in the future of the opportunity for engaging singers who have pursued a course of study under your direction.

With best wishes always, Yours very sincerely.

W. H. MacDonald

Mme. Charlotte MACONDA
Most Versatile and Brilliant American Soprano.
Re-engaged for New England Festival.
(THIRD CONSECUTIVE SEASON).
Scored a Succession of Sensational Triumphs last Season in New York, Boston, Washington, St. Louis and other leading cities.
Oratorio, Festival, Concert and Recital Engagements now Booking.
Sole.... Management, LOUDON G. CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, NEW YORK.

THE MUSIC OF HINDUSTAN.

WE reprint this review from the London Musical World of 1838:

